Most of the Italian rispetti and stornelli seem to be improvisations; and to improvise in English is as difficult as to improvise in Italian is easy. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 272.

improvisatize (im-prō-viz'a-tīz), v.; pret. and pp. improvisatized, ppr. improvisatizing. [Irreg. < improvisate + -ize.] Same as improvisate.

improvisator (im-prov'i-sā-tor), n. [= F. improvisateur = Pg. improvisador = It. improvvisatore, < NL. improvisator*, < improvisare*, improvise: see improvise.] One who improvises; an improviser.

improvisatore, n. Same as improvisator.

improvisatorial (im-prō-viz-a-tō'ri-al), a. [< improvisator + -al.] Relating to or having the power of extemporary composition, as of rimes or poems.

Hence, in the deepest and truest sense, Scott, often called the most improvisatorial, is the least improvisatorial of writers. Athenæum, No. 3068, p. 197.

improvisatory (im-prō-viz'a-tō-ri), a. Same as improvisatorial.

That improvisatory knack at repartee for which he [Samuel Foote] was already conspicuous in certain fashionable circles. Jon Bee, Essay on Samuel Foote.

improvise (im-prō-vīz' or -vēz'), v.; pret. and pp. improvised, ppr. improvising. [< F. improviser = Sp. Pg. improvisar = It. improvvisare, < NL. improvisare*, improvise, < L. improvisus, inprovisus (> It. improvviso = Sp. Pg. improviso), unforeseen, < in- priv. + provisus, pp. of providere, foresee: see provide, provise.] I. trans. 1. To compose and recite or sing without premeditation; speak or perform extemporaneously, especially verse or music.—2. To do or perform anything on the spur of the moment for a special occasion; contrive or bring about in an offhand way.

Charles attempted to improvise a peace. Motley.

The young girls of the country wreathe themselves into dances, and improvise the poetry of motion. Howells, Venetian Life, xvii.

II. intrans. To compose verses or music extemporaneously; hence, to do anything on the spur of the moment or in an offhand way.

Theodore Hook improvised in a wonderful way that evening; he sang a song, the burden of which was "Goodnight," inimitably good, and which might have been written down. Greville, Memoirs, Jan. 15, 1835.

improviser (im-prō-vī'zėr or -vē'zėr), n. One who improvises; an improvisator.

improvision† (im-prō-vizh'on), n. [< in-[3] + provision. Cf. improvise.] Want of forecast; improvidence.

The sad accidents which afterwards happened did not invade and surprise him, in the disadvantages of ignorance or improvision. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 267.

improviso† (im-prō-vī'sō), a. [< L. improviso, on a sudden, prop. abl. of improvisus, unforeseen: see improvise.] Not studied or prepared beforehand; impromptu; extemporaneous: as, "improviso translation," Johnson.

improvvisatore (im-prō-vē-zà-tō're), n.; pl. improvvisatori (-tō'rē). [It.: see improvisator.] Same as improvisator.

improvvisatrice (im-prō-vē-zà-trē'che), n.; pl. improvvisatrici (-chi). [It., fem. of improvvisatore.] A woman who improvises.

imprudence (im-prö'dens), n. [= F. imprudence = Sp. Pg. imprudencia = It. imprudenza, imprudenzia, < L. imprudentia, inprudentia, unforesightedness, < impruden(t-)s, inpruden(t-)s, unforesighted: see imprudent.] 1. The quality of being imprudent; want of prudence, caution, circumspection, or a due regard to consequences; heedlessness; indiscretion; rashness.

Good with bad were match'd, who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd, Produce prodigious births. Milton, P. L., xi. 686.

2. An imprudent act.

It were a strange imprudence, choosingly, to entertain those inconveniencies. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 283.

imprudent (im-prö'dent), a. [= F. imprudent = Sp. Pg. It. imprudente, < L. impruden(t-)s, inpruden(t-)s, unforesighted, imprudent, < in- priv. + pruden(t-)s, foresighted, prudent: see prudent. Cf. improvident.] Not prudent; wanting prudence or discretion; not careful of consequences; indiscreet; rash; heedless.

And thus, by the imprudent and foolish hardines of the French earle, the Frenchmen were discomfited, and that valiant English knight ouermatched. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 35.

The spirit of the person was to be declared caitive and imprudent, and the man driven from his troublesome and ostentatious vanity. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 62.

=Syn. Incautious, careless, unadvised, inconsiderate.

imprudently (im-prö'dent-li), adv. In an imprudent manner; with imprudence.

He so imprudently demeaned hymselfe that within shorte space he came into the handes of his mortall enemies. Hall, Hen. VI., an. 39.

imp-tree† (imp'trē), n. [ME. impe tre, ympe tre; < imp + tree.] A grafted tree.

Loke, dame, to morwe thatow be Riȝt here under this ympetre.
Sir Orfeo, quoted in Amer. Jour. Philol., VII. 189.

Apparently it is her sleeping under an ympe (or grafted) tree that gives the fairies power over Heurodys. Amer. Jour. Philol., VII. 190.

impuberal (im-pū'be-ral), a. [< L. impubes, inpubes (-puber-), not grown up (< in- priv. + pubes (puber-), grown up: see puberty), + -al.] Not having reached puberty. [Rare.]

In impuberal animals the cerebellum is, in proportion to the brain proper, greatly less than in adult. Sir W. Hamilton.

impuberty (im-pū'bėr-ti), n. [< in-[3] + puberty. Cf. impuberal.] The state of not having reached the age of puberty.

impubic (im-pū'bik), a. [< L. impubes, inpubes, not grown up, + -ic.] Below the age of puberty.

impudence (im'pū-dens), n. [< ME. impudence, < OF. (also F.) impudence = Sp. Pg. impudencia = It. impudenza, < L. impudentia, inpudentia, shamelessness, < impuden(t-)s, inpuden(t-)s, shameless: see impudent.] The character or quality of being impudent. (a) Want of modesty; shamelessness; indelicacy.

King. What dar'st thou venture?
Hel. Tax of impudence,
A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame.
Shak., All's Well, ii. 1.

(b) Impudent behavior; brazenness; effrontery; insolence.

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And the more loathsome Age,
Where pride and impudence (in fashion knit) Usurp the chair of wit!
B. Jonson, Just Indignation of the Author.

Off, my dejected looks! and welcome impudence!
My daring shall be deity, to save me.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 3.

Well, for cool native impudence, and pure innate pride, you haven't your equal. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxiv.

=Syn. Impertinence, Impudence, Effrontery, Sauciness, Pertness, Rudeness, audacity, insolence, assurance, presumption, boldness, face. Impertinence is primarily nonpertinence, conduct not pertaining or appropriate to the circumstances, and is hence a disposition to meddle with what does not pertain to one, and more specifically unmannerly conduct or speech. Impudence is unblushing impertinence manifesting itself in words, tones, gestures, looks, etc. Effrontery is extreme impudence, which is not abashed at rebuke, but shows unconcern for the opinion of others; it is audacious and brazen-faced. Sauciness is a sharp kind of impertinence, chiefly in language, and primarily from an inferior. It is, in language, essentially the same with pertness, which, however, covers all indecorous freedom of bearing toward others; pertness is forwardness inappropriate to one's years, station, or sex. Rudeness is the only one of these words seeming to refer primarily to character; in this use it implies manners or language which might be expected from lack of culture or good breeding, and includes what is said or done from a desire to be offensive or uncivil. See arrogance.

impudency† (im'pū-den-si), n. 1. Lack of pudency; shamelessness; immodesty.

We, viewing their incontinencie, should flye the lyke impudencie, not follow the like excesse. Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 98.

2. Effrontery; insolence.

Pray heaven she can get him to read! he should do it of his own natural impudency. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 1.

impudent (im'pū-dent), a. [< ME. impudent = F. impudent = Sp. Pg. It. impudente, < L. impuden(t-)s, inpuden(t-)s, shameless, < in- priv. + puden(t-)s, ashamed: see pudency.] 1. Immodest; shameless; brazen; indelicate.

With that a joyous fellowship issewd
Of Minstrales making goodly meriment,
With wanton Bardes, and Rymers impudent.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 5.

A woman impudent and mannish grown
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3.

2. Offensively forward in behavior; intentionally disrespectful; insolent; possessed of unblushing assurance.

Nor that the calumnious reports of that impudent detractor . . . hath at all attached, much less dejected me. B. Jonson, Volpone, ii. 1.

3. Manifesting impudence; exhibiting or characterized by disrespect toward or disregard of others.

There is not so impudent a thing in Nature as the sawcy Look of an assured Man, confident of Success. Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

Apartments so decorated can have been meant only for . . . people for whom life was impudent ease and comfort. H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 203.

=Syn. 2. Bold, bold-faced, brazen-faced, presumptuous, pert, rude, saucy. See impudence.

impudently (im'pū-dent-li), adv. In an impudent manner; insolently.

At once assail
With open mouths, and impudently rail. Sandys.

impudicity (im-pū-dis'i-ti), n. [< F. impudicité, < ML. impudicita(t-)s*; equiv. to It. impudicizia = Sp. Pg. impudicicia, < L. impudicitia, inpudicitia, immodesty; < impudicus, inpudicus, immodest, < in- priv. + pudicus, modest, < pudere, feel shame.] Lack of pudicity; immodesty; shamelessness.

Many of them full of impudicitie and ribaudrie. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 85.

impugn (im-pūn'), v. t. [Formerly also empugn; < ME. impugnen, inpugnen, < OF. (also F.) impugner = Pr. impugnar, enpugnar, empunhar = Sp. Pg. impugnar = It. impugnare, impungare, < L. impugnare, inpugnare, attack, assail, impugn, < in, on, against, + pugnare, fight, < pugna, a fight: see pugnacious. Cf. expugn, oppugn.] To attack by words or arguments; contradict; assail; call in question; gainsay.

And which [what sort of] a pardoun Peres hadde alle the peple to conforte,
And how the prest impugned it with two propre wordes. Piers Plowman (B), vii. 147.

The Commons were insisting on severer measures against heresy, and still were impugning the laws and courts, by which only heresy could be extirpated. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 282.

impugnable (im-pū'na-bl), a. [= Sp. impugnable = It. impugnabile; as impugn + -able.] Capable of being impugned.

impugnation (im-pug-nā'shon), n. [= F. impugnation = Pr. Sp. impugnacion = Pg. impug- nação = It. impugnazione, < L. impugnatio(n-), inpugnatio(n-), an attack, < impugnare, inpugnare, attack: see impugn.] Assault; opposition; contradiction. [Rare.]

The fifth is a perpetual impugnation and self-conflict, either part labouring to oppose and vanquish the other.
Bp. Hall, Remedy of Discontentment, § 18.

No one can object any thing to purpose against præexistence from the unconceivableness of it, until he know the particular frame of the hypothesis, without which all impugnations relating to the manner of the thing will be wide of the mark, and but little to the business.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, iv.

impugner (im-pū′nėr), n. One who impugns; one who opposes or contradicts.

I mean not only the seditious libellers, but impugners of the king's regalities.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 99.

impugnment (im-pūn′ment), n. [< impugn + -ment.] The act of impugning, or the state of being impugned. [Rare.]

It must not be an impugnment to his manhood that he cried like a child. E. Howard, Jack Ashore, xlvii.

impuissance† (im-pū′i-sans), n. [< F. impuissance, < impuissant, powerless: see impuissant.] Powerlessness; impotence; feebleness.

As he would not trust Ferdinando and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impuissance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII.

John de la Casse was a genius of fine parts and fertile fancy; and yet . . . he lay under an impuissance, at the same time, of advancing above a line and a half in the compass of a whole summer's day.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, v. 16.

impuissant† (im-pū′i-sant), a. [< F. impuissant, powerless, < in- priv. + puissant, powerful: see puissant.] Powerless; impotent; feeble.

Craving your honour's pardon for so long a letter, carrying so empty an offer of so impuissant a service, but yet a true and unfeigned signification of an honest and vowed duty, I cease. Bacon, To the Lord Treasurer Burghley.

impulse (im′puls, formerly im-puls′), n. [= Sp. Pg. It. impulso, < L. impulsus, inpulsus, a push, pressure, incitement, < impellere, inpellere, pp. impulsus, inpulsus, push on, impel: see impel.] 1. Force communicated suddenly; the effect of an impelling force; a thrust; a push.

To-day I saw the dragon-fly. . . .
An inner impulse rent the veil
Of his old husk. Tennyson, Two Voices.

The sensation of red is produced by imparting to the optic nerve four hundred and seventy-four millions of millions of impulses per second.
Tyndall, Light and Elect., p. 66.

A shuttlecock which has its entire state of motion suddenly changed by the impulse of the battledore.
W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 76.

Specifically—2. In mech.: (a) An infinite force or action enduring for an infinitely short time, so as to produce a finite momentum. Strictly speaking, there is no such natural force; but mathematicians find it convenient to treat such actions as the blow of a hammer as if of this nature. (b) The resultant of all such forces acting on a body at any instant, resolved into a couple and a force along the axis of that couple. (c) The momentum produced by a force in any time.

The product of the time of action of a force into its intensity if it is constant, or its mean intensity if it is variable, is called the Impulse of the force.
Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, art. xlix.

3. A stimulation of the mind to action; the impelling force of appetite, desire, aversion, or other emotion; especially, a sudden disposition to perform some act which is not the result of reflection; sudden determination.

He abandoned himself to the impulse of the moment, whether for good or evil. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 19.

The term impulse (Trieb) is commonly confined to those innate promptings of activity in which there is no clear representation of a pleasure, and consequently no distinct desire. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 580.

Does he take inspiration from the Church, Directly make her rule his law of life?
Not he: his own mere impulse guides the man.
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 225.

4. Any communication of force; any compelling action; instigation.

Meantime, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius armed Succeeded Turnus. Dryden, Æneid, x. 976.

He [Dean Stanley] was a constant preacher, and gave a great impulse to the practice already begun of inviting distinguished preachers to the abbey.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 452.

5. A mental impression; an idea. [Rare.]

I had always a strong impulse that I should some time recover my liberty. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 8.

6. Shock; onset. [Rare.]

Unmov'd the two united Chiefs abide, Sustain the Impulse, and receive the War.
Prior, Ode to Queen Anne (1706), st. 13.

Impulse of a motion, the system of impulsive forces required to produce the motion, compounded into a single impulsive wrench.—Impulse-wheel. See wheel.—Nervous impulse, the molecular disturbance which travels along a nerve from the point of stimulation. In the conduction of such impulses, which serve as stimuli to peripheral or central organs, the function of nerve-fibers consists. = Syn. 3. Inducement, etc. (see motive), incitement.

impulse (im-puls′), v. t.; pret. and pp. impulsed, ppr. impulsing. [< L. impulsus, inpulsus, pp. of impellere, inpellere, impel: see impel, v., and impulse, n.] To give an impulse to; incite; instigate.

I leave these prophetesses to God, that knows the heart, . . . whether they were impulsed like Balaam, Saul, and Caiaphas, to vent that which they could not keep in, or whether they were inspired like Esaias and the prophets of the Lord. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 49.

impulsion (im-pul′shon), n. [< F. impulsion = Pr. impulsio = Sp. impulsión = Pg. impulsão = It. impulsione, < L. impulsio(n-), inpulsio(n-), a pushing against, pressure, < impellere, inpellere, pp. impulsus, inpulsus, push against: see impel, impulse.] 1. The act of impelling or imparting an impulse; impelling force or action.

Medicine . . . considereth the causes of diseases, with the occasions or impulsions.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 193.

They know the right and left-hand file, and may With some impulsion no doubt be brought To pass the A B C of war, and come Unto the horn-book.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, ii. 1.

2. Moving or inciting influence on the mind; instigation; impulse.

Thou didst plead
Divine impulsion prompting how thou mightst Find some occasion to infest our foes.
Milton, S. A., l. 422.

Surely it was something in woman's shape that rose before him with all the potent charm of noble impulsion that is hers as much through her weakness as her strength.
Lowell, Wordsworth.

impulsive (im-pul′siv), a. and n. [= F. impulsif = Pr. impulsiu = Sp. Pg. It. impulsivo; as impulse + -ive.] I. a. 1. Having the power of driving or impelling; moving; impellent.

His quick eye, fixed heavily and dead,
Stirs not when prick'd with the impulsive goad.
Drayton, Moses, ii.

Poor men! poor papers! We and they Do some impulsive force obey. Prior.

2. Actuated or controlled by impulses; swayed by the emotions: as, an impulsive child.—3. Resulting from impulse: as, impulsive movements or gestures.—4. In mech., acting by instantaneous impulse, not continuously: said of forces. See force[1], 8 (a). = Syn. 2. Rash, quick, hasty, passionate.

II. n. That which impels; impelling cause or reason. [Rare.]

Every need is an impulsive to this holy office.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 225.

impulsively (im-pul′siv-li), adv. In an impulsive manner; by impulse.

impulsiveness (im-pul′siv-nes), n. The character of being impulsive or actuated by impulse.

That want of impulsiveness which distinguishes the Saxon. G. H. Lewes, Ranthorpe.

impulsor† (im-pul′sor), n. [= OF. impulseur, < L. impulsor, inpulsor, one who impels, < impellere, inpellere, pp. impulsus, inpulsus, impel: see impel, impulse.] One who or that which impels.

The greater compression is made by the union of two impulsors. Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, ii.

impunctate (im-pungk′tāt), a. [< in-[3] + punctate.] Not punctate; not marked with points. Also impunctured.

impunctual (im-pungk′tū-al), a. [= It. impuntuale; as in-[3] + punctual.] Not punctual. [Rare.]

impunctuality (im-pungk-tū-al′i-ti), n. [= It. impuntualità; as impunctual + -ity.] Lack or neglect of punctuality. [Rare.]

Unable to account for his impunctuality, some of his intimates were dispatched in quest of him.
Observer, No. 139. (Latham.)

impunctured (im-pungk′tūrd), a. Same as impunctate.

impune† (im-pūn′), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. impune, < L. impunis, without punishment, < in- priv. + pœna, punishment, penalty: see pain, penal.] Unpunished.

The breach of our national statutes can not go impune by the plea of ignorance. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 235.

impunely† (im-pūn′li), adv. Without punishment. Nares.

Thou sinn'st impunely, but thy fore-man paid
Thy pennance with his head; 'twas burn'd, 'tis said.
Owen's Epigrams Englished (1677).

impunible† (im-pū′ni-bl), a. [= Pg. impunivel = It. impunibile, not deserving punishment, < L. in- priv. + ML. punibilis, punishable, < L. punire, punish: see punish.] Not punishable.

impunibly† (im-pū′ni-bli), adv. Without punishment; with impunity.

Xenophon represents the opinion of Socrates, that . . . no man impunibly violates a law established by the gods.
Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 65.

impunity (im-pū′ni-ti), n.; pl. impunities (-tiz). [< F. impunité = Sp. impunidad = Pg. impunidade = It. impunità, < L. impunita(t-)s, inpunita(t-)s, omission of punishment, < impunis, inpunis, without punishment: see impune.] 1. Exemption from punishment or penalty.

Impunity and remissenes, for certain, are the bane of a Commonwealth. Milton, Areopagitica, p. 25.

The impunity with which outrages were committed in the ill-lit and ill-guarded streets of London during the first half of the eighteenth century can now hardly be realised. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., iii.

2. Freedom or exemption from injury, suffering, or discomfort.

The thistle, as is well known, is the national emblem of Scotland, and the national motto is very appropriate, being "Nemo me impune lacesset," Nobody shall provoke me with impunity. Brande.

impuration† (im-pū-rā′shon), n. [< L. impuratio(n-), < impurare, make impure: see impure, v.] The act of making impure.

And for these happy regions, which are comfortably illumined with the saving doctrine of Jesus Christ, may it please you to forbid their impuration by the noysome fogges and mists of those mis-opinions, whose very principles are professedly rebellious.
Bp. Hall, Christ and Cæsar.

impure (im-pūr′), a. [= F. impur = Sp. Pg. It. impuro, < L. impurus, inpurus, not pure, < in- priv. + purus, pure: see pure.] 1. Not pure physically; mixed or impregnated with extraneous, and especially with offensive, matter; foul; feculent; tainted: as, impure water or air; impure salt or magnesia.

Breathing an impure atmosphere injures the mind as well as the body. Huxley and Youmans, Physiol., § 395.

2. Not simple or unmixed; mixed or combined with something else: said of immaterial things.

Unless one surface of the prism be covered by an opaque plate, with a narrow slit in it parallel to the edge of the prism, the spectrum produced in this way is very impure, i. e. the spaces occupied by the various homogeneous rays overlap one another. P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XIV. 593.

3. Not pure morally; unchaste; obscene; lewd: as, impure language or ideas; impure actions.

Mine eyes, like sluices, . . .
Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1078.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Of a contaminating nature; causing defilement, physical or moral; unclean; abominable.

Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all.
Milton, P. L., iv. 746.

The notion that there is something impure and defiling, even in a just execution, is one which may be traced through many ages, and executioners, as the ministers of the law, have been from very ancient times regarded as unholy. Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 41.

5. Not in conformity with a standard of correctness, simplicity, etc.: as, an impure style of writing.—Impure syllogism, a syllogism which involves an immediate inference. = Syn. 1. Dirty, filthy.—2. Coarse, gross, ribald, vulgar, immodest, bawdy.

impure† (im-pūr′), v. [< L. impurare* (in pp. impuratus), make impure, < impurus, inpurus, impure: see impure, a.] I. trans. To make impure; defile.

What longer suffering could there be, when Religion it self grew so void of sincerity, and the greatest shows of purity were impur'd? Milton, Hist. Eng., v.

II. intrans. To grow impure. Davies.

Pure, in she [the soul] came; there living, Shee impures; And suffers there a thousand Woes the while.
Sylvester, tr. of P. Mathieu's Memorials of Mortality.

impurely (im-pūr′li), adv. In an impure manner; with impurity.

impureness (im-pūr′nes), n. The quality or condition of being impure; impurity.

Impuritan† (im-pū′ri-tan), n. [< in-[3] + Puritan.] One who is not a Puritan. [Rare.]

If those who are tearmed Rattle-heads and Impuritans would take up a Resolution to begin in moderation of haire, to the just reproach of those that are called Puritans and Round-heads, I would honour their manlinesse.
N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 32.

impurity (im-pū′ri-ti), n.; pl. impurities (-tiz). [= F. impureté = Pr. impuritat = Sp impuridad = Pg. impuridade = It. impurità, < L. impurita(t-)s, inpurita(t-)s, impurity, < impurus, inpu- rus, impure: see impure.] 1. The condition or quality of being impure, in either a physical or a moral sense.

The soul of a man grown to an inward and real impurity. Milton, Divorce, ii. 6.

Our Saviour, to shew how much God abhors Impurity, . . . declares that the unmortified Desires and inward Lusts are very displeasing to God; and therefore, that those who hope to see God must be Pure in Heart. Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. vii.

2. That which is or makes impure, physically or morally: as, impurities in a liquid.

But no perfection is so absolute
That some impurity doth not pollute.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 854.

=Syn. 1. Uncleanness, dirtiness, filthiness; immodesty, ribaldry, grossness, vulgarity.

impurple, v. t. See empurple.

imputability (im-pū-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. imputabilité = Sp. imputabilidad = Pg. imputabilidade; as imputable + -ity: see -bility.] The character of being imputable.

If now we can say what is commonly presupposed by imputability, we shall have accomplished the first part of our undertaking, by the discovery of what responsibility means for the people. F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 5.

imputable (im-pū'ta-bl), a. [= F. imputable = Sp. imputable = Pg. imputavel = It. imputabile; as impute + -able.] 1. That may be imputed, charged, or ascribed; attributable.

These [sins], I say, in the law were imputable, but they were not imputed. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 434.

This circumstance is chiefly imputable to the constancy of the national legislature. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., Int.

2†. Accusable; chargeable with fault.

The fault lies at his door, and she is in no wise imputable. Aylife, Parergon.

imputableness (im-pū'ta-bl-nes), n. The quality of being imputable; imputability.

'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action that it be avoidable. Norris.

imputably (im-pū'ta-bli), adv. By imputation.

imputation (im-pū-tā'shon), n. [= F. imputation = Sp. imputación = Pg. imputação = It. imputazione, < LL. imputatio(n-), inputatio(n-), a charge, an account, < imputare, inputare, charge, impute: see impute.] 1. The act of imputing or charging; attribution; ascription: as, the imputation of wrong motives.

If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 1.

This [self-conscious volition] is the condition of imputation and responsibility, and here begins the proper moral life of the self. F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 267.

2. That which is imputed or charged; specifically, an attribution of something censurable or evil; censure; reproach.

Truly I must needs lay an imputation of great discretion upon myselfe. Coryat, Crudities, I. 189.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Doctrine of imputation, in theol., the doctrine that the sin of Adam is attributed or laid to the charge of his posterity, so that they are treated as guilty because of it, and that the righteousness of Christ is attributed or credited to the believer, so that he is treated as righteous because of it.—Mediate imputation, the doctrine that not the guilt, but only the consequences of Adam's sin, attach to his descendants.

imputative (im-pū'tā-tiv), a. [= F. imputatif = Sp. Pg. imputativo, < LL. imputativus, charging, accusatory, < L. imputare, charge, impute: see impute.] Coming by imputation; imputed.

Some say they have imputative faith; but then so let the sacrament be too: that is, if they have the parents' faith, . . . then so let baptism be imputed also by derivation from them. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 394.

The fourth is the imputative righteousness of Christ, either exploded or not rightly understood. R. Nelson, Bp. Bull.

imputatively (im-pū'tā-tiv-li), adv. By imputation.

impute (im-pūt'), v. t.; pret. and pp. imputed, ppr. imputing. [< F. imputer = Sp. Pg. imputar = It. imputare, < L. imputare, inputare, enter into the account, reckon, set to the account of, attribute, < in, in, to, + putare, estimate, reckon: see putative. Cf. compute, depute, repute.] 1. To charge; attribute; ascribe; reckon as pertaining or attributable.

Let not my lord impute iniquity unto me. 2 Sam. xix. 19.

God imputes not to any man the blood he spills in a just cause. Milton, Eikonoklastes, xix.

Men oft are false; and, if you search with Care, You'll find less Fraud imputed to the Fair.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

We impute deep-laid, far-sighted plans to Cæsar and Napoleon; but the best of their power was in nature, not in them. Emerson, Spiritual Laws.

2. To reckon as chargeable or accusable; charge; tax; accuse. [Rare.]

All that I say is certain; if you fail,
Do not impute me with it; I am clear.
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, i. 1.

And they, sweet soul, that most impute a crime,
Are pronest to it, and impute themselves.
Tennyson, Merlin.

3. To attribute vicariously; ascribe as derived from another: used especially in theology. See doctrine of imputation, under imputation.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds.
Milton, P. L., iii. 291.

4. To take account of; reckon; regard; consider. [Rare.]

If we impute this last humiliation as the cause of his death. Gibbon.

Imputed malice. See malice.—Imputed quality†, in metaph., the power of a body to affect the senses, as color, smell, etc.

Secondary and imputed qualities, which are but the powers of several combinations of those primary ones, when they operate without being distinctly discerned. Locke.

=Syn. Attribute, Ascribe, Refer, etc. See attribute.

imputer (im-pū'tėr), n. One who imputes or attributes.

imputrescible (im-pū-tres'i-bl), a. [< *im-*3 + putrescible.] Not putrescible; not subject to putrefaction or corruption.

imrigh, imrich (im'riċh), n. [< Gael. eanraich, soup.] A sort of strong soup, made of parts of the ox, used in the Highlands of Scotland.

A strapping Highland damsel placed before Waverley, Evan, and Donald Bean, three cogues or wooden vessels ★. . . containing imrich. Scott, Waverley, xvii.

in[1] (in), prep. and adv. [With the simple form in became merged in later ME. and early mod. E. several deriv. forms, inne, etc. I. prep. (a) < ME. in, yn, < AS. in = OFries. D. MLG. LG. OHG. MHG. G. in = Icel. í = Sw. Dan. i = Goth. in = OIr. in = W. yn = L. in = Gr. ἐν, ἐνί, dial. ἰν, in; related to Gr. ἀνά = Goth. ana = OHG. ana, MHG. ane, an, G. an = AS. an, on, E. on: see on[1], and cf. in[2], an-[1], ana-, in-[1], in-[2], etc. (b) < ME. inne, ine, earlier innen, < AS. innan, in, within, = OS. innan = OFries. inna = OHG. innana, innan, innena, MHG. G. innen = Icel. innan = Dan. inden, inde = Sw. innan, inne = Goth. innana, from within, within. (c) < ME. inne, < AS. inne = OS. inne = OFries. inne = OHG. inna, inni, inne, MHG. G. inne, within, etc. II. adv. (a) < ME. in, < AS. in = OS. OFries. in = OHG. MHG. in, also, with lengthened vowel, OHG. MHG. īn, G. ein = Icel. inn = Sw. in = Dan. ind = Goth. inn, adv., in. (b) < ME. inne, innen, < AS. innan, etc. (c) < ME. inne, < AS. inne = Goth. inna, etc.: in forms similar to those of the prep. See I. With these are associated numerous other deriv. forms. In early use (AS. and early ME.) the prep. in was often interchangeable with the related on, which was indeed generally used in AS. where in now appears. In ME. and mod. poet. and dial. use, in G. dial., and reg. in Scand., the prep. in is reduced to i, in present E. commonly printed i'.] I. prep. A word used to express the relation of presence, existence, situation, inclusion, action, etc., within limits, as of place, time, condition, circumstances, etc. 1. Of place or situation: (a) Within the bounds or limits of; within: as, in the house; in the city; to keep a subject in mind.

His word was in mine heart as a burning fire. Jer. xx. 9.

These letters lay above fourteen days in the bay, and some moved the governour to open them. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 359.

The king pitched his tents in a plantation of olives, on the banks of the river. Irving, Granada, p. 66.

Ordinary language justifies us in speaking of the soul as in the body, in some sense in which this term does not apply to any other collection of material atoms. G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 635.

(b) Among; in the midst of.

Than the hete was so hoge, harmyt the Grekes,
With a pestylence in the pepull pynet hom sore:
Thai fore out to the fildes, fellyn to ground,
And droppit to dethe on dayes full thicke.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8410.

2. Of time: (a) Of a point of time, or a period taken as a point: At.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Gen. i. 1.

In the instant that I met with you,
He had of me a chain. Shak., C. of E., iv. 1.

(b) Of a course or period of time: Within the limits or duration of; during: as, in the present year; in two hours.

In the while that kynge Leodogan toke thus his counseile of his knyghtes, entred in the kynge Arthur and his companye in to the Paleise. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 203.

Whosoever were vanquished, such as escape vpon their submission in two dayes after should liue. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 135.

We left Alexandria in the afternoon. Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 17.

(c) Of a limit of time: At the expiration of: as, a note due in three months.

In a bond "payable in twenty-five years" means, at the end of that period, not within nor at any time during the period. Anderson, Dict. Law, p. 529.

3. Of action: Under process of; undergoing the process or running the course of: used especially before verbal nouns proper, or the same used participially.

Forty and six years was this temple in building. John ii. 20.

This space, extending Eastward from Ob, a Russe was a Summer in trauelling, and liued there 6 yeares. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 431.

Not much better than that noise or sound which musicians make while they are in tuning their instruments. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. xxiv. § 1.

The Moorish cavaliers, when not in armor, delighted in dressing themselves in Persian style. Irving, Granada, p. 5.

4. Of being: Within the power, capacity, or possession of: noting presence within as an inherent quality, distinguishing characteristic, or constituent element or part, or intimacy of relation: as, he has in him the making of a great man; it is not in her to desert him.

At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. John xiv. 20.

If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. 2 Cor. v. 17.

Why, thou dissemblest, and
It is in me to punish thee.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iii. 1.

But to giue him his due, one wel-furnisht Actor has enough in him for fiue common Gentlemen. Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Player.

5. Of state, condition, circumstance, or manner: In the condition, state, etc., of: as, in sickness and in health; painted in yellow; in arms (armed); in doubt; in very deed; paper in quires; grain in bulk; the party in power.

He in the red face had it. Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1.

Look to my shop; and if there come ever a scholar in black, let him speak with me. Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 3.

I am at this instant in the very agonies of leaving college. Gray, Letters, I. 16.

Muley Abul Hassan received the cavalier in state, seated on a magnificent divan. Irving, Granada, p. 12.

How could I know that your son would arrive in safety? E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, I. 67.

6. Of range, purview, or use: With regard to; within the range of: as, in politics; in theology or philosophy; in botany, etc.—7. Of number, amount, quantity, etc.: (a) Within the body or whole of; existing or contained in: as, there are ten tens in a hundred; four quarts in a gallon; the good men in a community. (b) To the amount of; for or to the payment of, absolutely or contingently: as, to amerce, bind, fine, or condemn in a thousand dollars.

Whereupon the Thebans at their returne home condemned euery man in the summe of ten thousand Drachmes. North, tr. of Plutarch, Pelopidas, p. 321.

Lord Elibank, a very prating, impertinent Jacobite, was bound for him in nine thousand pounds, for which the Duke is determined to sue him. Walpole, Letters, II. 40.

8. Of material, form, method, etc.: Of; made of; consisting of; with: as, a statue in bronze; a worker in metal; to paint in oils; a book written in Latin; a volume in leather or cloth; music in triple time.

Crispe heris & clene, all in cours yelowe,
All the borders blake of his bright ene.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3968.

For I will raise her statue in pure gold. Shak., R. and J., v. 3.

It [a newspaper] is in Turkish and Arabic. E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, II. 351.

But besides these statues in wood and stone, a few in bronze have also been discovered. Lucy M. Mitchell, Hist. Ancient Sculpture, ii.

9. Of means or instruments: By means of; with; by; through.

In thee shall all nations be blessed. Gal. iii. 8.

You shew your loves in these large multitudes
That come to meet me.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, ii. 2.

I, very providently preventing the worst, dismounted from my horse, and lead him in my hand.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 89.

10. Of cause or occasion: From; because of; on account of; for the sake of: as, to rejoice in an ancient lineage; in the name of God.

If tears must be,
I should in justice weep 'em, and for you.
Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4.

Old Ali Atar had watched from his fortress every movement of the Christian army, and had exulted in all the errors of its commanders. Irving, Granada, p. 68.

Every feature in that marvelous scene delighted him, both in itself and for the sake of the innumerable associations and images which it conjured up.
Trevelyan, Macaulay, I. 322.

11. Of end: With respect to; as regards; concerning.

And they glorified God in me. Gal. i. 24.

For the slaughter committed, they were in great doubt what to do in it. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 300.

There is nothing else I could disobey you in.
Sheridan, The Duenna, i. 3.

Men adroit
In speech, and for communion with the world Accomplished. Wordsworth, Prelude, xiii.

12. Of proportion or partition: From among; out of: as, one in ten.

Few in millions
Can speak like us. Shak., Tempest, ii. 1.

13. Of motion or direction: Into: as, to break a thing in two; to put in operation.

I wil the, withouten drede,
In suche another place lede.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1914.

Hence, villain! never more come in my sight.
Shak., Rich. II., v. 2.

His Pipe in pieces broke.
Congreve, Death of Queen Mary.

14. Of purpose, intent, or result: For; to; by way of: as, to act in self-defense; in conclusion.

It is not many years ago since Lapirius, in wrong of his elder brother, came to a great estate by gift of his father.
Steele, Spectator, No. 248.

In answer to the breath of prayer.
Whittier, Cypress-Tree of Ceylon.

15. According to: as, in all likelihood.

In all decencie the stile ought to conforme with the nature of the subject.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 126.

16†. Occupied with.

He was much in the troublesome thoughts of the sins he had committed, both since and before he began to be a Pilgrim. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 212.

17. On; upon: as, in the whole; in guard: in various archaic uses now more commonly expressed by on.

And on this daye it was founden of Helayne in the mounte of caluarye. Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 154.

"In condicioun," quod Conscience, "that thow konne defende And rule thi rewme in resoun."
Piers Plowman (B), xix. 474.

In the third day of May,
To Carleile did come
A kind curteous child.
The Boy and the Mantle (Child's Ballads, I. 8).

In his returne he discovered the Towne and Country of Warraskoyack.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, I. 156.

A certain rule could not be found out for an equal rate between buyer and seller, though much labor had been bestowed in it. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 380.

We were forced to cut our mainmast by the board; which so disabled the ship that she could not proceed in her voyage. R. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 342).

In act, actual; existing.—In action. (a) See action. (b) In law. See the extract.

A thing is said to be in action when it is not in possession, and for its recovery an action is necessary.
Rapalje and Lawrence.

In act to. See act.—In all. See all.—In and for itself, in the Hegelian philos., in the relations and connections which are really essential to it, and developed out of it.—In as far as, to the extent that.

Self-fertilization is manifestly advantageous in as far as it insures a full supply of seed.
Darwin, Fertil. of Orchids by Insects, p. 57.

In as much as, or inasmuch as, seeing that; considering that; since.—In battery. (a) Prepared for action: said of a field-gun. (b) Having the top carriage run forward to the front end of the chassis: applied to heavy guns in the firing position.—In blank. (a) With blank spaces to be filled out; in outline: as, to issue commissions in blank. (b) With the name only: said of the indorsement of a bill or note by merely writing one's name on it.—In boards, in bookbinding: (a) Having the sideboards laced or tipped to the rounded back, preparatory to covering with cloth or leather. (b) Bound with boards. See board, 11.—In bulk, in the heap; not packed in bags, barrels, boxes, or other separate packages: as, a cargo of grain in bulk.—In course. See course[1].

In course . . . it must have been the owner of the chestnut, and no one else. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 27.

In energy, in operation.—In itself (as a thing), apart from what is not essential to it; apart from its relations, especially from its relation to the mind and senses of man; as it is intrinsically.

A thing known in itself is the (sole) presentative or intuitive object of knowledge, or the (sole) object of a presentative or intuitive knowledge. A thing known in and through something else is the primary, mediate, remote, real, existent or represented, object of mediate knowledge. . . . A thing to be known in itself must be known as actually existing, and it cannot be known as actually existing unless it be known as existing in its when and its where. Sir W. Hamilton, Metaphysics, xvii.

In that, for the reason that; because.

Some things they do in that they are men; . . . some things in that they are men misled and blinded with error.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

In the abstract, viewed abstractly; not taking account of inessential conditions.—In the concrete, as things are found in the real world.

II. adv. 1. In or into some place, position, or state indicated by the context: an elliptical use of the preposition in: as, the master is not in (in the house, or at home); the ship is in (in port); come in (into the room, house, etc.); to keep one's temper in (in restraint, or within bounds).

Whiche havyn ys callyd Swafane, in Turkey, And whanne we war inne we cowd nott get owt nor kast our Anker.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 62.

They went in to Hezekiah the king. 2 Chron. xxix. 18.

Well, would I were in, that I am out with him once.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 2.

I am in,
And what was got with cruelty, with blood
Must be defended. Fletcher, Double Marriage, i. 2.

It being for their advantage to hold in with us, we may safely trust them. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 133.

The old Finn stood already with a fir torch, waiting to light us in. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 146.

2. Inward; coming in, as to a place.

I see that there are three trains in and three out every Sabbath. Trollope, Barchester Towers, p. 29.

3. Close; home.

They [left-handed fencers] are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

4. In law, in possession; in enjoyment; invested: used in expressing the nature or the mode of acquiring an estate, or the right upon which a seizin is founded: thus, a tenant is said to be in by the lease of his lessor (that is, his title or estate is derived from the lease).—5. Naut., furled or stowed: said of sails.—6. In advance or in addition; beyond what was the case, was expected, or the like; to the good; thrown in: as, he found himself five dollars in. [Colloq.]

And so you have the fight in, gratis. Dickens.

7. Into the bargain: as, ten cents a dozen and one thrown in. [Colloq.]—To be in for (a thing), to be destined to receive, suffer, or do (something); be bent upon or committed to: as, to be in for a beating; to be in for a lark.

I was in for a list of blunders.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, iv.

To be or keep in with. (a) To be or keep close or near: as, to keep a ship in with the land. (b) To be or keep on terms of friendship, familiarity, or intimacy with.—To bind in, come in, give in, etc. See the verbs.—To breed in and in. See breed.—To have one's hand in. See hand.—To throw in, to add in excess; give beyond what is bargained or paid for: as, the remnant of the piece was thrown in.

in[1] (in), n. [< in[1], adv.] 1. A person in office; specifically, in politics, a member of the party in power.

And doom'd a victim for the sins
Of half the outs and all the ins.
Chatterton, Prophecy.

There was then [1755] only two political parties, the ins and the outs. The ins strove to stay in, and keep the outs out; the outs strove to get in, and turn the ins out.
J. Hutton.

The disappointed Outs are lukewarm and often envious of the Ins. New Princeton Rev., I. 67.

The "ins" . . . always have . . . averred, with a fervor which can only spring from heartfelt conviction, that the incoming of the "outs" will be shortly followed by the final crack of doom. N. A. Rev., CXXIII. 459.

2. A nook or corner: used chiefly in the phrase ins and outs.—Ins and outs. (a) Nooks and corners; turns and windings: as, the ins and outs of a garden, or of an old house.

Take my arm; I can guide you better so. It's dark, and I know the ins and outs.
C. F. Woolson, Jupiter Lights, xv.

Hence—(b) All the details or intricacies of a matter: as, the ins and outs of a question.

Mrs. Harper was standing moralizing on the ins and outs of family life. Mrs. Craik, Agatha's Husband, xiii.

in[1]† (in), v. t. [Also inn, now with ref. only to inn, n.; < ME. innen, < AS. innian, get in, lodge, < inn, in, in: see in[1], prep.] To get in; take or put in; house.

And Goddis mercy schal ynne my corn,
And fede me with that that y neuere sewe.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 69.

All was inned at last into the King's Barne.
Bacon, Hist. Henry VII. (ed. 1641), p. 67.

in[2] (in), prep. [L., = AS. and E. in, etc.: see in[1].] A Latin preposition, cognate with English in. It occurs in many phrases more or less current in English use, as in loco parentis, in absentia, in esse, in posse, in statu quo, etc.

in[3]†, n. An obsolete spelling of inn.

In. In chem., the symbol for indium.

in. An abbreviation of inch or inches.

in-[1]. [ME. in-, < AS. in- = OS. OFries. D. in- = OHG. MHG. G. in-, with long vowel OHG. MHG. īn-, G. ein- = Icel. í-, inn- = Dan. ind- = Sw. in- = Goth. in- = L. in- (> E. in-[2], q. v.) = Gr. ἐν-; being the prep. and adv. in comp.: see in[1].] A prefix of Anglo-Saxon origin, being the preposition and adverb in so used. It is ultimately identical with in-[2] of Latin origin; but the latter in English apprehension is often unmeaning, while in-[1] always conveys the distinct sense of 'in' or 'into,' as in inborn, inbred, income, inland, inlet, inmate, inside, insight, insnare, inwrap, etc. In ingot, however, the prefix is unfelt, the word being no longer recognized as a compound. In consequence of its formal and original identity with in-[2], it may assume the same phases, becoming im- before a labial, as in impark, impen, imbitter, imbody, immesh, immingle, or varying to en-, as in encloud, enfetter, before a labial to em-, as in embed, embody, embitter, etc., the distinction being purely historical and depending on the origin, native or foreign, of the primitive. In the etymologies of this dictionary it depends on the origin of the primitive whether the prefix in-, meaning 'in,' is marked in-[1] or in-[2].

in-[2]. [ME. in-, en-, < OF. in-, reg. en-, mod. F. in-, en- = Sp. in-, en- = Pg. in-, en- = It. in-, < L. in-, being the prep. in (see in[2]) in comp., and conveying, according to the verb, the notion of rest or existence in, or of motion, direction, or inclination into, to, or upon; often merely intensive, and in later use sometimes without assignable force. In classical L. in- generally remained unchanged in all positions, but later was usually assimilated, im- before a labial, il- before l, ir- before r, whence the same in mod. languages. In OF., and hence in ME. and mod. F. and E., reg. en-, but with a constant tendency to revert to the L. in-, the form in en- often ceasing to be used in E. or being used alongside of in- without distinction.] A prefix of Latin origin, being the Latin preposition in so used. It is ultimately identical with in-[1] of English origin, having the same literal sense; but it is often merely intensive, and in many words has in modern apprehension no assignable force. Before a labial in- in later Latin, and hence in Romance, English, etc., becomes im-, as in imbibe, imperil, immanent, etc.; before l it becomes il-, as in illation, illude, illumine, etc.; before r it becomes ir-, as in irradiate, irrigate, etc. In many words derived in fact or form through the French, in- interchanges with or has displaced the earlier English and French en-, the tendency being to use in- whenever there is a corresponding Latin form in in-, as in inclose or enclose, inquire or enquire, etc. See in-[1], en-[1], en-[2]. This prefix occurs unfelt, with the accent, as en- in envy.

in-[3]. [ME. in-, en-, OF. en-, in-, F. en-, in- = Sp. Pg. in- = It. in-, < L. in- = Gr. ἀν-, before a consonant ἀ-, called ἀ- privative, = Goth. OHG. AS. E., etc., un-, not, -less, without: see un-[1], an-[5], a-[18]. In classical L. the negative in- generally remained unchanged in all positions; but later it was subject to the same assimilations and changes as in-[2] above. In OF., and hence in ME. and mod. F. and E., sometimes en-, but then in E. unfelt as a negative, as in en-emy (cf. in-imical, etc.).] A prefix of Latin origin, having a negative or privative force, 'not, -less, without.' It is cognate with the English prefix un-[1], with which it may interchange in English formations; but the rule is to use in- with an obvious Latin primitive and un- with a native or thoroughly naturalized primitive, as in inanimate, incredulous, inaccessible, inequality, as against unliving, unbelieving, unapproachable, unequal, etc. The two forms coexist in inedited, unedited, incautious, uncautious, etc. This prefix in-[3] assumes the same phonetic phases as in-[1], in-[2], as in impartial, immense, immeasurable, illiterate, irregular, etc.; it is reduced to i- in ignore, ignorant, etc. It occurs unfelt, with the accent, in enemy, enmity.

-in[1], -ine[1]. [1. ME. -in, -ine, < OF. and F. -in, -ine = Pr. -in, -ina = Sp. Pg. It. -ino, -ina, < L. (a) -īnus, -īna, -īnum = Gr. -ῑνος, -ινη, -ῑνον, forming adjectives, as in adamantīnus (< Gr. ἀδαμάντινος), adamantine, pristīnus, pristine, etc.; and sometimes nouns, as cophinus, < Gr. κόφινος, a basket; (b) -ānus, -āna, -ānum, forming adjectives, and nouns thence derived, from nouns, as in caninus, < canis, a dog, divinus, < divus, a god, equinus, < equus, a horse, femininus, < femina, a woman, peregrinus, < pereger, a traveler, etc.; very common in proper names, orig. appellatives, as Augustinus, Calvinus, Crispinus, Justinus, etc. 2. ME. -in, -ine, OF. and F. -ine = Sp. Pg. It. -ina, < L. -īna, forming fem. abstracts from verbs (from the inf. or through derivatives) or from undetermined roots, as in rapīna, rapine (E. also, through F., ravin, raven[2]), < rapere, snatch, ruīna, ruin, < ruere, fall, doctrīna, teaching, < doctor, a teacher (< docere, teach), medicina, medicine, < medicus, physician, vagina, sheath, etc. In -īnus, -īnus, -ānus, -ēnus, -ōnus, -unus, etc., the suffix is prop. -no-, -na-, being the extremely common Indo-Eur. suffix -na- with a preceding vowel belonging or supplied to the stem. The suffix -in, -ine appears sometimes as -en and is ult. = AS. and E. -en: see -en[2], and cf. -an, -ane, -ain, -one, -une. In margin, origin, virgin, etc., the suffix, not felt as such, is historically distinct, though related (L. -o, -ōn-, -in-): see these words.] 1. A suffix of Latin (or Greek) origin forming, in Latin, adjectives, and nouns thence derived, from nouns, many of which formations have come into or are imitated in modern Latin and English. The proper English spelling, when the vowel is short, is -in, which was formerly in use, alongside of -ine, in all cases, as in genuin, feminin, etc.; but in present spelling -ine prevails, whether the vowel is short, as in genuine, feminine, masculine, etc., or long, as in canine, divine, equine, etc. The form -in occurs in a few words, especially old contracted forms, as matin, a., matins, coffin, cousin, pilgrim (for pilgrin*), alongside of -ine, as in lupin, lupine. In proper names -ine is found, as in Augustine, Collatine, but regularly -in, as in Augustin, Austin, Calvin, Crispin, Justin, etc.

2. A suffix of Latin origin occurring, unfelt in English, in nouns formed as nouns in Latin, as in ravin or raven[2] (doublet rapine), ruin, discipline, doctrine, medicine, etc. It occurs also in its Latin form -ina (which see), and is ultimately identical with -in[2], -ine[2].

-in[2], -ine[2]. [F. -ine = Sp. Pg. It. NL. -ina, < L. -ina = Gr. -ινη, fem. of the adj. suffix above described, -in[1], -ine[1]; used in Gr. as a fem. formative dim. and patronymic (= AS. and E. -en = G. -in: see -en[3]), as in ἡρωίνη, > L. heroina, > F. héroïne, > E. heroine, whence its use in NL. -ina, E. -in[2], -ine[2], in forming the names of chem. derivatives.] 1. A suffix of Latin or Greek origin, ultimately identical with the fem. of the preceding (-in[1], -ine[1]), occurring as a feminine formative in heroine.—2. The same suffix used in a special manner in chemical and mineralogical nomenclature, forming names of some of the elements, as in bromine, chlorin, etc., but usually derivatives, as in glycerin, acetin, etc. In spelling usage wavers between -in and -ine. In this dictionary, in accordance with the proper pronunciation, and with the best recent usage in chemistry, the form -in is generally used in preference to -ine when both forms are in use. In chemistry a certain distinction of use is attempted, basic substances having the termination -ine rather than -in, as aconitine, aniline, etc., and -in being restricted to certain neutral compounds, glycerides, glucosides, and proteids, as albumin, palmitin, etc.; but this distinction is not observed in all cases. In names of minerals -ine is generally used. From its chemical use the suffix has come to be much used in the formation of trade-names, more or less absurd, of proprietary "remedies," "cures," soaps, powders, etc.

-ina[1]. [NL. Sp. Pg. It. -ina, < L. -ina, fem. of -inus: see -in[1] and -in[2].] The feminine form of the suffix -in[1], -ine[1], in the Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, New Latin, and Latin form, occurring in some English words adopted from or formed after one or another of these languages, as in farina, vagina, and other original Latin nouns. This suffix is common in New Latin feminine generic and specific names.

-ina[2]. [NL., L., neut. pl. of -inus, adj. suffix: see -in[1], -ine[1].] A suffix of Latin or New Latin names of groups of animals, being properly adjectives in the neuter plural, with animalia (animals) understood, as in Anoplotherina, Siderina, etc.

inability (in-ạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= It. inabilità; as in-[3] + ability. Cf. inhability.] 1. The state of being unable, physically, mentally, or morally; want of ability; lack of power, capacity, or means: as, inability to perform a task, or to pay one's debts.

> Others, . . . once seated, sit,
> Through downright inability to rise.
> Cowper, Task, i. 480.

There seems to be, in the average German mind, an inability or a disinclination to see a thing as it really is, unless it be a matter of science.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 292.

Highly nervous subjects, too, in whom the action of the heart is greatly lowered, habitually complain of loss of memory and inability to think.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 101.

Specifically—2. In theol., want of power to obey the law of God. Theologians have distinguished between natural inability, or a supposed total natural incapacity to obey the divine law without special divine grace, and moral inability, or a want of power due, not to incapacity, but to a perverted will. =Syn. Disability, Inability (see disability), weakness, incapacity, incompetence, impotence.

inablet, v. An obsolete form of enable.

inablementt, n. Same as enablement.

inabstinence (in-ab′sti-nẹns), n. [= F. inabstinence; as in-[3] + abstinence.] Want of abstinence; indulgence of appetite. [Rare.]

> What misery the inabstinence of Eve > Shall bring on men. Milton, P. L., xi. 476.

inabstractedt (in-ab-strak′ted), a. [< in-[3] + abstracted.] Not abstracted. Hooker.

inabusivelyt (in-ạ-bū′siv-li), adv. [< in-[3] + abusively.] Without abuse.

That infinite wisdom and purity of intention which resideth in the Deity, and which makes power to consist inabusively only there, as in its proper sphere.
Lord North, Light in the Way to Paradise (1682), p. 91.

inaccessibility (in-ak-ses-i-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inaccessibilité = Sp. inaccesibilidad = Pg. inaccessibilidade; as inaccessible + -ity.] The character of being inaccessible, or not to be reached or approached.

That side which flanks on the sea and haven needs no art to fortify it, nature having supplied that with the inaccessibility of the precipice. Butler, Remains, I. 417.

inaccessible (in-ak-ses′i-bl), a. [= F. inaccessible = Sp. inaccesible = Pg. inaccessivel = It. inaccessibile, < LL. inaccessibilis, unapproachable, < in- priv. + accessibilis, approachable: see accessible.] 1. Not accessible; not to be reached or approached.

The stars awaken a certain reverence, because, though always present, they are inaccessible. Emerson, Nature.

He was pleased to say that he found me by no means the remote and inaccessible personage he had imagined.
O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 65.

2†. Unapproachable in power.

> Curb your tongue in time, lest all the Gods in heav'n > Too few be and too weak to help thy punish'd insolence,
> When my inaccessible hands shall fall on thee.
> Chapman, Iliad, i. 550.

Inaccessible altitude. See altitude.—Inaccessible distances. See distance.

inaccessibleness (in-ak-ses′i-bl-nes), n. The quality or state of being inaccessible.

inaccessibly (in-ak-ses′i-bli), adv. So as to be inaccessible; unapproachably.

> Ev'n in the absence of Emathia's prince
> At Athens, friendship's unremitted care
> Still in Sandauce's chamber held the queen
> Sequester'd, inaccessibly immur'd.
> Glover, Athenaid, xxi.

inaccommodatet (in-ạ-kom′ọ-dāt), a. [< in-[3] + accommodate, a.] Inconvenient; incommodious; cramped.

Halfe of their company dyed, . . . being infected with ye scurvie & other diseases, which this long voiage & their inacomodate condition had brought upon them.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 91.

inaccordant (in-ạ-kôr′dant), a. [< in-[3] + accordant.] Not in accordance; not agreeing.

inaccuracy (in-ak′ū-rā-si), n.; pl. inaccuracies (-siz). [< inaccura(te) + -cy.] 1. The state of being inaccurate; want of accuracy.

A few instances of inaccuracy . . . can never derogate from the superlative merit of Homer and Virgil.
Goldsmith, Metaphors.

We may say, therefore, without material inaccuracy, that all capital, and especially all addition to capital, are the result of saving. J. S. Mill.

2. That which is inaccurate; a mistake; a fault; a defect; an error.

The single description of a moonlight night in Pope's Iliad contains more inaccuracies than can be found in all the Excursion. Macaulay, Moore's Byron.

=Syn. 1. Incorrectness, inexactness.—2. Slip, inadvertence, blunder.

inaccurate (in-ak′ū-rāt), a. [< in-[3] + accurate.] Not accurate; not exact or correct; erroneous; of persons, disposed to commit errors; careless as regards accuracy of statement.

He is often inaccurate in his statement of facts, and sometimes hasty in his generalizations.
Theodore Parker, Historic Americans, vi.

A notion may be inaccurate by being too wide.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 369.

=Syn. Incorrect, inexact, blundering, loose.

inaccurately (in-ak′ū-rāt-li), adv. In an inaccurate manner; incorrectly; erroneously.

inacquaintance (in-ạ-kwān′tans), n. [< in-[3] + acquaintance.] Unacquaintance.

An inacquaintance with the principles of gravitation.
W. Russell, Mod. Europe, IV. 290.

inacquiescent (in-ak-wi-es′ẹnt), a. [< in-[3] + acquiescent.] Not acquiescent or acquiescing.

inactt (in-akt′), v. t. [< in-[2] + act. Cf. enact.] To bring into action or a state of activity.

The soul in this condition was united with the most subtile and ethereal matter that it was capable of inacting. Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, xiv.

inaction (in-ak′shọn), n. [= F. inaction = Sp. inaccion = Pg. inacção = It. inazione; as in-[3] + action.] Want of action; abstention from labor; idleness; rest.

If, dead to these calls, you already languish in slothful inaction, what will be able to quicken the more sluggish current of advancing years? H. Blair, Works, I. xi.

One by one, the noiseless years had ebbed away, and left him brooding in charmed inaction, forever preparing for a work forever deferred.
H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 302.

★ inactive (in-ak′tiv), a. [= F. inactif = Sp. Pg. inactivo, < ML. inactivus, inactive, < L. in- priv. + activus, active: see active.] Not active or acting. (a) Incapable of action; without power of movement or exertion; inert; lifeless: as, matter is of itself inactive. (b) Inoperative; not producing results; ineffective: as, an inactive medicine or chemical agent. (c) Not disposed or prepared to act; in a state of non-action; idle; indolent; sluggish: as, an inactive man; inactive machinery.

I never saw anything so weak and inactive as the poor horses were; they had not agility enough to avoid one stroke. H. Swinburne, Travels through Spain, xl.

> A limb was broken; . . . and on him fell, . . .
> Yet lying thus inactive, doubt and gloom.
> Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

(d) Marked by inaction or sluggishness; destitute of activity: as, an inactive existence; the inactive stage of insect life (that is, the period of metamorphosis, generally passed in concealment). =Syn. Inert, Lazy, etc. (see idle), passive, supine.

inactively (in-ak′tiv-li), adv. In an inactive manner; idly; sluggishly; without motion, effort, or employment.

Mark how he [your son] spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away when . . . left to his own inclination. Locke, Education, § 125.

inactivity (in-ak-tiv′i-ti), n. [= F. inactivité = Pg. inactividade; as inactive + -ity.] The condition or character of being inactive; want of action or exertion; indisposition to act or exert one's self; sluggishness.

The commons, faithful to their system, remained in a wise and masterly inactivity.
Sir J. Mackintosh, Causes of Revolution of 1688, vii.

=Syn. See idle.

inactuatet (in-ak′tū-āt), v. t. [< in-[2] + actuate. Cf. inact.] To put in action.

The plastick in them is too highly awakened to inactuate only an aerial body.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, xiv.

inactuationt (in-ak-tū-ā′shọn), n. [< inactuate + -ion.] Operation.

That those powers should each of them have a tendency to action, and in their turns be exercised, is but rational to conceive, since otherwise they had been superfluous. And . . . that they should be inconsistent in the supremest exercise and inactuation, is to me as probable.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, xiii.

inadaptability (in-ạ-dap-tạ-bil′i-ti), n. [< inadaptable: see -bility.] Want of adaptability; incapacity for adaptation.

This system is supposed to have the drawback of inadaptability to extensions.
The Engineer (London), No. 1483.

inadaptable (in-ạ-dap′tạ-bl), a. [= Sp. inadaptable; as in-[3] + adaptable.] That cannot be adapted; not admitting of adaptation; unsuitable.

inadaptation (in-ad-ap-tā′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + adaptation.] The state of being not adapted, fitted, or suited.

inadaptive (in-ạ-dap′tiv), a. Same as inadaptable.

inadequacy (in-ad′ẹ-kwā-si), n. [< inadequa(te) + -cy, after adequacy.] The state or quality of being inadequate, insufficient, or disproportionate; incompleteness; defectiveness.

A generation ago discussion was taking place concerning the inadequacy and badness of industrial dwellings.
H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 51.

inadequate (in-ad′ẹ-kwāt), a. [= F. inadéquat = Sp. inadecuado = Pg. inadequado = It. inadeguato; as in-[3] + adequate.] Not adequate; not equal to requirement; insufficient to effect the end desired; incomplete; disproportionate; defective.

Inadequate ideas are such which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxxi. 1.

A scene the full horrors of which words . . . would be inadequate to express. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 197.

=Syn. Incommensurate, incompetent.

inadequately (in-ad′ẹ-kwāt-li), adv. In an inadequate manner; not fully or sufficiently.

Though in some particulars that sense be inadequately conveyed to us. Bp. Hurd, To Dr. Leland.

inadequateness (in-ad′ẹ-kwāt-nes), n. The state or quality of being inadequate; inadequacy; insufficiency; incompleteness.

That may be collected generally from the inadequateness of the visible means to most notable productions.
J. Goodman, Winter Evening Conferences, p. 11.

inadequationt (in-ad-ẹ-kwā′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + adequation.] Want of exact correspondence; incongruity.

The difference only arising from inadequation of languages.
Quoted in Puller's Moderation of Church of Eng., p. 418.

inadherent (in-ad-hēr′ẹnt), a. [= F. inadhérent = Pg. inadherente; as in-[3] + adherent.] Not adhering; specifically, in bot., free, or not attached to any other organ, as a calyx when perfectly detached from the ovary.

inadhesion (in-ad-hē′zhọn), n. [< in-[3] + adhesion.] The state or quality of not adhering; want of adhesion.

Porcelain clay is distinguished from colorific earths by inadhesion to the fingers. Kirwan.

inadhesive (in-ad-hē′siv), a. Not adhesive.

inadmissibility (in-ad-mis-i-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inadmissibilité; as inadmissible + -ity.] The quality of being inadmissible, or not proper to be admitted, allowed, or received: as, the inadmissibility of an argument or of evidence.

inadmissible (in-ad-mis′i-bl), a. [= F. inadmissible = Sp. inadmisible = Pg. inadmissivel = It. inammissibile; as in-[3] + admissible.] Not admissible; not proper to be admitted, allowed, or received: as, inadmissible testimony; inadmissible treatment of disease; an inadmissible proposition.

He, the said Warren Hastings, did, on pretence of certain political dangers, declare the relief desired to be without hesitation totally inadmissible.
Burke, Charge against Warren Hastings.

inadmissibly (in-ad-mis′i-bli), adv. In a manner not admissible.

inadvertence (in-ad-vėr′tẹns), n. [= F. inadvertance = Sp. Pg. inadvertencia = It. inavvertenza; as inadverten(t) + -ce.] 1. The condition or character of being inadvertent; inattention; negligence; heedlessness.—2. An effect of inattention; an oversight, mistake, or fault proceeding from mental negligence.

I do not dwell on this topic at present, but content myself with noticing the serious inadvertence of regarding the genus "Feeling" as made up exclusively of pleasure and pain. A. Bain, Mind, XII. 578.

=Syn. Oversight, etc. See negligence.

inadvertency (in-ad-vėr′tẹn-si), n. Same as inadvertence.

Such little Blemishes as these, when the Thought is great and natural, we should, with Horace, impute to a pardonable Inadvertency. Addison, Spectator, No. 285.

inadvertent (in-ad-vėr′tẹnt), a. [= F. inadvertant = It. inavvertente (in adv.); as in-[3] + advertent.] 1. Not properly attentive; heedless; careless; negligent.

However, he allows at length that men may be dishonest in obtruding circumstances foreign to the object; and we may be inadvertent in allowing those circumstances to impose upon us.
Warburton, Postscript to Ded. to the Free-Thinkers.

An inadvertent step may crush the snail,
That crawls at evening in the public path.
Cowper, Task, vi. 564.

2. Unconscious; unintentional; accidental.

Another secret charm of this book [White's "Natural History of Selborne"] is its inadvertent humor, so much the more delicious because unsuspected by the author.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 2.

=Syn. Inattentive, unobservant, thoughtless.

inadvertently (in-ad-vėr′tẹnt-li), adv. In an inadvertent manner; heedlessly; carelessly; inconsiderately; unintentionally.

She inadvertently approached the place . . . where I sat writing. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxxv.

inadvertisement†, n. [< in-[3] + advertisement.] Inadvertence.

Constant objects lose their hints, and steal an inadvertisement, upon us. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., iii. 10.

inadvisability (in-ad-vī-za-bil′i-ti), n. [< inadvisable: see -bility.] The quality of being inadvisable.

inadvisable (in-ad-vī′za-bl), a. [< in-[3] + advisable.] Unadvisable.

-inæ. [NL., L., fem. pl. of -inus: see -in[1], -ine[1].] A suffix forming New Latin names of subfamilies of animals, being properly adjectives in the feminine plural, with bestiæ (beasts) understood, as in Felinæ, Caninæ, etc. The family names end in -idæ.

in æquali jure (in ē-kwā′lī jö′rē). [L.: in, in; æquali, abl. neut. of æqualis, equal; jure, abl. of jus, right: see equal and jus.] In equal right: said of persons having conflicting claims of apparently equal validity. In such a case the maxim of the law is that the position of the defendant is superior—that is to say, whichever claim is asserted by legal proceedings is to be treated as inferior to the other, because he who takes legal proceedings against another has the burden of showing a better right than his adversary has.

inæqui-. For words so beginning, see inequi-.

in æquilibrio (in ē-kwi-lib′ri-ō). [L.: in, in; æquilibrio, abl. of æquilibrium, equilibrium: see equilibrium.] See equilibrium, 1.

Inæquivalvia (in-ē-kwi-val′vi-ạ), n. pl. [NL., < L. in- priv. + æquus, equal, + valva, the leaf of a door.] 1. In Lamarck's classification (1801), one of two divisions of his conchiferous Acephalæa, containing the inequivalve bivalves and the brachiopods: opposed to Æquivalvia, 1.—2. In Latreille's system (1825), one of two divisions (called families) of pedunculate Brachiopoda, represented by the genus Terebratula: opposed to Æquivalvia, 2.

inaffability (in-af-ạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inaffabilité; as inaffable + -ity.] Want of affability; reserve in conversation. Coles, 1717.

inaffable (in-af′ạ-bl), a. [= F. inaffable; as in-[3] + affable. Cf. ineffable, of the same ult. formation.] Not affable; reserved. E. Phillips, 1706.

inaffectation† (in-af-ek-tā′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + affectation.] Freedom from affectation. E. Phillips, 1706.

inaffected† (in-ạ-fek′ted), a. [< in-[3] + affected[2], after F. inaffecté = It. inaffettato = Sp. inafectado, < L. inaffectatus, not affected.] Unaffected. Minsheu, 1617.

inaffectedly† (in-ạ-fek′ted-li), adv. Unaffectedly. Cockeram.

inaggressive (in-a-gres′iv), a. [< in-[3] + aggressive.] Not aggressive.

The strong individuality and the inaggressive nature of the early cults. W. E. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 325.

inaidable (in-ā′da-bl), a. [< in-[3] + aid + -able.] Not to be aided. [Rare.] Shak., All's Well, ii. 1.

inaja-palm (in-ä-jä′päm), n. [Tupi inajá.] A South American palm, Englerophœnix regia, having a trunk upward of 100 feet high, and leaves from 30 to 50 feet long, and whose woody spathes are used by the Indians as cradles and by hunters to cook in. The fruit is eaten by the Indians and much relished by monkeys.

inalienability (in-āl″yen-ạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inaliénabilité = Pg. inalienabilidade = It. inalienabilità; as inalienable + -ity.] The state or quality of being inalienable.

inalienable (in-āl′yen-ạ-bl), a. [= F. inaliénable = Sp. inalienable = Pg. inalienavel = It. inalienabile; as in-[3] + alienable.] Incapable of being alienated or transferred to another; that cannot or should not be transferred or given up.

One of the first things to be done after the resumption was to consolidate and render inalienable, or, so to speak, amortize the crown lands. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 365.

inalienableness (in-āl′yen-ạ-bl-nes), n. Inalienability. Bailey, 1727.

inalienably (in-āl′yen-ạ-bli), adv. So as not to be alienable: as, rights inalienably vested.

The sacred rights of conscience inalienably possessed by every man. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., i. 7.

inalimental (in-al-i-men′tal), a. [< in-[3] + alimental.] Not supplying aliment; affording no nourishment.

The dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and making of things inalimental to become alimental may be an experiment of great profit, for making new victual. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 649.

inalterability (in-âl″tėr-ạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inalterabilité = Sp. inalterabilidad = Pg. inalterabilidade = It. inalterabilità; as inalterable + -ity.] Unalterability.

From its lightness and inalterability in the air, aluminum has been applied to the preparation of small weights. W. A. Miller, Elem. of Chem., § 661.

inalterable (in-âl′tėr-ạ-bl), a. [= F. inaltérable = Sp. inalterable = Pg. inalteravel = It. inalterabile; as in-[3] + alterable.] Unalterable.

inam (i-näm′), n. [Hind., < Ar. in'ām, a favor, gift, present, donation.] In India: (a) A favor; a boon. Hence—(b) A gift or grant, usually of rent-free lands, made for religious endowments or for services rendered to the state. Encyc. Brit., XV. 186.

inamel†, v. An obsolete form of enamel.

The tombe is . . . couered with lead, and the top all inamelled with golde. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 211.

inameller†, n. An obsolete variant of enameler.

inamiability† (in-ā″mi-ạ-bil′i-ti), n. [< inamiable: see -bility.] The state or quality of being unamiable.

Insomuch as the reprover oversteps the exact truth of occurrences, in order to heighten their interest, and to make the wished-for impression, his cutting inamiability is usually met with flat, direct negation by the party castigated. Jon Bee, Essay on Samuel Foote.

inamiable† (in-ā′mi-ạ-bl), a. [< in-[3] + amiable.] Unamiable. Coles, 1717.

inamiableness† (in-ā′mi-ạ-bl-nes), n. Unamiableness.

inamiller†, n. An obsolete variant of enameler.

inamissible† (in-ạ-mis′i-bl), a. [= F. inamissible = Sp. inamisible = Pg. inamissivel = It. inammissibile, < LL. inamissibilis, that cannot be lost, < in- priv. + amissibilis, that may be lost: see amissible.] Not to be lost.

Had we been so fixt in an inamissible happinesse from the beginning, there had been no vertue in the world, nor any of that matchlesse pleasure which attends the exercise thereof. Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, viii.

inamissibleness† (in-ạ-mis′i-bl-nes), n. The character of being inamissible. Bailey, 1727.

inamorata (in-am-ọ-rä′tạ), n. [< It. innamorata, fem. of innamorato: see inamorate.] A woman with whom one is in love.

The carriage stopped, as I had expected, at the hotel door; my flame (that is the very word for an opera inamorata) alighted. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xv.

inamorate† (in-am′ọ-rāt), a. [Early mod. E. also inamourate; = F. enamouré = Sp. enamorado = Pg. enamorado, namorado = It. innamorato, < ML. inamoratus, pp. of inamorare, cause to love, inamorari, fall in love, < L. in, in, + amor, love: see amor. Cf. enamour.] Enamoured.

His blood was framde for euerie shade of vertue
To rauish into true inamourate fire.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, iv. 1.

inamorato (in-am-ọ-rä′tō), n. [< It. innamorato: see inamorate.] A man who is in love; a lover.

If a man had such an army of lovers (as Castilio supposeth), he might soon conquer all the world, except by chance he met with such another army of inamorates to oppose it. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 517.

inamour (in-am′or), v. t. Same as enamour.

in-and-in (in′and-in′), adv. [< in[1] + and + in[1].] 1. From animals of the same parentage; from animals closely related by blood: as, to breed in-and-in.—2. With constant interaction of any kind.

The whole flotsam and jetsam of two minds forced in and in upon the matter in hand from every point of the compass. R. L. Stevenson, Talk and Talkers, i.

in-and-in (in′and-in′), n. [< in-and-in, adv.] An old gambling game played by two or three persons with four dice, each person having a box. In implied a doublet, or two dice alike out of the four; in-and-in, two doublets, or all four dice alike.

He is a merchant still, adventurer,
At in-and-in. B. Jonson, New Inn, iii. 1.

At Passage and at Mumchance, at In and In,
Where swearing hath bin counted for no sinne.
Travels of Twelve-Pence (1630), p. 73. (Halliwell.) inane (in-ān′), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. inane, < L. inānis, empty, void, appar. < in- priv. + -ānis, an element of unknown origin and meaning.] I. a. Empty; void; especially, void of sense or intelligence; senseless; silly.

Vague and inane instincts. Is. Taylor.

Shylock hesitated for a moment on the threshold, and exhibited a species of inane surprise at finding a child instead of his brother-comedian, Mr. Effingham, in the apartment. J. E. Cooke, Virginia Comedians, I. xxviii.

For what inane rewards he still must try
To pierce the inner earth or scale the sky.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 194.

=Syn. Frivolous, puerile, trifling.

II. n. That which is void or empty; void space; emptiness; vacuity.

When one can find out and frame in his mind clearly and distinctly the place of the universe, he will be able to tell us whether it moves or stands still in the undistinguishable inane of infinite space.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xiii. 10.

Pinnacled dim in the intense inane.
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, iii. 4.

Folly and Fear are sisters twain:
One closing the eyes,
The other peopling the dark inane
With spectral lies.
Whittier, My Soul and I.

inangular (in-ang′gū-lär), a. [< in-[3] + angular.] Not angular. [Rare.]

inaniloquent† (in-ạ-nil′ō-kwẹnt), a. [< L. inanis, empty, + loquen(t-)s, ppr. of loqui, speak, talk.] Same as inaniloquous. Coles, 1717.

inaniloquous† (in-ạ-nil′ō-kwus), a. [< L. inanis, empty, + loqui, speak, talk.] Given to empty talk; loquacious; garrulous. Bailey, 1731.

inanimate[1]† (in-an′i-māt), v. t. [< ML. inanimatus, pp. of inanimare (> It. inanimare, inanimire), put life in, animate, < L. in, in, + anima, life: see animate, v.] To infuse life or vigor into; animate; quicken.

Though she which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone, yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk. Donne, Anat. of World, i.

inanimate[2] (in-an′i-māt), a. [= F. inanimé = Sp. Pg. inanimado = It. inanimato; as in-[3] + animate, a.] 1. Not animate; having lost life or vital force: as, the inanimate body of a man.

Nature inanimate employs sweet sounds,
But animated Nature sweeter still.
Cowper, Task, i. 197.

The stars and planets attract each other according to the laws which we know regulate inanimate bodies on the earth. Mivart, Nature and Thought, p. 192.

2. Not animated; without vivacity or briskness; spiritless; inactive; sluggish; dull: as, inanimate movements; inanimate conversation.

All the people in the date villages . . . had an inanimate, dejected, grave countenance, and seemed rather to avoid than wish any conversation.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 54.

= Syn. Dead, lifeless, inert, soulless, spiritless.

inanimated (in-an′i-mā-ted), p. a. Made inanimate; without life; without animation; lifeless; spiritless. [Rare.]

O fatal change! become in one sad day
A senseless corpse! inanimated clay!
Pope, Iliad, xxii. 561.

Everything that comes from them is flat, inanimated, and languid. Goldsmith, Sequel to A Poetical Scale.

inanimateness (in-an′i-māt-nes), n. The state of being inanimate; want of spirit; dullness.

Albeit the mover had been more excellent, might not the motion have been accounted less perfect, by reason of the deadness and inanimateness of the subject mov'd?
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, I. ii. 3.

inanimation[1]†, n. [< ML. as if inanimatio(n-)*, < inanimare, animate: see inanimate[1].] Infusion of life or spirit; vivifying influence.

Habitual joy in the Holy Ghost, arising from the inanimation of Christ living and breathing within us.
Bp. Hall, Christ Mystical.

inanimation[2] (in-an-i-mā′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + animation.] Inanimateness. [Rare.]

inanitiate (in-ā-nish′i-āt), a. [Irreg. < inaniti(on) + -ate[1].] Affected with inanition; exhausted by lack of nourishment.

inanitiate (in-ā-nish′i-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inanitiated, ppr. inanitiating. [Irreg. < inaniti(on) + -ate[2].] To affect with inanition; exhaust by lack of nourishment.

inanitiation (in-ā-nish-i-ā′shọn), n. [< inanitiate + -ion.] The state of being inanitiated, or exhausted from lack of nourishment: usually called inanition.

inanition (in-ā-nish′ọn), n. [< F. inanition = Pr. inanicio = Sp. inanición = Pg. inanição, < LL. inanitio(n-), emptiness, < L. inanire, pp. inanitus, make empty, < inanis, empty: see inane.] The condition or consequence of being inane or empty; hence, exhaustion from lack of nourishment, either physical or mental; starvation due to deficiency or mal-assimilation of food.

And as he must not eat overmuch, so he may not absolutely fast; for, as Celsus contends, repletion and inanition may both doe harme in two contrary extreames.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 235.

I was now nearly sick from inanition, having taken so little the day before. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, v.

inanity (in-an′i-ti), n.; pl. inanities (-tiz). [< F. inanité = It. inanità, < L. inanita(t-)s, emptiness, empty space, < inanis, empty: see inane.] 1. The state of being inane. (a†) Emptiness; vacuity.

This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities, but so little ones as no body whatever can come to but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide.
Sir K. Digby, Nature of Bodies.

(b) Mental vacuity; senselessness; silliness; frivolity.

But nothing still from nothing would proceed:
Raise or depress, or magnify or blame,
Inanity will ever be the same.
C. Smart, The Hilliad.

To flow along through a whole wilderness of inanity, without particularly arousing the reader's disgust.
De Quincey, Rhetoric, p. 227.

(c) Hollowness; worthlessness.

He prevented the vain and presumptuous Russian from seeing the minuteness and inanity of the things he was gaining by his violent attempt at diplomacy. Kinglake.

2. An instance of frivolity or vanity: as, the inanities of his conversation.

inantherate (in-an′thėr-āt), a. [< in-[3] + anther + -ate[1].] In bot., bearing no anther: applied to sterile filaments or abortive stamens.

in antis (in an′tis). [L.: in, in; antis, abl. of antæ, projecting ends of walls, etc.: see anta[1].] In classical arch., between antæ or pilasters: a phrase noting porticoes or buildings without a peristyle, of which the side walls are prolonged beyond the front, forming antæ, which with columns between them support an entablature. See anta[1].

External façades high up in the cliffs, consisting each of two columns in antis. Encyc. Brit., II. 388.

inapathy (in-ap′a-thi), n. [< in-[3] + apathy.] Feeling; sensibility. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

inapertous (in-a-pėr′tus), a. [< L. inapertus, not open, < in- priv. + apertus, open: see apert.] In bot., not open: applied to an unopened corolla. [Rare.]

inapostate† (in-ą-pos′tāt), a. [< L. in- priv. + LL. apostata, < Gr. ἀποστάτης, taken in the lit. sense, 'standing away': see apostate.] Not standing or turning away; attentive.

The man that will but lay his eares
As inapostate to the thing he heares,
Shall be [by] his hearing quickly come to see
The truth of travails lesse in bookes then thee.
Herrick, Hesperides, p. 354.

inappealable (in-ą-pē′la-bl), a. [< in-[3] + appealable.] Unappealable.

inappeasable (in-ą-pē′za-bl), a. [= F. inapaisable; as in-[3] + appeasable.] Not to be appeased.

inappellability (in-ą-pel-ą-bil′i-ti), n. [< inappellable: see -bility.] 1. Incapability of being appealed from: as, "the inappellability of the councils," Coleridge.—2. The condition of being without appeal.

inappellable (in-ą-pel′ą-bl), a. [= Sp. inapelable = It. inappellabile; as in-[3] + appellable.] Not to be appealed from; not admitting of appeal: as, "inappellable authority," Coleridge.

Inappendiculata (in-ap-en-dik-ū-lā′tą), n. pl. [NL.: see inappendiculate.] A section of bivalve mollusks whose external branchiæ are destitute of posterior extensions or appendages. Some (for example, Ostrea, Arca) are tetrabranchiate and others (Lucina) dibranchiate.

inappendiculate (in-ap-en-dik′ū-lāt), a. [< L. in- priv. + appendicula, dim. of appendix, an appendage: see appendage, appendix.] 1. In zoöl., unprovided with appendages, as the branchiæ of certain bivalve or lamellibranchiate mollusks of the group Inappendiculata.—2. In bot., not appendaged, as the anthers in some of the genera of the Ericaceæ, in distinction from those genera in which they are appendaged.

inappetence (in-ap′ē-tẹns), n. [< F. inappétence = Sp. inapetencia = Pg. inappetencia = It. inappetenza; as in-[3] + appetence.] 1. Lack of appetence; failure of appetite.

Some squeamish and disrelished person takes a long walk to the physician's lodging to beg some remedy for his inappetence. Boyle, Works, VI. 23.

2. Lack of desire or inclination. See appetence.

inappetency (in-ap′ē-tẹn-si), n. Same as inappetence.

Ignorance may be said to work as an inappetency in the stomach, and as an insipidness, a tastelessness in the palate. Donne, Sermons, xxvii.

inapplicability (in-ap″li-ka-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inapplicabilité; as inapplicable + -ity.] The quality of being inapplicable; unsuitableness.

You have said rather less upon the inapplicability of your own old principles to the circumstances that are likely to influence your conduct against these principles, than of the general maxims of state.
Burke, To Sir H. Langrishe.

The inapplicability of this method has already been explained. J. S. Mill, Logic, v. 3.

inapplicable (in-ap′li-ka-bl), a. [= F. inapplicable = Sp. inaplicable = Pg. inapplicavel; as in-[3] + applicable.] Not applicable; incapable of being or not proper to be applied; not suited or suitable; not fitting the case: as, the argument is inapplicable to the case.

If such an exhortation proved, perchance,
Inapplicable, words bestowed in waste,
What harm, since law has store, can spend nor miss?
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 155.

= Syn. Unsuitable, inappropriate, inapposite, irrelevant.

inapplicableness (in-ap′li-ka-bl-nes), n. The state of being inapplicable or unsuitable.

inapplicably (in-ap′li-ka-bli), adv. In an inapplicable manner.

inapplication (in-ap-li-kā′shọn), n. [= F. inapplication = Sp. inaplicación = Pg. inapplicação; as in-[3] + application.] Lack of application; negligence; indolence. Bailey, 1731.

inapposite (in-ap′ō-zit), a. [< in-[3] + apposite.] Not apposite; not fit or suitable; not pertinent: as, an inapposite argument.

I assured her gravely I thought so too; but forbore telling her how totally inapposite her application was.
Mrs. H. More, Cœlebs, I. 236.

inappositely (in-ap′ō-zit-li), adv. Not pertinently; not suitably.

inappreciable (in-ą-prē′shi-a-bl), a. [= F. inappréciable = Sp. inapreciable = Pg. inapreciavel = It. inapprezzabile, < ML. inappretiabilis, not to be estimated; as in-[3] + appreciable.] Not appreciable; not to be valued or estimated; hence, of no consequence.

After a few approximations the difference becomes inappreciable. Hallam, Introd. Lit. of Europe.

Glory was the cheap but inappreciable meed bestowed by the economical sovereign.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 135.

inappreciation (in-ą-prē-shi-ā′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + appreciation.] Want of appreciation.

inappreciative (in-ą-prē′shi-ą-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + appreciative.] Not appreciative; not valuing or justly esteeming.

We are thankful for a commentator at last who passes dry-shod over the turbide onde of inappreciative criticism.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 47.

inapprehensible (in-ap-rē-hen′si-bl), a. [= It. inapprensibile, < LL. inapprehensibilis, not apprehensible, < in- priv. + apprehensibilis, apprehensible: see apprehensible.] Not apprehensible or intelligible.

Those celestiall songs to others inapprehensible, but not to those who were not defil'd with women.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

For here is a predicate which he sufficiently apprehends, what is inapprehensible in the proposition being confined to the subject. J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 13.

inapprehension (in-ap-rē-hen′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + apprehension.] Want of apprehension. Bp. Hurd.

The young men . . . discussed the politics of the province and scrutinized the behavior of their English rulers with more or less inapprehension.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 593.

inapprehensive (in-ap-rē-hen′siv), a. [< in-[3] + apprehensive.] Not apprehensive; without apprehension; without suspicion or fear.

Neither are they hungry for God, nor satisfied with the world; but remain stupid and inapprehensive, without resolution and determination.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 639.

For when were they ever more secure and inapprehensive of their danger than at this time?
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. i.

inapproachable (in-ą-prō′cha-bl), a. [< in-[3] + approachable.] Unapproachable.

inapproachably (in-ą-prō′cha-bli), adv. Unapproachably.

inappropriate (in-ą-prō′pri-āt), a. [< in-[3] + appropriate.] Not appropriate or pertinent; not proper; unsuitable: as, inappropriate remarks.

It may be aggravated by inappropriate remedies.
P. M. Latham, Lects. on Clinical Medicine.

inappropriately (in-ą-prō′pri-āt-li), adv. Not appropriately or suitably.

inappropriateness (in-ą-prō′pri-āt-nes), n. Unsuitableness; unfitness.

inapt (in-apt′), a. [= F. inapte = It. inatto; as in-[3] + apt. Cf. incept.] 1. Not apt in kind or character; ill adapted to the purpose or occasion; unsuitable; not fit or qualified: as, a person inapt for a particular service.

In intelligence the bronco has no equal, unless it is the mule—though this comparison is inapt, as that hybrid has an extra endowment of brains, as though in compensation for the beauty which he lacks.
The Century, XXXVII. 342.

2. Not apt in action or manner; not ready or skilful; dull; slow; awkward; unhandy: as, an inapt student or workman. Also unapt. See inept.

inaptitude (in-ap′ti-tūd), n. [= F. inaptitude = Sp. inaptitud (cf. Pg. inaptidão) = It. inattitudine; as in-[3] + aptitude.] 1. Lack of aptitude or adaptation; unsuitableness; unfitness.

From diffidence, and perhaps from a certain degree of inaptitude for extemporary speaking, he took a less public part in the contests of ecclesiastical politics than some of his contemporaries. Blair, Dr. Hugh Blair.

2. Lack of readiness; unskilfulness; awkwardness; unhandiness: as, inaptitude in workmanship. See ineptitude.

The bursting of the 43-ton breech loading Woolwich gun on board the "Collingwood" is another illustration of the inaptitude characteristic of the history of our national armaments. Broad Arrow, May 8, 1886.

inaptly (in-apt′li), adv. In an inapt manner; unfitly; unsuitably; awkwardly.

inaptness (in-apt′nes), n. The quality of being inapt; inaptitude; unreadiness; awkwardness.

The poor man held dispute
With his own mind, unable to subdue Impatience through inaptness to perceive General distress in his particular lot.
Wordsworth, Excursion, ii.

We often hear persons who have a constitutional or habitual inaptness to pronounce an r, and who turn it into a w, or an l. Whitney, Lang. and Study of Lang., p. 93.

inaquate (in-ā′kwāt), a. [< L. inaquatus, pp. of inaquare, turn into water, < in, into, + aqua, water: see aqua.] Transformed into water; embodied in water. [Rare.]

For as muche as he is joyned to the bread but sacramentally, there followeth no impanation thereof, no more than the Holy Ghost is inaquate: that is to say, made water, beyng sacramentally joyned to the water in baptism.
Cranmer, Ans. to Gardiner, p. 368.

inaquation (in-ā-kwā′shọn), n. [< inaquate + -ion.] Embodiment in or transformation into water. [Rare.]

The solution to the seconde reason is almost soundely handled, alludynge from impanacion to inaquation, although it was neuer sayde in Scripture, this water is the Holy Ghoost.
Bp. Gardiner, Explication, Transubstan., fol. 127.

inar (ē′när), n. [Ir.] An outer garment worn by the ancient Irish. In the usual representations it appears as a sleeved frock worn over the leinidh, the kilt of which shows below it.

Over the lenn came the inar, a kind of closely fitting tunic reaching to the hips. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 257.

inarable (in-ar′ạ-bl), a. [= It. inarabile; as in-[3] + arable.] Not arable; not capable of being plowed or tilled.

inarch (in-ärch′), v. t. [Formerly also enarch; < in-[2] + arch[1].] To graft by approach; graft by uniting to the stock, as a scion, without separating the scion from its parent tree.

Inarching.

inarching (in-ärʹching), n. [Verbal n. of inarch, v.] The act of grafting by approach; rarely, anaplasty.

We might abate the art of Taliacotius, and the new inarching of noses.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 9.

inarm (in-ärmʹ), v. t. [< in-[1] + arm[1].] To embrace in or as if in the arms; encircle. [Rare.]

Warwickshire you might call Middle-Ingle, for equality of distance from the inarming ocean.
Selden, Illustrations of Drayton's Polyolbion, xiii.

Behold the mountain rillet, become a brook, become a torrent, how it inarms a handsome boulder.
G. Meredith, The Egoist, xxxvii.

Inarticulata (in-är-tik-ū-lāʹtạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of LL. inarticulatus: see articulate.] 1. Deshayes's name, given in 1836, of a division of Brachiopoda containing those brachiopods which have inarticulate or non-articulate valves, including the families Lingulidæ, Discinidæ, and Craniidæ: now called Lyopomata. See Articulata. Ecardines is a synonym.—2. One of two divisions of the cyclostomatous ectoproctous polyzoans, containing the families Idmoneidæ, Tubuliporidæ, Diastoporidæ, Lichnoporidæ, and Frondiporidæ, which have the zoarium without internodes: opposed to Articulata. Also called Incrustata.

inarticulate (in-är-tikʹū-lāt), a. [= F. inarticulé = Sp. Pg. inarticulado = It. inarticolato, < LL. inarticulatus, not articulate, not distinct, < L. in- priv. + LL. articulatus, pointed, articulate: see articulate.] 1. In anat. and zoöl., not articulated; having no articulation or joint; specifically, of or pertaining to the Inarticulata; lyopomatous; ecardinal.

In the calcareous sponges the spicules are frequently regularly disposed; and in the Sycons in particular a definite arrangement, on two plans, the articulate and inarticulate, can be traced in the skeleton of the radial tubes. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 413.

2. Not articulate; not uttered or emitted with expressive or intelligible modulations, as sounds or speech; not distinct or with distinction of syllables.

Mingling with these inarticulate sounds in the low murmur of memory. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, ix.

3. Not articulating or speaking; incapable of expressing thought in speech.

That poor earl who is inarticulate with palsy.
Walpole, Letters, II. 379.

Inarticulate with rage and grief.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 186.

inarticulated (in-är-tikʹū-lā-ted), a. [< in-[3] + articulated.] 1. In zoöl., not articulated; not jointed; inarticulate.—2. In Brachiopoda, of or pertaining to the Inarticulata; having the shell hingeless; lyopomatous.

inarticulately (in-är-tikʹū-lāt-li), adv. In an inarticulate manner; with indistinct utterance; indistinctly.

inarticulateness (in-är-tikʹū-lāt-nes), n. The state or quality of being inarticulate; indistinctness of utterance; want of distinct articulation.

inarticulation (in-är-tik-ū-lāʹshọn), n. [< in-[3] + articulation.] Inarticulateness. [Rare.]

The oracles meaned to be obscure: but then it was by the ambiguity of the expression, and not by the inarticulation of the words. Chesterfield.

in articulo mortis (in är-tikʹū-lō môrʹtis). [L.: in, in; articulo, abl. of articulus, joint, article; mortis, gen. of mor(t-)s, death: see mortal.] In the article of death; at the very point of death; in the death-struggle. See article.

inartificial (in-är-ti-fishʹal), a. [= F. inartificiel; as in-[3] + artificial.] 1. Not artificial; not according to the rules of art; formed or performed without art or artifice: as, inartificial work; an inartificial style.

The allegation is very inartificial, and the charge peevish and unreasonable.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 254.

An inartificial argument depending upon a naked asseveration. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 7.

2. Simple; artless; without contrivance or affectation: as, an inartificial manner.

His [James Hogg's] vanity was so inartificial as to be absolutely amusing.
S. C. Hall, in Personal Traits of Brit. Authors, p. 97.

Inartificial argument, in rhet. See artificial argument, under artificial.

inartificially (in-är-ti-fishʹal-i), adv. In an inartificial or artless manner; in a manner regardless of the rules of art; without art.

If, in the definition of meditation, I should call it an unaccustomed and unpractised duty, I should speak a truth, though somewhat inartificially.
Jer. Taylor, Great Exemplar, i. 4.

The incidents were inartificially huddled together.
Scott, Monastery, Int.

inartificialness (in-är-ti-fishʹal-nes), n. The state of being inartificial. [Rare.]

inartistic (in-är-tisʹtik), a. [< in-[3] + artistic.] Not artistic; not conformable to the rules or principles of art; deficient in liking for or appreciation of art.

An author's growth, and the happiness of both parties, are vastly imperilled by his union with the most affectionate of creatures, if she has an inartistic nature and a dull or commonplace mind. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 134.

inartistical (in-är-tisʹti-kạl), a. [< in-[3] + artistic + -al.] Same as inartistic.

The originality and power of this [dramatic literature] as a mirror of life can not be contested, however much may be said against the rudeness and inartistical shape of the majority of its products. Whipple, Ess. and Rev., II. 12.

inartistically (in-är-tisʹti-kạl-i), adv. In an inartistic manner; without conformity to the principles of art.

inasmuch (in′az-muchʹ), adv. [Orig. a phr., in as much, < ME. in as moche: see in[1], as[1], much. Cf. forasmuch.] 1. In so far; to such a degree: followed by as.

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.
Mat. xxv. 40.

2. In view of the fact; seeing; considering: followed by as.

He was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past. Deut. xix. 6.

The very force and contrivance of these collects [of our liturgy] is highly useful to raise and to enliven our devotions, inasmuch as they generally begin with the awful mention of some of God's attributes.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. xx.

inassimilation (in-ạ-sim-i-lāʹshọn), n. [< in-[3] + assimilation.] Want of assimilation; non-assimilation.

It is one of the frequent occurrences in inassimilation that the organism is not uniformly well nourished.
Alien. and Neurol., VI. 541.

inattention (in-ạ-tenʹshọn), n. [= F. inattention; as in-[3] + attention.] 1. Want of attention; failure to fix the mind attentively on an object or a subject; heedlessness; negligence.

The universal indolence and inattention among us to things that concern the publick. Tatler, No. 187.

2. An act of neglect; failure of courtesy.—Syn. 1. Thoughtlessness, absence of mind, carelessness. See negligence.

inattentive (in-ạ-tenʹtiv), a. [= F. inattentif; as in-[3] + attentive.] Not attentive; not fixing the mind attentively; heedless; careless; negligent: as, an inattentive habit.

What prodigies can pow'r divine perform
More grand than it produces year by year,
And all in sight of inattentive man?
Cowper, Task, vi. 120.

—Syn. Abstracted, Preoccupied, etc. See absent.

inattentively (in-ạ-tenʹtiv-li), adv. In an inattentive manner; without attention; carelessly; heedlessly.

In a letter to Addison, he expresses some consciousness of behaviour inattentively deficient in respect.
Johnson, Pope.

inattentiveness (in-ạ-tenʹtiv-nes), n. The state of being inattentive; inattention.

The perpetual repetition of the same form of words produces weariness and inattentiveness in the congregation.
Paley, Moral Philos., v. 5.

inaudibility (in-â-di-bilʹi-ti), n. [< inaudible: see -bility.] The state or quality of being inaudible.

inaudible (in-âʹdi-bl), a. [= F. inaudible = Sp. inaudible = Pg. inaudivel = It. inaudibile, < LL. inaudibilis, not audible, < L. in- priv. + (ML.) audibilis, audible: see audible.] Not audible; incapable of being heard: as, an inaudible whisper.

A soft and lulling sound is heard
Of streams inaudible by day.
Wordsworth, White Doe of Rylstone, iv.

inaudibleness (in-âʹdi-bl-nes), n. Inaudibility.

inaudibly (in-âʹdi-bli), adv. In an inaudible manner; so as not to be heard.

inaugur† (in-âʹgėr), v. t. [< F. inaugurer = Sp. Pg. inaugurar = It. inaugurare, < L. inaugurare, inaugurate: see inaugurate.] To inaugurate.

Inaugured and created king. Latimer.

inaugural (in-âʹgū-rạl), a. and n. [< F. inaugural = Sp. Pg. inaugural = It. inaugurale; as inaugur + -al, after augural.] I. a. Pertaining to, connected with, or forming part of an inauguration: as, inaugural ceremonies.

The inaugural address was sufficiently imperious in tone and manner. Milman, Latin Christianity, vii. 2.

II. n. An inaugural address.

General Jackson, . . . in his first inaugural, declared that a national debt was "incompatible with real independence." N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 210.

inaugurate (in-âʹgū-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inaugurated, ppr. inaugurating. [< L. inauguratus, pp. of inaugurare (> ult. E. inaugur), practise augury, divine, consecrate or install into office with augural ceremonies, < in, in, + augur, an augur: see augur. Cf. exaugurate.] 1. To introduce or induct into office with suitable ceremonies; invest formally with an office.

The seat on which her Kings inaugurated were.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xvii. 188.

If a church has power to call a pastor, it has power to inaugurate him as pastor—that is, install him.
Bibliotheca Sacra, XLIII. 414.

2. To make a formal beginning of; put in action or operation; initiate, especially something of dignity or importance: as, to inaugurate a reform.

We will inaugurate the new era for the noblest manhood and the purest womanhood the world has ever seen.
T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, xv.

Unwilling . . . to inaugurate a novel policy . . . without the approbation of Congress, I submit for your consideration the expediency of an appropriation for maintaining a Chargé d'Affaires near each of those new States.
Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 168.

[The word is often inelegantly applied in this sense, especially in newspapers, to trivial or ignoble subjects.

Their [special agents'] object is not to prevent crime, but to inaugurate it.
Gazette (Washington, D. C.), Jan. 11, 1874.]

3. To institute or initiate the use of, especially by some formal opening ceremony: as, to inaugurate a railroad, a public building, or a statue.

inaugurate† (in-âʹgū-rāt), a. [= Sp. Pg. inaugurado, < L. inauguratus, pp.: see the verb.] Inaugurated; invested with office; inducted; installed.

In this manner being inaugurate and invested in the kingdomes, hee [Numa] provideth by good orders, lawes, and customes, to reedifie as it were that citie.
Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 14.

inauguration (in-â-gū-rāʹshọn), n. [< F. inauguration = Sp. inauguración = Pg. inauguração = It. inaugurazione, < LL. inauguratio(n-), a beginning (not found in lit. sense 'consecration by augury'), < L. inaugurare, inaugurate: see inaugurate.] 1. The act of inaugurating or inducting into office with solemnity; ceremonial investiture with office.—2. The act of solemnly or formally introducing or setting in motion anything of importance or dignity; a definite beginning or initiation: as, the inauguration of a new era or a new system.—3. A ceremonial or formal introduction or opening, as of something intended for public use: as, the inauguration of a monument or an exhibition. [Among the ancient Romans the act of inauguration (not expressed by inauguratio, but by a circumlocution with the verb) consisted in the consultation of the auspices by the augurs, and sometimes by other priests, to ascertain the will of the gods with reference to the induction of men into office or to any proposed public measure or proceeding. If the signs were deemed favorable, the declaration of that fact completed the inauguration.]—Inauguration day. See day[1].

inaugurator (in-âʹgū-rā-tọr), n. [= F. inaugurateur = Pg. inaugurador; as inaugurate + -or.] One who inaugurates; one who begins or initiates.

George I. . . . comes on the stage of English History . . . as the inaugurator of a period of national prosperity.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 3.

inauguratory (in-â′gū-rā-tọ-ri), a. [= Pg. inauguratorio; as inaugurate + -ory.] Pertaining or suited to inauguration.

After so many inauguratory gratulations, nuptial hymns, and funeral dirges, he must be highly favoured by nature, or by fortune, who says any thing not said before.
Johnson, Dryden.

inaurate† (in-â′rāt), v. t. [< L. inauratus, pp. of inaurare (> It. inaurare), cover or overlay with gold, < in, on, + aurare, cover with gold, gild, < aurum, gold: see aurate[1]. Cf. deaurate.] To cover with gold; gild. E. Phillips, 1706.

inaurate (in-â′rāt), a. [< L. inauratus, pp.: see the verb.] 1†. Covered or seeming to be covered with gold; gilded; gilt. Maunder.— 2. In entom., having metallic golden luster, as striæ, punctures, foveæ, and depressed margins in certain Coleoptera.

inauration† (in-â-rā′shọn), n. [< inaurate + -ion.] The act or process of gilding or overlaying with gold.

Some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours. Arbuthnot, Anc. Coins.

inauspicate† (in-âs′pi-kāt), a. [< L. inauspicatus, without auspices, with bad auspices, unlucky, < in- priv. + auspicatus, pp. of auspicari, consecrate by auspices: see auspicate.] Ill-omened; unlucky.

With me come burn those ships inauspicate;
For I Cassandra's ghost in sleep saw late.
Vicars, tr. of Virgil (1632).

inauspicious (in-âs-pish′us), a. [< in-[3] + auspicious.] Not auspicious; ill-omened; unlucky; unfavorable: as, an inauspicious time.

O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.
Shak., R. and J., v. 3.

It was with that inauspicious meaning in his glance that Hollingsworth first met Zenobia's eyes, and began his influence upon her life. Hawthorne, Blithedale Romance, iv.

=Syn. Unpropitious, unpromising, untoward.

inauspiciously (in-âs-pish′us-li), adv. In an inauspicious manner; unluckily; unfavorably.

The regicide enemies had broken up what had been so inauspiciously begun and so feebly carried on.
Burke, A Regicide Peace, iii.

inauspiciousness (in-âs-pish′us-nes), n. The quality of being inauspicious; unfavorableness. Bailey, 1727.

inauthoritative (in-â-thor′i-tā-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + authoritative.] Having no authority; unauthoritative.

inauthoritativeness (in-â-thor′i-tā-tiv-nes), n. The quality or state of being inauthoritative or without authority or commission. [Rare.]

I furnished them not with precarious praters, . . . in whom ignorance and impudence, inability and inauthoritativeness, contend which shall be greatest.
Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 53.

We cannot close the volumes without being struck with the general looseness and absence of all regard for authority which pervade them. This should not be. . . . Far-reaching interests will not excuse inauthoritativeness.
Nature, XXXVII. 442.

in banco (in bang′kō). [ML.: L. in, in, on; ML. bancus, bench: see bank[1], bench.] In full bench; at a session where a quorum of all the judges are present, as distinguished from a branch of the court. A trial in banco is one held before a number of judges for the sake of greater deliberation, so that questions arising may be determined at once by a consultation of the full bench. Also in banc, en banc.

inbarge† (in-bärj′), v. t. [< in-[2] + barge[1].] To cause to embark, as on a barge or bark.

Whither his friends she caused him to inbarge.
Drayton, Miseries of Queen Margaret.

inbarn (in-bärn′), v. t. [< in-[1] + barn[1].] To deposit in a barn.

A fair harvest, . . . well inned and inbarned.
Herbert, Priest to the Temple, xxx.

inbassett, n. A Middle English variant of embassade.

inbeaming† (in′bē-ming), n. [< in-[1] + beaming.] The ingress of light; irradiation.

And, for all these boastings of new lights, inbeamings, and inspirations, that man that follows his reason, both in the choice and defence of his religion, will find himself better led and directed by this one guide than by an hundred Directories. South, Works, IV. vii.

inbearing (in′bär-ing), a. [< in-[1] + bearing. Cf. overbearing.] Officious; meddlesome. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

Then out it speaks an auld skipper,
An inbearing dog was hee—
"Ye've stay'd ower lang in Noroway, Spending your king's monie."
Sir Patrick Spens (Child's Ballads, III. 340).

inbeat†, v. t. [ME. inbeten; < in-[1] + beat[1].] To beat in.

Thenne with a barre inbete it, batte it ofte,
And playne it rough.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S), p. 155.

inbeing (in′bē-ing), n. [< in-[1] + being.] Inherence; inherent existence.

When we say the bowl is . . . round, . . . the boy is . . . witty, these are proper or inherent modes; for they have a sort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it.
Watts, Logic, i. 2.

inbent (in′bent), a. [< in-[1] + bent[1].] Bent or turned inward.

Inbent eyes
Can scarce discern the shape of mine own pain.
Sir P. Sidney (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 550).

I can distinguish no regular markings on the inbent surfaces of the radials between the spines.
Geol. Jour., XLV. i. 152.

inbind (in-bīnd′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inbound, ppr. inbinding. [= D. inbinden = G. einbinden = Dan. indbinde = Sw. inbinda; as in-[1] + bind.] To bind or hem in; inclose.

On the green banks which that fair stream inbound
Flowers and odours sweetly smiled and smelled.
Fairfax.

inblandt, v. t. [ME. inblanden (= Dan. indblande = Sw. inblanda, intermingle, intersperse); < in-[1] + bland[1].] To mingle; blend.

Wyth chynne & cheke ful swete, Bothe quit & red in-blande.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1205.

inblown†(in′blōn), a. [< in-[1] + blown[1].] Blown into. Cudworth, Intellectual System, I. iii. § 29.

inboard (in′bōrd), adv. [< in[1] + board.] 1. Within the hull or interior of a ship or boat; also, in the middle part of the hold of a ship: as, stow the freight well inboard.—2. Within the rail or bulwarks; toward or nearer to the ★center: as, to draw the sail inboard.

inboard (in′bōrd), a. [< inboard, adv.] 1. In the interior of a ship or boat; being within the hull or hold: as, inboard cargo: opposed to outboard.

New bulkheads and inboard works, new spars, rigging, sails, and boats, were added.
C. F. Hall, Polar Exped., p. 29.

2. Not projecting over the rail or bulwarks: as, an inboard spar or sail.

inbond (in′bond), a. [< in-[1] + bond[1].] In arch., laid lengthwise across a wall, as a brick or stone; formed in whole or part of materials so laid, as a wall: opposed to outbond, where the brick or stone is laid with its length parallel to the face of the wall. Inbond and outbond bricks or stones are called respectively headers and stretchers. See bond[1], 12.

Inbond and Outbond Wall.
A, header; B, B, stretchers.

in bonis (in bō′nis). [L.: in, in; bonis, abl. of bona, q. v. Cf. bonus, boon[3].] In goods; in respect of his goods.

inborn (in′bôrn), a. [< in-[1] + born[1].] 1. Innate; implanted by nature.

I cannot make you gentlemen; that's a work
Rais'd from your own deservings; merit, manners,
And in-born virtue does it.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, v. 3.

An inborn grace that nothing lacked
Of culture or appliance.
Whittier, Among the Hills.

2†. Native; aboriginal.

The hills . . . on everie side with winding in and out mounted up aloft, and were passable for none but the inborn inhabitants that knew the wayes verie well.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus (1609).

=Syn. 1. Innate, Inbred, etc. See inherent.

inbreadt, v. t. [< in-[1] + bread[1] (tr. ML. impanare: see impane).] To embody in bread; impanate. Davies.

We must believe that He cometh down again at the will of the priests to be impaned or inbreaded for their bellies' commonwealth. Bp. Bale, Select Works, p. 206.

in-breadt, n. The extra piece or number of a bakers' dozen. See bakers' dozen, under baker.

inbreak (in′brāk), n. [= D. inbreuk = G. einbruch; as in-[1] + break.] A sudden, violent inroad or incursion; an irruption: opposed to outbreak. [Rare.]

Deshuttes and Varigny, massacred at the first inbreak, have been beheaded. Carlyle, French Rev., I. vii. 10.

He saw that he had cleared the way for the inbreak of materialist scepticism, which he loathed.
The American, IX. 136.

inbreaking (in′brā-king), n. [< in-[1] + breaking.] The act of breaking in; incursion; invasion; inroad. [Rare.]

inbreathe (in-brēŦH′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inbreathed, ppr. inbreathing. [< ME. inbrethen; < in-[1] + breathe.] To infuse by breathing; communicate by inspiration.

Sphere-born harmonious sisters, Voice and Verse, Wed your divine sounds, and mix'd power employ,
Dead things with inbreathed sense able to pierce.
Milton, Solemn Musick, l. 4.

inbred (in′bred), p. a. [Pp. of inbreed.] 1. Produced or developed within; innate; inherent; intrinsic: as, inbred modesty or good sense.

His face and carriage
Seem to declare an in-bred honesty.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, ii. 2.

No natural, inbred force and fortitude could prove equal to such a task. Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

2. Bred in-and-in. =Syn. 1. Innate, Ingrained, etc. See inherent.

inbreed (in′brēd or in-brēd′), v. t. [Also imbreed; < in-[1] + breed.] 1. To breed, generate, or develop within.

To inbreed in us this generous and christianly reverence one of another. Milton, Church-Government, ii.

2. To breed from animals of the same parentage or otherwise closely related; breed in-and-in.

inburning (in′bėr-ning), a. [< in-[1] + burning.] Burning within.

Her inburning wrath she gan abate.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. viii. 17.

inburst (in′bėrst), n. [< in-[1] + burst.] A bursting in from without; an irruption: opposed to outburst. [Rare.]

Let but that accumulated insurrectionary mass find entrance, like the infinite inburst of water.
Carlyle, French Rev., I. vii. 9.

inby, inbye (in′bī), adv. [< in[1] + by[1].] Toward the interior; nearer to; specifically, in coal-mining, toward the interior of a mine, and away from the shaft or other place where the surface is reached: the opposite of outby. Also in-over.—To go inby, to go from the door toward the fire. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

inca (ing′kạ̈), n. [Sometimes written ynca; = F. inca, incas = It. inca, < Sp. Pg. inca, < Peruv. inca (see def. 1).] 1. [cap.] A member of the dominant tribe in Peru previous to the Spanish conquest. See Vol. XI (the Cyc. of Names).—2. (a) Leadbeater's cockatoo (Cacatua leadbeateri) of Australia, having the crest red, yellow, and white. (b) [NL.] The specific name of various birds: used only with a generic term. (c) [cap.] [NL.] A genus of terns or sea-swallows, Sterninæ, related to the noddies, having dark plumage with a bundle of white curly plumes on each side of the head. The only species is Sterna inca (Lesson), now Inca mystacalis (Jardine). See Nænia. (d) A bird of this genus.—3. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of scarabæoid beetles, comprising a number of large robust Mexican and Central and South American forms, usually of a reddish-bronze color, flying actively at midday and frequenting flowering trees. Serville, 1825. —4. A name given about 1850 to some varieties of alpaca cloth.—Inca dog, a kind of South American dog, unlike any of the canines peculiar to that country, and supposed to be derived from the Mexican wolf.

Inca Tern (Inca mystacalis).

Incadæ†(ing′kā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Inca + -adæ.] A family of lamellicorn beetles, taking name from the genus Inca. Burmeister, 1842.

incage, v. t. See encage.

incalculability (in-kal″kū-lạ-bil′i-ti), n. [< incalculable: see -bility.] The quality of being incalculable, or indeterminable by calculation.

The one set of machines are characterized by their calculability—the other by their incalculability.
B. Stewart, Cons. of Energy, p. 159.

incalculable (in-kal′kū-lạ-bl), a. [= F. incalculable = Sp. incalculable = Pg. incalculavel =

It. incalcolabile; as in-[3] + calculable.] 1. Not calculable; incapable of being calculated or reckoned; indeterminable by calculation.

They may even in one year of such false policy do mischiefs incalculable. Burke, Scarcity.

2. Not to be reckoned upon; that cannot be forecast. [Rare.]

It is only the great poets who seem to have this unsolicited profusion of unexpected and incalculable phrase. Lowell, Democracy.

incalculableness (in-kal′kū-la-bl-nes), n. The quality of being incalculable.

incalculably (in-kal′kū-la-bli), adv. In an incalculable degree or manner; immeasurably.

incalescence (in-ka-les′ens), n. [= It. incalescenza; as incalescen(t) + -ce.] The state of being incalescent; the state of growing warm; incipient or increasing heat.

The two ingredients were easily mingled, and grew not only sensibly but considerably hot, and that so nimbly, that the incalescence sometimes came to its highth in about a minute of an hour by a minute clock. Boyle, Works, I. 104.

incalescency (in-ka-les′en-si), n. Same as incalescence.

The oil preserves the ends of the bones from incalescency, which they, being solid bodies, would necessarily contract from a swift motion. Ray, Works of Creation.

incalescent (in-ka-les′ent), a. [< L. incalescen(t-)s, ppr. of incalescere, grow warm or hot, < in, in, to, + calescere, grow warm: see calescence.] Growing warm; increasing in heat.

incalzando (in-kal-tsan′dō). [It., ppr. of incalzare, incalciare = OSp. encalzar = Pr. encausar = OF. enchaucer, chase, pursue, follow on the heels of, < L. in, on, + calx (calc-), heel: see calx[2].] In music, same as stringendo.

incameration (in-kam-e-rā′shon), n. [= F. incamération = Pg. incameração = It. incamerazione, confiscation; < ML. incameratio(n-),* < incamerare* (in pp. incameratus, confined to a chamber), < L. in, in, + camera, chamber: see camera.] The act or process of incorporating with the fiscal department of a government, as an estate or other source of revenue; particularly, annexation to the Pope's exchequer or apostolic chamber.

incampt, v. An obsolete form of encamp.

incampment†, n. An obsolete form of encampment.

Incan (ing′kan), a. [< Inca + -an.] Of or pertaining to the Incas of Peru. Also, rarely, Incarial.

We have no accurate knowledge of the Incan history earlier than the century before the invasion of the Spaniards under Pizarro. Stand. Nat. Hist., VI. 216.

incandesce (in-kan-des′), v.; pret. and pp. incandesced, ppr. incandescing. [< L. incandescere, become warm or hot, glow, kindle, < in, in, + candescere, kindle, glow: see candescent.] I. intrans. To glow with heat; be or become incandescent.

A wire which remained dull at ordinary atmospheric pressure incandesced when a moderate vacuum was obtained. Nature, XXXVII. 570.

II. trans. To cause to glow or become incandescent.

A wire . . . incandesced by alternate or direct currents. Nature, XXXVII. 448.

incandescence (in-kan-des′ens), n. [= F. incandescence = Sp. Pg. incandescencia = It. incandescenza; as incandescen(t) + -ce.] The condition of being incandescent; glowing heat. Rarely candescence.

The main source of light is Incandescence. Tait, Light, § 25.

incandescency (in-kan-des′en-si), n. Same as incandescence.

A platinum wire 18 B. W. G. and 15 feet long was raised to vivid incandescency. Dredge's Electric Illumination, I. 153.

incandescent (in-kan-des′ent), a. [= F. incandescent = Sp. Pg. It. incandescente, < L. incandescen(t-)s, ppr. of incandescere, become warm or hot, glow: see incandesce, candescent.] Glowing with heat; rendered luminous by heat. Rarely candescent.

Holy Scripture becomes resplendent, or, as one might say, incandescent throughout. Is. Taylor.

When bodies retain a solid or liquid form when incandescent, their constituent molecules give out rays of light. J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 120.

Incandescent electric light. See electric light, under electric.

incanescent (in-ka-nes′ent), a. [< L. incanescen(t-)s, ppr. of incanescere, become gray or hoary, < in, in, on, + canescere, become gray: see canescent.] Same as canescent.

incanous (in-kā′nus), a. [< L. incanus, quite gray, < in, in, on, + canus, gray.] Hoary; canescent.

incantation (in-kan-tā′shon), n. [< ME. incantacion = F. incantation = Sp. incantación = It. incantazione, < LL. incantatio(n-), < L. incantare, chant a magic formula over, enchant: see enchant.] The art or act of enchanting by uttering magical words, with ceremonies supposed to have magical power; also, the formula of words or the ceremony employed.

My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 3.

The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

Medicine was always joined with magick; no remedy was administered without mysterious ceremony and incantation. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist., i. 2.

incantator (in′kan-tā-tor), n. [LL. (> ult. E. enchanter), < L. incantare, enchant: see enchant, enchanter.] An enchanter. [Rare.]

This neophyte, moreover, was a wizard, an aspirant in more supernatural arts, an incantator, a spirit-seer! I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 295.

incantatory (in-kan′tā-tō-ri), a. [= It. incantatorio, < LL. as if incantatorius,* < incantator, enchanter: see incantator.] Dealing by enchantment; practised in incantation; magical.

Fortune-tellers, juglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory impostors. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 3.

It is related that the necromancers of Thessaly added the blood of infants to that of black lambs in their incantatory rites, that the evoked spirits would render themselves objective from the exhalations of the blood. Gentleman's Mag., quoted in Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 212.

incanting† (in-kan′ting), a. [Ppr. of incant,* < L. incantare, enchant: see enchant.] Enchanting; ravishing; delightful.

Incanting voices, . . . poesy, mirth, and wine, raising the sport commonly to admiration. Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa, p. 306.

incanton (in-kan′ton), v. t. [< in-[2] + canton[1].] To unite in or incorporate as a canton.

When the cantons of Bern and Zurich proposed at a general diet the incorporating Geneva in the number of the cantons, the Roman Catholick party . . . proposed at the same time the incantoning of Constance, as a counterpoise. Addison, Travels in Italy, Switzerland.

incapability (in-kā-pa-bil′i-ti), n. [< incapable: see -bility.] The character or condition of being incapable; want of mental or physical capacity, or of legal competency; inability or disability.

You have nothing to urge but a kind of incapability in yourself to the service. Suckling.

incapable (in-kā′pa-bl), a. and n. [< F. incapable, < LL. incapabilis, incapable, < L. in- priv. + LL. capabilis, capable: see capable.] I. a. Not capable. (a) Lacking in capacity, ability, or fitness; inefficient; incompetent; inadequate.

The wheelbarrow of this civilization is . . . a ponderous, incapable body. Howells, Venetian Life, xx.

(b) Lacking sufficient capacity or capaciousness; insufficient, unfit, or unqualified: in this and the succeeding uses commonly followed by of.

Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? Shak., W. T., iv. 3.

(c) Not capable of receiving or admitting; not susceptible: as, his lot is incapable of amelioration.

We find this our empyreal form Incapable of mortal injury. Milton, P. L., vi. 434.

(d) Not capable of understanding or comprehending; wanting appreciation; unconscious. [Rare.]

She chanted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7.

Incapable and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2.

(e) Not capable legally; unqualified; disqualified by law; wanting legal warrant or capacity.

Their lands are almost entirely taken from them, and they are rendered incapable of purchasing any more. Swift.

=Syn. Incapable, Unable. Incapable properly denotes a want of passive power, the power of receiving, and is applicable particularly to the mind, or said of something inanimate: as, a body once dead is incapable of restoration to life. The word often applies to moral inability: as, he is quite incapable of doing a thing so base; or otherwise it approaches essentially the more active meanings of unable. Unable denotes the want of active power or power of performing, being applicable to the body or to the mind: we could not say that Achilles was unable to be wounded, but we could say that Achilles was incapable of a wound. In law capable and incapable refer more frequently to legal qualification, able and unable to physical facility or hindrance: as, a man may not be legally incapable of doing an act, yet from circumstances be practically unable to do it.

II. n. One who lacks mental or physical capacity, either general or special.

The preservation of incapables is habitually secured by our social arrangements. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 170.

"All prisoners who have certificates from the doctor, step out!" shouted Captain Gudeem, and twenty-five or thirty incapables—some old and infirm, some pale and emaciated from sickness—separated themselves from the main body of convicts. The Century, XXXVII. 36.

incapableness (in-kā′pa-bl-nes), n. Incapability. Bailey, 1727.

incapably (in-kā′pa-bli), adv. In an incapable manner.

incapacious (in-kā-pā′shus), a. [= Sp. Pg. incapaz = It. incapace, < LL. incapax, incapable, < L. in- priv. + capax, capable, capacious: see capacious.] 1. Not capacious; not spacious; of small content or compass; contracted.

Souls that are made little and incapacious cannot enlarge their thoughts to take in any great compass of times or things. Burnet.

2†. Incapable.

Can art be so dim-sighted, learned sir?
I did not think her so incapacious.
Middleton and Rowley, Fair Quarrel, ii. 2.

incapaciousness (in-kā-pā′shus-nes), n. The condition of being incapacious; want of containing space; contractedness.

incapacitate (in-kā-pas′i-tāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incapacitated, ppr. incapacitating. [< in-[3] + capacitate. Cf. equiv. Sp. Pg. incapacitar.] 1. To deprive of capacity or natural power; render or make incapable: followed by from or for.

Physical weakness incapacitated him from the public practice of his art. J. W. Hales, Int. to Milton's Areopagitica.

Concentrated attention, unbroken by rest, so prostrates the brain as to incapacitate it for thinking. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 62.

2. To deprive of competent ability or qualification; render unfit; disqualify: as, insanity incapacitates one for marriage.

The old law of Scotland declared that a butcher should not sit upon a jury; he was incapacitated by his profession. W. Phillips, Speeches, p. 196.

Any one deliberate habit of sin incapacitates a man for receiving the gifts of the Gospel. J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 95.

3. To deprive of legal or constitutional capacity or privilege; withhold or nullify the right of.

The people cannot incapacitate the king, because he derives not his right from them, but from God only. Dryden, Vind. of Duke of Guise.

It absolutely incapacitated them from holding rank, office, function, or property. Milman, Latin Christianity, xi. 7.

incapacitation (in-kā-pas-i-tā′shon), n. [< incapacitate + -ion.] The act of incapacitating, or the state of being incapacitated; the act of disqualifying; disqualification.

If they suffer this power of arbitrary incapacitation to stand, they have utterly perverted every other power of the House of Commons. Burke, Present Discontents.

incapacity (in-kā-pas′i-ti), n. [= F. incapacité = Sp. incapacidad = Pg. incapacidade = It. incapacità; as in-[3] + capacity.] 1. Lack of capacity; lack of ability or qualification; inability; incapability; incompetency.

Heaven, seeing the incapacity of . . . [philosophy] to console him, has given him the aid of religion. Goldsmith, Vicar, xxix.

The eldest son of a rich nobleman
Is heir to all his incapacities.
Shelley, The Cenci, ii. 2.

The chief cause of sectarian animosity is the incapacity of most men to conceive hostile systems in the light in which they appear to their adherents, and to enter into the enthusiasm they inspire. Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 141.

2. In law, the lack of legal qualification; that condition of a person which forbids a given act on his part, and makes the act legally inefficacious even if he does it: as, infancy constitutes an incapacity to contract; a trust creates in the trustee an incapacity to buy the trust property for himself at his own sale. =Syn. Disability, disqualification, unfitness.

in capita (in kap′i-tā). [L.: in, in; capita, acc. pl. of caput, head (person): see caput.] In or among the persons.

in capite (in kap′i-tē). [L. (ML.), in chief: L. in, in; capite, abl. of L. caput, head, chief: see caput and chief.] In old law, in chief. A tenant in capite, or in chief, was anciently a tenant who held lands under the king without any intermediate feudal superior, more specifically one holding by virtue of a direct grant by the crown to him or his ancestor. Tenure in capite did not include cases where a tenant of a mesne lord became a tenant under the crown by escheat or forfeiture of the mesne lord's estate. It was abolished in England by 12 Charles II., xxiv. (1672).

incapsulate (in-kap′sū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incapsulated, ppr. incapsulating. [< L. in, in, + capsula, a box, chest (see capsule), + -ate[2].] 1. Same as encapsulate.—2. To put one inside of another, like a nest of boxes; insert repeatedly; compose by parenthesis within parenthesis: applied metaphorically to certain American-Indian languages in which various modifying elements are inserted in a verb-form.

incapsulation (in-kap-sụ̄-lā′shọn), n. [< incapsulate + -ion.] The act of incapsulating, or the state of being incapsulated.

The sentences [of the Mexican language] are formed by a sort of incapsulation, and may be compared to those boxes shut up one within another which afford so much amusement to children.
F. W. Farrar, Families of Speech, p. 177.

incarcer† (in-kär′sėr), v. t. [< F. incarcérer = Pr. encarcerar = Sp. encarcelar = Pg. encarcerar = It. incarcerare, < ML. incarcerare, imprison: see incarcerate.] To incarcerate.

This grieves mee most, that I for grievous sinne Incarcer'd lye within this floating Inn.
Z. Boyd, Flowers of Zion.

incarcerate (in-kär′sẹ-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incarcerated, ppr. incarcerating. [< ML. incarceratus, pp. of incarcerare (> ult. E. incarcer, q. v.), imprison, < L. in, in, + carcer, a prison: see carcerate.] 1. To imprison; confine in a jail.—2. To confine; shut up or inclose; constrict closely: as, incarcerated hernia.

Contagion may be propagated by bodies that easily incarcerate the infected air, as woollen clothes. Harvey.

incarceration (in-kär-sẹ-rā′shọn), n. [= F. incarcération = Pr. encarceration = Sp. encarcelación = It. incarceragione, incarcerazione, < ML. incarceratio(n-), < incarcerare, imprison: see incarcerate.] 1. The act of incarcerating or imprisoning; imprisonment.

It [the doctrine of preëxistence] supposeth the descent into these bodyes to be a culpable lapse from an higher and better state of life, and this to be a state of incarceration for former delinquencies.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, iv.

2. In surg., obstinate constriction, as of a hernia, or retention, as of the placenta in childbirth; strangulation, as in hernia.—Syn. 1. Imprisonment, Confinement, etc. See captivity.

incarcerator (in-kär′sẹ-rā-tọr), n. [< incarcerate + -or.] One who incarcerates or shuts up in prison.

incardinate[1]†, a. A perversion of incarnate[1].

The count's gentleman, one Cesario: we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incardinate.
★ Shak., T. N., v. 1.

incardinate[2] (in-kär′di-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incardinated, ppr. incardinating. [< ML. incardinatus, pp. of incardinare (also cardinare), receive or install (a priest) into a church, lit. 'hinge' (fit in so as to attach), < L. in, in, + cardo (cardin-), a hinge: see cardo, cardinal.] To attach corporately or as a cardinal part, as a priest to a particular church.

[The idea] that cardinal priests were those refugees from persecution who were received and incardinated into the clerical body of churches more happily circumstanced.
Encyc. Brit., V. 96.

Incarial (ing-kā′ri-ạl), a. [< Inca + -ari-al.] Same as Incan. [Rare.]

The . . . Museum of Incarial Antiquities [in Cuzco].
Encyc. Brit., VI. 744.

incarn† (in-kärn′), v. [< F. incarner, OF. encharner = Pr. Sp. Pg. encarnar = It. incarnare, become incarnate, < LL. incarnari, be made flesh, become incarnate, ML. also incarnare, invest with flesh, incarnate: see incarnate[1], v.] I. trans. To invest with flesh; incarnate.

The flesh will soon arise in that cut of the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarn it.
Wiseman, Surgery.

II. intrans. To become invested or covered with flesh.

The slough came off, and the ulcer happily incarned.
★ Wiseman, Surgery.

incarnadine (in-kär′nạ-din), a. [< F. incarnadin, for incarnatin* (= Sp. encarnadino, flesh-colored), < incarnat, flesh-colored: see incarnate[1], a.] Of a carnation-color; pale-red. [Archaic.]

Such whose white satin upper coat of skin,
Cut upon velvet rich incarnadine,
Has yet a body (and of flesh) within.
Lovelace, To my Lady H.

incarnadine (in-kär′nạ-din), v. t.; pret. and pp. incarnadined, ppr. incarnadining. [< incarnadine, a.] To dye red or carnation; tinge with the color of flesh.

No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine, Making the green one red.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2.

[In some editions erroneously incarnardine.]

Lo! in the painted oriel of the west,
Whose fanes the sunken sun incarnadines.
Longfellow, Sonnets, The Evening Star.

incarnardine†, v. t. An erroneous form of incarnadine.

incarnate[1] (in-kär′nāt), v.; pret. and pp. incarnated, ppr. incarnating. [< LL. incarnatus, pp. of incarnari, be made flesh, become incarnate, ML. also incarnare, invest with flesh, incarnate, < L. in, in, on, + caro (carn-), flesh: see carnal. Cf. incarn.] I. trans. To clothe with flesh; embody in flesh.

They believed in Christ to be incarnated, and to suffer death.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 245.

This essence to incarnate and imbrute,
That to the highth of deity aspired!
Milton, P. L., ix. 166.

Given a human foible, he [Shakspere] can incarnate it in the nothingness of Slender, or make it loom gigantic through the tragic twilight of Hamlet.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 316.

II. intrans. To form flesh; heal, as a wound, by granulation. [Rare.]

My uncle Toby's wound was nearly well; . . . 'twas just beginning to incarnate. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 5.

incarnate[1] (in-kär′nāt), a. [< ME. incarnate, embodied in flesh, = F. incarnat = Sp. Pg. encarnado = It. incarnato, incarnate, flesh-colored, < LL. incarnatus, pp., incarnate: see the verb.] 1. Invested with flesh; embodied in flesh.

Who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven, And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, And was made man.
Book of Common Prayer, Nicene Creed.

Here shalt thou sit incarnate, here shalt reign
Both God and Man. Milton, P. L., iii. 315.

2. Of a red color; flesh-colored.

In one place they are of a fresh and bright purple, in another of a glittering, incarnate, and rosate colour.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xiv. 1.

The tubes of the corolla of the common red and incarnate clovers (Trifolium pratense and incarnatum) do not on a hasty glance appear to differ in length.
Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 97.

incarnate[2]† (in-kär′nāt), a. [As if < in-[3] + carnate.] Not carnate or in the flesh; divested of a body; disembodied. [Erroneous.]

I fear nothing . . . that devil carnate or incarnate can fairly do against a virtue so established.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, V. 46.

incarnation (in-kär-nā′shọn), n. [< ME. incarnacion, incarnacioun, < OF. incarnatiun, incarnation, incarnacion, F. incarnation = Pr. encarnatio = Sp. encarnación = Pg. encarnação = It. incarnazione, < ML. incarnatio(n-), < LL. incarnari, be made flesh, ML. also incarnare, invest with flesh: see incarnate[1].] 1. The act of incarnating or clothing with flesh; the act of assuming flesh or a human body and the nature of man; the state of being incarnated. In theology the doctrine of the incarnation is the doctrine that the Divine Being has assumed human nature, or has dwelt on the earth in a human form. The doctrine has been held in both forms in the Christian church. The orthodox opinion is that God, in Jesus Christ his Son, not merely assumed a human body, and became subject to the limitations of the human flesh, but also that he assumed a proper human nature, and so is at once truly God and truly man. Hindu mythology represents Vishnu as having undergone certain avatars, descents, or incorporations or incarnations, but they are in part in other than human forms.

Also thei beleeven and spekn gladly of the Virgine Marie and of the Incarnacioun. Mandeville, Travels, p. 132.

2. In surg., the process whereby a wound heals, the affected part becoming filled with new flesh; granulation.—3. A representation in an incarnate form; a personification; a visible embodiment; a distinct exemplification in form or act.

Shall it take two or three generations of weary experimenting to bring into existence some incarnation of material force like the steam-engine, and may it not take a hundred generations for the human mind to ascertain for itself experimentally what it can know and what it cannot know? J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 26.

Of the universal mind each individual man is one more incarnation. Emerson, History.

4†. The color of flesh; carnation.—5†. In bot., the carnation.—Era of the Incarnation. See era.

incarnative† (in-kär′nạ-tiv), a. and n. [= F. incarnatif = Pr. encarnatiu = Sp. Pg. encarnativo = It. incarnativo; as incarnate + -ive.] I. a. Causing new flesh to grow; healing.

This is generally observed, that all sorts of wax be emollitive, heating, and incarnative.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxii. 24.

II. n. A medicine that tends to promote the growth of new flesh and assist nature in the healing of wounds.

I deterg'd the abscess more powerfully by the use of vitriol-stone and precipitate, and afterwards incarned by the common incarnative used in such cases.
Wiseman, Surgery, I. 9.

incarnification (in-kär″ni-fi-kā′shọn), n. [< in-[2] + carnification.] Formation into or embodiment in flesh; incarnation. [Rare.]

Incarvillea (in-kär-vil′ē-ạ), n. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1789), named after P. d'Incarville, a Jesuit missionary in China, who first sent specimens of this plant to Bernard de Jussieu in 1743.] A monotypic genus of dicotyledonous sympetalous plants, of the family Bignoniaceæ and tribe Tecomeæ. The calyx is campanulate, with the apex 5-lobed; the corolla has an ample tube; the stamens are didynamous and included; and the ovary is 2-celled. There are 5 species. I. Sinensis is a native of China, and is an erect branched annual or biennial herb, with alternate 2- to 3-pinnate leaves, and large red flowers in terminal racemes.

Incarvilleæ (in-kär-vil′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836–40), < Incarvillea + -eæ.] In Endlicher's classification, a suborder of the Bignoniaceæ, containing the genus Incarvillea only: by de Candolle reduced to a subtribe.

incase, encase (in-, en-kās′), v. t.; pret. and pp. incased, encased, ppr. incasing, encasing. [< in-[2], en-[1], + case[2].] To inclose in or as in a case; cover or surround with something.

Oh! in that portal should the chief appear,
Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear,
In radiant panoply his limbs incas'd.
Pope, Odyssey, i. 333.

I can conceive nothing more impressive than the eastern view of this great range [the Cordilleras], as forcing the mind to grapple with the idea of the thousands of thousands of years requisite for the denudation of the strata which originally encased it.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, ii. 500.

Incased pupa, in entom., a pupa which is protected by ★a cocoon.

incasement, encasement (in-, en-kās′ment), n. [< incase, encase, + -ment.] 1. The act of inclosing in a case, or the state of being inclosed in or as if in a case.

That mythical period of universal incasement in ice, of which, as I have elsewhere endeavoured to show, in so far as Canada is concerned, there is no evidence whatever.
Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 233.

2. That which forms a case or covering; any inclosing substance.

Several parts of the outer tunic of the animal's body [Pollicipes polymerus] presented the remarkable fact of being calcified, but to a variable degree; whereas in several specimens from California there was no vestige of this encasement. Darwin, Cirripedia, p. 314.

Theory of incasement, an old theory of reproduction which assumed that when the first animal of each species was created, the germs of all other individuals of the same species which were to come from it were incased in its ova. The discovery of spermatozoa developed the theory in two opposite directions: the ovulists, or ovists, held still to the theory of incasement in the female, while the animalculists, or spermists, entertained the theory of incasement in the male.

incask† (in-kàsk′), v. t. [< in-[2] + cask[1].] To cover with or as if with a casque.

Then did he incask his pate in his hat.
★ Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, I. i. 13.

incast (in′kàst), n. [< in[1] + cast[1].] Something thrown in in addition; an amount given by a seller above the exact measure, as a pound in a stone of wool, or a fleece in a pack.

incastellated† (in-kas′te-lā-ted), a. [< ML. incastellatus, fortify with a castle, castellate, < L. in, in, + castellum, a castle: see castellate.] Same as incastelled.

incastelled† (in-kas′teld), a. [As incastell(ate) + -ed[2].] 1. Fortified with castles.—2. Hoof-bound.

incatenation (in-ka-tẹ-nā′shọn), n. [< ML. incatenatio(n-), < incatenare, enchain, < L. in, in, + catena, a chain: see chain. Cf. enchain.] The act of chaining or linking together. [Rare.]

A philosopher . . . sedulous in the incatenation of fleas, or the sculpture of a cherry-stone.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, cviii.

incautelous†, a. [< in-[3] + cautelous.] Incautious.

All advantage of cavil at the expressions of the Judges, if any had been incautelous, was lost to the faction.
Roger North, Examen, p. 288.

incautelously†, adv. Incautiously.

incautelousness†, n. Incautiousness.

By this means is the passion strengthened, and the person whom it respects weakened, this by incautelousness and credulity, that by restraint and suppression.
Bp. Reynolds, The Passions, p. 144.

incaution (in-kâ′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + caution.] Lack of caution; heedlessness.

Lest through incaution falling thou may'st be A joy to others, a reproach to me. Pope.

As though perfection on disorder hung,
And perfect order from incaution sprung.
Brooke, Universal Beauty, ii.

incautious (in-kâ′shus), a. [< in-[3] + cautious. Cf. L. incautus, incautious.] Not cautious; unwary; not circumspect; heedless.

The ostrich, silliest of the feather'd kind, . . .
Commits her eggs incautious to the dust,
Forgetful that the foot may crush the trust.
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 791.

=Syn. Indiscreet, imprudent, impolitic, uncircumspect, inconsiderate.

incautiously (in-kâ'shus-li), adv. In an incautious manner; unwarily; heedlessly. Byrom.

incautiousness (in-kâ'shus-nes), n. The character or state of being incautious; lack of caution or foresight; unwariness.

incavate (in-kā'vāt), a. [< L. incavatus, pp. of incavare, make hollow: see encave, v.] Made hollow; hollowed.

incavated (in-kā'vā-ted), a. Same as incavate.

incavation (in-kā-vā'shon), n. 1. The act of making hollow.—2. A hollow; an excavation; a depression.

incave, v. t. See encave.

incavern (in-kav'ėrn), v. t. [< in-[2] + cavern.] To inclose in a cavern.

Then Lid creeps on along, and, taking Thrushel, throws Herself amongst the rocks; and so incavern'd goes, . . . To bellow under earth. Drayton, Polyolbion, i. 222.

incavo (in-kä'vō), n. [It., a hollow, cavity, < L. in, in, + cavus, hollow: see cave[1]. Cf. encave.] The hollowed or incised part in an intaglio or an engraved work.

There is no enamel, but the whole of the incavo is filled with gold. A. Nesbitt, S. K. Cat., Glass Vessels.

incede† (in-sēd'), v. i. [< L. incedere, go, step, or march along, triumph, < in, in, on, + cedere, go.] To go along, step, or march in pride or exultation.

incedingly (in-sē'ding-li), adv. [< inceding, ppr. of incede, + -ly[2].] Triumphantly. [Rare.]

Even in the uttermost frenzy of energy is each mœnad movement royally, imperially, incedingly upborne. Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xxiii.

incelebrity (in-sē-leb'ri-ti), n. [< L. as if incelebrita(t-)s*, < incèleber, not famous, < in- priv. + celeber, famous: see celebrate, celebrity.] Lack of celebrity. Coleridge.

incend† (in-send'), v. t. [< L. incendere, set on fire, kindle, burn, < in, in, on, + candere, shine, glow, be on fire: see candid. Cf. accend, incense[1].] To inflame; make fiery.

Oh, there's a line incends his lustfull blood!
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, vi.

They fetch up the spirits into the brain, and with the heat brought with them, they incend it beyond measure. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 255.

incendiarism (in-sen'di-ą-rizm), n. [< incendiary + -ism.] The act or practice of an incendiary; malicious burning.

incendiary (in-sen'di-ą-ri), a. and n. [= F. incendiaire = Sp. Pg. It. incendiario, < L. incendiarius, causing a fire; as a noun, an incendiary; < incendium, a fire, conflagration, < incendere, set on fire: see incend.] I. a. 1. Causing or adapted to cause combustion; used in starting a fire or conflagration; igniting; inflammatory: as, incendiary materials; an incendiary match or bomb. Specifically—2. Pertaining or relating to or consisting in malicious or criminal setting on fire or burning: as, an incendiary mania; the incendiary torch; an incendiary fire.

Burn the parish! Burn the rating, Burn all taxes in a mass.
Hood, Incendiary Song.

3. Tending to excite or inflame passion, sedition, or violence.

With this menace the incendiary informer left De l'Isle, in order to carry his threats into execution. Hist. Duelling (1770), p. 146.

The writing of incendiary letters . . . calls for . . . condign and exemplary punishment. Paley, Moral Philos., II. ix.

The true patriot, unmoved by frightened and angry denunciation, will close his ears to incendiary utterances. N. A. Rev., CXLII. 525.

Incendiary match, a match made by boiling slow-match in a saturated solution of niter, drying it, cutting it into pieces, and plunging it into melted fire-stone. Farrow, Mil. Encyc., I. 666.—Incendiary shell, a cast-iron or steel shell filled with a combustible composition. The composition, when ignited by a fuse or the flash of the charge, burns with an intense flame for several minutes. For smooth-bore guns the shell is spherical, and is pierced by two or more holes, from which the flames issue. It is used in bombarding for setting fire to cities, shipping, wooden barracks, etc.

II. n.; pl. incendiaries (-riz). 1. A person who maliciously sets fire to a house, shop, barn, or other inflammable property; one who is guilty of arson.

The stables of the Castle Berlifitzing were discovered to be on fire; and the unanimous opinion of the neighborhood added the crime of the incendiary to the already hideous list of the Baron's misdemeanors and enormities. Poe, Tales, I. 477.

2. One who or that which excites or inflames; a person who excites antagonism and promotes factious quarrels; a violent agitator.

To these two above-named causes, or incendiaries, of this rage, I may very well annex time, place, etc. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 606.

Incendiaries of figure and distinction, who are the inventors and publishers of gross falsehoods, cannot be regarded but with the utmost detestation. Addison.

incendious† (in-sen'di-us), a. [= It. incendioso, < LL. incendiosus, burning, < L. incendium, a fire, burning: see incendiary.] Promoting faction or contention. Bacon.

incendiously† (in-sen'di-us-li), adv. So as to promote contention.

incensation (in-sen-sā'shon), n. [= Sp. incensación = It. incensazione, < ML. as if incensatio(n-)*, < incensare, burn incense: see incense[2], v.] The burning or offering of incense. [Rare.]

The Missal of the Roman Church now enjoins incensation before the introit. Encyc. Brit., XII. 721.

incense[1] (in-sens'), v. t.; pret. and pp. incensed, ppr. incensing. [Formerly also insense; < L. incensus, pp. of incendere, set on fire, inflame: see incend. This verb in the lit. sense is different from incense[2], which is from the noun incense[2].] 1†. To set on fire; cause to burn; inflame; kindle.

Twelve Trojan princes wait on thee, and labour to incense Thy glorious heap of funeral. Chapman.

Now belches molten stones and ruddy flame,
Incenst, or tears up mountains by the roots.
Addison, Æneid, iii.

2†. To make hot or eager; enkindle; incite; stimulate.

To fly the boar before the boar pursues
Were to incense the boar to follow us.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 2.

To incense us further yet, John, in his apocalypse, makes a description of that heavenly Jerusalem. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 595.

Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass?
Milton, P. L., ix. 692.

In particular—3†. To burn as incense; use in burning incense.

Virtue is like precious odours, most fragrant when they are incensed, or crushed. Bacon, Adversity (ed. 1887).

After this, the said Prelate goeth to an Altar there, richly adorned, on which is a red Table, with the name of the Great Can written in it, and a Censer with Incense, which he incenseth in stead of them all, with great reuerence performed vnto the Table. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 417.

4. To enkindle or excite to anger or other passion; inflame; make angry; provoke.

Augustus, . . . being greviously incensed against them of Cremona, deprived them of their grounds. Coryat, Crudities, I. 138.

=Syn. 4. Irritate, Provoke, etc. (see exasperate), offend, ★anger, chafe, nettle, gall.

incense[2] (in'sens), n. [< ME. encens, < OF. encens, F. encens = Pr. encens, ensens, ences, eces, esses = Sp. incienso = Pg. It. incenso, < LL. incensum, incense, orig. neut. of L. incensus, pp. of incendere, set on fire, inflame: see incense[1], incend.] 1. Any aromatic material, as certain gums, which exhales perfume during combustion; a mixture of fragrant gums, spices, etc., with gum-resin, compounded for the purpose of producing a sweet odor when burned. The substance most generally used for incense, and therefore often specifically so called, is olibanum or frankincense. (See olibanum.) The burning of incense as an act of worship existed among the Jews, and is practised in both the Eastern and Western churches of the present day, as well as by Buddhists and others.

And he made . . . the pure incense of sweet spices, according to the work of the apothecary. Ex. xxxvii. 29.

Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon. Lev. x. 1.

2. The perfume or scented fumes arising from an odoriferous substance, as frankincense, during combustion; the odor of spices and gums burned as an act of worship in some religious systems.

A thick cloud of incense went up. Ezek. viii. 11.

As the incense wafts its fragrance now throughout the material building. Rock, Church of our Fathers, i. 209.

A mist
Of incense curl'd about her, and her face
Wellnigh was hidden in the minster gloom.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

3. Any grateful odor, as of flowers; agreeable perfume or fragrance.

See Nature hastes her earliest wreaths to bring,
With all the incense of the breathing spring.
Pope, Messiah, l. 24.

4. Figuratively, gratifying admiration or attention; flattering regard and deference; homage; adulation.

Die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine;
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 194.

Or heap the shrine of luxury and pride
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.
Gray, Elegy.

He courted the soft incense of flattery.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 25.

incense[2] (in'sens or in-sens'), v.; pret. and pp. incensed, ppr. incensing. [< ME. incensen, encensen, encencen, < OF. encenser, F. encenser = Pr. encessar = Sp. Pg. incensar = It. incensare, < ML. incensare, perfume with incense, < LL. incensum, incense: see incense[2], n. Hence also cense[2], v. Cf. incense[1], v.] I. trans. 1. To perfume with incense.

Al the hous of the pacient schal be encensid strongly . . . with frankencense, mirre, and rosyn, terbentyn and rewe. Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 24.

The procession goes to the two other altars, and then again to the high altar, where the pilgrim is incensed, and coming down to the lower end of the church, he puts out his candle, and the litany is said. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 12.

2. To offer incense to; worship; flatter extravagantly.

She myghte in his presence
Doon sacrifice and Jupiter encense.
Chaucer, Second Nun's Tale, l. 413.

He is dipp'd in treason and overhead in mischief, and now must be bought off and incensed by his Sovereign. Gentleman Instructed, p. 212.

II.† intrans. To burn or offer incense.

After the custom of the presthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encencen; and al the multitude of the puple was without fourth and preyede in the hour of encencyng. Wyclif, Luke i. 9, 10.

They nolde encense ne sacrifice ryght nought. Chaucer, Second Nun's Tale, l. 395.

incense-boat (in'sens-bōt), n. A vessel, frequently of a boat-like shape (that is, with a hollow, rounded oblong body rising at the ends), used to hold incense for transfer to the censer or thurible.

incense-breathing (in'sens-brē″ŦHing), a. Breathing or exhaling incense or fragrance.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn. Gray, Elegy.

incense-burner (in'sens-bėr″nėr), n. A stand, vase, etc., upon or in which to burn incense.

Japanese Incense-burner.

Chinese and Japanese incense-burners are familiar as ornaments, often being fantastic bronze figures of men or animals.

incense-cedar (in'sens-sē″där), n. The white or post cedar, Libocedrus decurrens, a native of the Pacific coast of the United States, from Oregon south, growing on the mountains. It is a large tree with light, soft, but durable wood.

incense-cup (in'sens-kup), n. 1. An incense-burner, small and of simple form.—2. One of a class of small pottery vessels, such as are found in prehistoric graves. Their use is unknown.

incensement (in-sens'ment), n. [< incense[1] + -ment.] The act of incensing, or the state of being incensed; especially, heat of passion; fiery anger.

His incensement at this moment is so implacable that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death. Shak., T. N., iii. 4.

incenser (in-sen'sėr), n. One who or that which incenses, inflames, or excites.

Seneca understanding, by the report of those that yet somewhat regarded virtue and honour, how these lewd ★incensers did accuse him. North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1005.

incense-tree (in'sens-trē), n. A name applied to several trees of tropical America yielding aromatic resins, especially to Terebinthus Simaruba, Protium guianense, and Trichilia moschata. Also incense-wood.

incension† (in-sen'shon), n. [= OF. incension = It. incensione, < L. incensio(n-), < incendere, pp. incensus, set on fire: see incense[1].] The act of kindling or setting on fire, or the state of being exposed to the action of fire.

Sena loseth somewhat of its windiness by decocting; and generally subtile or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 23.

incensive† (in-sen'siv), a. [= OF. incensif = It. incensivo, < L. as if incensivus*, < incendere, pp. incensus, set on fire: see incense[1].] Tending to inflame or excite; inflammatory.

To be extremely hated and inhumanely persecuted, without any fault committed or just occasion offered, is greatly incensive of humane passion.
Barrow, Works, III. x.

incensor† (in-sen'sọr), n. [= F. encenseur = Sp. incensor, < LL. incensor, an inciter, instigator, < L. incendere, kindle, incite: see incense[1].] Same as incenser.

Many priests were impetuous and importunate incensors of the rage. Sir J. Hayward.

incensorium (in-sen-sō'ri-um), n.; pl. incensoria (-ä). [ML.: see incensory, censer[1].] A censer. See thurible.

incensory† (in'sen-sọ-ri), n. [< ML. incensorium, a censer, < LL. incensum, incense: see incense[2] and censer[1], ult. < ML. incensorium.] The vessel in which incense is burned; a censer.

A cup of gold, crown'd with red wine, he held On th' holy incensory pour'd.
Chapman, Iliad, xi. 686.

Other Saints lie here, decorated with splendid ornaments, lamps, and incensories of greate cost.
Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 14, 1645.

incensurable (in-sen'shọr-ạ-bl), a. [= Sp. incensurable = Pg. incensuravel; as in-[3] + censurable.] Not censurable; uncensurable.

incensurably (in-sen'shọr-ạ-bli), adv. So as not to deserve censure; uncensurably.

incentive (in-sen'tiv), a. and n. [I. a. = Pg. incentivo, < L. incentivus, that strikes up or sets the tune, LL. serving to incite, < incinere, pp. incentus, sound (an instrument), sing, < in, in, on, + canere, sing: see chant. II. n. = Sp. Pg. It. incentivo, < LL. incentivum, an incentive, neut. of incentivus, serving to incite: see I. Sometimes used as if connected with incensive and incense[1].] I. a. 1. Inciting; encouraging.

Competency is the most incentive to industry.
Decay of Christian Piety.

2†. Setting fire; igniting; firing; incendiary.

Part incentive reed
Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire.
Milton, P. L., vi. 519.

Whilst the cavern'd ground,
With grain incentive stor'd, by sudden blaze
Bursts fatal, and involves the hopes of war,
In fiery whirls. J. Philips, Cider, i.

II. n. That which moves the mind or stirs the passions; that which incites or tends to incite to action; motive; spur: as, pride is a powerful incentive.

Love seems to be the appetite, or incentive, of the primitive matter. Bacon, Physical Fables, viii., Expl.

Every great life is an incentive to all other lives.
G. W. Curtis, Prue and I, p. 186.

Incentives come from the soul's self.
Browning, Andrea del Sarto.

incentively (in-sen'tiv-li), adv. In an incentive or inciting manner; as an incentive.

incentor (in-sen'tọr), n. [Also incenter; < L. incentor, one who sets the tune, an inciter.] 1†. One who sings the descant. Blount.—2. One who incites to action, strife, etc.

incentre† (in-sen'tẻr), v. [< in-[2] + center[1].] To center.

Nor is your love incentred to me only in your own breast, but full of operation. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 135.

incept (in-sept'), v. [= OF. incepter, begin, < L. inceptus, pp. of incipere, begin, lit. take in, take up (not used in the lit. sense), < in, in, on, + capere, take: see capable, etc.] I. trans. To take in; seize. [Rare.]

Which will carry such incepted matters along with them in their slow movements from place to place.
E. A. Schäfer, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII. 88.

II. intrans. To commence or begin; specifically, in old universities, to become a master of arts or doctor; originally, to begin teaching under the license of a university; complete the taking of a degree.

The M. A. incepts in about three years and two months from the time of taking his first degree, though he does not become a full M. A. till the July following — three years and a half in all.
C. A. Bristed, English University, p. 348.

What is technically known as admission to that degree [licentia docendi] was really nothing more nor less than receiving the chancellor's permission to incept.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 835.

incepting† (in-sep'ting), p. a. [< incept + -ing[2].] Incipient; beginning.

Incepting poets and philosophers must pay for their whistle. Spectator.

inception (in-sep'shọn), n. [= OF. inception, < L. inceptio(n-), < incipere, pp. inceptus, begin, lit. take in, take up: see incept.] 1. A taking in, as by swallowing; the process of receiving within. [Rare.]

The result is the immersion of the mouth and nostrils, and the inception, during efforts to breathe while beneath the surface, of water into the lungs. E. A. Poe.

2. The incipient or initial stage; beginning; commencement.

Therefore if we can arrive at the inception of religion, . . . we have reason to conjecture that the inception of mankind was not long before.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 166.

The inception of the blockade was somewhat irregular.
J. R. Soley, Blockade and Cruisers, p. 31.

If . . . we arrange the schools of Greek philosophy in numerical order, according to the dates of their inception, we do not mean that one expired before another was founded. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 621.

3. In entom., a starting-point; the place of beginning, as of a longitudinal mark, etc. In this sense the inception may be at either end, and must be determined by the context: as, the inception of a dark line on the costal border.

4. The formal qualification of a master of arts in the old universities, preliminary to taking his degree; the solemn act kept by the candidate for the degree of master of arts immediately before receiving the degree; the commencement.

By inception was implied the master's formal entrance upon, and commencement of, the functions of a duly licensed teacher, and his recognition as such by his brothers in the profession. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 835.

inceptive (in-sep'tiv), a. and n. [= OF. inceptif, < NL. inceptivus, < L. incipere, pp. inceptus, begin: see incept.] I. a. 1. Beginning; starting; noting the initial point or step: as, an inceptive proposition; an inceptive verb (one that expresses the beginning of action).

Inceptive and desitive propositions: as, the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish, therefore the sun is not yet risen.
Watts, Logic, III. ii. § 4.

You see, in speaking, or by sound or ink,
The grand inceptive caution is to think.
Byrom, Art of Eng. Poetry.

2. In math., serving to initiate or produce: applied to such moments or first principles as, though of no magnitude themselves, are yet capable of producing results which are: thus, a point is inceptive of a line; a line, of a surface; and a surface, of a solid. Wallis.

II. n. That which begins or notes beginning, as a proposition or a verb. Also inchoative.

inceptively (in-sep'tiv-li), adv. In an inceptive manner.

inceptor (in-sep'tọr), n. [= Sp. (obs.) inceptor, < LL. inceptor, < L. incipere, pp. inceptus, begin: see incept.] 1. A beginner; one who is in the rudiments. [Rare.]—2. One who is about to take the degree of master of arts at an English or other old university, having fulfilled all the conditions.

Next follow'd ye disputations of the Inceptor Doctors in Medicine, the speech of their Professor Dr. Hyde, and so in course their respective creations.
Evelyn, Diary, July 10, 1669.

The Inceptor or candidate then began his speech, wherein I found little edification.
Locke, quot. in Dr. J. Brown's Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 50.

inceration (in-sẹ-rā'shọn), n. [= F. incération, < L. as if inceratio(n-)*, < incerare (> It. incerare, = Sp. Pg. encerar), pp. inceratus, cover with wax, < in, on, + cera, wax: see cere.] 1. The act of covering or treating with wax; waxing.

He's ripe for inceration, he stands warm,
In his ash-fire. B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

2. The act of incorporating wax with some other body; also, the operation of communicating to a dry substance the consistence of wax. Also called encerosis. Dunglison, Med. Dict.

incerative (in'sẹ-rā-tiv), a. [As incerat(ion) + -ive.] Sticking like wax. Cotgrave.

inceremonious† (in-ser-ẹ-mō'ni-us), a. [< in-[3] + ceremonious.] Unceremonious.

One holds it best to set forth God's service in a solemn state and magnificence; another approves better of a simple and inceremonious devotion.
Bp. Hall, Soliloquies, xvii.

incertain† (in-sẻr'tān), a. [< ME. incertain, < OF. (also F.) incertain; as in-[3] + certain. Cf. L. incertus (> It. Pg. incerto = Sp. incierto), uncertain.] Uncertain.

To be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and incertain thoughts
Imagine howling! Shak., M. for M., iii. 1.

A Wanderer, and subject to incertain Removes, and short Sojourns in divers Places before.
Howell, Letters, I. ii. 5.

incertainly† (in-sẻr'tān-li), adv. Uncertainly.

Answer incertainly and ambiguously. Huloet.

incertainty (in-sẻr'tān-ti), n.; pl. incertainties (-tiz). [< OF. incertainete, < incertain, incertain: see incertain. Cf. certainty, uncertainty.] Uncertainty.

The hazard
Of all incertainties. Shak., W. T., iii. 2.

Arranging the opinions of men only to show their incertainty. Goldsmith, Int. to Hist. of the World.

incertitude (in-sẻr'ti-tūd), n. [< F. incertitude = Sp. incertidumbre, obs. incertitud = It. incertitudine, < ML. incertitudo (-din-), uncertainty, < L. incertus, uncertain, < in- priv. + certus, certain: see certain, certitude.] 1. The state or condition of being uncertain; doubtfulness; uncertainty arising from doubt or hesitation.

The incertitude and instability of this life, and of humane affaires. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 716.

He fails and forfeits reputation from mere incertitude or irresolution. Is. Taylor.

2. Obscurity; indefiniteness.

Visit it [London] . . . in the autumn, and towards the close of the day, when the gray incertitude lies on the mighty city. The Century, XXVI. 821.

incessable† (in-ses'ạ-bl), a. [< OF. incessable = Sp. incesable = It. incessabile, < L. incessabilis, unceasing, < in- priv. + cessabilis*, < cessare, cease: see cease.] Unceasing; continual.

He heard likewise those incessable strokes, but could not espy the cause of them.
Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, I. iii. 6.

incessably† (in-ses'ạ-bli), adv. Continually; unceasingly; without intermission.

incessancy (in-ses'ạn-si), n. The quality of being incessant; unintermitted continuance. [Rare.]

Whose white bones wasting lie
In some farre region, with th' incessancie
Of showres powrd downe vpon them.
Chapman, Odyssey, i.

incessant (in-ses'ạnt), a. [= F. incessant = Sp. incesante = Pg. It. incessante, < LL. incessan(t-)s (in adv. incessanter), < L. in- priv. + cessan(t-)s, ppr. of cessare, cease: see cease.] Continued or repeated without interruption or intermission; unceasing; ceaseless: as, incessant rains; incessant clamor.

From skies descending down, a swarme of bees beset the bowes, Incessant thick with noise. Phaer, Æneid, vii.

The people are proud, clever, and active, and all engaged in incessant cares of commerce.
Quoted in C. Elton's Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 20.

=Syn. Continuous, Incessant, Continual, Perpetual; unremitting, unremitted. Continuous means unbroken, and is passive; incessant means unceasing, and is active. The former is preferable to note duration, condition, or result; the latter, to describe the exertion by which the condition or result is produced. We speak of a continuous or an incessant fever, according as we think of the fever as a state or as an activity; and similarly of a continuous or incessant strain of music, and the continuous or incessant murmur of a brook; but only of a continuous railroad-track or telegraph-wire. Continual regularly implies the habitual or repeated renewals of an act, state, etc.: as, a continual succession of storms. In the Bible continual is sometimes used for continuous, but the distinction here indicated is now clearly established. Perpetual is continuous with the idea of lastingness: as, perpetual motion. It is often used in the sense of continual: as, I am sick of such perpetual bickerings. In either sense, unless the thing is really everlasting, it is used by hyperbole, as implying that one sees no end to the matter. See eternal.

incessantly (in-ses'ạnt-li), adv. [< ME. incessantli; < incessant + -ly[2].] 1. In an incessant manner; with constant repetition; unceasingly.

The frosty north wind blowes a cold thicke sleete,
That dazzles eyes; flakes after flakes, incessantly descending. Chapman, Iliad, xix.

He was so incessantly given to his devotion and prayers as no man more in the whole house.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 183.

2†. Instantly; immediately.

If I see him I fear I shall turn to Stone, and petrifie incessantly. Congreve, Way of the World, v. 8.

If I catch any one among you, upon any pretence whatsoever, using the particle or, I shall incessantly order him to be stripped of his gown, and thrown over the bar.
Addison, Charge to the Jury.

incessantness (in-ses'ạnt-nes), n. The character of being incessant.

incession† (in-sesh'ọn), n. [< L. as if incessio(n-), < incedere, pp. incessus, go along, go forward: see incede.] A going; progression; locomotion.

The incession or local motion of animals is made with analogy unto this figure.
Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, iii.

incest (in'sest), n. [< ME. incest, < OF. (also F.) inceste = Sp. Pg. It. incesto, < L. incestum, unchastity, incest, neut. of incestus, unchaste (> incestus (incestu-), m., incest), < in- priv. + castus, chaste: see chaste.] The offense of cohabitation or sexual commerce between persons related within the degrees wherein marriage is prohibited by the law or established usage of a country. In this offense illegitimate consanguinity is of the same effect as legitimate. —Spiritual incest. (a) Sexual intercourse between persons who have been baptized or confirmed together: sometimes recognized as an offense by ecclesiastical authorities in the middle ages. (b) The holding, by a vicar or other beneficiary, of two benefices, one of which depends upon the collation of the other.

incestuous (in-ses′tū-us), a. [< F. incestueux = Pr. encestuos = Sp. Pg. It. incestuoso, < LL. incestuosus, < L. incestus (incestu-), incest: see incest.] 1. Guilty of incest: as, an incestuous person.

We may easily guess with what impatience the world would have heard an incestuous Herod discoursing of chastity. South, Sermons.

2. Involving the crime of incest: as, an incestuous connection.

For have we not as natural a sense or feeling of the voluptuous? yes, he will say, but this sense has its proper object, virtuous love, not adulterous or incestuous. Warburton, Ded. to the Freethinkers, Postscript.

incestuously (in-ses′tū-us-li), adv. In an incestuous manner; in a manner to involve the crime of incest.

incestuousness (in-ses′tū-us-nes), n. The state ★or quality of being incestuous.

inch[1] (inch), n. and a. [< ME. inche, ynche, < AS. ynce, ince, an inch, < L. uncia, Sicilian Gr. οἰγκία, a twelfth part, as an inch (one twelfth of a foot), an ounce (one twelfth of a pound), orig. a small weight; cf. Gr. ὄγκος, bulk, weight. See ounce[1], a doublet of inch.] I. n. 1. A lineal measure, the twelfth part of a foot. It is of Roman origin, and was formerly divided into 12 lines. The text-books of arithmetic, following an old statute, divide the inch into 3 barleycorns. A binary division is most common in rough mechanical work, while for finer work it is divided into thousandths (as in gunnery), or even into ten-thousandths (by makers of gages only). The English inch is equal to 2.54 centimeters. The old Scotch inch was slightly longer than the English, being one thirty-seventh part of the Edinburgh ellwand. See foot, 10. Abbreviated in.

Arthur smote hym on the lifte shuldre in to the flesshe two large ynche. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 629.

Most ancient measures have been derived from one of two great systems, that of the cubit of 20.63 inches, or the digit of .729 inch. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 483.

2. Proverbially, a small quantity or degree; the least part or amount.

There's not a lord in England breathes Shall gar me give an inch of way.
Duel of Wharton and Stuart (Child's Ballads, VIII. 261).

With me they'd starve, for want of Ivory;
For not one Inch does my whole House afford.
Congreve, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, xi.

3†. A critical moment.

Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.
Beldame, I think, we watch'd you at an inch.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 4.

If it fall out, we are ready; if not, we are scatter'd:
I'll wait you at an inch. Fletcher, Loyal Subject, iv. 2.

At inches, very near or close. [Prov. Eng.]—Auction or sale by inch of candle. See auction.—By inches, or inch by inch, by slow or small degrees; very gradually.

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune,
And hale him up and down; all swearing . . .
They'll give him death by inches. Shak., Cor., v. 4.

No, don't kill him at once, Sir Rowland, starve him gradually, Inch by Inch. Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 12.

Every inch, in every respect; completely; every whit.

All spoke of one who was every inch the gentleman and the parson. Bulwer, My Novel, xi. 2.

Miners' inch, nominally, the amount of water passing through a square inch of opening under 6 inches of head: in practice from 1.2 to 2.76 cubic feet per minute. [U. S.]

II. a. Measuring an inch in any dimension, whether length, breadth, or thickness.—Inch stuff, in carp., deal boards sawed one inch thick.

inch[1] (inch), v. [< inch[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To drive or force by inches or small degrees: as, to inch one's way along. [Rare.]

Like so much cold steel inched through his breast-blade. Browning, Ring and Book, I. 118.

2. To deal out by inches; give sparingly. Ainsworth. [Rare.]—3. To mark with lines an inch apart.

II. intrans. To advance or retire by small degrees; move reluctantly or by inches: as, to inch away from the fire. [Rare.]

Now Turnus doubts, and yet disdains to yield,
But with slow paces measures back the field,
And inches to the walls. Dryden, Æneid, ix.

inch[2] (inch), n. [< Gael. innis, an island: see innis, ennis.] An island. Inch is an element frequent in names of small islands belonging to Scotland: as, *Inch*colm, *Inch*keith. It appears also in many names of places on the mainland, which before the last elevation of central Scotland were islands: as, the Inches of Perth. In Irish names it appears in the forms Innis, Ennis.

He disbursed, at St. Colmes' inch,
Ten thousand dollars. Shak., Macbeth, i. 2.

inchace†, v. t. An obsolete spelling of enchase[2].

inchafe†, v. Same as enchafe.

inchain†, v. t. An obsolete form of enchain.

inchamber (in-chām′bėr), v. t. [< in-[2] + chamber. Cf. incameration.] To lodge in a chamber. Sherwood.

inchant†, inchanter†, etc. Obsolete forms of enchant, etc.

incharge†, v. t. Same as encharge.

incharitable† (in-char′i-ta-bl), a. [< in-[3] + charitable.] Uncharitable.

Is not the whole nation become sullen and proud, ignorant and suspicious, incharitable, curst, and, in fine, the most depraved and perfidious under heaven?
Evelyn, Apology for the Royal Party.

incharity† (in-char′i-ti), n. [< F. incharité; as in-[3] + charity.] Uncharitableness.

Some charg'd the Popes
Of meere incharitie, for that
To wreake their priuate spight Gainst kingdomes kingdomes they incense.
Warner, Albion's England, v. 24.

It is high incharity to proceed . . . severely upon meer suppositions. Penn, Liberty of Conscience, v.

inchase (in-chās′), v. t. Same as enchase[2].

inchaste†, a. [= Sp. Pg. incasto (rare) = It. incasto (L. incestus: see incest); as in-[3] + chaste.] Unchaste.

Now you that were my father's concubines,
Liquor to his inchaste and lustful fire,
Have seen his honour shaken in his house.
Peele, David and Bethsabe, p. 476.

inchastity† (in-chas′ti-ti), n. [< F. inchasteté = It. incastità; as in-[3] + chastity.] Unchastity.

'Tis not the act that ties the marriage knot,
It is the will; then must I all my life
Be stained with inchastitie's foul blot.
P. Hannay, Sheretine and Mariana.

inched (incht), a. [< inch[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Containing inches: used in composition. [Rare.]

Made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inched bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Shak., Lear, iii. 4.

2. Marked with inches for measuring: as, an inched staff or rule.

inchest†, enchest† (in-chest′, en-chest′), v. t. [< in-[3] + chest[1].] To put into a chest; keep in or as if in a chest.

Thou art Joves sister and Saturnus childe;
Yet can they [thy] breast enchest such anger still?
Vicars, Æneid (1632).

inchipin†, n. Same as inchpin.

inchmeal† (inch′mēl), adv. [< inch[1] + -meal. Cf. piecemeal, etc.] By inches; inch by inch: often with by preceding.

God loves your soul, if he be loth to let it go inchmeal, and not by swallowing. Donne, Letters, xi.

All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall, and make him
By inch-meal a disease! Shak., Tempest, ii. 2.

inchoant (in′kō-ant), a. [< L. inchoan(t-)s, incohan(t-)s, ppr. of inchoare, incohare, begin: see inchoate.] Inchoating; beginning.—Inchoant cause, the procatarctic cause; that which extrinsically excites the principal cause into action.

inchoate (in′kō-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inchoated, ppr. inchoating. [< L. inchoatus, incohatus, pp. of inchoare, prop. incohare (> OIt. incoare = Sp. incoar), begin, < in, in, on, to, + cohare*, not otherwise found.] To begin. [Rare.]

Conceives and inchoates the argument.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 42.

inchoate (in′kō-āt), a. [= Sp. incoado = Pg. inchoado = It. incoato, < L. inchoatus, pp.: see the verb.] Recently or just begun; incipient; in a state of incipiency; hence, elementary; rudimentary; not completely formed or established: as, inchoate rights.

Philosophers dispute whether moral ideas . . . were not once inchoate, embryo, dubious, unformed.
M. Arnold, Lit. and Dogma, i.

Each one of us has the prerogative of completing his inchoate and rudimental nature.
J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 336.

In his early days Maximilian had tempted him [Henry] with the offer of the Empire, he himself to retire on the popedom with an inchoate claim to canonization.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 262.

Inchoate right of dower. See dower[2].

inchoately (in′kō-āt-li), adv. In an inchoate manner; rudimentarily.

inchoatio (in-kō-ā′shi-ō), n. [< LL. inchoatio(n-), incohatio(n-): see inchoation.] In plainsong, the intonation or introductory tones of a melody. See intonation[2], 3.

inchoation (in-kō-ā′shon), n. [< LL. inchoatio(n-), incohatio(n-), < L. inchoare, incohare, begin: see inchoate.] The act of beginning; inception; rudimentary state.

Then doth baptism challenge to itself but the inchoation of those graces the consummation whereof dependeth on mysteries ensuing. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 57.

The Religion of Nature is a mere inchoation and needs a complement,—it can have but one complement, and that very complement is Christianity.
J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 473.

inchoative (in-kō′a-tiv), a. and n. [= F. inchoatif = Pr. enchoatiu = Pg. inchoativo = Sp. It. incoativo, < LL. inchoativus, incohativus, < L. inchoare, incohare, pp. inchoatus, incohatus, begin: see inchoate.] I. a. 1. In the state of inception or formation; incipient; rudimentary.

These acts of our intellect seem to be some inchoative or imperfect rays. W. Montague, Devoute Essays, i. 387.

2. Expressing or indicating beginning; inceptive: as, an inchoative verb (otherwise called inceptive).

II. n. That which begins, or that which expresses the beginning of, an action or state; specifically, in gram., an inchoative verb.

The Latins go farther and have a species of verbs derived from others which do the duty of these tenses; and are themselves for that reason called inchoatives or inceptives.
Harris, Hermes, i. 7.

inchpin† (inch′pin), n. [Also corruptly inchipin, inne-pin; appar. < inch[1] + pin.] The sweetbread of a deer. Also called fatgut.

Gras boyau [F.], or Boyau culier (the right gut); in beasts called the Inch-pin or Inne-pin. Cotgrave.

Mar. Although I gave them
All the sweet morsels call'd tongue, ears, and doucets.—
Rob. What, and the inch-pin?
Mar. Yes. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2.

inch-pound (inch′pound), n. A unit of work, being the work done in raising a pound through an inch. It is equal to about 1,152 units of the c. g. s. system, or about 1,130,200 ergs; but its value varies in different localities, being dependent on gravity.

inchurch† (in-chėrch′), v. t. [< in-[1] + church.] To form or receive into a church.

They that left Roxbury were inchurched higher up the ★river at Springfield. C. Mather, Mag. Chris., i. 6.

inchworm (inch′wėrm), n. A dropworm or measuring-worm. See looper.

incicurable (in-sik′ū-ra-bl), a. [< L. in- priv. + cicurabilis*, < cicurare, tame, < cicur, tame. Cf. L. incicur, not tame.] Not to be tamed; untamable. Ash. [Rare.]

incide† (in-sīd′), v. t. [= Pg. incidir = It. incidere, < L. incidere, cut into, cut open, < in, in, + cædere, strike, cut. Cf. incise.] 1. To cut into.—2. In med., to resolve or disperse, as a coagulated humor.

Saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus.
★ Arbuthnot.

incidence (in′si-dens), n. [< F. incidence = Sp. Pg. incidencia = It. incidenza, < ML. incidentia, a falling upon, < L. inciden(t-)s, falling upon: see incident.] 1†. A subordinate occurrence or thing; an incident; something incidental or casual.

These meaner incidences. Bp. Hall, Solomon's Choice.

He that hath wounded his neighbour is tied to the expenses of the surgeon and other incidences.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, iii. 4.

2. The manner of falling; direction of the line of fall; course.

You may alter the incidence of the mischief, but the amount of it will inevitably be borne somewhere.
H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 22.

The incidence of our taxation is, I believe, as equitable as it can be made; the amount of it is far lighter than it used to be. W. R. Greg, Misc. Essays, 1st ser., p. 110.

It [hearth-money] was hated on account of its incidence on a poorer class of persons than had been usually taxed under the easy régime of the subsidies.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 43.

3. In physics, the falling or impinging of a ray of light or heat, etc., upon a surface: used especially with reference to the direction of the ray.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions. Newton, Opticks.

4. In astron., same as immersion, 4.—5. In geom., the situation of two figures in which they have something more in common than they would have in some other situation, but do not completely coincide. The four kinds of incidence that are particularly considered are: 1st, that of a point and a line when the former lies on the latter; 2d, that of a point and a plane when the former lies in the latter; 3d, that of two lines when they cut each other; and 4th, that of a line and a plane when the former lies in the latter.—Angle of incidence. (a) In physics, the angle formed by the line of incidence and a line drawn from the point of contact perpendicular to the plane or surface on which the incident ray or body impinges. Thus, if a ray EC impinges on the plane AB at the point C, and a perpendicular CD be erected, then the angle ECD is called the angle of incidence, and the plane ECD the plane of incidence.

Angle of Incidence.

Those bodies which give light by reflexion, can there only be perceived where the angle of reflexion is equal to the angle of incidence.

Bp. Wilson, Discovery of a New World.

(b) In gun., the angle which the longer axis of a projectile makes with the surface struck.—Axis of incidence, the normal to a surface at the point at which a ray or body strikes upon it.—Cathetus of incidence. Same as axis of incidence.—Incidence formula, in enumerative geom., a formula expressing the number of incidences between different figures. For example, one such formula expresses the following proposition: In any unidimensional system of curves the number of them which cut a given straight line added to the number which touch a given plane give the number which so cut a plane that the tangent at the point of intersection cuts a given straight line.—Plane of incidence, the plane passing through the incident ray (EC) and the normal to the surface (CD). See figure above.

incidency† (in'si-den-si), n. Same as incidence, 1.

But wise men, philosophers and private judges, take in the accounts of accidental moments and incidencies to the action, said Cicero. Jer. Taylor, Of Repentance, iii. 3.

★

incident (in'si-dent), a. and n. [< F. incident = Sp. Pg. It. incidente, < L. inciden(t-)s, ppr. of incidere, fall upon, < in, on, + cadere, fall: see cadent.] I. a. 1. Falling or striking upon something, as a ray of light or a projectile; impinging or acting upon anything from without.

That there may be continuous changes of structure in organisms, there must be continuous changes in the incident forces. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 169.

If light be incident at the polarizing angle, the reflected and refracted rays will be at right angles to one another. Spottiswoode, Polarisation, p. 9.

2. Likely to happen; apt to occur; hence, naturally appertaining; necessarily conjoined.

I have been looking at the fire, and in a pensive manner reflecting upon the great misfortunes and calamities incident to human life. Steele, Tatler, No. 82.

Truly and heartily will he know where to find a true and sweet mate, without any risk such as Milton deplores as incident to scholars and great men. Emerson, Love.

3. Appertaining to or following another thing; conjoined as a subordinate to a principal thing; appurtenant: as, rent is incident to a reversion.

To whom it was incident as a fee of his office.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 238.

4†. Subordinate; casual; incidental.

Men's rarer incident necessities and utilities.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

Incident proposition, in logic, a subordinate proposition or clause inserted in a principal proposition, and called determinative or explicative according as it forms an essential or only an accessory member of it: as, Naples, where I met my friends, is a beautiful city.=Syn. Incident, Liable. "Incident is improperly confounded with liable. Says a living writer, 'The work was incident to decay.' He should have turned it end for end. Decay may be incident to a work; the work is liable to decay." A. Phelps, Eng. Style, p. 371.

The regular jealous-fit that's incident
To all old husbands that wed brisk young wives.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 76.

Proudly secure, yet liable to fall. Milton, S. A., l. 55.

II. n. 1. That which falls out or takes place; an occurrence; something which takes place in connection with an event or a series of events of greater importance.

A writer of lives may descend, with propriety, to minute circumstances and familiar incidents.
H. Blair, Rhetoric, xxxvi.

The incident had occurred and was gone for me; it was an incident of no moment, no romance, no interest in a sense; yet it marked with change one single hour of a monotonous life. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

2. A thing necessarily or frequently depending upon, appertaining to, or legally passing with another that is the principal or more important; a natural or characteristic accompaniment.

Representative Councils, &c., are a mere incident and not an essential to Corporations. The whole body is the Corporation.
Quoted in English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. xxii.

To every estate in lands the law has annexed certain peculiar incidents which appertain to it as of course without being expressly enumerated. Burrill.

3. In decorative art, the representation of any action, often much conventionalized, but still to be recognized: thus, a frieze may consist of a number of incidents relating collectively some historical event.=Syn. 1. Occurrence, Circumstance, etc. See *event*1.

incidental (in-si-den'tal), a. and n. [< incident + -al.] I. a. Occurring, inseparably or fortuitously, in conjunction with something else, usually of greater importance; of minor importance; occasional; casual: as incidental expenses.

The pleasure incidental to the satisfaction of an interest cannot be attained after loss of the interest itself.
T. H. Green, Prolegomena to Ethics, § 161.

It would be very useful indeed to have a record of the incidental discoveries, and of the minor studies which every historical scholar makes in the process of his work.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 54.

Poverty has one incidental advantage; it lets things fall to ruin, but it does not improve or restore.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 215.

In England inequality lies imbedded in the very base of the social structure; in America it is a late, incidental, unrecognized product. Gladstone, Might of Right, p. 179.

=Syn. Chance, Casual, etc. See accidental.

II. n. Something subordinate or casual: often used in the plural to mean minor expenses.

So many weak, pitiful incidentals attend on them. Pope.

Your father said that I might pay you five francs a day for incidentals and pocket money.
Jacob Abbott, Rollo in Paris, i.

incidentally (in-si-den'tal-i), adv. In an incidental manner; as an incident; casually.

I . . . treat either purposely or incidentally of . . . colours. Boyle, Works, I. 665.

incidentary†, a. [< incident + -ary.] Incidental.

He had been near fifty years from the county of Carnarvon and the town of Conway, unless by incidentary visits. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 208.

incidentless (in'si-dent-les), a. [< incident + -less.] Without incident; uneventful.

My journey was incidentless, but the moment I came into Brighthelmstone I was met by Mrs. Thrale.
Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, II. 158.

incidently† (in'si-dent-li), adv. Incidentally.

It was incidently moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attainted.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII.

incinderment† (in-sin'dėr-ment), n. [< in-2 + cinder + -ment. Cf. incinerate.] Incineration.

Hee, like the glorious rare Arabian bird,
Will soon result from His incinderment.
Davies, Holy Roode, p. 26.

incinerable (in-sin'ė-ra-bl), a. [< ML. as if incinerabilis*, < incinerare, burn to ashes: see incinerate.] Capable of being reduced to ashes: as, incinerable matter. [Rare.]

Other incinerable substances were found so fresh that they could feel no sindge from fire.
Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, iii.

★

incinerate (in-sin'ė-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incinerated, ppr. incinerating. [Formerly also encinerate; < ML. incineratus, pp. of incinerare (> It. incenerare = Sp. Pg. Pr. incinerar = F. incinérer), burn to ashes, < L. in, in, to, + cinis (ciner-), ashes: see cinerary.] To burn to ashes.

Near the same plot of ground, for about six yards compasse, were digged up coals and incinerated substances.
Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, ii.

incinerate† (in-sin'ė-rāt), a. [< ML. incineratus, pp.: see the verb.] Burnt to ashes.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and incinerate. Bacon.

incineration (in-sin-ė-rā'shon), n. [= F. incinération = Pr. incineratio = Sp. incineración = Pg. incineração = It. incenerazione, < ML. incineratio(n-), < incinerare, burn to ashes: see incinerate.] The act of incinerating or reducing to ashes by combustion.

Tobacco stalks may be mentioned as yielding upon incineration large quantities of potassium salts.
Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 255.

incinerator (in-sin'ė-rā-tor), n. [< ML. as if incinerator*, < incinerare, incinerate: see incinerate.] A furnace or retort for consuming, or reducing to ashes, any substance or body.

The incinerator (Dr. Sargeant's Patent), for destroying the refuse of hospitals, asylums, workhouses, etc.
The Engineer, LXVII., p. xxvii. of adv'ts.

incipience, incipiency (in-sip'i-ens, -en-si), n. [< incipient.] The condition of being incipient; beginning; commencement.

★

incipient (in-sip'i-ent), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. incipiente, < L. incipien(t-)s, ppr. of incipere, begin, lit. take up, < in, on, + capere, take: see capable. Cf. incept.] Beginning; commencing; entering on existence or appearance.

He dashed my incipient vanity to the earth at once.
Lamb, Old and New Schoolmaster.

Its blasting rebuke causes incipient despotism to perish in the bud. D. Webster, Speech, Oct. 12, 1832.

Incipient cause, a cause which extrinsically excites the principal cause to action; a procatarctic or inchoating cause.

incipiently (in-sip'i-ent-li), adv. In an incipient manner.

in-circle (in'sėr-kl), n. [< *in*1 + circle.] An inscribed circle.

incircle (in-sėr'kl), v. t. [< in-2 + circle.] Same as encircle.

incirclet† (in-sėr'klet), n. Same as encirclet.

incircumscriptible (in-sėr-kum-skrip'ti-bl), a. [= F. incirconscriptible = It. incircoscrittibile; as in-3 + circumscriptible.] Incapable of being circumscribed or limited; illimitable.

The glorious bodie of Christ, which should bee capable of ten thousand places at once, both in heaven and earth, invisible, incircumscriptible.
Bp. Hall, The Old Religion, § 2.

incircumscription (in-sėr-kum-skrip'shon), n. [< in-3 + circumscription.] The condition or quality of being incircumscriptible or limitless.

His mercy hath all its operations upon man, and returns to its own centre, and incircumscription, and infinity, unless it issues forth upon us.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 914.

incircumspect (in-sėr'kum-spekt), a. [= F. incirconspect = It. incircospetto; as in-3 + circumspect.] Not circumspect; heedless.

Our fashions of eating make us . . . unlusty to labour, . . . incircumspect, inconsiderate, heady, rash.
Tyndale, Works, p. 227.

incircumspection (in-sėr-kum-spek'shon), n. [= F. incirconspection; as in-3 + circumspection.] Want of circumspection; heedlessness.

An unexpected way of delusion, and whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 11.

incircumspectly (in-sėr'kum-spekt-li), adv. Not circumspectly.

The Christians, inuading and entring into the munition incircumspectly, were pelted and pashed with stones.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 35.

incise (in-sīz'), v. t.; pret. and pp. incised, ppr. incising. [< F. inciser, < L. incisus, pp. of incidere, cut into: see incide.] To cut in or into; form or treat by cutting; specifically, to engrave; carve in intaglio.

I on this grave thy epitaph incise.
Carew, Death of Dr. Donne.

The hair is indicated by masses broadly modelled, with incised lines on the surface.
A. S. Murray, Greek Sculpture, I. 110.

Whereon a rude hand is incised—a favorite Mohammedan symbol of doctrine. Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 135.

incised (in-sīzd'), p. a. 1. Cut; caused by cutting: as, an incised wound.—2. In bot. and entom., appearing as if cut; having marginal slits or notches, as an oak-leaf or an insect's wing.—Incised enamel. Same as champlevé enamel. See enamel.—Incised ware. See *ware*2.

incisely (in-sīs'li), adv. [< incise*, a., incised (< L. incisus, pp.: see incise, v.), + *-ly*2.] With or by incisions or notches. Eaton. [Rare.]

incisiform (in-sī'si-fôrm), a. [Short for incisoriform*, < NL. incisor, incisor, + L. forma, form.] In zoöl.: (a) Resembling an incisor tooth; incisorial: as, "lower canines incisiform," Flower.

In the genus Dinoceras there are three incisor teeth, and a small incisiform canine on each side.
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXIX. 187.

(b) More particularly, having the form or character of the incisor teeth of a rodent; gliriform, as teeth. See incisor.

incision (in-sizh'on), n. [< F. incision = Pr. incizio = Sp. incisión = Pg. incisão = It. incisione, a cutting into, < L. incisio(n-), a cutting into, used only in fig. senses, division, cesura, < incidere, pp. incisus, cut into: see incide, incise.] 1. The act of incising or cutting into a substance; specifically, the act of cutting into flesh, as for the purpose of bloodletting.

A fever in your blood! why, then incision
Would let her out in saucers.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 3.

With nice incision of her guided steel
She [the chisel] ploughs a brazen field.
Cowper, Task, i. 708.

When as Nature teaches us to divide any limb from the body to the saving of its fellows, . . . how much more is it her doctrine to sever by incision . . . a sore, the gangreen of a limb, to the recovery of a whole man?
Milton, Tetrachordon.

2. A division or passage made by cutting; a cut or cutting; a gash.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 1.

3. Figuratively, trenchancy; incisiveness. [Rare.]

The bards performed the function of public censors with sharp incision. J. S. Blackie.

4. In bot. and entom., a slit or deep notch resembling a cut.—5. In Doric arch., same as hypotrachelium. Sometimes, especially in provincial examples, the incision is repeated to emphasize the separation of the shaft and capital. See cut under hypotrachelium.

6†. A cutting away; removal, as by an acid or a drug.

Abstersion is a scouring off or incision of viscous humours. Bacon.

incisive (in-sī'siv), a. and n. [< F. incisif = Pr. incisiu = Sp. Pg. It. incisivo, < L. as if incisivus*, < incidere, pp. incisus, cut into: see incide, incise.] I. a. 1. Having the quality of cutting into or dividing the substance of anything; cutting, or used for cutting: as, the incisive teeth.—2. Figuratively, sharply and clearly expressive; penetrating; trenchant; sharp; acute.

A quick-witted, outspoken, incisive fellow.
O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, i.

When Annie asked about their families, she answered with the incisive directness of a country-bred woman.
Howells, Annie Kilburn, v.

3†. Having the power of breaking up or dissolving viscid or coagulated humors.

The fig-tree sendeth from it a sharpe, piercing, and incisive spirit. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 608.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors. Boyle.

4. In anat. and zoöl.: (a) Having the character, function, or situation of an incisor tooth; incisorial. (b) Pertaining in any way to an incisor; situated near incisors; containing incisors: synonymous with premaxillary or intermaxillary and prepalatine.—Incisive bones, the premaxillary bones.—Incisive edge or tooth, a sharp prominence at the base of the mandible in certain insects, used for cutting.—Incisive foramen. Same as canalis incisivus (which see, under canalis).—Incisive fossa. See fossa[1].—Incisive teeth, the incisors.

II. n. In entom., the incisive edge of the mandible of a beetle. See incisive edge, above.

incisively (in-sī'siv-li), adv. In an incisive, sharp, or penetrating manner; penetratingly; trenchantly; sharply; acutely.

"In that case," she says, incisively, "I can not understand his consenting to become the bearer of such a message." Rhoda Broughton, Second Thoughts, i. 3.

incisiveness (in-sī'siv-nes), n. The character or quality of being incisive.

incisor (in-sī'sọr), n. and a. [= It. incisore, < NL. incisor, a cutting tooth (cf. ML. incisor, a surgeon), < L. incidere, pp. incisus, cut into: see incise.] I. n.; pl. incisors, incisores (-sọrz, in-sī-sō'rēz). In anat. and zoöl., an incisive or cutting tooth; a front tooth; any tooth of the upper jaw which is situated in the premaxillary or intermaxillary bone, or any corresponding tooth of the lower jaw. The name was originally given to those teeth which have sharp edges and a single fang, and are situated in front of the canines of either jaw. It is now technically used of teeth, whatever their character, which are situated as above described. When there are no upper incisors, the lower incisors are those situated nearest the symphysis of the lower jaw. Incisors are technically distinguished chiefly in mammals. Most mammals possess them in both jaws. The typical number is 6 above and below; but this number is frequently reduced to 4 or 2, sometimes to none, in one or both jaws. The number in either jaw is always even, and there is usually the same number in each jaw. A striking exception to this is seen in the ruminants, which usually have only lower incisors, biting against a callous pad in the upper jaw. (See cut under Ruminantia.) Among the most highly specialized incisors are those of the rodents or Glires, which are perennial, persistently growing from open pulps, with fangs rooted through much of the extent of each jaw, and with the cutting edges beveled like an adz; teeth of this character are sometimes termed gliriform. (See cut under Rodentia.) The greatest number of incisors is possessed by the opossum, this marsupial having 10 above and 8 below. For topography of the tooth, see cuts under tooth, 1, in the supplement.

II. a. 1. Same as incisorial: as, an incisor tooth.—2. Of or pertaining to the incisor teeth: as, incisor nerves.—Incisor canal, foramen. Same as canalis incisivus (which see, under canalis).

incisorial (in-sī-sō'ri-al), a. [< incisor + -ial.] Having the character of an incisor tooth; incisive, as a tooth.

incisory (in-sī'sọ-ri), a. [= F. incisoire = Sp. Pg. incisorio; as incise + -ory.] Having the property of cutting; incisive.

incisure (in-sizh'ūr), n. [= F. incisure = Pg. It. incisura, < L. incisura, a cutting into, < incidere, pp. incisus, cut into: see incise.] A cut; an incision; a slit-like opening; a notch.

In some creatures it [the mouth] is wide and large, in some little and narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head. Derham, Physico-Theology, iv. 11.

incitant (in-sī'tant), n. [< L. incitan(t-)s, ppr. of incitare, incite: see incite.] That which incites or stimulates to action; an exciting cause. Smart.

incitation (in-si-tā'shọn), n. [= F. incitation = Sp. incitación = Pg. incitação = It. incitazione, < L. incitatio(n-), < incitare, pp. incitatus, incite: see incite.] 1. The act of inciting or moving to action; incitement.

All the affections that are in man are either natural, or by chance, or by the incitation of reason and discourse.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 67.

2. That which incites to action; that which rouses or prompts; incitement; motive; incentive.

The whole race of men have this passion in some degree implanted in their bosoms, which is the strongest and noblest incitation to honest attempts. Tatler, No. 23.

incitative (in-sī'tā-tiv), n. [= OF. incitatif = Sp. Pg. It. incitativo; as incite + -ative.] A provocative; a stimulant; an incitant.

They all carried wallets, which, as appeared afterwards, were well provided with incitatives, and such as provoke to thirst at two leagues' distance. Jarvis, tr. of Don Quixote.

incite (in-sīt'), v. t.; pret. and pp. incited, ppr. inciting. [< F. inciter = Sp. Pg. incitar = It. incitare, < L. incitare, set in motion, hasten, urge, incite, < in, in, on, + citare, set in motion, urge: see cite[1].] To move to action; stir up; instigate; spur on.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans. Bacon.

If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee
To bind our loves up in a holy band.
Shak., Much Ado, iii. 1.

=Syn. Impel, Induce, etc. (see actuate), stimulate, urge on, rouse, fire, provoke, excite, encourage, animate, set on, drive, persuade. See list under impel.

incitement (in-sīt'mẹnt), n. [< F. incitement = Sp. incitamento, incitamiento = Pg. It. incitamento, < L. incitamentum, an incentive, incitement, < incitare, incite: see incite.] 1. The act of inciting; instigation.—2. That which incites the mind or moves to action; motive; incentive; impulse; spur; stimulus; encouragement.

Duke William had Incitements to invade England, and some Shew of a Title. Baker, Chronicles, p. 21.

From the long records of distant age,
Derive incitements to renew thy rage.
Pope, tr. of Statius's Thebaid, i.

inciter (in-sī'tẹr), n. One who or that which incites or moves to action.

All this [these?] which I have depainted to thee are inciters and rousers of my mind.
Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, iii. 6.

incitingly (in-sī'ting-li), adv. In an inciting manner; so as to excite to action.

incitive (in-sī'tiv), a. [< incite + -ive.] Having the power or capacity to incite. [Rare.]

The style is thus instructive and incitive.
T. W. Hunt, New Princeton Rev., Nov., 1888, p. 363.

incitomotor (in-sī-tọ-mō'tọr), a. [Irreg. < L. incitare, incite, + motor, a mover: see motor.] In physiol., inciting to motion; causing muscle to act.

incitomotory (in-sī-tọ-mō'tọ-ri), a. [As incitomotor + -y.] Same as incitomotor.

incivil† (in-siv'il), a. [= F. incivil = Sp. Pg. incivil = It. incivile, < L. incivilis, impolite, uncivil, < in- priv. + civilis, civil: see civil.] Uncivil.

Cym. He was a prince.
Gui. A most incivil one. The wrongs he did me Were nothing prince-like. Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5.

incivility (in-si-vil'i-ti), n.; pl. incivilities (-tiz). [= F. incivilité = Sp. incivilidad = Pg. incividade = It. incivilità, < LL. incivilita(t-)s, incivility, < L. incivilis, uncivil: see incivil.] 1†. Lack of civilization; an uncivilized condition.

By this means infinite numbers of souls may be brought from their idolatry, bloody sacrifices, ignorance, and incivility, to the worshipping of the true God. Raleigh.

2. Lack of civility or courtesy; rudeness of manner toward others; impoliteness.

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad?
Adr. His incivility confirms no less.
Shak., C. of E., iv. 4.

3. An act of rudeness or ill breeding.

No person offered me the least incivility.
Ludlow, Memoirs, I. 88.

=Syn. 2. Disrespect, unmannerliness.

incivilization (in-siv″i-li-zā'shọn), n. [< in-[3] + civilization.] The state of being uncivilized; lack of civilization; barbarism. Wright.

incivilly† (in-siv'i-li), adv. Uncivilly; rudely.

incivism (in'si-vizm), n. [< F. incivisme; as in-[3] + civism. The words civisme and incivisme came into use during the first French revolution, when an appearance of active devotion to the existing government was the great test of good citizenship, and incivism was regarded as a crime.] Neglect of one's duty as a citizen.

Give up your incivisme, which at most is only a century old, for with all his faults the Irish gentleman of 1782 was Irish, and did not try to be West British.
Contemporary Rev., LI. 251.

There were rumors of coming trouble, and of an unhealthy condition of the banks; but it was considered incivism to look too curiously into such matters.
The Century, XXXIII. 369.

inclamation† (in-klā-mā'shọn), n. [< LL. inclamatio(n-), a crying out, < L. inclamare, cry out against, < in, on, + clamare, cry out: see claim[1], exclaim, etc.] A shout; an exclamation.

She foretold
Troy's ruin: which, succeeding, made her use This sacred inclamation: "God" (said she) "Would have me utter things uncredited."
Chapman, Revenge of Bussy d'Ambois, iii. 1.

These idolatrous prophets now rend their throats with inclamations. Bp. Hall, Elijah with the Baalites.

inclasp, v. t. See enclasp.

inclaudent (in-klâ'dẹnt), a. [< L. in- priv. + clauden(t-)s, ppr. of claudere, close: see close[1].] In bot., not closing.

inclavated (in-klā'vā-ted), a. [< ML. inclavatus, pp. of inclavare, fasten with a nail, < L. in, into, + clavare, fasten with a nail: see clavate[2].] Set; fast fixed.

inclave (in-klāv'), a. [< L. in, in, + clavus, a nail. Cf. enclave.] In her., shaped like a series of dovetails, or cut at the edge in a series of dovetail or patté projections alternating with notches of the same shape: thus, a chief inclave projects into the field below in dovetailed projections.

incle[1]†, v. See inkle[1].

incle[2]†, n. See inkle[2].

inclemency (in-klem'ẹn-si), n. [= F. inclémence = Sp. Pg. inclemencia = It. inclemenza, < L. inclementia, < inclemen(t-)s, inclement: see inclement.] The character of being inclement; lack of clemency. (a) Severity of temper; unmercifulness or harshness of feeling or action.

The inclemencie of the late pope labouring to forestall him in his just throne. Bp. Hall, Impress of God, ii.

(b) Severity of climate or weather; tempestuousness.

Or on an airy mountain's top to lie,
Exposed to cold or heaven's inclemency.
Dryden, Lucretius, iii. 73.

(c) Adversity; disagreeableness.

Providence, tempering the inclemency of the domestic situation, sent them Giovanna. Howells, Venetian Life, vii.

inclement (in-klem'ẹnt), a. [= F. inclément = Sp. Pg. It. inclemente, < L. inclemen(t-)s, unmerciful, harsh, < in- priv. + clemen(t-)s, mild: see clement.] Not clement. (a) Unmerciful; harsh; severe; adverse. (b) Severe, as climate or weather; tempestuous, disturbed, or extreme, as the elements or temperature.

The inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow.
Milton, P. L., x. 1063.

inclemently (in-klem'ẹnt-li), adv. In an inclement manner.

inclinable (in-klī'na-bl), a. [= OF. inclinable, < L. inclinabilis, < inclinare, lean upon: see incline.] 1†. Leaning; tending.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last.
Bentley.

His [Otway's] person was of the middle size, about five feet seven inches high, inclinable to fatness.
Quoted in Malone's Dryden, p. 468, note.

2. Having a mental bent or tendency in a certain direction; inclined; somewhat disposed: as, a mind inclinable to truth.

She was more inclinable to pity her than she had deserved. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

3. Capable of being inclined.

inclinableness (in-klī'na-bl-nes), n. The state of being inclinable; inclination.

Her inclinableness to conform to the late establishment of it. Strype, Memorials Edw. VI., an. 1551.

★inclination (in-kli-nā'shọn), n. [< ME. inclinacioun = F. inclinaison, inclination = Pr. enclinatio = Sp. inclinación = Pg. inclinação = It. inchinazione, inclinazione, < L. inclinatio(n-), a leaning, bending, inclining, < inclinare, lean upon: see incline.] 1. The act of inclining, or the state of being inclined; a leaning; any deviation from a given direction or position.

There was a pleasaunt Arber, not by art,
But of the trees owne inclination made.
Spenser, F. Q., III. vi. 44.

2. In geom. and mech., the mutual approach, tendency, or leaning of two bodies, lines, or planes toward each other, so as to make an angle at the point where they meet, or where their lines of direction meet. This angle is called the angle of inclination.—3. The angle which a line or plane makes with the horizon; declivity. In gunnery inclination is the elevation or depression of the axis of a piece above or below a horizontal plane passing through the axis of the trunnions, supposed to be horizontal.

4. An inclined surface; a slope or declivity, as of land.

They [the Arabs] dashed over rocks, . . . up and down steep inclinations. Sir S. W. Baker, Heart of Africa, p. 77.

5. A set or bent of the mind or will; a disposition more favorable to one thing or person than to another; a leaning, liking, or preference:

as, an inclination for poetry; a strong inclination toward law.

An hundred Years on one kind Word I'll feast:
A thousand more will added be,
If you an Inclination have for me.
Cowley, The Mistress, My Diet.

When Habit and Custom is joyned with a vicious Inclination, how little doth human Reason signifie?
Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. viii.

I shall certainly not balk your inclinations.
Sheridan, The Rivals, iv. 3.

6. A person for whom or a thing for which one has a liking or preference. [Rare.]

Monsieur Hoeft, who was a great inclination of mine.
Sir W. Temple, Works, i. 458. (Latham.)

7. In Gr. and Latin gram., same as enclisis.—Angle of inclination. See def. 2.—Inclination compass. Same as dipping-compass.—Inclination of an orbit, in astron., the angle which the plane of an orbit makes with the ecliptic.—Inclination of the groove, the angle made by the tangent to the groove of a rifled gun at any point with the rectilinear element of the bore passing through that point. See twist.—Inclination or dip of the needle. See dip.—Prayer of inclination, in Oriental liturgies, a prayer between the Lord's Prayer and the communion, expressing adoration, humiliation, and a desire for worthy reception of the sacrament. Its character varies considerably, however, in different liturgies. In the liturgies of Constantinople it is introduced by the exhortation "Let us bow down (incline) our heads to the Lord," and other liturgies contain a similar direction, or allusions to this posture of bowing down from which the prayer takes its name. By English liturgiologists it is also called the prayer of humble access. The Coptic liturgy of St. Basil has, in addition, a prayer of inclination after the communion, preceding the benediction. The name prayer of inclination or of bowing down the head (εὐχὴ τῆς κεφαλοκλισίας) is also given to a prayer for protection during the night, said at hesperinon (vespers), and to a prayer for forgiveness of sins, at orthron (lauds), in the Greek Church. In the Syriac baptismal offices prayers of inclination are said secretly by the priest, invoking sanctification of the water and of the candidate.=Syn. 1. Obliquity, slope, slant.—5. Propensity, Bias, etc. (see bent[1]), proclivity.

inclinatorium (in-klī-nā-tō′ri-um), n.; pl. inclinatoria (-ä). [NL. (cf. ML. inclinatorium, an elbow-rest), neut. of inclinatorius*, < L. inclinare: see incline.] The inclination compass or dipping-needle. See dipping-needle.

incline (in-klīn′), v.; pret. and pp. inclined, ppr. inclining. [Formerly also encline; < ME. inclinen, enclinen, < OF. encliner, incliner, F. incliner = Pr. enclinar, inclinar = Sp. Pg. inclinar = It. inchinare, inclinare, < L. inclinare (= Gr. ἐγκλίνειν), bend down, lean, incline, < in, on, + clinare, lean: see cline, decline, recline, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To bend down; lean; turn obliquely from or toward a given direction or position; deviate from a line or course; tend: as, the column inclines from the perpendicular.

Thei rode a softe paas, theire hedes enclyned vnder theire helmes. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 440.

Your nose inclines,
That side that's next the sun, to the queen-apple.
B. Jonson, Volpone, iv. 1.

2†. To bow; bend the head or the body, especially as a mark of courtesy or respect.

Whan thei ben thus apparaylled, thei gon 2 and 2 togedre, fulle ordynatly before the Emperour, with outen speche of ony Woord, saf only enclynynge to him.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 234.

If that any neighebor of myne
Wol nat in chirche to my wyf enclyne, . . .
Whan she comth home, she rampeth in my face.
Chaucer, Prol. to Monk's Tale, l. 14.

3. To have a mental bent or tendency; be disposed; tend, as toward an opinion, a course of action, etc.

[They] holde of hym theire londes and theire fees in honour, ffor he hath made hem alle enclyne to hym by his prowesse. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 619.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech. Judges ix. 3.

4. To tend, in a physical sense; approximate.

The flower itself is of a golden hue,
The leaves inclining to a darker blue.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

5. In marching, to gain ground to the flank, as well as to the front. Wilhelm, Mil. Dict.—Inclining dial. See dial.

II. trans. 1. To bend down; cause to lean; give a leaning to; cause to deviate from or toward a given line, position, or direction; direct.

Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined.
Pope, Moral Essays, i. 150.

2. To bend (the body), as in an act of reverence or civility; cause to stoop or bow.

Soft himselfe inclyning on his knee
Downe to that well. Spenser, F. Q., II. ii. 3.

With due respect my body I inclined,
As to some being of superior kind. Dryden.

3. To give a tendency or propension to; turn; dispose.

I will incline mine ear to a parable; I will open my dark saying upon the harp. Ps. xlix. 4.

Incline my heart unto thy testimonies. Ps. cxix. 36.

The presence of so many of our countrymen was inclining us to cut short our own stay. Froude, Sketches, p. 95.

Inclined dial, engine, plane, etc. See the nouns.

incline (in-klīn′), n. [< ME. encline, < OF. enclin, an inclination, bow, disposition, < encliner, incline: see incline, v.] 1†. An inclination; a bow.

He saluȝed the soverayne and the sale aftyr,
Ilke a kynge aftyre kynge, and mad his enclines.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 82.

2. An inclined plane; an ascent or a descent, as in a road or a railway; a slope.

The traveller does not go there [to Cincinnati] to see the city, but to visit the suburbs, climbing into them, out of the smoke and grime, by steam inclines and grip railways. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 430.

3. A shaft or mine-opening having considerable inclination. The words shaft, incline, and level express all possible conditions of a mine-opening in respect to position with reference to the horizontal plane. If the incline is worked "to the rise," the material mined is transported downward by some self-acting arrangement; if "to the deep," it is raised by a steam or other engine.

incliner (in-klī′nėr), n. 1. One who or that which inclines.—2. An inclined dial. Ash.

inclining (in-klī′ning), n. [Verbal n. of incline, v.] 1. Disposition; inclination. [Rare.]

Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2.

2†. Side; party.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest.
Shak., Othello, i. 2.

inclinometer (in-kli-nom′e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < L. inclinare, incline, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] 1. In magnetism, an apparatus for determining the vertical component of the earth's magnetic force.—2. An instrument for ascertaining the slope of an embankment; a clinometer or batter-level.—Chain-inclinometer, a device attached to a surveyors' chain to indicate its departure from a level.

inclip (in-klip′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inclipped, ppr. inclipping. [< in-[1] + clip[1].] To grasp; inclose; surround. [Rare.]

What'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips, Is thine, if thou wilt have 't. Shak., A. and C., ii. 7.

incloister (in-klois′tėr), v. t. See encloister.

Such a beatific face
Incloisters here this narrow floor,
That possess'd all hearts before.
Lovelace, Epitaph on Mrs. Filmer.

inclose, enclose (in-, en-klōz′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inclosed, enclosed, ppr. inclosing, enclosing. [< ME. enclosen, < OF. (also F.) enclos, pp. of enclore, inclose, include (cf. enclose, an inclosure): see include. Cf. close[1].] 1. To close or shut in; environ or encompass, as a space, or an object or objects within a space; cover or shut up on all sides; include or confine: as, to inclose land with a fence; to inclose a letter in an envelop.

Thai hadde a semli siȝt of a cite nobul,
Enclosed comeliche a-boute with fyn castel-werk.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2220.

The peer now spreads the glitt'ring forfex wide,
T' inclose the lock. Pope, R. of the L., iii. 148.

2. To insert in the same cover or inclosure with an original or the main letter, report, or other paper in a matter: as, he inclosed a report of the proceedings.

I now dispatch the inclosed copies of the treaty, in order to his Majesty's ratification.
Sir W. Temple, To Lord Arlington.

3†. To put into harness.

They went to coach and their horse inclose. Chapman.

incloser, encloser (in-, en-klō′zėr), n. One who or that which incloses; one who separates land from common grounds by a fence.

The grand encloser of the commons, for His private profit or delight, with all His herds that graze upon 't are lawful prize.
Massinger, Guardian, ii. 4.

inclosing-net (in-klō′zing-net), n. See fish-net.

inclosure, enclosure (in-, en-klō′zūr), n. [< inclose + -ure. Cf. OF. enclosture, encloture, an inclosure.] 1. The act of inclosing, or the state of being inclosed.

The primitive monks were excusable in their retiring and enclosures of themselves. Donne, Letters, xx.

2. The separation and appropriation of land by means of a fence; hence, the appropriation of things common; reduction to private possession.

Let no man appropriate what God hath made common. . . . God hath declared his displeasure against such enclosure. Jer. Taylor.

3. That which incloses; anything that environs, encompasses, or incloses within limits.

Within the inclosure was a great store of houses.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 311.

Much more might be written of this antient wise Republic [Venice], which cannot be comprehended within the narrow Inclosure of a Letter. Howell, Letters, I. i. 35.

The kingdom of thought has no inclosures, but the Muse makes us free of her city.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 307.

4. That which is inclosed or shut in; a space or an object surrounded or enveloped. Specifically—5. A tract of land surrounded by a fence, hedge, or equivalent protection, together with such fence or hedge.

Delicious Paradise,
Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
As with a rural mound, the champain head
Of a steep wilderness. Milton, P. L., iv. 133.

6. A letter or paper inclosed with another in an envelop. See inclose, 2.—Inclosure Acts, English statutes, especially those of 1801 (41 Geo. III., c. 109) and 1845 (8 and 9 Vict., c. 118), for acquiring and divesting rights over common and waste lands, usually by allotting them among adjoining landowners, which could previously be done only by means of private acts of Parliament.—Inclosure commissioner, in Eng. law, an officer, formerly appointed under special acts, but in recent times one of a permanent board, empowered to take proceedings for the inclosing and allotting to private ownership of lands formerly held as commons or as subject to rights of common, which preclude cultivation.

inclosurer† (in-klō′zūr-ėr), n. [< inclosure + -er[1].] One who makes an inclosure of land; in the extract, a squatter.

And so live meanly and poorly, and, turning Cottiers or Inclosurers on some Highway Side, are commonly given to pilfering and stealing and intertainers of Vagabonds.
Statute (1665), quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 448.

incloud (in-kloud′), v. t. [< in-[1] + cloud[1].] Same as encloud.

include (in-klōd′), v. t.; pret. and pp. included, ppr. including. [< ME. includen, encluden = OF. enclore, enclure, F. inclure = Pr. enclure = Sp. incluir = Pg. incluir, encludir = It. inchiudere, includere, include, < L. includere, shut in, include, < in, in, + claudere, shut, close: see close[1], v. Cf. conclude, exclude, etc.] 1. To confine within something; hold as in an inclosure; inclose; contain.

The flouring tree trunk in leed Enclude, or in an edder skynne it wynde.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 116.

Where likeliest he might find
The only two of mankind, but in them
The whole included race. Milton, P. L., ix. 416.

2. To comprise as a part, or as something incident or pertinent; comprehend; take in: as, the greater includes the less; this idea includes many particulars; the Roman empire included many nations. In logic a term is said to include under it the subjects of which it can be predicated, and to include within itself its essential predicates.

The loss of such a lord includes all harms.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3.

3†. To conclude; terminate.

Come, let us go; we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.
Shak., T. G. of V., v. 4.

Included clypeus or nasus, in entom., a clypeus or nasus lying between two lateral produced parts of the front, as in most heteropterous Hemiptera. Such a clypeus is often called a tylus.—Included stamens, in bot., stamens which do not project beyond the mouth of the corolla, as in Cinchona.—Included style, in bot., a style which does not project beyond the mouth of the corolla, as in the pea and dead-nettle.

includible (in-klō′di-bl), a. [< include + -ible.] Capable of being included. Bentham.

Inclusa (in-klō′sä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. inclusus, pp. of includere: see include.] In Cuvier's classification, the fifth family of his Acephala testacea, including the clams, razor-shells, pholades, ship-worms, and some other lamellibranch or bivalve mollusks which have the mantle open at the anterior extremity, or near the middle only, for the passage of the foot. In some the mantle is prolonged at the posterior end to a tube of great length, as in the razor-shells. The bivalves of this tribe are remarkable for their powers of ★burrowing into clay, sand, wood, or even stone.

incluset†, a. [ME. incluse, < L. inclusus, pp. of includere, include: see include.] Inclosed; shut in; cloistered; recluse.

Thou sall be safe as ane ankir incluse, and noghte anely thou bot all cristene men.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 42.

★inclusion (in-klō′zhon), n. [= F. inclusion = Sp. inclusión = Pg. inclusão = It. inchiusione, inclusione, < L. inclusio(n-), a shutting up, < includere, pp. inclusus, include: see include.] 1. The act of including, or the state of being included.

The Dutch should have obliged themselves to make no peace without the inclusion of their allies.
Sir W. Temple, To the Duke of Ormond.

The logical process of Inclusion is the same both in the mind of the animal and in the mind of a philosopher.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, II. ii. § 51.

2. That which is included or inclosed. Used in mineralogy of a body, usually minute, such as a liquid or a small crystal, which is inclosed within the mass of another. Thus, topaz often contains inclusions consisting of liquid carbon dioxid. The inclusions in a crystal have often a definite orientation with reference to the crystallographic axes, as for example in the mineral leucite. According to the nature of the inclosed substance, the inclusions are spoken of as gas inclusions, glass inclusions, fluid inclusions, etc., and the cavities themselves are called gas-cavities or gas-pores, glass-cavities, etc.—Copula of inclusion, in logic. See copula.—Fluid inclusion. See def. 2.—Formal inclusion. See formal.

Sections of Crystals, with symmetrically arranged inclusions. 1, augite; 2, leucite. (After Zirkel.)

inclusive (in-klö′siv), a. and n. [= F. inclusif = Sp. Pg. It. inclusivo, < L. as if inclusivus*, < includere, pp. inclusus, include: see inclose.] I. a. 1. Inclosing; encircling; comprehensive; including: with of.

The inclusive verge
Of golden metal that must round my brow.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 1.

2. Included in the number or sum; comprehending the stated limit or extremes: as, from Monday to Saturday inclusive (that is, taking in both Monday and Saturday).

II. n. A term of inclusion.

This man is so cunning in his inclusiues and exclusiues that he dyscerneth nothing between copulatiues and disiunctiues. Sir T. More, Works, p. 943.

inclusively (in-klö′siv-li), adv. In an inclusive manner; so as to include: as, from Monday to Saturday inclusively.

incoagulable (in-kō-ag′ū-la-bl), a. [= F. incoagulable = Sp. incoagulable; as in-[3] + coagulable.] Not coagulable; incapable of being coagulated or concreted. Boyle, Works, III. 527.

incoercible (in-kō-ėr′si-bl), a. [= F. incoercible = Pg. incoercivel; as in-[3] + coercible.] 1. Not to be coerced or compelled; incapable of being constrained or forced.—2. In physics, incapable of being reduced to a liquid form by any amount of pressure. Certain gases were formerly supposed to have this property. See gas.

incoexistence† (in-kō-eg-zis′tens), n. [< in-[3] + coexistence.] The opposite of coexistence.

The coexistence or incoexistence . . . of different ideas in the same subject.
Locke, Human Understanding, IV. iii. 12.

incog (in-kog′), a. An abbreviation of incognito.

He has lain incog ever since. Tatler, No. 230.

What! my old guardian!—What! turn inquisitor, and take evidence incog? Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

incogent (in-kō′jent), a. [< in-[3] + cogent.] Not cogent; not adapted to convince. [Rare.]

[They] reject not the truth itself, but incogent modes in which it is occasionally presented.
The Nation, Jan. 6, 1870, p. 14.

incogitability (in-koj″i-ta-bil′i-ti), n. [< incogitable: see -bility.] The character of being incogitable, or incapable of being thought, or of being directly and positively thought. Sir W. Hamilton.

incogitable (in-koj′i-ta-bl), a. [= OF. incogitable = It. incogitabile, < L. incogitabilis, unthinking, unthinkable, < in- priv. + cogitabilis, thinkable, conceivable: see cogitable.] Not cogitable; unthinkable.

If Schelling's hypothesis appear to us incogitable, that of Cousin is seen to be self-contradictory.
Sir W. Hamilton.

incogitance, incogitancy (in-koj′i-tans, -tan-si), n. [< L. incogitantia, thoughtlessness, < incogitan(t-)s, thoughtless, unthinking: see incogitant.] The quality of being incogitable; want of thought, or of the power of thinking; thoughtlessness.

He passes the time with incogitancy, and hates the employment, and suffers the torment of prayers which he loves not. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 718.

incogitant (in-koj′i-tant), a. [= OF. incogitant = Pg. incogitante, < L. incogitan(t-)s, unthinking, thoughtless, < in- priv. + cogitan(t-)s, ppr. of cogitare, think: see cogitate.] 1. Not thinking; thoughtless.

Men are careless and incogitant, and slip into the pit of destruction before they are aware.
J. Goodman, Winter Evening Conferences, ii.

2. Not capable of thinking: opposed to cogitant.

As mind is a cogitant substance, matter is incogitant.
J. Howe, Works, I. 65.

incogitantly (in-koj′i-tant-li), adv. In an incogitant manner; without consideration.

I did not incogitantly speak of irregularities, as if they might sometimes be but seeming ones.
Boyle, Works, V. 217.

incogitative (in-koj′i-tā-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + cogitative.] Not cogitative; not thinking; lacking the power of thought.

It is as impossible to conceive that ever bare incogitative matter should produce a thinking intelligent being as that nothing should of itself produce matter.
Locke, Human Understanding, IV. x. 10.

incogitativity (in-koj″i-tā-tiv′i-ti), n. [< incogitative + -ity.] The quality of being incogitative; want of thought or the power of thinking. [Rare.]

God may superadd a faculty of thinking to incogitativity. W. Wollaston, Religion of Nature, § 9.

incognisable, incognisance, etc. See incognizable, etc.

incognita (in-kog′ni-tä), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. It. incognita, < L. incognita, fem. of incognitus, unknown: see incognito.] I. a. Unknown or disguised: said of a woman or a girl.

II. n. A woman unknown or disguised.

Ha! Violante! that's the lady's name of the house where my incognita is. Mrs. Centlivre, The Wonder, v. 1.

incognito (in-kog′ni-tō), a. and n. [= F. Sp. Pg. incognito, < It. incognito, < L. incognitus, unknown, < in- priv. + cognitus, known: see cognition.] I. a. Unknown; disguised under an assumed name and character: generally with reference to a man, usually of some distinction, who passes, actually or conventionally, as in travel, under an assumed name or in disguise, in order to avoid notice or attention.

I' th' dark o' th' evening I peep out, and incognito make some visits. Steele, Lying Lover, i. 1.

II. n. 1. A man unknown, or in disguise, or living under an assumed name.—2. Concealment; state of concealment; assumption of a disguise or of a feigned character.

His incognito was endangered. Scott.

incognizability (in-kog″ni- or in-kon″i-za-bil′i-ti), n. The state of being incognizable or unknown.

incognizable (in-kog′ni- or in-kon′i-za-bl), a. [< in-[3] + cognizable.] Not cognizable; such as no finite mind can know; not to be known by man; not to be recognized. Also spelled incognisable.

The relation of unlikeness . . . is incognizable unless there exist other relations with which it may be classed.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 381.

incognizance (in-kog′ni- or in-kon′i-zans), n. [= OF. incongnoissance; as in-[3] + cognizance.] Failure to recognize, know, or apprehend. Also spelled incognisance.

This incognizance may be explained on three possible hypotheses. Sir W. Hamilton.

incognizant (in-kog′ni- or in-kon′i-zant), a. [= OF. incongnoissant; as in-[3] + cognizant.] Not cognizant; failing to cognize or apprehend. Also spelled incognisant.

Of the several operations themselves, as acts of volition, we are wholly incognizant. Sir W. Hamilton.

incognoscibility (in-kog-nos-i-bil′i-ti), n. [= It. incognoscibilità; as incognoscible + -ity: see -bility.] The state of being incognoscible, or beyond being known.

If . . . the imperial philosopher should censure the still incognoscible author for still continuing in incognoscibility, . . . I should remind him of the Eleusinian Mysteries. Southey, The Doctor, interchapter xix.

incognoscible (in-kog-nos′i-bl), a. [= F. incognoscible = Sp. incognoscible = Pg. incognoscivel = It. incognoscibile, < L. incognoscibilis, not to be known, < in- priv. + cognoscibilis, to be known: see cognoscible.] Not cognoscible; such as cannot be known or recognized; incognizable.

Incognito I am and wish to be, and incognoscible it is in my power to remain. Southey, The Doctor, interchapter xx.

incoherence (in-kō-hēr′ens), n. [= F. incohérence = Sp. Pg. incoherencia = It. incoerenza; as incoheren(t) + -ce.] 1. Want of physical coherence or cohesion; the state or quality of not holding or sticking together; looseness; separateness of parts: as, the incoherence of particles of sand; the incoherence of a fluid.

The smallness and incoherence of the parts do make them easy to be put in motion. Boyle, Works, I. 388.

2. Want of coherence or connection in thought or speech; incongruity; inconsequence; inconsistency; want of agreement or dependence of one part on another: as, incoherence of arguments, facts, or principles.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order shows the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

The system of his politicks, when disembroiled, and cleared of all those incoherences and independent matters that are woven into this motley piece, will be as follows.
Addison, Whig Examiner, No. 4.

incoherency (in-kō-hēr′en-si), n. Incoherence.

incoherent (in-kō-hēr′ent), a. [= F. incohérent ★= Sp. Pg. incoherente = It. incoerente; as in-[3] + coherent.] 1. Without physical coherence or cohesion; loose; unconnected; not coalescing or uniting.

His armour was patched up of a thousand incoherent pieces. Swift, Battle of Books.

The pollen is so incoherent that clouds of it are emitted if the plant be gently shaken on a sunny day.
Darwin, Cross and Self Fertilisation, p. 401.

2. Without coherence or agreement; not properly related or coördinated; incongruous; inconsistent; inconsecutive: chiefly used of immaterial things: as, incoherent thoughts.

No prelate's lawn with hair-shirt lined
Is half so incoherent as my mind; . . .
I plant, root up; I build, and then confound.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. i. 166.

These are only broken, incoherent memoirs of this wonderful society. Steele, Spectator, No. 324.

incoherentific (in-kō-hēr-en-tif′ik), a. [< incoherent + L. -ficus, < facere, make.] Causing incoherence. Coleridge. [Rare.]

incoherently (in-kō-hēr′ent-li), adv. In an incoherent manner; without coherence of parts; disconnectedly.

It . . . [is] the nature of violent passion to . . . make man speak incoherently. Beattie, Moral Science, IV. i. 3.

The middle section of the country through which somewhat incoherently permeated Massachusetts and Virginia ideas. J. Schouler, Hist. U. S., p. 11.

incoherentness (in-kō-hēr′ent-nes), n. Want of coherence; incoherence. Bailey, 1727. [Rare.]

incohering† (in-kō-hēr′ing), a. Incoherent.

They entirely, or for the most part, consist of lax incohering earth. Derham, Physico-Theology, iii. 2.

incohesion (in-kō-hē′zhon), n. [= F. incohésion; as in-[3] + cohesion.] Absence of cohesion; incoherence.

Our own Indian Empire, . . . held together by force in a state of artificial equilibrium, threatens some day to illustrate by its fall the incohesion arising from lack of congruity in components. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 450.

incoincidence (in-kō-in′si-dens), n. [< in-[3] + coincidence.] Want of coincidence or agreement.

incoincident (in-kō-in′si-dent), a. [< in-[3] + coincident.] Not coincident; not agreeing in time, place, or principle.

incolant† (in′kō-lant), n. [As L. incola, an inhabitant (< incolere, cultivate, inhabit, dwell in, < in, in, + colere, cultivate: see cult), + -ant.] An inhabitant.

The sinful incolants of his made earth.
Middleton, Solomon Paraphrased, xvi.

incolumity† (in-kō-lū′mi-ti), n. [< OF. incolumite = Sp. incolumidad, < L. incolumita(t-)s, uninjured state, soundness, < incolumis, uninjured, safe, < in- intensive + columis, safe. Cf. calamity.] Safety; security.

The Parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a People, with the incolumity and welfare of a Country. Howell, Letters.

incombining† (in-kom-bī′ning), a. [< in-[3] + combining, ppr. of combine, v.] Incapable of combining or agreeing; disagreeing; disjunctive.

To sow the sorrow of man's nativity with seed of two incoherent and incombining dispositions.
Milton, Divorce, i. 1.

incombre†, v. t. An obsolete variant of encumber.

incombrous†, a. Same as encumbrous.

incombustibility (in-kom-bus-ti-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. incombustibilité = Sp. incombustibilidad = Pg. incombustibilidade = It. incombustibilità; as incombustible + -ity: see -bility.] The property of being incombustible.

incombustible (in-kom-bus′ti-bl), a. and n. [= F. incombustible = Sp. incombustible = Pg. incombustivel = It. incombustibile; as in-[3] + combustible.] I. a. Not combustible; incapable of being burned or consumed by fire.

Manye philosophoris clepid this quinta essencia an olle incombustible.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 10.

In Eubœa's isle
A wondrous rock is found, of which are woven Vests incombustible. Dyer, The Fleece, ii.

II. n. A substance or thing that will not burn, or cannot be consumed by fire.

incombustibleness (in-kọm-bus′ti-bl-nes), n. Incombustibility.

incombustibly (in-kọm-bus′ti-bli), adv. So as to resist combustion.

income (in′kum), n. [< ME. income = D. inkomen = G. einkommen (in sense 6) = Icel. innkvāma, income; cf. D. inkomst = Dan. indkomst = Sw. inkomst (in sense 6); as in-[1] + come.] 1†. A coming in; arrival; entrance; introduction.

Bot Kayous at the income was kepyd unfayre.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2171.

At mine income I lowted low.
Drant, tr. of Horace's Satires, i. 6.

Pain pays the income of each precious thing.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 334.

2. A new-comer or arrival; an incomer. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

An Income, incola, aduena.
Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 166.

The new year comes; then stir the tipple; . . .
Lat's try this income, how he stands,
An' eik us sib by shakin' hands. Tarras, Poems, p. 14.

3†. An entrance-fee.

Though he [a farmer] pay neuer so great an annuall rent, yet must he pay at his entrance a fine, or (as they call it) an income of ten pound, twenty pound, . . . whereas in truth the purchase thereof is hardly worth so much.
Stubbes, Anat. of Abuses (1583), ii. 29.

4. A coming in as by influx or inspiration; hence, an inspired quality or characteristic, as courage or zeal; an inflowing principle. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Whose presence seemed the sweet income
And womanly atmosphere of home.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

5. A disease or ailment coming without known or apparent cause, as distinguished from one induced by accident or contagion. See ancome, oncome. [Scotch.]

She had got an income in the right arm, and coudna spin.
Galt, Sir Andrew Wylie, III. 191.

Maister John, this is the mistress; she's got a trouble in her breast — some kind o' an income, we're thinkin'.
Dr. John Brown, Rab and his Friends.

6. That which comes in to a person as payment for labor or services rendered in some office, or as gain from lands, business, the investment of capital, etc.; receipts or emoluments regularly accruing, either in a given time, or, when unqualified, annually; the annual receipts of a person or a corporation; revenue: as, an income of five thousand dollars; his income has been much reduced; the income from the business is small. — Income bonds. See bond[1]. — Income tax, a tax levied in some countries and states on incomes above a specified limit. From 1861 to 1872 an income tax was levied by the United States government. As arranged in 1862, incomes under $5,000 were taxed 5 per cent. (with exemption of $600 and paid house-rent), incomes of over $5,000 and not over $10,000 were taxed 7½ per cent., and those over $10,000 were taxed 10 per cent. without exemption. There were various modifications; the exemption limit was raised in 1865 to $1,000, and in 1870 to $2,000. In Great Britain and Ireland the tax is assessed at a rate per pound fixed from time to time by Parliament. Since 1877 there is an abatement of £120 and since 1894 of £160 on incomes under £400, and special exemptions have been made for incomes from £400 to £700, while incomes under £160 are not now charged. The Finance Act of 1909–10 raised the rate upon unearned incomes, and placed a super-tax upon incomes of over £5,000, at the additional rate of sixpence on every pound above £3,000. A tax of 2 per cent. on the amount of income over and above $4,000 was adopted by Congress in 1894 as part of the (Wilson) tariff act, to be levied from January 1st, 1898, until January 1st, 1900. It was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, April 8th, 1895, on the ground that it was a direct tax and that the act imposing it was repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution concerning such taxes. The sixteenth amendment to the Constitution (accepted by three fourths of the States in 1913) provides that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration." = Syn. Income, Revenue, Value, Profit. Revenue is the income of a government or state, without reference to expenditures; profit is the gain made upon any business or investment when both the receipts and the expenditures are taken into account. Property may have value and yield neither income nor profit.

incomer (in′kum″ėr), n. 1. One who comes in; a new-comer; an immigrant.

This body was continually reinforced by fresh incomers from the north. J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 372.

2. One who comes in place of another; a successor: used of tenants, occupants, office-holders, etc., and opposed to outgoer. — 3. One resident in a place, but not a native; one who enters a company, society, or community. [Scotch.] — 4. In shooting, a bird which flies toward the sportsman.

incoming (in′kum″ing), n. [< in-[1] + coming, verbal n. of come, v.] 1. The act of coming in, entering, or arriving.

He, at his first incomming, charg'd his spere
At him that first appeared in his sight.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. iv. 40.

2. That which comes in; income; gain; source of revenue.

Many incomings are subject to great fluctuations. Tooke.

incoming (in′kum″ing), a. [< in-[1] + coming, ppr. of come, v.] 1. Coming in as an occupant, office-holder, or the like: as, an incoming tenant; the incoming administration. — 2. Coming in as the produce of labor, property, or business; accruing.

It is . . . the first and fundamental interest of the labourer that the farmer should have a full incoming profit on the product of his labour. Burke, On Scarcity.

3. Ensuing: as, the incoming week. [Scotch.]

incomity† (in-kom′i-ti), n. [< in-[3] + comity.] Lack of comity; incivility. Coles, 1717.

in commendam. See commendam.

incommensurability (in-kọ-men″sū-rạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. incommensurabilité = Sp. inconmensurabilidad = Pg. incommensurabilidade = It. incommensurabilità, < incommensurable: see -bility.] The property of being incommensurable.

Aristotle mentions the incommensurability of the diagonal of a square to its side, and gives a hint of the manner in which it was demonstrated.
★ Reid, Intellectual Powers, vi. 7.

incommensurable (in-kọ-men′sū-rạ-bl), a. and n. [= F. incommensurable = Sp. inconmensurable = Pg. incommensuravel = It. incommensurabile; as in-[3] + commensurable.] I. a. Not commensurable; having no common measure: thus, two quantities are incommensurable when no third quantity can be found that is an aliquot part of both; in arith., having no common divisor except unity. See commensurable.

All primes together are generally called (by arithmeticians) numbers incommensurable, which is as much as to say, as numbers not able to be measured together by any one number; for although all true numbers universally are measurable together by an unit, yet sith unitie causeth no alteration, neyther by division nor yet by multiplication, but the numbers measured or multiplied by it alwayes returne immutably the selfe same both for quotient and product that they themselves were before, therefore they are named numbers incommensurable.
T. Hill, Arithmetick (1600), xi.

Incommensurable in power, having incommensurable squares. Euclid, x., def. 2.

II. n. One of two or more quantities which have no common measure.

incommensurableness (in-kọ-men′sū-rạ-bl-nes), n. Incommensurability.

incommensurably (in-kọ-men′sū-rạ-bli), adv. In an incommensurable manner.

incommensurate (in-kọ-men′sū-rāt), a. [< in-[3] + commensurate.] 1. Not commensurate; not admitting of a common measure. — 2. Not of equal measure or extent; not adequate: as, means incommensurate to our wants.

incommensurately (in-kọ-men′sū-rāt-li), adv. Not in equal or due measure or proportion.

incommensurateness (in-kọ-men′sū-rāt-nes), n. The state of being incommensurate.

incommiscible (in-kọ-mis′i-bl), a. [= It. incommiscibile, < LL. incommiscibilis, that may not be mixed, < L. in- priv. + LL. commiscibilis, that may be mixed, < L. commiscere, mix: see commix.] Incapable of being commixed or commingled; that cannot be mixed or combined. Coles, 1717.

incommixture† (in-kọ-miks′tūr), n. [< in-[3] + commixture.] The state of being unmixed.

In what parity and incommixture the language of that people stood, which were casually discovered in the heart of Spain, between the mountains of Castile, . . . we have not met with a good account.
Sir T. Browne, Miscellanies, viii.

incommodate† (in-kom′ọ-dāt), v. t. [< L. incommodatus, pp. of incommodare, inconvenience: see incommode. Cf. accommodate.] To incommode.

The soul is . . . incommodated with a troubled and abated instrument. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 85.

incommodate†, a. [< L. incommodatus, pp.: see the verb.] Uncomfortable.

The scurvy and other diseases, which this long voyage and their incommodate condition had brought upon them.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 50.

incommodation (in-kom-ọ-dā′shọn), n. [< incommodate + -ion.] The act of incommoding, or the state of being incommodated or incommoded.

incommode (in-kọ-mōd′), v. t.; pret. and pp. incommoded, ppr. incommoding. [< F. incommoder = Sp. incomodar = Pg. incommodar = It. incomodare, < L. incommodare, inconvenience, < incommodus, inconvenient: see incommode, a., and cf. commode.] To subject to inconvenience or trouble; disturb or molest; worry; put out: as, visits of strangers at unseasonable hours incommode a family.

I descended more conveniently, tho' not without being much incommoded by the sand which falls down from the top. Pococke, Description of the East, I. 53.

'Tis scarce credible that the mind of so wise a man as my father was could be so much incommoded with so small a matter. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 25.

= Syn. To discommode, annoy, try.

incommode† (in-kọ-mōd′), a. and n. [= F. incommode = Sp. incómodo = Pg. incommodo = It. incomodo, incommodo, < L. incommodus, inconvenient, < in- priv. + commodus, convenient: see commode.] I. a. Troublesome; inconvenient.

To be obliging to that Excess as you are . . . is a dangerous Quality, and may be very incommode to you.
Wycherley, Love in a Wood, Ded.

II. n. Something troublesome or inconvenient.

Praying you effectually to follow the same, always foreseeing that the number be not too great, in avoiding sundry incommodes and inconveniences that might follow thereof. Quoted in Strype's Memorials, an. 1518.

incommodement† (in-kọ-mōd′ment), n. [< incommode + -ment.] The act of incommoding, or the state of being incommoded; inconvenience. Cheyne, English Malady (1733), p. 315.

incommodious (in-kọ-mō′di-us), a. [< in-[3] + commodious, after L. incommodus, inconvenient: see incommode, a.] Not commodious; inconvenient; tending to incommode; not affording ease or advantage; giving trouble; annoying.

I may safely say that all the ostentation of our grandees is just like a traine, of no use in the world, but horribly cumbersome and incommodious. Cowley, Greatness.

incommodiously (in-kọ-mō′di-us-li), adv. In an incommodious manner; inconveniently; unsuitably.

incommodiousness (in-kọ-mō′di-us-nes), n. The condition or quality of being incommodious; inconvenience; unsuitableness.

incommodity (in-kọ-mod′i-ti), n.; pl. incommodities (-tiz). [< F. incommodité = Pr. incommoditat, encommoditat = Sp. incomodidad = Pg. incommodidade = It. incomodità, < L. incommodita(t-)s, inconvenience, < incommodus, inconvenient: see incommode, a.] 1†. Inconvenience; trouble; disadvantage.

Verily she [Nature] commandeth thee to use diligent circumspection, that thou do not seek for thine own commodity that which may procure others incommodity.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

2. That which is incommodious or troublesome; anything that incommodes or causes loss; an inconvenience; a trouble.

For fear that either scarceness of victuals, or some other like incommodity, should chance.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 1.

There came into Ægypt a notable Oratour, whose name was Hegesias, who inueyed . . . much against the incōmodities of this transitory life.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 118.

The . . . voyage . . . has burdened him with a bulk of incommodities such as nobody will care to rid him of.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int.

incommunicability (in-kọ-mū″ni-kạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= Sp. incomunicabilidad = Pg. incommunicabilidade; < incommunicable: see -bility.] The quality of being incommunicable, or incapable of being imparted to another.

incommunicable (in-kọ-mū′ni-kạ-bl), a. [= F. incommunicable = Sp. incomunicable = Pg. incommunicavel = It. incomunicabile, < LL. incommunicabilis, < L. in- priv. + communicabilis*, communicable: see communicable.] Not communicable; incapable of being communicated, told, or imparted to others.

Hee, contrary to what is heer profess'd, would have his conscience not an incommunicable but a universal conscience, the whole Kingdoms conscience.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

incommunicableness (in-kọ-mū′ni-kạ-bl-nes), n. Incommunicability.

As by honouring him we acknowledge him God, so by the incommunicableness of honour we acknowledge him one God. J. Mede, Apostasy of Latter Times, p. 93.

incommunicably (in-kọ-mū′ni-kạ-bli), adv. In a manner not to be communicated or imparted.

To annihilate is, both in reason and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine and above nature as is creation itself. Hakewill, Apology.

incommunicated† (in-kọ-mū′ni-kā-ted), a. [< in-[3] + communicated.] Not communicated or imparted.

Excellences, so far as we know, incommunicated to any creature. Dr. H. More, Antidote against Idolatry, ii.

incommunicating† (in-kō-mū'ni-kā-ting), a. [< in-[3] + communicating.] Not communicating; having no communion or intercourse. Sir M. Hale.

incommunicative (in-kō-mū'ni-kā-tiv), a. [= Pg. incommunicativo; < in-[3] + communicative.] Not disposed to impart to others, as information or ideas; reserved; uncommunicative.

Her chill, repellent outside—her diffident mien and incommunicative habits. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxi.

incommunicatively (in-kō-mū'ni-kā-tiv-li), adv. In an incommunicative manner.

incommunicativeness (in-kō-mū'ni-kā-tiv-nes), n. The quality of being incommunicative.

The Carthusian is bound to his brethren by this agreeing spirit of incommunicativeness. Lamb, Quakers' Meeting.

incommutability (in-kō-mū-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [= Sp. inconmutabilidad = Pg. incommutabilidade = It. incommutabilità; as incommutable + -ity: see -bility.] The condition or quality of being incommutable.

This order, by its own incommutability, keeps all things mutable within their several ranks and conditions, which otherwise would run into confusion. Boëthius (trans., Oxf., 1674), p. 187.

incommutable (in-kō-mū'ta-bl), a. [= F. incommutable, OF. incommuable = Sp. inconmutable = It. incommutabile, < L. incommutabilis, unchangeable, < in- priv. + commutabilis, changeable: see commutable.] Not commutable; incapable of being commuted or exchanged with another.

incommutableness (in-kō-mū'ta-bl-nes), n. Incommutability.

incommutably (in-kō-mū'ta-bli), adv. Without reciprocal change.

incompact (in-kom-pakt'), a. [= OF. incompact; as in-[3] + compact[1].] Not compact; of loose consistence as to parts or texture; not solid. Coles, 1717.

incompacted (in-kom-pak'ted), a. Same as incompact. Boyle, Works, I. 546.

incomparability (in-kom"pa-ra-bil'i-ti), n. [= Pg. incomparabilidade; as incomparable + -ity: see -bility.] The quality of being incomparable or not admitting comparison; especially, unapproached excellence.

The absolute incomparability of work done [in astronomy] with the costliness and variety of the instrumental outfit. Science, III. 529.

incomparable (in-kom'pa-ra-bl), a. and n. [< ME. incomperable, < OF. (also F.) incomparable = Sp. incomparable = Pg. incomparavel = It. incomparabile, < L. incomparabilis, that cannot be equaled, < in- priv. + comparabilis, that can be equaled: see comparable.] I. a. Not comparable; admitting of no comparison; especially, without a match, rival, or peer; unequaled; transcendent.

Her words do show her wit incomparable. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 2.

He was of incomparable parts and great learning. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 16, 1651.

They are incomparable models for military despatches. Macaulay, History.

=Syn. Matchless, peerless, unrivaled, unparalleled, nonpareil.

II. n. In ornith., the painted finch, Cyanospiza or Passerina ciris, more commonly called nonpareil.

incomparableness (in-kom'pa-ra-bl-nes), n. The character of being incomparable; incomparability; excellence beyond comparison.

incomparably (in-kom'pa-ra-bli), adv. In an incomparable manner; beyond comparison.

incompared†, a. [< in-[3] + compared, pp. of compare[1], v.] Not matched; peerless.

That Mantuane Poetes incompared spirit. Spenser, To Sir F. Walsingham.

incompass†, v. t. An obsolete form of encompass.

incompassion† (in-kom-pash'on), n. [= It. incompassione; as in-[3] + compassion.] Lack of compassion or pity.

We are full of incompassion; we have little fellow-feeling of their griefs. Bp. Sanderson, Sermons (1681), p. 148.

incompassionate (in-kom-pash'on-āt), a. [< in-[3] + compassionate.] Not compassionate; void of compassion or pity; destitute of tenderness. Sherburne, Poems, Lydia (1651).

incompassionately (in-kom-pash'on-āt-li), adv. In an incompassionate manner; without pity or tenderness.

Plead not, fair creature, without sense of pity,
So incompassionately, 'gainst a service
In nothing faulty more than pure obedience.
Ford, Lady's Trial, ii. 4.

incompassionateness (in-kom-pash'on-āt-nes), n. Lack of compassion or pity. Granger, Com. on Ecclesiastes, p. 94.

incompatibility (in-kom-pat-i-bil'i-ti), n. [Formerly also incompetibility; = F. incompatibilité = Sp. incompatibilidad = Pg. incompatibilidade = It. incompatibilità; as incompatible + -ity: see -bility.] The quality or condition of being incompatible; incongruity; irreconcilableness.

Whoever, therefore, believes, as we do most firmly believe, in the goodness of God, must believe that there is no incompatibility between the goodness of God and the existence of physical and moral evil. Macaulay, Sadler's Law of Population.

incompatible (in-kom-pat'i-bl), a. and n. [Formerly also incompetible; = F. incompatible = Sp. incompatible = Pg. incompativel = It. incompatibile; as in-[3] + compatible.] I. a. 1. Not compatible; incapable of harmonizing or agreeing; mutually repelling; incongruous.

You are incompatible to live withal. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2.

Now the necessary mansions of our restored selves are those two contrary and incompatible places we call heaven and hell. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 49.

The critical faculty is not of itself incompatible with imaginative and creative power. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 99.

Black and white are not incompatible save as attributes of the same thing. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 62.

Specifically—2. That cannot coexist or be conjoined, as mutually repellent substances, or ingredients in a medicine which react on each other, causing precipitation or serious change of composition, or remedies which have opposite medicinal properties. Such substances are distinctively called incompatibles.=Syn. Incompatible, Inconsistent, Incongruous, unsuitable, discordant, irreconcilable. Incompatible has reference to action or active qualities: as, incompatible medicines; those who are of incompatible temper cannot well cooperate. Inconsistent implies a standard, as of truth, right, or fitness: as, it is inconsistent with one's duty or profession. Incongruity is a want of suitableness, matching, or agreement, producing surprise, annoyance, or a sense of the absurd: as, incongruous colors; he had gathered a party of the most incongruous people. Drunkenness is incompatible with efficiency in an official, inconsistent with his manifest duty and perhaps his pledges, and incongruous with the dignity of his place. Inconsistent has somewhat wider uses: as, a man, or his course, or his statements, may be quite inconsistent, one part of his course or one statement furnishing a standard by which judgment is formed.

II. n. pl. Persons or things that are incompatible with each other. See I., 2.

incompatibleness (in-kom-pat'i-bl-nes), n. Incompatibility.

incompatibly (in-kom-pat'i-bli), adv. In an incompatible manner; inconsistently; incongruously.

incompetence (in-kom'pē-tens), n. [= F. incompétence = Sp. Pg. incompetencia = It. incompetenza; as incompeten(t) + -ce.] Same as incompetency.

incompetency (in-kom'pē-ten-si), n. [As incompetence: see -cy.] 1. The character or condition of being incompetent; lack of competence; inability, whether physical, moral, or intellectual; disqualification; incapacity; inadequacy.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate . . . ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern the motions of natural [heavenly] bodies. Boyle, Works, I. 447.

Alleged incompetency on the part of the people has been the reason assigned for all state-interferences whatever. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 367.

2. In law, lack of qualification for the performance of a legal act, or to serve a legal purpose, as incapacity for acting in court as judge, juror, or witness, from personal interest, lack of jurisdiction, or other special or legal unfitness.

★incompetent (in-kom'pē-tent), a. [= F. incompétent = Sp. Pg. It. incompetente, < LL. incompeten(t-)s, insufficient, < L. in- priv. + competen(t-)s, sufficient: see competent.] 1. Not competent; wanting ability or qualification; unable; incapable; inadequate.

Some men were ambitious, and by incompetent means would make their brethren to be their servants. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 11, Pref.

Incompetent as he was, he bore a commission which gave him military rank in Scotland next to Dundee. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xii.

2. In law, not competent; not qualified; incapacitated. In the law of evidence incompetent is most appropriately used of evidence not fit for the purpose for which it is offered. Irrelevant indicates that kind of incompetence which results from having no just bearing on the subject. Inadmissible indicates that form of incompetence which results from there being no suitable allegation in the pleading to justify admission. See incapacity, 2.

In matters which the royal tribunal was incompetent to decide, a right of appeal under royal licence was recognised. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 403.

=Syn. Insufficient, unfit, disqualified.

incompetently (in-kom'pē-tent-li), adv. In an incompetent manner; insufficiently; inadequately.

incompetibility†, incompetible†. Obsolete forms of incompatibility, incompatible. Sir M. Hale; Milton; Hammond.

Incompletæ (in-kom-plē'tē), n. pl. [NL. (J. G. Gmelin, 1768), so called as lacking a corolla, fem. pl. of LL. incompletus, incomplete.] A division of plants embracing the Apetalæ. As used by Batsch, it included the Amentaceæ, Agrostales, and Spadicales; as used by Reichenbach, the Amentaceæ, Urticaceæ, etc. The name is now sometimes used for the Apetalæ.

incomplete (in-kom-plēt'), a. [= F. incomplet = Sp. Pg. incompleto = It. incompiuto, incompleto, < LL. incompletus, incomplete, < L. in- priv. + completus, complete: see complete.] Not complete; not fully finished or developed; lacking some part or particular; defective; imperfect.

When I consider that I doubt, in other words that I am an incomplete and dependent being, the idea of a complete and independent being, that is to say of God, occurs to my mind with . . . much clearness and distinctness. Descartes, Meditations (tr. by Veitch), iv.

Our knowledge of the vibrations of particles will be incomplete until the vibration is known from the extreme violet (invisible) to the extreme red (invisible). J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 144.

Incomplete equation. See equation.—Incomplete estates. See estate, 5 (b).—Incomplete flower, a flower wanting some essential component part, as one or more of the four kinds of organs which constitute a complete flower. Such are apetalous, monochlamydeous, staminate, and pistillate flowers.—Incomplete inference. See inference.—Incomplete metamorphosis. Same as imperfect metamorphosis (which see, under imperfect).—Incomplete stop, in organ-building, a stop or set of pipes which contains less than the full number of pipes; a half-stop.

incompleted (in-kom-plē'ted), a. Uncompleted.

Without entering into the details of an incompleted research, I may indicate the general character of the results by means of a diagram. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV. 415.

incompletely (in-kom-plēt'li), adv. In an incomplete manner; imperfectly.

incompleteness (in-kom-plēt'nes), n. The state of being incomplete; lack of some part or particular; defect.

Incompleteness—want of beginning, middle, and end—is [the] . . . too common fault of [Emerson's poems]. O. W. Holmes, R. W. Emerson, xiv.

And I smiled to think God's greatness flowed around our incompleteness. Mrs. Browning, Rhyme of the Duchess May, Conclusion.

incompletion (in-kom-plē'shon), n. [< in-[3] + completion. Cf. incomplete.] Incompleteness; the state of being unfinished.

Independence means isolation and incompletion; association is the true life. The Century, XXVI. 828.

I have lost the dream of Doing,
And the other dream of Done, . . .
First recoil from incompletion, in the face of what is won.
Mrs. Browning, Lost Bower.

incomplex (in-kom'pleks), a. [= F. incomplexe = Sp. Pg. incomplexo = It. incomplesso; as in-[3] + complex.] Not complex; uncompounded; simple.

The ear is in birds the most simple and incomplex of any animal's ear. Derham, Physico-Theology, vii. 2, note 4.

incomplexly (in-kom'pleks-li), adv. In an incomplex manner; without complexity or confusion: as, the divine mind cognizes incomplexly those things that in their own nature are complex.

incompliable† (in-kom-plī'a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + compliable.] Not disposed to comply. Mountagu.

incompliance (in-kom-plī'ans), n. [< incomplian(t) + -ce.] The quality of being incompliant; refusal or failure to comply; an unyielding or unaccommodating disposition.

They wrote to complain, 18 July, adding that her [Mary's] incompliance in religion gave countenance to the disturbances. R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xvi.

incompliant (in-kom-plī'ant), a. [< in-[3] + compliant.] Not compliant; not yielding to solicitation; not disposed to comply. Also uncompliant.

We find three incompliant prelates more this year under confinement in the Tower: Gardiner, bishop of Winchester; Heath, of Worcester; and Day, of Chichester. Strype, Memorials, Edw. VI., an. 1550.

incompliantly (in-kom-plī'ant-li), adv. In an unaccommodating or unyielding manner. Also uncompliantly.

incomportable† (in-kom-pōr'ta-bl), a. [= Sp. incomportable = Pg. incomportavel = It. incom- portabile, incomportevole; as in-[3] + comportable.] Intolerable; unbearable.

It was no new device to shove men out of their places by contriving incomportable hardships to be put upon them. Roger North, Examen, p. 39.

incomposed† (in-kọm-pōzd′), a. [< in-[3] + composed.] Discomposed; disordered; disturbed.

With faltering speech and visage incomposed. Milton, P. L., ii. 989.

incomposedly† (in-kọm-pō′zed-li), adv. In a disorderly or discomposed manner. Bp. Hall.

incomposite (in-kọm-poz′it), a. [= Sp. incompuesto = Pg. incomposto, < L. incompositus, not well put together, < in- priv. + compositus, put together: see composite.] Not composite; uncompounded; simple.—Incomposite numbers. Same as prime numbers. See prime.

incompossibility (in-kọm-pos-i-bil′i-ti), n. [= Sp. incomposibilidad = Pg. incompossibilidade = It. incompossibilità; as incompossible + -ity: see -bility.] The state or condition of being incompossible; incapability of coexistence; incompatibility. [Rare.]

However, you grant there is not an incompossibility betwixt large revenews and an humble sociablenesse; yet you say it is rare. Bp. Hall, Def. of Humb. Remonst., § 13.

"It is yet unknown to men," Leibnitz says on one occasion, "what is the reason of the incompossibility of different things" (i. e. the impossibility of different things existing together). E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 83.

incompossible (in-kọm-pos′i-bl), a. [= F. incompossible = Sp. incomposible = Pg. incompossivel = It. incompossibile; as in-[3] + compossible.] Not possible to be or to be true together; incapable of coexistence; incompatible. [Rare.]

Ambition and faith, believing God and seeking of ourselves, are incompetent, and totally incompossible. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 167.

If there be any positive existences which are incompossible—i. e. which cannot be combined without opposition and conflict— . . . then it is obvious that all positive existence cannot be combined in God. E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 84.

incomprehense† (in-kom-prē-hens′), a. [< LL. incomprehensus, not comprehended, < L. in- priv. + comprehensus, pp. of comprehendere, comprehend: see comprehend.] Not comprehended, or incomprehensible.

Thou must prove immense, Incomprehense in virtue. Marston, Sophonisba, v. 2.

incomprehensibility (in-kom-prē-hen-si-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. incomprehensibilité = Sp. incomprensibilidad = Pg. incomprehensibilidade = It. incomprensibilità, < ML. incomprehensibilita(t-)s, < L. incomprehensibilis, that may not be seized: see incomprehensible.] The character of being incomprehensible, in either sense of that word.

The constant, universal sense of all antiquity unanimously confessing an incomprehensibility in many of the articles of the Christian faith. South, Sermons, III. 217.

Incomprehensibility implies the negation of any limit in substantial presentiality or presence (as the Schools say) so far as affects the mode of the Divine existence in itself, as well as all things real and possible. The incomprehensibility of God is sometimes expressed by this formula, "God is in all and beyond all." . . . But incomprehensibility must not be confused with ubiquity, for the first is essential to God, the latter is contingent on the existence of place: in other words, on creation.

★ Bp. Forbes, Explanation of the Nicene Creed, p. 50.

incomprehensible (in-kom-prē-hen′si-bl), a. [< ME. incomprehensibele, < OF. incomprehensible, F. incompréhensible = Pg. incomprehensivel = Sp. incomprensible = It. incomprensibile, < L. incomprehensibilis, that cannot be seized, or comprehended, < in- priv. + comprehensibilis, comprehensible: see comprehensible.] 1. Not to be comprehended or comprised within limits; illimitable.

Presence everywhere is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. § 55.

The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible: and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible. . . . Also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated: but one uncreated, and one incomprehensible. Athanasian Creed.

2. Not to be comprehended or understood; that cannot be grasped by the mind. That is incomprehensible which may be known or believed as a fact, but of which the mode of existence or of operation, or of coming to pass, cannot be understood.

Surely Socrates was right in his opinion, that philosophers are but a soberer sort of madmen, busying themselves in things totally incomprehensible, or which, if they could be comprehended, would be found not worthy the trouble of discovery. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 50.

Strength is incomprehensible by weakness. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xi.

incomprehensibleness (in-kom-prē-hen′si-bl-nes), n. Incomprehensibility.

The distance, obscurity, incomprehensibleness of the joys of another world. Stillingfleet, Works, IV. iv.

incomprehensibly (in-kom-prē-hen′si-bli), adv. In an incomprehensible manner; to an extent or a degree which is incomprehensible.

Thou art that incomprehensibly glorious and infinite self-existing Spirit, from eternity to eternity, in and from whom all things are. Bp. Hall, Holy Rapture.

incomprehension (in-kom-prē-hen′shọn), n. [< in-[3] + comprehension.] Lack of comprehension or understanding. Bacon.

incomprehensive (in-kom-prē-hen′siv), a. [< in-[3] + comprehensive.] Not comprehensive; not including or comprising enough; unduly limited or restricted.

A most incomprehensive and inaccurate title. T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, IV. 4.

incomprehensively (in-kom-prē-hen′siv-li), adv. Not comprehensively; to a limited extent.

incomprehensiveness (in-kom-prē-hen′siv-nes), n. The quality of being incomprehensive.

incompressibility (in-kọm-pres-i-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. incompressibilité = Pg. incompressibilidade; as incompressible + -ity: see -bility.] The quality of being incompressible or of resisting compression.

incompressible (in-kọm-pres′i-bl), a. [= F. incompressible = Pg. incompressivel; as in-[3] + compressible.] Not compressible; incapable of being reduced in volume by pressure.

incompressibleness (in-kọm-pres′i-bl-nes), n. Incompressibility.

incomputable (in-kọm-pū′ta-bl), a. [< ML. incomputabilis, not computable, < L. in- priv. + computabilis, computable: see computable.] Not computable; incapable of being computed or reckoned.

inconcealable (in-kọn-sē′la-bl), a. [< in-[3] + concealable.] Not to be concealed, hidden, or kept secret; unconcealable.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves . . . will hourly prompt us our corruption. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vii. 10.

inconceivability (in-kọn-sē-va-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inconcevabilité = It. inconcepibilità; as inconceivable + -ity.] The quality of being inconceivable.

That inconceivability is the criterion of necessity is manifestly erroneous. Hamilton, Note to Reid's Intellectual Powers, iv. 3.

The inconceivability of its negation is the test by which we ascertain whether a given belief invariably exists or not. H. Spencer, Psychology (1855), § 7.

The history of science teems with inconceivabilities which have been conquered, and supposed necessary truths which have first ceased to be thought necessary, then to be thought true, and have finally come to be deemed impossible. J. S. Mill, Examination of Hamilton, ix.

The test of inconceivability, the unimaginableness or incredibility of the contradictory opposite of a proposition, regarded as the absolute criterion of truth, or universal postulate. This test had long been used and known by this name, but had been discredited, when brought again into notice by the advocacy of Herbert Spencer. The doctrine is: first, that there is a fixed set of first principles; second, that recognition of the truth of these is attained by the principle of excluded middle, that if one proposition is false its opposite must be true; and third, that inconceivability is a guaranty of impossibility, or at least of a congenital necessity of thought. To understand the real significance of the doctrine, it is to be remarked that it conflicts with the following opinions, more or less widely held: first, that there is no fixed set of first truths, but that reasoners must under different circumstances set out with different assumptions; second, that the evidence of mathematical truth is a positive perception of relations, and not a feeling of dilemma or powerlessness; third, that the principle of excluded middle plays but a small part in reasoning, and that even the principle of contradiction, with which the former is often confounded, is only of secondary importance; and fourth, that inconceivability, as ascertained by direct trial, is exceedingly deceptive evidence that a proposition is impossible or likely long to remain incredible.

inconceivable (in-kọn-sē′va-bl), a. [= F. inconcevable = Sp. inconcebible = Pg. inconcebivel = It. inconcepibile; as in-[3] + conceivable.] Incapable of being conceived, or realized in the imagination; incredible; inexplicable. An expression which conveys no conception whatever, but is mere gibberish, is not called inconceivable, but unintelligible. The word inconceivable (see also unconceivable) is used in the following senses in philosophy: (a) Involving a contradiction in terms, such as the idea of a non-existent being.

The school-philosophers, . . . to solve the more mysterious phænomena of nature, nay and most of the familiar ones too, they scruple not to . . . have recourse to agents that are not only invisible but inconceivable, at least to men that cannot admit any save rational and consistent notions. Boyle, Atmospheres of Consistent Bodies.

A necessary truth . . . is a truth . . . the opposite of which is inconceivable, contradictory, nonsensical, impossible; more shortly, it is a truth in the fixing of which nature had only one alternative. . . . Nature could not have fixed that two straight lines should . . . enclose a space; for this involves a contradiction. Ferrier, Institutes of Metaph., Int., § 27.

(b) Unacceptable to the mind because involving a violation of laws believed to be well established by positive evidence, as a perpetual motion.

How two ethers can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon, without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable. Newton, Opticks.

A contradiction is inconceivable only when all experience opposes itself to the formation of the contradictory conception. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, I. xiii.

The mistaking mere effects of association for ultimate facts, the negative of which is really, and not apparently only, inconceivable. Hodgson, Phil. of Reflection, II. vi. § 6.

(c) Unimaginable by man on account of an inseparable association, although not perhaps involving any contradiction nor even physically impossible, as the perception of color without extension. [This is the sense in which Herbert Spencer professes to use the word exclusively.]

For my part, I see evidently that it is not in my power to frame the idea of a body extended and moved, but I must withal give it some colour or other sensible quality which is acknowledged to exist only in the mind. In short, extension, figure, and motion, abstracted from all other qualities, are inconceivable. Bp. Berkeley, Principles of Human Knowledge, i. § 10.

A mere hypothesis . . . which, even as a hypothesis, is absolutely inconceivable. Dr. T. Brown, Phil. of the Human Mind, xxx.

(d) Unimaginable to a particular person from novelty, as the idea that parallel straight lines meet at infinity.

It seems inconceivable that A should move until B hath left its place. Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, vi.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception how matter might at first be made, and begin to exist, by the power of that eternal first Being; but to give beginning and being to a spirit would be found a more inconceivable effect of omnipotent power. Locke, Human Understanding, IV. x. § 18.

(e) Capable of being conceived only by a negative or relative notion, such as the idea of infinity.

We cannot think a quality existing absolutely, in or of itself. We are constrained to think it as inhering in some basis, substratum, hypostasis, or substance; but this substance cannot be conceived by us except negatively—that is, as the unapparent, the inconceivable correlative of certain appearing qualities. Sir W. Hamilton, Discussions, App. I. (A).

(f) Incredible; not to be imagined as believed in by any man, as the supposition of an event undetermined by a cause. [This is the meaning which J. S. Mill undertakes to show is really attached to the word by Spencer.]

Things are often said to be inconceivable which the mind is under no incapacity of representing to itself in an image. It is often said that we are unable to conceive as possible that which, in itself, we are perfectly well able to conceive: we are able, it is admitted, to conceive an imaginary object, but unable to conceive it realized. This extends the term inconceivable to every combination of facts which to the mind simply contemplating it appears incredible. [Foot-note.—I do not mean what is really incredible.] J. S. Mill, Examination of Hamilton, vi.

inconceivableness (in-kọn-sē′va-bl-nes), n. The quality of being inconceivable.

An alleged fact is not therefore impossible because it is inconceivable, for the incompatible notions in which consists its inconceivableness need not each of them really belong to it in that fulness which involves their being incompatible with each other. J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 49.

inconceivably (in-kọn-sē′va-bli), adv. In an inconceivable manner; beyond the power of conception.

Without foundation, and placed inconceivably in emptiness and darkness. Johnson, Vision of Theodore.

So inconceivably minute a quantity as the one twenty-millionth of a grain. Darwin, Insectiv. Plants, p. 272.

inconceptible† (in-kọn-sep′ti-bl), a. [= Sp. inconceptible; as in-[3] + conceptible.] Inconceivable.

It is inconceptible how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration without corruption, . . . should after be corrupted. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 86.

inconcerning† (in-kọn-sėr′ning), a. [< in-[3] + concerning.] Unimportant; trivial.

Trifling and inconcerning matters. Fuller.

inconcinn†, a. [= Sp. inconcino = It. inconcinno, < L. inconcinnus, inelegant: see inconcinnous.] Same as inconcinnous.

Dissimilar and inconcinn moleculæ, i. e. atoms of different magnitude and figures. Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 16.

inconcinnity (in-kọn-sin′i-ti), n. [< L. inconcinnita(t-)s, inelegance, < inconcinnus, inelegant: see inconcinnous.] Lack of concinnity, congruousness, or proportion, or an instance of such lack; unsuitableness.

Such is the inconcinnity and insignificancy of Grotius's interpreting of the six seals. Dr. H. More, Mystery of Godliness, p. 184.

inconcinnous† (in-kọn-sin′us), a. [Also inconcinn, q. v.; < L. inconcinnus, inelegant, < in- priv. + concinnus, well-ordered, elegant: see concinnous.] Unsuitable; incongruous; wanting proportion; discordant. Craig.

inconcludent† (in-kŏn-klö′dĕnt), a. [= F. inconcluant, < L. in- priv. + concluden(t-)s, ppr. of concludere, conclude: see conclude.] Not conclusive; not furnishing adequate grounds for a conclusion or inference.

The depositions of witnesses themselves, as being false, various, contrariant, single, inconcludent.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

inconcluding† (in-kŏn-klö′ding), a. [< *in-*3 + concluding.] Inconclusive. Bp. Pearson.

inconclusion (in-kŏn-klö′zhŏn), n. [< *in-*3 + conclusion.] Inconclusiveness. [Rare.]

It was a real trouble to her for a time that Dr. Morrell, after admitting the force of her reasons, should be content to rest in a comfortable inconclusion as to his conduct. Howells, Annie Kilburn, xxx.

inconclusive (in-kŏn-klö′siv), a. [< *in-*3 + conclusive.] 1. Not conclusive in evidence or argument; not leading to a determination or conclusion; not decisive or convincing; indeterminate.

Preservation of hair alone, as a trophy, is less general; doubtless because the evidence of victory which it yields is inconclusive. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 352.

We must not be expected to accept facts and to make inferences in the case of Red Indians and Australians on evidence which we should set aside as inconclusive if we were making inquiries about Greeks or Germans.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 252.

2. Not conclusive in action; reaching no definite conclusion or result; producing no conclusive effect; ineffective; inefficient: as, inconclusive experiments.

Our guide was picturesque, but the most helpless and inconclusive cicerone I ever knew.
Howells, Venetian Life, p. 215.

inconclusively (in-kŏn-klö′siv-li), adv. In an inconclusive manner.

inconclusiveness (in-kŏn-klö′siv-nes), n. The condition or quality of being inconclusive.

The novelist must be the blindest of leaders if he fail to secure temporary adherents to his conclusions about life and death and immortality, or worshippers for the moment of his unrecognized inconclusiveness.
The Nation, XLVII. 459.

inconcoct† (in-kŏn-kokt′), a. [< *in-*3 + concoct, a.] Inconcocted.

While the body to be converted and altered is too strong for the efficient that should convert . . . it, it is (all that while) crude and inconcoct.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 838.

inconcocted† (in-kŏn-kok′ted), a. [< *in-*3 + concocted.] Not concocted or fully digested; not matured; unconcocted.

When I was a child, and had my organical parts less digested and inconcocted.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 23.

inconcoction† (in-kŏn-kok′shŏn), n. [< *in-*3 + concoction.] The state of being undigested; unripeness.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called inquination, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

inconcrete (in-kŏn-krēt′), a. [< LL. inconcretus, not concrete, bodily, < L. in- priv. + concretus, concrete.] Not concrete; abstract; discrete.

All our affirmations, then, are only inconcrete, which is the affirming not one abstract idea to be another, but one abstract idea to be joined to another.
Locke, Human Understanding, III. viii. 1.

inconcurring† (in-kŏn-kėr′ing), a. [< *in-*3 + concurring.] Not concurring; discrepant.

Deriving effects not only from inconcurring causes, but things devoid of all efficiency whatever.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 4.

inconcussible (in-kŏn-kus′i-bl), a. [Also, improp., inconcussable; = OF. inconcussible, < L. in- priv. + LL. concussibilis, that can be shaken, < L. concutere, pp. concussus, shake: see concuss.] Not concussible; unshakable.

As the roundell or Spheare is appropriat to the heauens, . . . so is the square for his inconcussable steadinesse likened to the earth. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 83.

incondensability (in-kŏn-den-sa-bil′i-ti), n. [< incondensable: see -bility.] The quality of being incondensable. Sometimes written incondensibility.

incondensable (in-kŏn-den′sa-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + condensable.] Not condensable; incapable of being made more dense or compact. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 2. Sometimes written incondensible.

incondite (in-kon′dit or in′kŏn-dīt), a. [< L. inconditus, not put together, not ordered, disordered, < in- priv. + conditus, put together: see condite[2], condiment.] Ill constructed; unpolished; rude. [Rare.]

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhymes, with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious. J. Philips, Cider, ii.

His actual speeches were not nearly so ineloquent, incondite, as they look. Carlyle.

inconditional† (in-kŏn-dish′ŏn-al), a. [< *in-*3 + conditional.] Unconditional; without qualification or limitation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 4.

inconditionate† (in-kŏn-dish′ŏn-āt), a. [< *in-*3 + conditionate.] Unconditioned; not limited by conditions; absolute.

Their doctrine who ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election, or reprobation. Boyle, Works, I. 277.

inconform†, a. [< *in-*3 + conform, a.] Not conformed; disagreeing or variant.

A way most charitable, most comfortable, and no way inconform to the will of God in His Word.
Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 291.

inconformable† (in-kŏn-fôr′ma-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + conformable.] Unconformable.

Two lecturers they found obstinately inconformable to the king's directions. Heylin, Abp. Laud (1671), p. 190.

inconformity† (in-kŏn-fôr′mi-ti), n. [< *in-*3 + conformity.] Nonconformity; incompliance.

We have thought their opinion to be that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

inconfused† (in-kŏn-fūzd′), a. [< *in-*3 + confused.] Not confused; distinct; clear.

So that all the curious diversitie of articulate sounds of the voice of man, or birds, will enter into a small crany, inconfused. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 192.

inconfusion† (in-kŏn-fū′zhŏn), n. [< *in-*3 + confusion.] Freedom from confusion; distinctness.

The confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 225.

inconfutable (in-kŏn-fū′ta-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + confutable.] Not to be confuted or disproved.

inconfutably (in-kŏn-fū′ta-bli), adv. In an inconfutable manner; unanswerably. Jer. Taylor.

incongealable (in-kŏn-jē′la-bl), a. [= F. incongelable, < L. incongelabilis, that cannot be frozen, < in- priv. + congelabilis*, that can be frozen: see congealable.] Not to be congealed or frozen; uncongealable.

This train oil, swimming upon the surface of the water, and being incongealable by the cold. Boyle, Works, II. 517.

incongenial (in-kŏn-jē′niąl), a. [< *in-*3 + congenial.] Uncongenial. Craig.

incongruet, a. [< F. incongru, < L. incongruus, inconsistent: see incongruous.] Incongruous.

To allow of incongrue speech, contrary to the rules of grammar. Blundeville.

incongruence (in-kong′grö-ens), n. [= Sp. Pg. incongruencia = It. incongruenza, < LL. incongruentia, inconsistency, < L. incongruen(t-)s, inconsistent: see incongruent.] Lack of congruence or agreement; incongruity.

The humidity of a body is but a relative thing, and depends . . . upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor in reference to the pores of those . . . bodies that it touches.
Boyle, Works, I. 391.

incongruent (in-kong′grö-ent), a. [= It. incongruente, < L. incongruen(t-)s, inconsistent, < in- priv. + congruen(t-)s, consistent: see congruent.] Incongruous.

But sens we be now occupied in the defence of poetes, it shall not be incongruent to our matter to shewe what profytte maye be taken by the dyligente redynge of auncient poetes. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 13.

incongruity (in-kŏn-grö′i-ti), n.; pl. incongruities (-tiz). [= F. incongruité = Sp. incongruidad = Pg. incongruidade = It. incongruità; as incongru-ous + -ity.] 1. The quality of being incongruous; want of congruity or mutual fitness; unsuitableness of one thing to another; lack of adaptation.

Humor in its first analysis is a perception of the incongruous, and, in its highest development, of the incongruity between the actual and the ideal in men and life.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 132.

2. That which is incongruous; something not suitably conjoined, related, or adapted: as, this episode is an incongruity.

She, after whom what form soe'er we see
Is discord and rude incongruity.
Donne, Anat. of World.

What pleasant incongruities are these? to see men grow rich by Vows of Poverty, retired from the world, and yet the most unquiet and busie in it?
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. ii.

★incongruous (in-kong′grö-us), a. [= F. incongru = Sp. Pg. It. incongruo, < L. incongruus, inconsistent, < in- priv. + congruus, consistent: see congruous.] 1. Not congruous; incapable of reciprocally fitting and agreeing; unsuited or unsuitable; inharmonious.

As the first ship upon the waters bore
Incongruous kinds who never met before.
Crabbe, Works, I. 178.

Incongruous mixtures of opinion. Is. Taylor.

The eastern emperours thought it not incongruous to choose the stones for their sepulchre on the day of their coronation. Comber, Companion to the Temple, iv. 1.

2. Consisting of inappropriate parts, or of parts not fitly put together; disjointed: as, an incongruous story.

The result was an incongruous framework, covered with her thronging, suggestive ideas.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 142.

=Syn. Inconsistent, etc. (see incompatible), unsuitable, unsuited, unfit, inappropriate, ill-matched, out of keeping.

incongruously (in-kong′grö-us-li), adv. In an incongruous manner; unsuitably; inappropriately; disjointedly.

But in the course of the sentence he drops this construction, and passes very incongruously to the personification of art. H. Blair, Rhetoric, xxiii.

incongruousness (in-kong′grö-us-nes), n. The state or quality of being incongruous, inharmonious, or inappropriate.

That inequality and even incongruousness in his [Dryden's] writing which makes one revise his judgment at every tenth page. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 22.

in-conic (in′kon-ik), n. [< in[1] + conic.] In math., an inscribed conic.

inconnected† (in-kŏ-nek′ted), a. [< *in-*3 + connected.] Unconnected.

It being surely more reasonable to adapt different measures to different subjects than to treat a number of inconnected and quite different subjects in the same measure. Bp. Hurd, On Epistolary Writing.

inconnection†, inconnexion† (in-kŏ-nek′shŏn), n. [= F. inconnexion = Sp. inconexión = Pg. inconnexão; as *in-*3 + connection, connexion.] Lack of connection; disconnection.

Neither need wee any better or other proofe of the inconnexion of this vow with holy orders than that of their own Dominicus a Soto.
Bp. Hall, Honour of Married Clergy, i. 3.

inconnexed† (in-kŏ-nekst′), a. [< LL. inconnexus, inconexus, not connected, < L. in- priv. + connexus, conexus, pp. of connectere, conectere, connect.] Lacking connection; disconnected.

inconnexedly† (in-kŏ-nek′sed-li), adv. Without connection or dependence; disconnectedly.

Others ascribe hereto, as a cause, what perhaps but casually or inconnexedly succeeds.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 9.

inconnexion†, n. See inconnection.

inconnu (in-kŏ-nū′; F. pron. aṅ-ko-nü′), n. [F., unknown: see incognito.] In ichth., a salmonoid fish, the Mackenzie river salmon, Stenodus mackenzii, resembling the whitefishes, Corego- Inconnu (Stenodus mackenzii).

nus, but with a deeply cleft mouth, much-projecting lower jaw, broad lanceolate supramaxillaries, and teeth in bands on the vomer, palatines, and tongue. It inhabits the Mackenzie and Yukon rivers and their tributaries in northwestern Canada, and reaches a large size. It was an unknown fish to the Canadian voyageurs who first saw it, and the name perpetuates the impression first conveyed.

inconscient (in-kon′shient), a. [= F. inconscient; as *in-*3 + conscient.] Unconscious; subconscious; wanting self-consciousness. [Rare.]

The old doctrines did not recognize in the brain the organic conditions of thought, and suspected not the immense efficacy of the inconscient, which is the foundation of mental life. Tr. for Alien. and Neurol., VI. 486.

inconscionable† (in-kon′shŏn-a-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + conscionable.] Unconscionable; not conscientious.

His Lord commaunded him, and it was the least thing he could doe for his Lord to sweare for him; soe inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or theyr owne sowles good.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

inconscious (in-kon′shus), a. [< *in-*3 + conscious.] Unconscious. Beattie. [Rare.]

inconsecutive (in-kon-sek′ū-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + consecutive.] Not succeeding in regular order; disconnected.

Clement of Alexandria has preserved excerpts of a very inconsecutive character. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 38.

inconsecutiveness (in-kon-sek′ū-tiv-nes), n. The quality of being inconsecutive, or without order.

The inconsecutiveness of the primitive mind is curiously evident in other ways. Andover Rev., VIII. 240.

inconsequence (in-kon′sē-kwens), n. [= F. inconséquence = Sp. inconsecuencia = Pg. inconsequencia = It. inconseguenza, < L. inconsequentia, < inconsequen(t-)s, inconsequent: see inconsequent.] 1. The condition or quality of being inconsequent; want of proper or logical sequence; inconclusiveness.

Strange that you should not see the inconsequence of your own reasoning. Bp. Hurd, To Rev. Dr. Leland.

2. That which is inconsequent; something that does not properly follow; an unrelated or misplaced sequence.

All this seems remarkable and strange, when we consider only the absurdities and inconsequences with which such fictions necessarily abound.
Ticknor, Span. Lit., III. 92.

Though Kant certainly did not overlook the inconsequences, or over-estimate the value of common sense, yet he clearly recognised that the distinction between it and science is a vanishing one.
E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 203.

inconsequent (in-kon′sē-kwent), a. [= F. inconséquent = Sp. inconsecuente = Pg. inconsequente = It. inconseguente, < L. inconsequen(t-)s, not consequent, < in- priv. + consequen(t-)s, consequent: see consequent.] 1. Not consequent; not resulting from what has preceded; out of proper relation; irrelevant: as, inconsequent remarks; his actions are very inconsequent.—2. Not following from the premises; of the nature of an inference the conclusion of which might be false though the premises were true; illogical; formally fallacious.

Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferrible from their premises. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err.

inconsequential (in-kon-sē-kwen′shal), a. [< in-[3] + consequential.] 1. Not consequential; not following from the premises; without cause or without consequences; illogical; irrational: as, inconsequential reasons or actions.

That marvelous and absolutely inconsequential principle by which a given man finds himself determined to love a certain woman.
S. Lanier, The English Novel, p. 116.

2. Of no consequence or value. [Rare.]

As my time is not wholly inconsequential, I should not be sorry to have an early opportunity of being heard.
Miss Burney, Cecilia, ix. 3.

Trying to be kind and honest seems an affair too simple and too inconsequential for gentlemen of our heroic mould. R. L. Stevenson, Scribner's Mag., IV. 765.

inconsequentiality (in-kon-sē-kwen-shi-al′i-ti), n. [< inconsequential + -ity.] 1. The state of being inconsequential.—2. That which is inconsequential. [Rare.]

inconsequentially (in-kon-sē-kwen′shal-i), adv. In an inconsequential manner; without regular sequence or deduction.

He infers inconsequentially in supposing that, from the inconsistency of a certain relation concerning revelation, there never was any revelation at all.
Warburton, View of Bolingbroke's Philosophy, iii.

inconsequently (in-kon′sē-kwent-li), adv. In an inconsequent manner; irrelevantly.

With the exception of its flowery ending, in which, a little inconsequently, the author descants on the blessings of universal peace, the whole of this chapter is sensible. The Academy, No. 885, p. 269.

inconsequentness (in-kon′sē-kwent-nes), n. The quality of being inconsequent or irrelevant; inconsequence.

There is always some inconsequentness or incoherency in madness, but there is more of this in Swift.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 816.

inconsiderable (in-kon-sid′ėr-a-bl), a. [= OF. inconsiderable = Sp. inconsiderable = Pg. inconsideravel = It. inconsiderabile; as in-[3] + considerable.] Not considerable; not worthy of consideration or notice; unimportant; trivial; insignificant; small.

I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing.
Sir J. Denham, The Sophy, iii. 1.

The buildings of what is plainly no inconsiderable city stand out against their mountain background.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 95.

The troubles between them were inconsiderable till 1448 and 1449, when the hard proceedings of the Constable against others of the friends and relations of Mendoza led him into a more formal opposition.
Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 333.

=Syn. Petty, slight, trifling, immaterial.

inconsiderableness (in-kon-sid′ėr-a-bl-nes), n. The quality or condition of being inconsiderable or unimportant.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness in respect of the greatness and splendour of heavenly bodies let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray, Works of Creation.

inconsiderably (in-kon-sid′ėr-a-bli), adv. In an inconsiderable manner or degree; very little.

inconsideracy† (in-kon-sid′ėr-a-si), n. [< inconsidera(te) + -cy.] The quality of being inconsiderate; thoughtlessness; want of consideration: as, "the inconsideracy of youth," Chesterfield.

inconsiderate (in-kon-sid′ėr-āt), a. [= F. inconsidéré = Sp. Pg. inconsiderado = It. inconsiderato, < L. inconsideratus, not considerate, < in- priv. + consideratus, considerate: see considerate.] 1. Not considerate; not guided by proper considerations; thoughtless; heedless; inadvertent.

Folly and vanity in one of these ladies is like vice in a clergyman: it does not only debase him, but make the inconsiderate part of the world think the worse of religion. Steele, Spectator, No. 354.

It is too much the fashion of the day to view prayer chiefly as a mere privilege, such a privilege as it is inconsiderate indeed to neglect, but only inconsiderate, not sinful. J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 245.

Like an inconsiderate boy,
As in the former flash of joy,
I slip the thoughts of life and death.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxxii.

2. Inattentive; negligent; without consideration: followed by of.

He . . . cannot be . . . inconsiderate of our frailties.
Decay of Christian Piety.

3†. Inconsiderable; insignificant.

A little inconsiderate peece of brass. E. Terry (1655).

=Syn. Careless, inattentive, incautious, negligent, hasty, giddy, harebrained.

inconsiderately (in-kon-sid′ėr-āt-li), adv. In an inconsiderate manner; without due consideration; thoughtlessly; heedlessly.

The President . . . found his company planted so inconsiderately, in a place not onely subiect to the rivers invndation, but round invironed with many intollerable inconueniences.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 236.

inconsiderateness (in-kon-sid′ėr-āt-nes), n. The condition or quality of being inconsiderate; heedlessness; thoughtlessness; inadvertence.

Their inconsiderateness therefore brands their bretheren with crimes whereof they were innocent.
Bp. Hall, Altar of the Reubenites.

Prudence and steadiness will always succeed in the long run better than folly and inconsiderateness.
A. Tucker, Light of Nature, I. ii. 28.

inconsideration (in-kon-sid-ę-rā′shon), n. [= F. inconsidération = Sp. inconsideración = Pg. inconsideração = It. inconsiderazione, < LL. inconsideratio(n-), < L. in- priv. + consideratio(n-), consideration: see consideration.] Want of due consideration; disregard of consequences; inconsiderate action.

The greatness of John's love, when he had mastered the first considerations of his fear, made him to return a while after into the high priest's hall.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 292.

inconsistence (in-kon-sis′tens), n. [= F. inconsistance = Sp. Pg. inconsistencia; as inconsisten(t) + -ce.] Inconsistency. [Rare.]

What inconsistence is this?
Bentley, Of Free-thinking, § 1.

inconsistency (in-kon-sis′ten-si), n.; pl. inconsistencies (-siz). [As inconsistence: see -ency.] 1. The quality of being inconsistent; want of consistency or agreement between ideas or actions; contradictory relation of parts or particulars; intrinsic opposition in fact or in principle; incongruity; contrariety; discrepancy.

There is no kind of inconsistency in a government being democratic as far as the privileged order is concerned and oligarchic as far as concerns all who lie outside the privileged order. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 287.

2. A want of consistency in feeling, idea, or act; lack of agreement or uniformity in manifestation; incongruity.

The fool lies hid in inconsistencies.
Pope, Moral Essays, i. 70.

It is good to be often reminded of the inconsistency of human nature, and to learn to look without wonder or disgust on the weaknesses which are found in the strongest minds. Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

=Syn. Incoherency, irreconcilability, discrepancy, contradictoriness. See incompatible.

inconsistent (in-kon-sis′tent), a. [= F. inconsistant = Sp. Pg. It. inconsistente; as in-[3] + consistent.] 1. Not consistent in conception or in fact; wanting coherence or agreement; discordant; discrepant.

When we say that one fact is inconsistent with another fact, we mean only that it is inconsistent with the theory which we have founded on that other fact.
Macaulay, Mill on Government.

2. Lacking self-agreement or uniformity; self-contradicting.

Now let him alone, Hal, and you shall hear the inconsistent old sophist contradicting all he has said to-night.
J. Wilson, Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1832.

Man, in short, is so inconsistent a creature that it is impossible to reason from his belief to his conduct, or from one part of his belief to another.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

=Syn. 1. Incongruous, etc. See incompatible.—2. Contradictory, etc. See contrary.

inconsistently (in-kon-sis′tent-li), adv. In an inconsistent or contradictory manner; incongruously; discrepantly.

This is the only crime in which your leading politicians could have acted inconsistently. Burke, Rev. in France.

inconsistentness† (in-kon-sis′tent-nes), n. Inconsistency.

No contradictious inconsistentnesse.
Dr. H. More, Infinity of Worlds, st. 49.

inconsistible† (in-kon-sis′ti-bl), a. [< in-[3] + consist + -ible.] Inconsistent; variable. [Rare.]

It hath a ridiculous phiz, like the fable of the old man, his ass, and a boy, before the inconsistible vulgar.
Roger North, Examen, p. 629.

inconsisting† (in-kon-sis′ting), a. [< in-[3] + consisting.] Inconsistent.

The persons and actions of a Farce are all unnatural, and the manners false: that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind. Dryden, Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

inconsolable (in-kon-sō′la-bl), a. [= F. inconsolable = Sp. inconsolable = Pg. inconsolavel = It. inconsolabile, < L. inconsolabilis, inconsolable, < in- priv. + consolabilis, consolable: see consolable.] Not consolable; incapable of being consoled or alleviated: as, an inconsolable mourner; inconsolable grief.

Judge what I endured, terrified with dreams, tormented by my apprehensions. I abandoned myself to despair, and remained inconsolable. Dryden, Letter in Dryden's Life.

Her women will represent to me that she is inconsolable by reason of my unkindness. Addison.

With inconsolable distress she griev'd,
And from her cheek the rose of beauty fled.
Falconer, Occasional Elegy.

inconsolableness (in-kon-sō′la-bl-nes), n. The state of being inconsolable.

inconsolably (in-kon-sō′la-bli), adv. In an inconsolable manner or degree.

inconsolately† (in-kon′sō-lāt-li), adv. [< inconsolate* (not recorded) (= It. inconsolato, < L. in- priv. + consolatus, consoled, pp. of consolare, console: see console, consolate, v.) + -ly[2].] Without consolation; disconsolately.

Rejoyce . . . not in your transitory honours, titles, treasures, which will at the last leave you inconsolately sorrowfull. Bp. Hall, Ser. Preached to his Majesty, Gal. ii. 20.

inconsonance (in-kon′sō-nans), n. [< inconsonan(t) + -ce.] Disagreement; want of harmony; discordance.

inconsonancy (in-kon′sō-nan-si), n. Same as inconsonance.

inconsonant (in-kon′sō-nant), a. [= OF. inconsonnant, < LL. inconsonan(t-)s, unsuitable, < L. in- priv. + consonan(t-)s, sounding together, suitable: see consonant.] Not consonant or agreeing; discordant.

They carried them out of the world with their feet forward, not inconsonant unto reason.
Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, iv.

He is of too honest a breed to resort to . . . measures inconsonant with the English tongue.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 250.

inconsonantly (in-kon′sō-nant-li), adv. In an inconsonant or discordant manner.

Inconspicuæ (in-kon-spik′ū-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1828), fem. pl. of LL. inconspicuus, not conspicuous: see inconspicuous.] A very heterogeneous group of plants, embracing the Taxaceæ, Santalaceæ, and Equisetaceæ.

inconspicuous (in-kon-spik′ū-us), a. [< LL. inconspicuus, not conspicuous, < L. in- priv. + conspicuus, conspicuous: see conspicuous.] Not conspicuous or readily discernible; not to be easily perceived by the sight; so small or unobtrusive as readily to escape notice.

Socrates in Xenophon has the same sentiment, and says that the Deity is inconspicuous, and that a man cannot look upon the sun without being dazzled.
Jortin, On Eccles. Hist.

inconspicuously (in-kon-spik′ū-us-li), adv. In an inconspicuous manner.

inconspicuousness (in-kon-spik′ū-us-nes), n. The state of being inconspicuous.

inconstance† (in-kon'stans), n. [< ME. inconstance, < OF. inconstance, F. inconstance = Sp. Pg. inconstancia = It. inconstanza, < L. inconstantia, inconstancy, < inconstan(t-)s, inconstant: see inconstant.] Inconstancy.

But in her face semed great variaunce—
While parfite truth, and whiles inconstaunce.
Chaucer, Testament of Creseide.

Some do menace, wrong, and insult over their inferiors, never considering the uncertainty and inconstance of mutable fortune, nor how quickly that which was aloft may be flung down. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 421.

inconstancy (in-kon'stan-si), n. [As inconstance: see -cy. Cf. constancy.] 1. Lack of constancy in action, feeling, etc.; mutability or instability; unsteadiness; fickleness: as, the inconstancy of a flame, or of one's temper.

A quicke capacitye Berayde with blots of light Inconstancie.
Gascoigne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 56.

Irresolution on the schemes of life which offer to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison, Spectator.

2. Lack of sameness or uniformity; dissimilitude.

As much inconstancy and confusion is there in their mixtures or combinations; for it is rare to find any of them pure and unmixt.
Woodward, Essay towards a Nat. Hist. of the Earth.

=Syn. Changeableness, vacillation, wavering.

inconstant (in-kon'stant), a. [< ME. inconstaunt, < OF. (also F.) inconstant = Sp. Pg. It. inconstante, < L. inconstan(t-)s, inconstant, < in- priv. + constan(t-)s, constant: see constant.] Not constant; subject to change; not firm; unsteady; fickle; capricious: said chiefly of persons: as, inconstant in love or friendship.

O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 2.

At several Hopes wisely to fly,
Ought not to be esteem'd Inconstancy;
'Tis more inconstant always to pursue
A thing that always flies from you.
Cowley, The Mistress, Resolved to be Beloved, ii.

The captives gazing stood, and every one Shrank as the inconstant torch upon her countenance shone. Shelley, Revolt of Islam, viii. 28.

=Syn. Unstable, vacillating, wavering, volatile, unsettled, uncertain.

inconstantly (in-kon'stant-li), adv. In an inconstant manner; not steadily.

Inconstrictipedes (in-kon-strik-tip'e-dēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. in- priv. + constrictus, constricted, + pes (ped-) = E. foot.] A subclass of birds, proposed by Hogg in 1846 upon physiological considerations: opposed to Constrictipedes, and approximately corresponding with the Præcoces of Bonaparte, and with the Ptilopædes or Dasypædes of Sundevall. [Not in use.]

inconsumable (in-kon-sū'ma-bl), a. [< in-[3] + consumable.] Not consumable; incapable of being consumed.

Whereof [asbestos] by art were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats inconsumable by fire.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 14.

When the identical loan is to be returned, as a book, a horse, a harpsichord, it is called inconsumable, in opposition to corn, wine, money, and those things which perish.
Paley, Moral Philos., i. 5.

inconsumably (in-kon-sū'ma-bli), adv. So as to be inconsumable.

inconsummate (in-kon-sum'āt), a. [< LL. inconsummatus, unfinished, < L. in- priv. + consummatus, finished: see consummate.] Not consummated; unfinished; incomplete.

Conspiracies and inconsummate attempts.
Sir M. Hale, Hist. Pleas of the Crown, xiii.

inconsummateness (in-kon-sum'āt-nes), n. The state of being inconsummate or incomplete.

inconsumptible† (in-kon-sump'ti-bl), a. [< OF. inconsomptible, inconsumptible; as in-[3] + consumpt + -ible.] Not consumable; inconsumable. Sir K. Digby, Nature of Bodies, viii.

incontaminate (in-kon-tam'i-nāt), a. [= OF. incontaminé = Sp. Pg. incontaminado = It. incontaminato, < L. incontaminatus, not contaminated, < in- priv. + contaminatus, contaminated: see contaminate.] Not contaminated; not adulterated; pure.

Being [as you are] free and incontaminate, well borne, and abhorring to dishonour . . . yr selfe.
Evelyn, Memoirs, I., Letter to Col. Morley.

incontaminateness (in-kon-tam'i-nāt-nes), n. Uncorrupted state.

incontentation† (in-kon-ten-tā'shon), n. [< in-[3] + contentation.] Discontent; dissatisfaction. Goodwin.

incontestability (in-kon-tes-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< incontestable: see -bility.] The character or quality of being incontestable.

incontestable (in-kon-tes'ta-bl), a. [= F. incontestable = Sp. incontestable = Pg. incontestavel = It. incontestabile; as in-[3] + contestable.] Not contestable; not admitting of dispute or debate; too clear to be controverted; incontrovertible; indisputable.

Our own being furnishes us with an evident and incontestable proof of a deity. Locke.

The genius and daring of Bolingbroke were, indeed, incontestable, but his defects as a party leader were scarcely less. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., p. 141.

=Syn. Indisputable, irrefragable, undeniable, unquestionable, indubitable.

incontestableness (in-kon-tes'ta-bl-nes), n. The quality of being incontestable.

incontestably (in-kon-tes'ta-bli), adv. So as not to be contested or disputed; in a manner to preclude debate; indisputably; incontrovertibly; indubitably.

It [tragedy] must always have a hero, a personage apparently and incontestably superior to the rest, upon whom the attention may be fixed and the anxiety suspended. Johnson, Rambler, No. 156.

As the company with which I went was incontestably the chief of the place, we were received with the greatest respect. Goldsmith, Vicar, xix.

incontested† (in-kon-tes'ted), a. [< in-[3] + contested.] Not contested; uncontested.

We may lay this down as an incontested principle, that chance never acts in perpetual uniformity and consistence with itself. Addison, Spectator, No. 543.

incontiguous (in-kon-tig'ū-us), a. [< LL. incontiguus, that cannot be touched (not contiguous), < L. in- priv. + contiguus, touching, contiguous: see contiguous.] Not contiguous; not adjoining; not touching; separate.

They seemed part of small bracelets, consisting of equally little incontiguous beads. Boyle.

incontiguously (in-kon-tig'ū-us-li), adv. Not contiguously; separately. Wright.

incontinence (in-kon'ti-nens), n. [< ME. incontinence, < OF. (also F.) incontinence = Pr. incontinenza = Sp. Pg. incontinencia = It. incontinenza, < L. incontinentia, inability to contain, < incontinen(t-)s, not containing: see incontinent.] 1. The quality of being incontinent; want of continence or holding in; unrestrained movement or flow; superabundant outpour.

The Carlylists, with their theoretic admiration of silence, and their practical incontinence of chatter.
F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 30.

Specifically—2. Lack of due restraint of the appetites or passions; intemperance in sexual intercourse; unchasteness; licentiousness.

Beauty . . . had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with unenchanted eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit,
From the rash hand of bold Incontinence.
Milton, Comus, l. 397.

This is my defence;
I pleas'd myself, I shunn'd incontinence.
Dryden, Sig. and Guis., l. 454.

3. In med., the inability of any of the physical organs to restrain discharges of their contents; involuntary discharge or evacuation: as, incontinence of urine.

incontinency (in-kon'ti-nen-si), n. [As incontinence: see -cy.] Incontinence.

Come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency. 1 Cor. vii. 5.

incontinent (in-kon'ti-nent), a. and n. [= F. incontinent = Pr. encontenen = Sp. Pg. It. incontinente, < L. incontinen(t-)s, not containing or retaining, not holding back, immoderate, < in- priv. + continen(t-)s, containing, continent: see continent.] I. a. 1. Not continent; not holding or held in; unceasing or unrestrained: as, an incontinent tattler; an incontinent flow of talk. Specifically—2. Unrestrained in indulgence of appetite or passion; intemperate in sexual intercourse; unchaste; licentious.—3. In med., unable to restrain natural discharges or evacuations.—4. Not delayed; immediate; offhand. [Colloq.]

Hath any one a smoky chimney?—here is an incontinent cure! Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 136.

II. n. One who is incontinent or unchaste.

O, old incontinent, dost thou not shame,
When all thy powers in chastity are spent,
To have a mind so hot?
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 9.

incontinent (in-kon'ti-nent), adv. [< ME. incontinent*, encontynent, ML. incontinente, without holding back, < L. incontinen(t-)s, not holding back: see incontinent, a.] Incontinently; instantly; immediately. [Archaic.]

"Madame," quod he, "right now encontynent
I wold that he hym self were with yow here."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2819.

And put on sullen black, incontinent.
Shak., Rich. II., v. 6.

So he took his old flat cap, and threadbare blue cloak, and, as I said before, he will be here incontinent.
Scott, Kenilworth, xix.

incontinently (in-kon'ti-nent-li), adv. 1. In an incontinent manner; without restraint; with unrestrained appetites or passions; specifically, with undue indulgence of the sexual appetite. —2. Without holding back; without delay; forthwith; at once.

Who, beeing willyng to haue the matche made, was content incontinentlye to procure the meanes.
Lyly, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 83.

I will incontinently drown myself. Shak., Othello, i. 3.

The rabble incontinently took to their heels; even the burgomasters were not slow in evacuating the premises.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 458.

He enjoined the generals incontinently to hang and strangle all persons the moment they should be taken.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 189.

incontracted† (in-kon-trak'ted), a. Not contracted; uncontracted.

This dialect uses the incontracted termination both in nouns and verbs. Blackwall, Sacred Classicks, i. 288.

incontrollable (in-kon-trō'la-bl), a. [Formerly also incontroulable; < F. incontrôlable; as in-[3] + controllable.] Not controllable; uncontrollable. [Rare.]

Absolute, irresistible, incontroulable power.
Bp. Mountagu, Appeal to Cæsar, v.

incontrollably (in-kon-trō'la-bli), adv. [Formerly also incontroulably; < incontrollable + -ly[2].] Uncontrollably. [Rare.]

As a man thinks or desires in his heart, such indeed he is, for then most truly, because most incontroulably, he acts himself. South, Works, VIII. i.

incontrovertibility (in-kon-trō-vėr-ti-bil'i-ti), n. [< incontrovertible: see -bility.] The state or quality of being incontrovertible.

incontrovertible (in-kon-trō-vėr'ti-bl), a. [= Sp. incontrovertible = Pg. incontrovertivel = It. incontrovertibile, as in-[3] + controvertible.] Not controvertible; too clear or certain to admit of dispute or controversy.

incontrovertibleness (in-kon-trō-vėr'ti-bl-nes), n. Incontrovertibility.

incontrovertibly (in-kon-trō-vėr'ti-bli), adv. In an incontrovertible manner.

inconvenience (in-kon-vē'niens), n. [< ME. inconvenience, ynconvēnyns, < OF. inconvenience (also inconvenance), F. inconvenance = Sp. Pg. inconveniencia = It. inconvenienza, < LL. inconvenientia, inconsistency, ML. inconvenience, < L. inconvenien(t-)s, inconsistent: see inconvenient.] 1. The quality of being inconvenient; want of convenience.—2. Incommodiousness; embarrassing character; troublesomeness; unfitness: as, the inconvenience of an ill-planned house.

All this inconuenience grew by misuse of one word, which being otherwise spoken & in some sort qualified had easily holpen all.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 226.

He only is like to endure austerities who has already found the inconvenience of pleasures.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, Ded.

3. That which incommodes or gives trouble or uneasiness; anything that impedes or hampers; disadvantage; difficulty.

Yf thou be trobyllyd with ynconvenyens, Arme the alway with Inward pacyens.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 70.

Is not this exposition playne? This taketh away all inconueniences? By this exposition God is not the auctor of euill? Barnes, Works, p. 280.

Man is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment. Tillotson.

=Syn. Awkwardness, unwieldiness, incommodiousness, trouble, annoyance.

inconvenience (in-kon-vē'niens), v. t.; pret. and pp. inconvenienced, ppr. inconveniencing. [< inconvenience, n.] To put to inconvenience; incommode.

For it is not the variety of opinions, but our own perverse wills, who think it meet that all should be conceited as our selves are, which hath so inconvenienced the church. Hales, Golden Remains, Rom. xiv. 1.

The early Spanish missionaries in America were inconvenienced by finding that the only native word they could use for God also meant devil.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 153.

inconveniency (in-kon-vē'nien-si), n.; pl. inconveniencies (-siz). [As inconvenience: see -cy.] Same as inconvenience. [Rare.]

I think that the want of seasonable Showrs is one of the greatest Inconveniencies that this part of the Country suffers. Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 84.

To attain the greatest number of advantages with the fewest inconveniencies. Goldsmith, Pref. to Hist. Eng.

inconvenient (in-kon-vē′nient), a. [< ME. inconvenient, < OF. inconvenient, F. inconvénient = Pr. inconvenient, inconvenien = Sp. Pg. It. inconveniente, < L. inconvenien(t-)s, not accordant, inconsistent, < in- priv. + convenien(t-)s, accordant, convenient: see convenient.] Not convenient. (a) Giving trouble or uneasiness; embarrassing; incommodious; inopportune: as, an inconvenient house; inconvenient customs.

Th' emphatic speaker dearly loves t' oppose,
In contact inconvenient, nose to nose!
Cowper, Conversation, l. 270.

(b) Unfit; unsuitable; inexpedient.

Time may come, when men
With angels may participate, and find
No inconvenient diet nor too light fare.
Milton, P. L., v. 495.

=Syn. Troublesome, cumbrous, cumbersome, unwieldy, awkward, unhandy.

inconveniently (in-kon-vē′nient-li), adv. In an inconvenient manner; so as to cause trouble or embarrassment; incommodiously.

You speak unseemly and inconveniently, so to be against the officers for taking of rewards.
Latimer, 5th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

There is many an holy soul that dwels inconveniently, in a crazy, tottering, ruinous cottage, ready to drop downe daily upon his head. Bp. Hall, Mourners in Sion.

inconversable (in-kon-vėr′sa-bl), a. [= Sp. inconversable = It. inconversabile; as in-[3] + conversable.] Not conversable; uncommunicative; unsocial; reserved.

inconversant (in-kon′vėr-sant), a. [< in-[3] + conversant.] Not conversant; not acquainted or familiar.

Though himself not inconversant with these, he did not perceive of what utility they could be. Sir W. Hamilton.

inconverted† (in-kon-vėr′ted), a. [< in-[3] + converted.] Not converted or turned.

Wheresoever they rested, remaining inconverted, and possessing one point of the compass, whilst the wind perhaps had passed the two and thirty.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 10.

inconvertibility (in-kon-vėr-ti-bil′i-ti), n. [< LL. inconvertibilita(t-)s, unchangeableness, < inconvertibilis, unchangeable: see inconvertible.] The quality of being inconvertible; incapability of being converted into or exchanged for something else: as, the inconvertibility of banknotes or other currency into gold or silver.

inconvertible (in-kon-vėr′ti-bl), a. [= F. inconvertible = Sp. inconvertible = Pg. inconvertivel = It. inconvertibile, < LL. inconvertibilis, unchangeable, < in- priv. + convertibilis, changeable: see convertible.] Not convertible; incapable of being converted into or exchanged for something else: as, one metal is inconvertible into another; inconvertible bonds (bonds that cannot be exchanged for others of a different tenor).

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the siege. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 10.

There could never exist any motive to make notes legally inconvertible, save for the purposes of state-banking.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 437.

inconvertibleness (in-kon-vėr′ti-bl-nes), n Inconvertibility.

inconvertibly (in-kon-vėr′ti-bli), adv. So as not to be convertible or transmutable.

inconvincible (in-kon-vin′si-bl), a. [= OF. inconvincible = Sp. inconvencible, < LL. inconvincibilis, not convincible, < L. in-, not, + convincibilis*, convincible.] Not convincible; incapable of being convinced.

None are so inconvincible as your half-witted people.
Government of the Tongue, p. 195.

inconvincibly (in-kon-vin′si-bli), adv. So as not to be capable of being convinced. Sir T. Browne.

incony†, a. [Prob. < F. inconnu, unknown (< L. incognitus, unknown: see incognito), used like the ult. related uncouth, in the abbr. form unco, in the sense of 'strange, rare, fine.' Cf. unco.] Rare; fine; pretty.

O' my troth, most sweet jests! most incony vulgar wit!
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 1.

O, a most incony body!
Middleton, Blurt, Master-Constable, ii. 2.

O superdainty canon, vicar incony!
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 1.

incoop†, v. t. [Also incoup; < in-[1] + coop.] To coop in; inclose.

With sodain blindness [Elisha] smites the Syrian Troup
The which in Dothan did him round incoup.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Schisme.

incoördinate (in-kō-ôr′di-nāt), a. [< in-[3] + coördinate.] Not coördinate.

incoördinated (in-kō-ôr′di-nā-ted), a. Incoördinate.

incoördination (in-kō-ôr-di-nā′shọn), n. [= F. incoordination; as in-[3] + coördination.] Lack of coördination.

incopresentability (in-kō-prē-zen-ta-bil′i-ti), n. [< incopresentable: see -bility.] The character of being incopresentable. [Rare.]

Certain sensations or movements are an absolute bar to the simultaneous presentation of other sensations or movements. We cannot see an orange as at once yellow and green, though we can feel it at once as both smooth and cold; we cannot open and close the same hand at the same moment, but we can open one hand while closing the other. Such incopresentability or contrariety is thus more than mere difference, and occurs only between presentations belonging to the same sense or to the same group of movements. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 46.

incopresentable (in-kō-prē-zen′ta-bl), a. [< in-[3] + co- + presentable.] Not presentable together. [Rare.]

At the beginning, whatever we regard as the earliest differentiation of sound might have been incopresentable with the earliest differentiation of colour, if sufficiently diffused, just as now a field of sight all blue is incopresentable with one all red. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 46.

incoronate (in-kor′ọ-nāt), a. [< L. as if incoronatus*, pp. of incoronare*, < in, in, on, + coronare, crown: see crown, v. Cf. encrown.] Crowned. [Rare.]

I saw hither come a Mighty One,
With sign of victory incoronate.
Longfellow, tr. of Dante's Inferno, iv. 53.

incorporal† (in-kôr′pọ-ral), a. [= F. incorporel = Pr. Sp. incorporal = It. incorporale, < L. incorporalis, bodiless, < in- priv. + corporalis, bodily: see corporal[1].] 1. Not in bodily form; incorporeal.

Alas, how is 't with you,
That you do bend your eye on vacancy,
And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4.

2. Not consisting of matter; immaterial.

Learned men have not resolved us whether light be corporal or incorporal. Raleigh.

incorporality† (in-kôr-pọ-ral′i-ti), n. [= F. incorporalité = It. incorporalità, < LL. incorporalita(t-)s, bodilessness, < L. incorporalis, bodiless: see incorporal.] The quality of being incorporal; immateriality; incorporeality.

incorporally† (in-kôr′pọ-ral-i), adv. Without matter or a body; immaterially; incorporeally.

incorporate[1] (in-kôr′pọ-rāt), v.; pret. and pp. incorporated, ppr. incorporating. [< L. incorporatus, pp. of incorporare (> It. incorporare = Sp. Pg. incorporar = Pr. encorporar, incorporar = F. incorporer), unite to a body, embody, < in, in, + corporare, embody: see corporate.]

I. trans. 1. To form into a body; combine, as different individuals, elements, materials, or ingredients, into one body.

The Apostle affirmeth plainly of all men Christian that, be they Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, they are all incorporated into one company, they all make but one body.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 1.

The process of mixing [gunpowder] is in some mills dispensed with entirely, the incorporating mills being made to do the work of the drum; but it causes more waste.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 311.

2. To unite with a body or substance; unite intimately; work in; introduce and combine so as to form a part.

To them who are incorporated into Christ, their head, there can be no beheading. Donne, Letters, lxxvi.

The Hans-Towns, being a Body-politic incorporated in the Empire, complain'd hereof to the Emperor.
Howell, Letters, I. vi. 3.

Every animal sustains itself and grows by incorporating either the materials composing other animals or those composing plants. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 448.

3. To place in a body; give material form to; incarnate; embody.

The idolaters who worshipped their images as gods supposed some spirit to be incorporated therein.
Stillingfleet.

4. To form into a body corporate or politic; constitute as a corporation, with power to act as one person and have perpetual succession; confer corporate rights upon: as, to incorporate a city or a town; to incorporate a bank or a railroad company.

Izacke says that "the cordwainers and curriers were first incorporated by grant under the common seal of the city 21 R. II. 1387."
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 331, note.

Hence merchants, unimpeachable of sin
Against the charities of domestic life,
Incorporated, seem at once to lose Their nature. Cowper, Task, iv. 678.

Who do not believe Congress has the power to incorporate a bank, under any form.
D. Webster, Senate, March 18, 1834.

=Syn. 1 and 2. To blend, merge, consolidate.

II. intrans. To unite with another body so as to make a part of it; be mixed, blended, or combined; be worked in: usually followed by with.

Painters' colours and ashes do better incorporate with oil. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He never suffers wrong so long to grow,
And to incorporate with right so far,
As it might come to seem the same in show.
Daniel, Civil Wars, v.

I'll wed my Daughter to an Egyptian Mummy, ere she shall incorporate with a contemner of Sciences, and a defamer of virtue. Congreve, Love for Love, ii. 5.

Far from incorporating with them, he was regarded as a foreigner and an enemy. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 15.

incorporate[1] (in-kôr′pọ-rāt), a. [< L. incorporatus, pp.: see the verb.] Incorporated; united in one body; mixed; conjoined; intimately associated.

"True is it, my incorporate friends," quoth he [the belly], "That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon." Shak., Cor., i. 1.

We most heartily thank thee, for that thou . . . dost assure us . . . that we are very members incorporate in the mystical body of thy Son.
Book of Common Prayer, Communion Office.

Gazing on thee, sullen tree,
Sick for thy stubborn hardihood,
I seem to fail from out my blood
And grow incorporate into thee.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, ii.

incorporate[2] (in-kôr′pọ-rāt), a. [< in-[3] + corporate.] 1. Not corporeal; not bodily or material; not having a material body.

Moses forbore to speak of angels, and things invisible and incorporate. Raleigh.

2. Not corporate; not existing as a corporation. [Rare and doubtful.]

incorporation (in-kôr-pọ-rā′shọn), n. [< ME. incorporacion, < OF. and F. incorporation = Pr. incorporatio = Sp. incorporación = Pg. incorporação = It. incorporazione, < LL. incorporatio(n-), an embodying, embodiment, incorporation, < incorporare, embody, incorporate: see incorporate[1].] The act of incorporating, or the state of being incorporated. (a) The act of combining or mixing different ingredients into one mass; specifically, in med., the mixture or combination of drugs with liquids or soft substances in order to give them a certain degree of consistence.

A mercurial spirit must be superadded, which by its activity may . . . promote the more exquisite mixture and incorporation of the ingredients. Boyle, Works, I. 546.

(b) The act of uniting with another body, substance, or mass; combination into a structure or organization; intimate union.

In him we actually are, by our actual incorporation into that society which hath him for their head.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

The incorporation of one town with another, though effected with brilliant results in the early history of Attika, involved such a disturbance of all the associations which in the Greek mind clustered about the conception of a city that it was quite impracticable on any large or general scale. J. Fiske, Amer. Pol. Ideas, p. 59.

(c) The act of placing in a body, or of giving material form; incarnation; embodiment. [Rare.] (d) In law, the formation or existence of a legal or political body by the union of individuals, constituting an artificial person.

This yere, there was a greate controversye betwene the Mayor and Citesens of the one partie, and the companye of the Taylors of the other partie, for and concernynge a new incorporacion. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 302.

(e) The body so formed. [For this sense the more appropriate word is corporation.]—Articles of incorporation. See articles of association, under article.—Incorporation by reference, the bringing into one document, in legal effect, of the contents of another by referring to the latter in such manner as to adopt it. Thus, the rule that a deed of lands must describe or identify the land is satisfied by its referring to another specified deed, the description in which is then said to be incorporated by reference.

incorporative (in-kôr′pọ-rā-tiv), a. [< incorporate[1] + -ive.] Tending to incorporate. Specifically applied in philology to languages, also called intercalative and polysynthetic, as the Basque and the languages of the North American Indians, which tend to combine the various modifiers of the verb, as the object and adverbs, into one word with it. Thus, in Basque, hoponi, to wash, hopocuni, to wash hands, hopoaduni, to wash feet.

incorporator (in-kôr′pọ-rā-tọr), n. [= It. incorporatore; as incorporate[1] + -or.] One who forms a corporation; specifically, one of the persons named in an act of incorporation; one of the original members of an incorporated body or company.

Mr. . . . of Georgia expressed a fear that the incorporators would, after getting their Bill, come back and ask the Government to maintain the enterprise by subscriptions. The Engineer, LXVII. 58.

incorporeal (in-kôr-pō′rē-al), a. [< in-[3] + corporeal. Cf. Sp. incorpóreo = It. incorporeo, < L. incorporeus, bodiless, < in- priv. + corporeus, bodily: see corporeal.] 1. Not corporeal; not consisting of matter, or not having a material body; immaterial.

This time, because it is an incorporeal thing, and not subject to sense, we mock ourselves the fineliest out of it.
B. Jonson, Epicœne, i. 1.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms Reduced their shapes immense.
Milton, P. L., i. 789.

2. In law, existing in contemplation of law, and enjoyable as a right (as distinguished from that which has tangible form), as a franchise, or a right of way.—Incorporeal hereditament. See hereditament. =Syn. 1. Unsubstantial, spiritual, disembodied.

incorporealism (in-kôr-pō′rē-al-izm), n. [< incorporeal + -ism.] The condition of being incorporeal; immateriality; incorporeal spiritual existence, or belief in such existence.

So in like manner did all the other ancient atomists generally, before Democritus, joyn theology and incorporealism with their atomical physiology.
Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 27.

incorporealist (in-kôr-pō′rē-al-ist), n. [< incorporeal + -ist.] One who believes in incorporealism or incorporeal existence.

Those atomick physiologies that were before Democritus and Leucippus were all of them incorporealists.
Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 26.

incorporeality (in-kôr-pō-rē-al′i-ti), n. [< incorporeal + -ity.] The character of being incorporeal; incorporeity.

incorporeally (in-kôr-pō′rē-al-i), adv. In an incorporeal manner; without body or embodiment; immaterially.

The sense of hearing striketh the spirits more immediately than the other senses, and more incorporeally than the smelling. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 124.

incorporeity (in-kôr-pō-rē′i-ti), n. [= F. incorporéité = Pr. incorporeitat = Sp. incorporeidad = Pg. incorporeidade = It. incorporeità; as incorpore(al) + -ity.] The quality of being incorporeal; disembodied existence; immateriality.

incorporing†, n. [ME., verbal n. of incorpor*, < L. incorporare, embody: see incorporate[1].] Incorporation.

Eek of our materes encorporing.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 262.

incorpse† (in-kôrps′), v. t. [< in-[2] + corpse, body.] To incorporate.

He grew into his seat,
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorps'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7.

incorrect (in-kọ-rekt′), a. [= F. incorrect = Sp. Pg. incorrecto = It. incorretto, < L. incorrectus, uncorrected, unimproved, < in- priv. + correctus, correct: see correct.] 1. Not correct in form or structure; not according to a copy or model, or to established rule; faulty.

The piece, you think, is incorrect?
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 45.

2. Not correct as to fact; inaccurate; erroneous; untrue: as, an incorrect statement, narration, or calculation.—3. Not correct in manner or character; improper; irregular; disorderly: as, incorrect habits.

I will therefore only observe to you that the wit of the last age was yet more incorrect than their language.
Dryden, Def. of Epil. to Conq. of Granada.

4†. Not corrected or regulated; not chastened into proper obedience.

'Tis unmanly grief;
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 2.

incorrection† (in-kọ-rek′shọn), n. [= F. incorrection = Sp. incorrección = Pg. incorrecção = It. incorrezione, < L. as if incorrectio(n-)*, < incorrectus, incorrect: see incorrect.] Want of correction; incorrectness.

The unbridled swing or incorrection of ill nature maketh one odious. Arnway, The Tablet (1661), p. 9.

incorrectly (in-kọ-rekt′li), adv. In an incorrect manner; inaccurately; not exactly: as, incorrectly copied; incorrectly stated.

incorrectness (in-kọ-rekt′nes), n. 1. The condition or quality of being incorrect; want of conformity to truth or to a standard or rule; inaccuracy.—2. That which is incorrect; an error.

As to his speech, you see it; people hold it very cheap, tho' several incorrectnesses have been altered in the printed copy. Gray, Letters, I. 139.

incorrespondence (in-kor-e-spon′dens), n. [< in-[3] + correspondence.] Lack of correspondence; disproportion. Coleridge.

incorrespondency (in-kor-e-spon′den-si), n. Same as incorrespondence.

incorresponding (in-kor-e-spon′ding), a. [< in-[3] + corresponding.] Not corresponding. Coleridge.

incorrigibility (in-kor′i-ji-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. incorrigibilité = Sp. incorregibilidad = Pg. incorrigibilidade = It. incorrigibilità, < ML. incorrigibilita(t-)s, < LL. incorrigibilis, incorrigible: see incorrigible.] The quality or state of being incorrigible; incapability of correction or amendment.

incorrigible (in-kor′i-ji-bl), a. and n. [= F. incorrigible = Sp. incorregible = Pg. incorrigivel = It. incorrigibile, incorreggibile, < ML. incorrigibilis, not corrigible, < in- priv. + corrigibilis, corrigible: see corrigible.] I. a. 1. Incapable of being corrected or amended.

What are their thoughts of things, but variety of incorrigible errour? Sir R. L'Estrange.

2. Bad beyond correction or reform; irreclaimable: as, an incorrigible sinner or drunkard.

There are not only diseases incurable in physic, but cases indissolvable in laws, vices incorrigible in divinity.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 9.

He was long considered as an incorrigible dunce.
Goldsmith, Taste.

=Syn. Incurable, hopeless, irrecoverable, irreclaimable; graceless, shameless, hardened.

II. n. One who is incapable of amendment or reform.

A small room where my incorrigibles are kept for forty hours without food in solitary confinement.
Livingstone's Life Work, p. 424.

incorrigibleness (in-kor′i-ji-bl-nes), n. Incorrigibility; the quality of not admitting of correction.

What we call penitence becomes a sad attestation of our incorrigibleness. Decay of Christian Piety.

I would not have chiding used, much less blows, till obstinacy and incorrigibleness make it absolutely necessary. Locke.

incorrigibly (in-kor′i-ji-bli), adv. In an incorrigible manner; irreclaimably.

incorrodible (in-kọ-rō′di-bl), a. [< in-[3] + corrodible.] Incapable of being corroded.

incorrupt (in-kọ-rupt′), a. [= OF. incorrupt = Sp. Pg. incorrupto = It. incorrotto, < L. incorruptus, uninjured, not corrupt, < in- priv. + corruptus, corrupt: see corrupt.] 1. Not corrupt physically; not affected by corruption or decay; not marred, impaired, or spoiled: used of organic matter of any kind.

And mortal food, as may dispose him best
For dissolution, wrought by sin, that first Distempered all things, and of incorrupt Corrupted. Milton, P. L., xi. 56.

2. Not corrupt spiritually; not defiled or depraved; pure; sound; untainted; above the influence of corruption or bribery.

Most wise, most honourable, and most incorrupt judges.
Shirley, The Traitor, iii. 1.

incorrupted† (in-kọ-rup′ted), a. [< in-[3] + corrupted.] Not corrupted; uncorrupted.

And breath'd into their incorrupted breasts
A curious wish, which did corrupt their will.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, Int. (ed. 1819).

incorruptibility (in-kọ-rup-ti-bil′i-ti), n. [< ME. incorruptibilitee, incorrumptibiletee* = F. incorruptibilité = Pr. incorruptibilitat = Sp. incorruptibilidad = It. incorrottibilità, < LL. incorruptibilita(t-)s, < incorruptibilis, incorruptible: see incorruptible.] The character or quality of being incorruptible; incapability of corruption.

The vertu of brennynge watir is sich that naturely it drawith out of gold alle the vertues and propirtees of it, and it holdith incorrumptibiletee and an euene heete.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 7.

incorruptible (in-kọ-rup′ti-bl), a. and n. [< ME. incorruptible, < OF. (also F.) incorruptible = Sp. incorruptible = Pg. incorruptivel = It. incorrottibile, < LL. incorruptibilis, incorruptible, < in- priv. + corruptibilis, corruptible: see corruptible.] I. a. 1. Not corruptible physically; incapable of corruption or decay.

The vertu therof [quintessence of antimony] is incorruptible and merueilous profitable.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 10.

The dead shall be raised incorruptible. 1 Cor. xv. 52.

2. Not corruptible morally; not liable to perversion or debasement; that cannot be affected by contaminating influences, especially bribery or hope of gain or advancement: as, incorruptible principles; an incorruptible judge.

An integrity incorruptible, and an ability that always rose to the need.
Emerson, Address, Soldiers' Monument, Concord.

II. n. pl. [cap.] Eccles., the Aphthartodocetæ.

incorruptibleness (in-kọ-rup′ti-bl-nes), n. Incorruptibility.

incorruptibly (in-kọ-rup′ti-bli), adv. In an incorruptible manner; so as not to admit of corruption.

incorruption (in-kọ-rup′shọn), n. [= F. incorruption = Sp. incorrupción = Pg. incorrupção = It. incorruzione, < LL. incorruptio(n-), incorruption, < L. incorruptus, not corrupt: see incorrupt.] The condition or quality of being incorrupt; absence of or exemption from corruption.

It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption.
1 Cor. xv. 42.

incorruptive (in-kọ-rup′tiv), a. [= OF. incorruptif; as in-[3] + corruptive.] Not liable to corruption or decay. [Rare.]

[The lyre] struck
For sounds of triumph, to proclaim her toils
Upon the lofty summit, round her brow
To twine the wreath of incorruptive praise.
Akenside, Pleasures of Imagination, i. 435.

incorruptly (in-kọ-rupt′li), adv. In an incorrupt manner; without corruption.

Observation will show us many deep counsellors of state and judges to demean themselves incorruptly in the settled course of affairs. Milton, Church-Government, i. 1.

incorruptness (in-kọ-rupt′nes), n. The condition or quality of being incorrupt, physically or morally; exemption from decay or deterioration; immunity from contaminating influences.

Probity of mind, integrity, and incorruptness of manners is preferable to fine parts and subtile speculations.
Woodward.

incounter†, v. and n. An obsolete form of encounter.

incourage†, incouragement†, etc. Obsolete forms of encourage, etc.

incrassate (in-kras′āt), v.; pret. and pp. incrassated, ppr. incrassating. [< LL. incrassatus, pp. of incrassare (> Pg. incrassar = Sp. incrasar), make thick, < L. in, in, + crassare, make thick, < crassus, thick: see crass.] I. trans. To make thick or thicker; thicken; specifically, in phar., to make thicker, as a fluid, by the mixture of something less fluid, or by evaporating the more fluid parts.

Some find sepulchral vessels containing liquors which time hath incrassated into jellies.
Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, iii.

Of such concernment too is drink and food,
To incrassate and attenuate the blood.
Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, iv.

II. intrans. To become thick or thicker.

Their spirits fattened and incrassated within them.
Hammond, Works, IV. 651.

incrassate (in-kras′āt), a. [= Pg. incrassado, < LL. incrassatus, pp.: see the verb.] 1. Thickened, or made thick or thicker; inspissated; fattened; swollen from fatness.

Their understandings were so gross within them, being fattened and incrassate with magical phantasms.
Hammond, Works, IV. 657.

2. In bot., becoming thicker by degrees; swelling or swollen.—3. In entom., gradually swollen in one part, generally toward the apex.—Incrassate antennæ, such antennæ as are much thickened in one part, but not at the base or apex.—Incrassate femora, such femora as are much thickened and formed for leaping, as in the grasshoppers.—Incrassate joint, a joint thicker than the adjoining ones.—Incrassate margin, a margin somewhat swollen and rounded, without any sharp edge.

incrassated (in-kras′ā-ted), a. Same as incrassate.

incrassation (in-kra-sā′shọn), n. [< incrassate + -ion.] 1. The act of incrassating or thickening, or the state of becoming incrassated or thickened; inspissation; fatty enlargement.

The incrassation of the hind legs does not, as in the Halticæ, indicate saltatorial powers. Westwood.

2. A swelling out as if from fatness; a thickening.

Whatsoever properly nourisheth before its assimulation, by the action of natural heat it receiveth a corpulency or incrassation progressional unto its conversion.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 20.

incrassative (in-kras′ā-tiv), a. and n. [< incrassate + -ive.] I. a. Having the quality of thickening.

II. n. That which has the power to thicken; specifically, a medicine, as a mucilaginous substance, formerly believed to thicken the humors when too thin.

The two latter indicate restringents to stench, and incrassatives to thicken the blood. Harvey.

increasable (in-krē′sa-bl), a. [< increase + -able.] Capable of being increased.

increasableness (in-krē′sa-bl-nes), n. The quality of being increasable.

The necessity of enlarging infinitely means no more than that we find an indefinite increasableness of some of our ideas, or an impossibility of supposing any end of them. Law, Enquiry, i.

increase (in-krēs′), v.; pret. and pp. increased, ppr. increasing. [Formerly also encrease; < ME. increassen, incressen, incresen, encressen, encrescen, encresen, < OF. encreiser, encreistre, encroistre, encricier* = Pr. encreisser = It. increscere, < L. increscere, increase, < in, in, on, + crescere, grow: see crescent, crease[2].] I. intrans. To become greater in any respect; become enlarged, extended, or multiplied; grow or advance in size, quantity, number, degree, etc.; augment; multiply; wax, as the moon.

Of been the swarmes nowe begynne encrese,
Nowe in the hony combe is bredde the bee.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 155.

The Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another. 1 Thes. iii. 12.

The people also besprinkle the Bride with wheat, crying out, Increase and multiplie. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 214.

While the stars burn, the moons increase,
And the great ages onward roll. Tennyson, To J. S.

II. trans. To make greater in any respect; enlarge or extend in bulk, quantity, number, degree, etc.; add to; enhance; aggravate: opposed to diminish.

Nothynge elles thei diden but ete and drinke, and encreced her peple that assembled euery day.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 231.

Hie thee from this slaughterhouse,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 1.

I can never see one of those plays which are now written, but it increases my admiration of the ancients.
Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poesy.

This increases the difficulties tenfold.
Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 286.

increase (in′krēs, formerly also in-krēs′), n. [< ME. encres, encrese, encresse, < OF. (AF.) encresse, encrece, encreas, increase; from the verb.] 1. A growing larger, as in size, number, quantity, degree, etc.; augmentation; enlargement; extension; multiplication.

Dear goddess, hear!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
To make this creature fruitful! . . .
Dry up in her the organs of increase.
Shak., Lear, i. 4.

God made the woman for the use of man,
And for the good and increase of the world.
Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

2. The amount or number added to the original stock, or by which the original stock is augmented; increment; profit; interest; produce; issue; offspring.

Take thou no usury of him, or increase. Lev. xxv. 36.

All the increase of thine house shall die in the flower of their age. 1 Sam. ii. 33.

Beyond Roanoak are many Isles full of fruits and other Naturall increases.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 85.

3. In astron., the period of increasing light or an increasing luminous phase; the waxing, as of the moon.

Seeds, hair, nails, hedges, and herbs will grow soonest, if set or cut in the increase of the moon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Imperceptible increase. See imperceptible. = Syn. 1 and 2. Enlargement, growth, addition, accession, expansion.

increaseful† (in-krēs′fụl), a. [< increase, n., + -ful.] Full of increase; abundantly productive.

To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 958.

increasement† (in-krēs′mẹnt), n. [< increase + -ment.] Increase; aggrandizement.

Then it is worthy the consideration, how this may import England in the increasement of the greatnesse of France, by the addition of such a countrey.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 56.

increaser (in-krē′sėr), n. One who or that which increases.

The medicine being the increaser of the disease, as when fire is quenched with oile. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 325.

Craven's traction-increaser . . . has lately been tried on the New York, Lake Erie, and Western.
The Engineer, LXV. 425.

increase-twist (in′krēs-twist), n. In firearms and ordnance, a system of rifling in which the twist or inclination of the spiral grooves to the axis of the bore increases from the breech to the muzzle. See twist.

increasingly (in-krē′sing-li), adv. In an increasing manner; growingly: as, increasingly uncomfortable.

increate (in′krē-āt), a. [ME. increate; = F. increé = Sp. Pg. increado = It. increato; < L. in- priv. + creatus, created: see create.] Not created; uncreated. [Poetical.]

Myn owen sone with me increate
Schalle doun be sente to be incarnate. Lydgate.

Since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light
Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate.
Milton, P. L., iii. 6.

increated† (in-krē-ā′ted), a. Same as increate.

The unexpressible notions rising out of a fruitive contemplation of the increated verity.
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, I. xxi. § 1.

incredibile dictu (in-krē-dib′i-lē dik′tū). [L.: incredibile, neut. of incredibilis, incredible; dictu, abl. supine of dicere, say: see diction.] Incredible to relate; strange to say.

incredibility (in-kred-i-bil′i-ti), n.; pl. incredibilities (-tiz). [= F. incrédibilité = Sp. incredibilidad = Pg. incredibilidade = It. incredibilità, < LL. incredibilita(t-)s, incredibility, incredulity, < L. incredibilis, incredible: see incredible.] 1. The quality of being incredible or beyond belief.

For objects of incredibility, none are so removed from all appearance of truth as those of Corneille's Andromede.
Dryden.

2. That which is incredible.

Heat his mind with incredibilities. Johnson.

incredible (in-kred′i-bl), a. [= OF. incredible (also vernacularly increable, F. incroyable) = Sp. increíble = Pg. incredivel, increivel, incrivel = It. incredibile, < L. incredibilis, not to be believed, < in- priv. + credibilis, to be believed: see credible.] 1. Not credible; that cannot be credited; surpassing the possibility of belief.

Which might amaze the beholders, and seeme incredible to the hearers. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 298.

Is it incredible, or can it seem
A dream to any, except those that dream,
That man should love his Maker?
Cowper, Conversation.

An oak growing in the sea, and a sea-weed on the top of a hill, are incredible combinations.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 27.

2. Surpassing belief as to what is possible; hard to believe; unimaginable; inconceivable.

In Asia there is no Beer drank at all, but Water, Wine, and an incredible variety of other Drinks.
Howell, Letters, ii. 54.

incredibleness (in-kred′i-bl-nes), n. Incredibility.

The very strangeness, or incredibleness, of the story.
Casaubon, Credulity and Incredulity (1668), p. 180.

incredibly (in-kred′i-bli), adv. 1. In an incredible manner; in a manner to preclude belief.—2. Beyond prior belief or conception; unimaginably; inconceivably.

The arts are incredibly improved.
Hakewill, Apology, p. 245.

increditable† (in-kred′i-tạ-bl), a. [< in-[3] + creditable.] Discreditable.

Hypocrisy and dissimulation are always increditable, but in matters of religion monstrous.
Gentleman Instructed, p. 145.

incredited† (in-kred′i-ted), a. [< in-[3] + credited.] Discredited; disbelieved.

He [Hazael] was brought to this self-incredited mischief; as impossible as at first he judged it, at last he performed it. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 354.

incredulity (in-krē-dū′li-ti), n. [= OF. encredulitet, F. incrédulité = Pr. incredulitat = Sp. incredulidad = Pg. incredulidade = It. incredulità, < L. incredulita(t-)s, unbelief, < incredulus, unbelieving: see incredulous.] The quality of being incredulous or indisposed to believe; a withholding or refusal of belief; skepticism; unbelief.

Of every species of incredulity, religious unbelief is infinitely the most irrational. Buckminster.

The human mind not infrequently passes from one extreme to another; from one of implicit faith to one of absolute incredulity. Story, Speech, Cambridge, Aug. 31, 1826.
= Syn. Disbelief, distrust, doubt.

incredulous (in-kred′ū-lus), a. [= F. incrédule = Sp. Pg. It. incredulo, < L. incredulus, unbelieving, unbelievable, < in- priv. + credulus, believing: see credulous.] 1. Not credulous; not disposed to admit the truth of what is related; not given to believe readily; refusing or withholding belief; skeptical.

These [witnesses] may be so qualified as to their ability and fidelity that a man must be a fantastical incredulous fool to make any doubt of them.
Bp. Wilkins, Natural Religion, i. 1.

"I am the man." At which the woman gave A half-incredulous, half-hysterical cry.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

2†. Not easy to be believed; incredible.

No dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance.
Shak., T. N., iii. 4.

incredulously (in-kred′ū-lus-li), adv. In an incredulous manner; with incredulity.

incredulousness (in-kred′ū-lus-nes), n. Incredulity.

incremable† (in-krem′ạ-bl), a. [< OF. incremable, < LL. as if incremabilis,* < in- priv. + cremabilis, combustible, < L. cremare, burn: see cremate.] Incapable of being burned; incombustible.

Incombustible sheets made with a texture of asbestos, incremable flax, or salamander's wool.
Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, iii.

incremate (in-krē′māt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incremated, ppr. incremating. [< LL. as if incrematus,* pp. of incremare,* < L. in, in, + cremare, burn, cremate: see cremate.] To cremate.

incremation (in-krē-mā′shọn), n. [< LL. as if incrematio(n-),* < incremare,* burn: see incremate.] The act of burning or of consuming by fire, as a dead body; cremation.

Not very long after we passed those incremations I was seated in the drawing-room of the Bengal Club, with mirrors and lights. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 126.

★increment (in′krē-mẹnt), n. [= F. incrément = Sp. Pg. It. incremento, < L. incrementum, growth, increase, < increscere, increase: see increase.] 1. The act or process of increasing; a growing or swelling in bulk, quantity, number, value, or amount; augmentation.

Divers conceptions there are concerning its [the Nile's] increment or inundation. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 8.

Faith in every of its stages, at its first beginning, at its increment, at its greatest perfection, is a duty made up of the concurrence of the will and the understanding.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 146.

2. Something added; an increase or augmentation; specifically, in math., the excess (positive or negative) of the value which a function would have if its independent variable were increased by any amount, especially by unity, over the value which it has for any particular value of the variable; the difference of a function; also, an arbitrary supposed increase of an independent variable.

Here heaps of gold, there increments of honours.
Ford, Broken Heart, iv. 1.

All scale-readings begin at zero, and extend by practically uniform increments to the maximum reading.
Science, XIII. 99.

3. In rhet., a species of amplification which consists in magnifying the importance of a subject (person or thing) by stating or implying that it has no superior, or that the greatest of all others is inferior to it: as, Thou hast slain thy mother. What more can I say? Thou hast slain thy mother.—4. In Latin gram., a syllable in another form of a word additional to the number of syllables in the nominative singular of a noun, adjective, etc., or the second person singular of the present indicative active of a verb. The increment nearest the beginning of the word is called the first, and those succeeding it are the second and third respectively, the last syllable not being counted. Thus in i-[1]li-[2]ne-[3]ri-bus from i-ter, au-[1]di-[2]vis-[3]se-tis from au-di-o, au-dis, the increments are numbered as indicated.

5. In her., the state of the moon when crescent: as, the moon in her increment.—Method of increments, the calculus of finite differences, especially that part which treats of the differences and sums of different forms of functions.

incremental (in-krē-men′tal), a. [< increment + -al.] Pertaining to or in the nature of increment or increase.

The exclusion of the rule of "subtraction" and the substitution of what the writer calls "incremental or complementary addition." Nature, XXXIII. 29.

incrementation†, n. [ME. incrementacion, < ML. incrementatio(n-), increase, < L. incrementum, increase: see increment.] Increase; growth.

In Marche and September putacion
To chastens is incrementacion.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 217.

increpate† (in′krē-pāt), v. t. [< L. increpatus, pp. of increpare (> It. increpare = Sp. Pg. increpar = OF. increper, encreper), make a noise, exclaim against, < in, on, + crepare, make a noise: see crepitate.] To chide; rebuke.

increpation† (in-krē-pā′shọn), n. [= OF. increpation = Sp. increpación = Pg. increpação = It. increpazione, < LL. increpatio(n-), a chiding, < L. increpare, exclaim against, chide: see increpate.] A chiding or rebuking; censure.

God was angry; but yet . . . it was but such an anger as ended in an instruction rather than in an increpation.
Donne, Sermons, v.

When they desired to know the time of his restoring their kingdom, . . . his answer was a kinde of soft increpation to them, and a strong instruction to all times.
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, I. xvi. § 6.

increscent (in-kres′ẹnt), a. [< L. increscen(t-)s, ppr. of increscere, increase: see increase.] Increasing; growing; augmenting; swelling: specifically applied to the moon.

Heraldic representation of the moon increscent, or crescent increscent.

Between the increscent and decrescent moon.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

increst† (in-krest'), v. t. [< in-2 + crest.] To crest.

Two foaming billows flow'd upon her breast,
Which did their top with coral red increst.
Drummond, Sonnets, i. 13.

incriminate (in-krim'i-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incriminated, ppr. incriminating. [< ML. incriminatus, pp. of incriminare (> It. incriminare = Sp. Pg. incriminar = Pr. encriminar = F. incriminer), accuse of crime, < L. in, on, + criminare, accuse of crime: see criminate.] 1. To charge with a crime; accuse; criminate.

In cases in which the clerk . . . was accused, the clerical immunity from trial by the secular judge was freely recognised. If the ordinary claimed the incriminated clerk, the secular court surrendered him for ecclesiastical trial. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 399.

The evidence, it is said, does not incriminate the higher members of the corporation as individuals, although it shows that they assented to a loose general application of the city's funds. New York Times, March 2, 1887.

2. To make a subject of accusation; charge as a crime. [Rare.]

Fifteen years had passed since the incriminated acts were committed. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiii.

=Syn. 1. Accuse, Charge, Indict, etc. See accuse.

incriminatory (in-krim'i-nā-tō-ri), a. [< incriminate + -ory.] Tending to criminate; accusatory. Athenæum.

incroach†, incroachment†, etc. Obsolete forms of encroach, etc.

incroyable (F. pron. aṅ-krwo-yä'bl), n. [F., lit. incredible: see incredible.] In France, during the time of the Directory (about 1795–9), a man or woman who affected a grotesque and extreme foppishness in dress.

The republican [French] young man of fashion, the incroyable. Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 947.

incruciated† (in-krö'shi-ā-ted), a. [< in-3 + cruciated.] Untormented; free from torture.

His ignorance gave him . . . a kind of innocence, whereby he [Œdipus] might have passed away his life incruciated, without the sense of so fatal misfortunes.
Feltham, Resolves, ii. 31.

incruental† (in-krö-en'tal), a. [< L. incruentus, not made bloody, < in- priv. + cruentus, bloody, < cruor, blood.] Not bloody; not accompanied with blood.

He musters out as many places as he can find that make any mention of liturgy, oblation, holy victim, incruental sacrifice.
Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 408.

incrust, encrust (in-, en-krust'), v. t. [< OF. encrouster, F. encroûter, also incruster = Sp. Pg. incrustar = It. incrostare, < L. incrustare, cover with a rind or crust, < in, on, + crusta, crust: see crust.] 1. To cover with a crust; form a crust or coating on the surface of; coat; overlay: as, an ancient coin incrusted with rust.

In the Persian Gulf a ship had her copper bottom encrusted in the course of twenty months with a layer of coral two feet in thickness. Darwin, Coral Reefs, p. 106.

All the wonderful acuteness and dialectics of the Greek mind were employed for centuries in incrusting the Christian faith with the subtile and curious conceits of the Oriental systems. Stillé, Stud. Med. Hist., p. 256.

As Christianity spread over the Roman world, it became encrusted with pagan notions and observances.
J. Fiske, Idea of God, p. 79.

2. In decorative art, to cover with a different and generally more precious material in plates or pieces of appreciable thickness, requiring to be held in place by cramps, hooks, cement, or other appliances.

The principal [chapels of St. Peter's] are four, incrusted with most precious marbles and stones of various colours.
Evelyn, Diary, Rome, Nov. 19, 1644.

3. To apply or inlay, as mosaic, slabs of precious marbles, enameled tiles, or the like, so as to form a decoration or covering.

The form of the cross, the domes, the incrusted decoration [of St. Mark's], were all borrowed from the East, and all had their prototypes in Byzantine buildings.
C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 54.

In good [mosaic] work not a trace [of cement] should appear between the encrusted stones and the marble, not even when seen through a magnifying glass.
Birdwood, Indian Arts, II. 49.

Incrusted enamel. See enamel.—Incrusted work, in metal, work the surface of which is decorated by attaching to it ornaments also in metal, as silver on copper, copper on brass, etc. In some instances one metal is incrusted on another, as tin on brass, and then cut through in figured patterns. A modern mechanical method consists in painting the design on the metal surface in watercolor, then varnishing the unpainted parts, and placing the object in a dilute bath of nitric acid. After the painted parts are bitten in by the acid, the object is electroplated, the deposit forming on the unvarnished parts. On removing the varnish, the plated parts appear as incrusted.

Incrustata (in-krus-tā'tä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. incrustatus, incrustate: see incrustate, a.] A division of cyclostomatous polyzoans: same as Inarticulata, 2: opposed to Radicata.

incrustate (in-krus'tāt), v. t. [< L. incrustatus, pp. of incrustare, incrust: see incrust.] To incrust; form an incrustation on. [Rare.]

If it was covered with mud, it must have been incrustated mud. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, lxxxix.

Masses of calcareous tufa which have been formed upon the borders of incrustating springs.
J. Croll, Climate and Cosmology, p. 187.

incrustate (in-krus'tāt), a. [< L. incrustatus, pp.: see the verb.] 1. Incrusted.

The finer part of the wood will be turned into air, and the grosser stick baked and incrustate upon the sides of the vessel. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. In bot.: (a) Coated, as with earthy matter. (b) Growing so firmly to the pericarp as to appear to have but one integument: said of seeds. —3. Incrusting; forming a crust, as a polyzoan or a lichen.

incrustation (in-krus-tā'shon), n. [Also rarely encrustation; = F. incrustation = Sp. incrustación = Pg. incrustação, < LL. incrustatio(n-), < L. incrustare, incrust: see incrust.] 1. The act of incrusting; the act of covering or lining with any foreign substance; the state of being incrusted.

It [St. Mark's] is the purest example in Italy of the great school of architecture in which the ruling principle is the incrustation of brick with more precious materials.
Ruskin, Stones of Venice, II. iv. § 24.

2. A crust or coat of anything on the surface of a body; a covering, coating, or scale, as of mineral substances deposited by a spring or stream, or by the water in a steam-boiler; an efflorescence, as of salt or soda on the surface of the ground.

The application of hydrochloric acid removed the stalactite encrustation by which the letters had hitherto been obscured. Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, I. 235.

The country at this point is inexpressibly dreary and volcanic-looking, the salt incrustations lying thick upon the earth. O'Donovan, Merv, i.

A merely sceptical age will create nothing; but an age of uninquiring credulity will hand down to later generations its most sacred truths disfigured and imperilled by a thick incrustation of error.
H. N. Oxenham, Short Studies, p. 266.

3. An inlaying of anything, as a plaque, tile, lacquer, veneer, mosaic, or the like, into or upon the surface, as of a cabinet, mantelpiece, etc.

Had the whole church been finished as it was designed, it would have presented one splendid though bizarre effect of incrustation. J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 251.

4. An incrusted or inlaid object or substance.

The material of the structure was brick, but the whole surface of the building [St. Mark's], within and without, was to be covered with precious incrustations of mosaic or of marble.
C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 54.

The doorways are a labyrinth of intricate designs, in which the utmost elegance of form is made more beautiful by incrustations of precious agates and Alexandrine glass-work. J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 102.

Cameo incrustation. See cameo.

incrustive (in-krus'tiv), a. [< incrust + -ive.] Pertaining to a crust, or to the formation of a crust.

incrustment (in-krust'ment), n. [= It. incrostamento; as incrust + -ment.] That which is formed as a crust; incrustation; hence, any foreign matter with which something is overlaid or surrounded. Also encrustment.

The work of disengaging truth from its encrustment of error. Is. Taylor.

★incubate (in'kū-bāt), v.; pret. and pp. incubated, ppr. incubating. [< L. incubatus, pp. of incubare (> Sp. encobar, incubar = Pg. incubar), lie in or upon, < in, in, on, + cubare, lie.] I. trans. To sit upon for the purpose of hatching; hatch out, or produce by hatching: often used figuratively: as, to incubate eggs; to incubate a book or a project.

Still fewer [fishes] nidificate and incubate their ova.
Owen, Comp. Anat., viii.

II. intrans. 1. To sit, as on eggs, for the purpose of hatching; brood: as, a bird that incubates for two weeks.—2. In pathol., to go through the stage or process of incubation. See incubation, 2.

incubation (in-kū-bā'shon), n. [= F. incubation = Sp. incubación = Pg. incubação = It. incubazione, < L. incubatio(n-), < incubare, lie in or upon: see incubate.] 1. The act of sitting, as on eggs, for the purpose of hatching; brooding; hatching: often used figuratively, as of writings, schemes, etc.

First, the Swiss Republicks grew under the guardianship of the French monarch. The Dutch Republicks were hatched and cherished under the same incubation.
Burke, A Regicide Peace, ii.

Incubation is performed, as is well known, by the female of nearly all Birds. Encyc. Brit., III. 775.

2. In pathol., the unnoticed or unknown processes or changes which occur in the interval between the exposure to an infectious disease and the development of its first symptoms.

This [whooping-cough] has generally one week, or even two, of incubation before the first febrile and catarrhal symptoms appear. Quain, Med. Dict.

3. A lying in or within; specifically, the act of sleeping in a temple for the purpose of obtaining revelations by dreams, or in the hope of being visited by the god and relieved of some ailment, as in the Greek sanctuaries of Æsculapius.

This place was celebrated for the worship of Æsculapius, in whose temple incubation, i. e. sleeping for oracular dreams, was practised. E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 111.

A type of the usual method, which was called incubation or ἐγκοίμησις, is the oracle of Amphiaraus near Oropus, beside the spring where the hero had risen from the earth to become a god. The inquirer, after abstaining from wine for three days and from all food for twenty-four hours, slept in the temple on the skin of a ram which he had sacrificed. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 808.

Artificial incubation, the hatching of eggs by artificial warmth, as practised from antiquity in Egypt and China. Of late years this industry has become general in Europe and America.—Period of incubation. (a) In ornith., the length of time required to hatch eggs, or during which a bird incubates them. (b) In pathol., the period that elapses between the introduction of the morbific principle and the outbreak of the disease.

incubative (in'kū-bā-tiv), a. [< incubate + -ive.] Of or pertaining to incubation or the period of incubation; of the nature of incubation; in pathol., relating to the period during which a disease is supposed to be hatching in the system before manifesting itself.

The germs of all the incubative diseases are reproduced in the bodies of the sick. Quain, Med. Dict.

★incubator (in'kū-bā-tor), n. [< LL. incubator, one who lies in a place, < L. incubare, lie in or upon, incubate: see incubate.] One who or that which incubates, as a bird. Specifically—(a) A bird that sits upon or shows a disposition to sit upon eggs. (b) A machine for the artificial incubation of eggs. While many different incubators are in use, they are essentially alike

Incubator.

A A, hot-air tank; B B, tray for holding pans of water; C, C, egg-trays; D, D, ventilators; E, automatic regulator; F, rod connecting thermostat with regulator; G, lamp; H, thermostat; I, thermometer.

in principle, and comprise a case containing one or more drawers or trays for holding the eggs, some form of hot-water or hot-air apparatus (usually a lamp for heating), and, in the most practical forms, a thermostat of some kind for regulating the temperature, besides ventilators, appliances for saturating the heated air in the interior with moisture, etc. Some incubators are also fitted with appliances for turning the eggs without opening the machine.

The egg which the birds . . . cannot cover may be hatched artificially in an incubator. Stand. Nat. Hist., IV. 37.

(c) A suitable appliance for the artificial development of germs in the cultivation of micro-organisms.

Artificial cultivations of micro-organisms in suitable nourishing media in the incubator.
E. Klein.

(d) A couveuse.

incubatory (in-kū'bā-tō-ri), a. [< incubate + -ory.] Pertaining to incubation; employed in the process of incubation. See ovicyst.

The ascidiozooids develop incubatory pouches.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 617.

incube† (in-kūb'), v. t. [< in-2 + cube.] To make a cube of; place or fix as if forming part of a cube.

So that Prelaty . . . must be fain to inglobe or incube herself among the Presbyters.
Milton, Church-Government, i. 6.

incubi, n. Latin plural of incubus.

in-cubic (in'kū-bik), n. [< *in*1 + cubic.] In math., an inscribed cubic.

incubiture† (in-kū'bi-tūr), n. [< L. incubitus, pp. of incubare, lie upon: see incubate.] The act of incubating or brooding; incubation.

The incubiture of the female [bird] on the back of the male. Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 153.

Incubation or incubiture, a philosophical term for brooding or sitting upon eggs as birds do. Phillips.

The last [circumstance] is the use of those strings, as Cardan supposes, for the better keeping them together in this incubiture.
Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism, ii. 12.

incubous (ing'- or in'kū-bus), a. [< NL. incubus, adj., lying upon: see incubus.] In bot., imbricate in such a manner that the apex of a leaf lies on the base of the next one above, as in the Jungermanniaceæ.

incubus (ing'- or in'kū-bus), n.; pl. incubuses, incubi (-bus-ez, -bī). [ME. incubus; = F. incube = Sp. incubo = Pg. It. incubo; < LL. incubus, nightmare, ML. a demon supposed to be the cause of nightmare, < L. incubare, lie upon: see incubate.] 1. The nightmare. — 2. An imaginary being or demon, supposed to be the cause of nightmare; especially, such a being of the male sex who was supposed to consort with women in their sleep. In the middle ages this belief was accepted by the church and the law. Deformed children were supposed to be the results of such association. Compare succubus.

For ther as wont to walken was an elf,
Ther walketh now the lymytour hym self, . . .
Wommen may now go saufly up and doun;
In every bussh or under every tree,
Ther is noon oother incubus but he,
And he ne wol doon hem but dishonour.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 24.

Belial, the dissolutest spirit that fell,
The sensualest; and, after Asmodai,
The fleshliest Incubus. Milton, P. R., ii. 152.

A not less distinct product of the savage animistic theory of dreams, as real visits from personal spiritual beings, lasted on without a shift or break into the belief of mediæval Christendom. This is the doctrine of the incubi and succubi, those male and female demons which consort with men and women.
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 173.

3. Figuratively, a heavy or oppressive burden; especially, a heavy weight on the mind; anything that prevents the free use of the faculties.

Debt and usury is the incubus which weighs most heavily on the agricultural resources of Turkey.
Farley, Resources of Turkey.

4. [cap.] In entom., a genus of parasitic hymenopters of the family Braconidæ: synonymous with Microgaster of Latreille. Schrank, 1802.

incudal (ing'kū-dal), a. [< incus (incud-) + -al.] In zoöl. and anat., of or pertaining to the incus.

incudate (ing'kū-dāt), a. [< incus (incud-) + -ate[1].] Having an incus, as the mouth-parts of a rotifer: as, trophi incudate.

incudes, n. Plural of incus.

incudius (ing-kū'di-us), n.; pl. incudii (-ī). [NL., < L. incus (incud-), anvil: see incus.] A muscle or ligament of the tympanum, oftener called laxator tympani: correlated with malledius and stapedius. Coues, 1887.

in cuerpo. See cuerpo.

inculcate (in-kul'kāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inculcated, ppr. inculcating. [< L. inculcatus, pp. of inculcare (> It. inculcare = Sp. Pg. inculcar = F. inculquer), tread in, tread down, force upon, < in, in, on, + calcare, tread, < calx, heel: see calk[1].] To impress by frequent admonitions, or by forcible statement or argument; enforce or stamp upon the mind.

I shall be pardoned if I have dwelt long on an argument which I think . . . needs to be inculcated.
Locke, Human Understanding, III. v. 16.

Innocent had sent to London two persons charged to inculcate moderation, both by admonition and example.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

=Syn. Ingraft, Instil, etc. See implant.

inculcation (in-kul-kā'shon), n. [= F. inculcation = Sp. inculcacion = It. inculcazione; from the verb.] The act of inculcating or impressing by repeated admonitions; forcible or persistent teaching.

By these frequent inculcations of the Archbishop and some of his fellow Bishops, and by their discreet behaviour towards the Queen, she was at length brought off from the fancy of images. Strype, Abp. Parker, I. 193.

The days that are to follow must pass in the inculcation of precepts already collected, and assertions of tenets already received. Johnson, Rambler, No. 151.

inculcator (in-kul'kā-tor), n. [= Pg. inculcador = It. inculcatore, < LL. inculcator, < L. inculcare, tread in or down: see inculcate.] One who inculcates or enforces.

Des Cartes, . . . the greatest example and inculcator of this suspension [of assent], declares that he would have it practised only about human speculations, not about human actions. Boyle, Works, IV. 183.

inculcatory (in-kul'kā-tō-ri), a. [< inculcate + -ory.] Intended or fitted to inculcate.

As typical and inculcatory, nothing could have been more admirable than these sacrifices.
Mark Hopkins, Discussions for Young Men, p. 233.

inculk† (in-kulk'), v. t. [< F. inculquer, < L. inculcare, tread in or down: see inculcate.] To inculcate.

I am here compelled to inculk and iterate it with so many words.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 245.

Pride and covetousnesse, by corrupt blast blowne,
Into my hart inculked by fancie fond.
J. Heywood, The Spider and the Flie (1556).

inculp†, v. t. [< F. inculper, < ML. inculpare, inculpate: see inculpate.] To inculpate.

For if Chrysostom's impatience and headlong desire slew him, why shuld mine honest proceeding and care be inculped therewithal? Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, ii. 6.

inculpable (in-kul'pa-bl), a. [= OF. incoupable, F. inculpable = Sp. inculpable = Pg. inculpavel = It. incolpabile, < LL. inculpabilis, unblamable, < L. in- priv. + culpabilis, blamable: see culpable.] Not culpable; not meriting blame; innocent.

The case is such in the rules of morality that no ignorance of things lying under necessary practice can be totally inculpable. South, Works, VII. x.

inculpableness (in-kul'pa-bl-nes), n. The condition or quality of being inculpable; blamelessness.

True puritee consisteth in the inculpablenesse and innocencie of the heart. J. Udall, On Luke xi.

inculpably (in-kul'pa-bli), adv. In an inculpable manner; without blame; innocently.

Those things which are not in our power — that is, such things in which the flesh is inculpably weak.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 675.

inculpate (in-kul'pāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inculpated, ppr. inculpating. [< ML. inculpatus, pp. of inculpare (> It. incolpare = Sp. inculpar = Pr. encolpar = F. inculper), bring in fault, < L. in, in, + culpa, fault: see culpable, culprit.] To expose to blame or imputation of wrongdoing; incriminate.

They renewed their prayers to be excused from serving in the council of state, in order that they might not be afterwards inculpated for the faults of others.
Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 385.

inculpation (in-kul-pā'shon), n. [= F. inculpation = It. incolpazione, < ML. inculpatio(n-)*, < inculpare, inculpate: see inculpate.] The act of inculpating, or the state of being inculpated; incrimination.

Among the lower, or rather the lowest, political tactics, inculpation of a retiring administration has often been resorted to for promoting the success of the opposite party. G. T. Curtis, Buchanan, II. 246.

inculpatory (in-kul'pā-tō-ri), a. [< inculpate + -ory.] Tending to inculpate or criminate; criminatory: opposed to exculpatory: as, inculpatory disclosures.

It furnished especial facilities for destroying inculpatory evidence. The American, VIII. 69.

incult (in-kult'), a. [= F. inculte = Sp. Pg. inculto = It. incolto, inculto, < L. incultus, untilled, uncultivated, < in- priv. + cultus, pp. of colere, till, cultivate: see cult.] Untilled; uncultivated; wild; hence, unpolished; unrefined; rude, as style. [Rare.]

Let them be rude, stupid, ignorant, incult.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 62.

Her forests huge,
Incult, robust, and tall, by Nature's hand Planted of old. Thomson, Autumn, l. 884.

incultivate (in-kul'ti-vāt), a. [< L. in- priv. + ML. cultivatus, pp. of cultivare, cultivate: see cultivate.] Uncultivated; untaught. [Rare.]

Hence grew the impostures of charms, and amulets, and other insignificant ceremonies: which to this day impose upon common belief, as they did of old upon the barbarism of the incultivate heathen.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, xii.

incultivated (in-kul'ti-vā-ted), a. [< incultivate + -ed[2].] Uncultivated.

The soil, though incultivated, so full of vigour that it procreates without seed.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa, p. 380.

incultivation† (in-kul-ti-vā'shon), n. [< in-[3] + cultivation.] Lack or neglect of cultivation.

In that state of incultivation which nature in her luxuriant fancies loves to form.
Berington, Hist. Abeillard, p. 108.

inculture† (in-kul'tūr), n. [= Sp. Pg. incultura; < L. in- priv. + cultura, culture: see culture.] Lack or neglect of culture.

The inculture of the world would perish into a wilderness, should not the activeness of commerce make it an universal city. Feltham, Resolves, ii. 49.

incumbency (in-kum'ben-si), n.; pl. incumbencies (-siz). [= Sp. Pg. incumbencia = It. incumbenza; as incumben(t) + -cy.] 1. The state of being incumbent; a lying or resting on something: as, the incumbency of a burden. [Rare or obsolete.] — 2. That which is incumbent; a superincumbent weight, physical, mental, or moral; hence, a grave duty, responsibility, or obligation. [Rare.]

We find them more fragil, and not so well qualified to support great incumbencies and weights.
Evelyn, Sylva, I. iii. § 17.

The duties of a man, of a friend, of a husband, of a father; and all the incumbencies of a family.
Donne, Letters, xxvii.

3. The state of being an incumbent or holder of an office; the discharge of official or stated functions of any kind, especially of ecclesiastical functions; specifically, the state of holding or being in possession of a church benefice.

Some things are mine by possession, some by use; some by title, some by incumbency.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, iii. 3.

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop during his incumbency in the same see. Swift.

incumbent (in-kum'bent), a. and n. [< L. incumben(t-)s, ppr. of incumbere, lay oneself down upon, recline upon, < in, on, + cumbere*, nasalized form of cubare, lie down: see cumbent. Cf. incubate.] I. a. 1. Lying or resting on something.

He steers his flight Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air.
Milton, P. L., i. 226.

Meanwhile, incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans. Thomson, Spring, l. 41.

Specifically — 2. Lying, leaning, or resting lengthwise, in whole or in part, upon a surface to which there is only one point of actual attachment or none. (a) In bot., said of cotyledons when the back of one is applied to the radicle, as in some of the Brassicaceæ; said of an anther when it is fixed by the middle or any other part of the back, and lies along the inner side of the filament. (b) In zoöl., said of hairs, spines, etc., and of organs which lie against the surface to which they are joined. (c) In ornith., said of the hallux or hind toe of a bird when its whole length rests on the ground or is applied to a supporting object, owing to its insertion on a level with the anterior toes. (d) In entom., said of wings which, in repose, lie horizontally one over the other.

3. Lying or resting as a duty or obligation; imposed, and pressing to performance.

The goodness and excellency of God are more incumbent and actually pressing upon their spirit than any considerations of reward. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 842.

It . . . appeared a duty incumbent upon me to attempt to reclaim them. Goldsmith, Vicar, xxvi.

II. n. One who discharges stated functions; the holder of an office of any kind; especially, one who discharges ecclesiastical functions; one who holds a benefice.

Many livings in Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, and Northampton were rendered vacant by the suspension of the incumbents from the steeples of their churches. R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xv.

incumbentess† (in-kum'ben-tes), n. [< incumbent + -ess.] A female incumbent. [Rare.]

You may make your court to my Lady Orford by announcing the ancient barony of Clinton, which is fallen to her by the death of the last incumbentess.
Walpole, Letters (1760), III. 371.

incumbently (in-kum'bent-li), adv. In an incumbent manner.

incumber, incumberingly. See encumber, encumberingly.

incumbition† (in-kum-bish'on), n. [Irreg. < L. incumbere, lie or lean upon (see incumbent), + -ition.] A lying upon or among something.

The souls of connoisseurs themselves, by long friction and incumbition, have the happiness, at length, to get all be-virtued, be-pictured, be-butterflied, and be-fiddled.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 3.

incumbrance, incumbrancer. See encumbrance, encumbrancer.

incumbrous†, a. Same as encumbrous.

incunabula (in-kū-nab'ū-lä), n. pl. [L., neut. pl., cradle-clothes, swaddling-clothes, hence a cradle, birthplace, origin, < in, in, + cunabula, neut. pl., a cradle, dim. of cunæ, fem. pl., a cradle. Cf. cunabula.] 1. The cradle or early abode; the place in which a thing had its earliest development, as a race, an art, etc.; hence, first trace; beginning; origin.

It is also in Orissa, if anywhere, that we may hope to find the incunabula that will explain much which is now mysterious in the forms of the temples and the origin of many parts of their ornamentation.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 435.

2. In ornith., a breeding-place; the resort of a bird to breed. — 3. In bibliography, books printed in the infancy of the art; generally, books printed before the year 1500: in this sense rarely with a singular incunabulum.

Including such rare works as 430 Incunabula, from A. D. 1469 to 1510. Cat. Union Theol. Sem., 1882–3.

incur (in-kėr'), v.; pret. and pp. incurred, ppr. incurring. [Early mod. E. also incurr, incurre; < ME. incurren, encorren, < OF. encorre, encorir, encourir, F. encourir = Pr. encorre, encorrer = Sp. incurrir = Pg. incorrer = It. incorrere, < L. incurrere, run into, run toward, meet, < in, into, on, + currere, run: see current[1].] I. trans. 1†.

To run upon; impinge upon; run against or strike.

He that is no longer affected with a benefit than it incurs the sense, and suffers not itself to be disregarded, is far from being gratefull. Barrow, Works, I. viii.

2. To encounter, as some undesirable or injurious consequence; become liable or subject to through one's own action; bring upon one's self: as, to incur liabilities.

For so Actæon, by presuming far,
Did, to our grief, incur a fatal doom.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

I know I incur the imputation of unnecessary hardness and stoicism from those who compose the Court and Parliament of Love. Emerson, Love.

Sweden was slow in incurring the resentment of Napoleon. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, App. ii., p. 407.

II.† intrans. To enter; pass; occur; come to pass.

If anything incurr to you of curious, . . . you will greately oblige that assembly of virtuosi [the Royal Society] in communicating any productions of the places you travell thro. Evelyn, To Mr. William London at Barbados.

Light is discerned by itself, because by itself it incurrs into the eye. South, Works, V. vii.

incurability (in-kūr-ạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. incurabilité = Pg. incurabilidade; as incurable + -ity: see -bility.] The state of being incurable.

incurable (in-kūr′ạ-bl), a. and n. [< ME. incurable, < OF. (also F.) incurable = Pr. Sp. incurable = Pg. incuravel = It. incurabile, < LL. incurabilis, not curable, < in- priv. + curabilis, curable: see curable.] I. a. 1. Not curable; beyond the power of skill or medicine: as, an incurable disease.

Your Absence, if it continue long, will prove to me like the Dust of Diamonds, which is incurable Poison. Howell, Letters, I. ii. 3.

It is . . . the last attempt that God uses to reclaim a people by, and if these Causticks [fires] will not do, it is to be feared he looks upon the wounds as incurable. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. i.

2. Not admitting correction: as, incurable evils.

=Syn. Irremediable, remediless, hopeless, irreparable, incorrigible.

II. n. A person diseased beyond the possibility of cure.

If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital. Swift.

incurableness (in-kūr′ạ-bl-nes), n. Incurability.

incurably (in-kūr′ạ-bli), adv. So as to be incurable; to an extent or degree that renders cure or remedy impossible; irretrievably.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant. Locke.

incuriosity (in-kū-ri-os′i-ti), n. [= F. incuriosité = It. incuriosità, < LL. incuriosita(t-)s, carelessness, < L. incuriosus, careless: see incurious.] The state or character of being incurious; want of curiosity; inattentiveness; indifference.

But his [Pilate's] incuriosity or indifference, when truth was offered to be laid before him as a private man, . . . shews him in a light much less excusable. Warburton, Works, IX. i.

incurious (in-kū′ri-us), a. [= F. incurieux = Sp. Pg. It. incurioso, < L. incuriosus, careless, negligent, < in- priv. + curiosus, careful: see curious.] 1. Not curious; careless; negligent; indifferent.

The gods look down;
Incurious of themselves.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, i.

Of immortality the soul when well employed is incurious. Emerson, Conduct of Life.

His faint incurious ease he nursed.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 177.

2. Not curious or striking; deficient in interest.

In confirmation of these truths, we may conclude this part of our subject with a not incurious anecdote. John Brown, An Estimate, etc., I. 57.

It is no incurious part of the economy of nature that manure and high cultivation should banish those coarse hardy plants, and substitute the finer grasses in their room, in a scanty degree, which are commonly gone by November. Edinburgh Rev., CXLV. 196.

incuriously (in-kū′ri-us-li), adv. In an incurious manner.

incuriousness (in-kū′ri-us-nes), n. The quality of being incurious; incuriosity.

incurrence (in-kur′ens), n. [< incurren(t) + -ce.] 1. The act of incurring, bringing on, or subjecting one's self to something: as, the incurrence of guilt.—2. Incursion; entrance. Davies. [Rare in both uses.]

We should no more think of the Blessed Deity without the conceit of an infinite resplendence than we can open our eyes at noonday without an incurrence and admission of an outward light. Bp. Hall, Works, V. 421.

incurrent (in-kur′ent), a. [< L. incurren(t-)s, ppr. of incurrere, run into or upon: see incur.] Running inward; entrant: with reference to the place of entrance or inflow: as, an incurrent orifice.

Running down the middle of the triangular plate is the central string of tissue, the rachis, and at its end the incurrent blood-vessel. Biol. Lab. of Johns Hopkins, III. 39.

incursion (in-kėr′shọn), n. [= F. incursion = Sp. incursión = Pg. incursão = It. incursione, < L. incursio(n-), a running against, onset, < incurrere, run against: see incur.] A running in or into something; an inroad or invasion.

The Moorish cavaliers, whose greatest delight was a tala, or predatory incursion into the Christian territories. Irving, Granada, p. 7.

Sins of daily incursion, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South, Sermons.

=Syn. Irruption, raid.

incursive (in-kėr′siv), a. [= F. incursif, < L. incursus, pp. of incurrere, run in (see incur), + -ive.] Making incursions; invading; aggressive.

incurtain† (in-kėr′tạn), v. t. Same as encurtain.

incurvate (in-kėr′vāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. incurvated, ppr. incurvating. [< L. incurvatus, pp. of incurvare, bend in: see incurve.] To turn from a right line or straight course; curve; crook.

Age doth not rectify, but incurvate our natures, turning bad dispositions into worser habits. Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 42.

incurvate (in-kėr′vāt), a. [< L. incurvatus, pp.: see the verb.] Curved inward or upward.

incurvation (in-kėr-vā′shọn), n. [= F. incurvation = It. incurvazione, < L. incurvatio(n-), a bending, < incurvare, bend: see incurve.] 1. The act of incurving or bending.

He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated, as incurvation and sacrifice. Stillingfleet.

2. The state of being incurved or bent; curvature, as of the spine; crookedness.

The first reflections of a crooked tree are not to straightness, but to a contrary incurvation. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 252.

incurvature (in-kėr′vā-tụr), n. [= Sp. encorvadura = It. incurvatura, incurvature, < ML. incurvatura, incurvature (applied to a bishop's staff); as incurvate + -ure.] A curving or the state of being curved.

The greater incurvature of the wind in rear than in front of hurricanes in the southern Indian Ocean is next considered. Nature, XXXVIII. 359.

Specifically, in entom.: (a) The state of being curved inward. (b) A part or margin curved inward, or toward the median line.

incurve (in-kėrv′), v.; pret. and pp. incurved, ppr. incurving. [= Sp. encorvar = Pg. encurvar, < L. incurvare, bend in, < in, in, + curvare, bend: see curve, v.] I. trans. To make crooked; bend; curve; specifically, to cause to curve or bend inward: as, the incurved antennæ of an insect.

Yon hollow trunk,
That with its hoary head incurv'd salutes
The passing wave. Somerville, The Chase.

II. intrans. To curve or bend inward.

To find the direction of the storm-centre, we must know the incurving angle of the wind's spiral. Science, III. 42.

incurvity (in-kėr′vi-ti), n. [< L. incurvus, bent (< in, in, + curvus, bent, curved: see curve, a.), + -ity.] The state of being bent or crooked; crookedness; a bending inward.

Being the hieroglyphick of celerity, and swifter than other animals, men best expressed their [the dolphins'] velocity by incurvity, and under some figure of a bow. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v. 2.

incus (ing′kus), n.; pl. incudes (ing′kụ-dēz). [L., an anvil, < incudere, forge with a hammer: see incuse.] In zoöl. and anat.: (a) One of the bones of the inner (middle) ear of a mammal: so named from its fancied resemblance to an anvil. It is the middle one of the chain of bones, or ossicula auditus, the other two being the malleus and the stapes. The human incus strikingly resembles a bicuspid tooth; it has a body and two processes, short and long, diverging from each other at nearly a right angle. The long process ends in a small globular head, the orbicular or lenticular process, tipped with cartilage and articulated with the head of the stapes. The body of the incus articulates with the malleus. Both articulations are movable. The lenticular process exists as a separate ossification in early life. In vertebrates below mammals the homologies of the incus are much disputed, and different bones or cartilages have been taken as its representative, especially those which constitute a proximal element of the hyoidean arch. See ear[1], and cut under tympanic. (b) In Rotifera, the anvil or median piece of the trophi of a wheel-animalcule, upon which the mallei work. See malleus, mastax.

incuse (in-kūz′), v. t.; pret. and pp. incused, ppr. incusing. [< L. incusus, pp. of incudere, forge with a hammer, lit. pound down, < in, on, + cudere, strike, pound.] To impress by striking or stamping, as a coin. [Rare.]

The back of this coin is incused with a rudely-executed impression of a lion's head. H. N. Humphreys.

incuse (in-kūz′), a. and n. [< L. incusus, pp. of incudere, forge with the hammer: see incuse, v.] I. a. Hammered, stamped, or struck in; having a pattern impressed or stamped upon the surface.

The coin has been driven into the die, and not struck with it, and the incuse impression has been made before or after the other. Knight, Anc. Art and Myth. (1876), p. 63.

In some few instances the types of two cities are combined on the same coin, in token of an alliance. As art advanced, the incuse repetition fell into disuse, and a type in relief was substituted for it. C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 407.

The reverse type [of a coin] is a flaming torch in an incuse square. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 640.

Incuse square, in numis., the intaglio impression or sinking produced on Greek coins by the punch or die from which they were struck. Such rude sinkings constituted the sole "type" of one side of many of the earliest Greek coins; but later Greek coins have a design in relief placed within the incuse square. The incuse square is chiefly found on coins issued before 400 B. C.

1

2

1. Reverse of coin of Ægina, with early incuse square.—British Museum. 2. Reverse of coin of Phocis, with later incuse square, inclosing the type.—British Museum. (Each coin size of the original.)

II. n. An impression; a stamp, as that on a coin made by the surface upon which the object rests to be struck by the die.

Antiquaries have supposed this incuse to be merely the impression of something put under the coin to make it receive the stroke of the die more steadily. Knight, Anc. Art and Myth. [(1876), p. 63.

incusst, v. t. [< L. incussus, pp. of incutere, strike upon: see incute. Cf. concuss, discuss, percuss.] To strike. Halliwell.

The first events are those which incusse a dauntingnesse or daring. Daniel, Hist. Eng., p. 4.

in custodia legis (in kus-tō′di-ạ̈ lē′jis). [L.: in, in; custodiā, abl. of custodia, custody, legis, gen. of lex, law: see custodia, custody, legal, lex.] In the custody of the law; taken into the charge of an officer of the court under its authority: said of property of which the court thus assumes charge pending litigation about it.

incut (in′kut), a. Set in by or as if by cutting; specifically, in printing, inserted in a reserved space of the text instead of in the margin: as, incut notes at the sides of the pages in a book.

incutet, v. t. [= It. incutere, < L. incutere, strike upon or into, inspire with, < in, in, on, + quatere, shake, strike.] Same as incuss.

This doth incute and beat into our hearts the fear of God, which expelleth sin. Becon, Works (1843), p. 63.

ind. An abbreviation (a) of indicative; (b) of the Latin in dies, daily, every day, used in medical prescriptions.

indagate† (in′dā-gāt), v. t. [< L. indagatus, pp. of indagare (> It. indagare = Sp. Pg. indagar), trace out, track, investigate.] To seek or search out. Bailey.

indagation† (in-dā-gā′shọn), n. [= Sp. indagación = Pg. indagação = It. indagazione, < L. indagatio(n-), a searching, investigation, < indagare, search: see indagate.] The act of searching; search; inquiry; examination.

In her [the soul's] indagations ofttimes new scents put her by. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Chymists seem not to have taken notice of what importance such experiments may be in the indagation of the nature, and especially of the number of the elements. Boyle, Works, I. 483.

indagative† (in′dā-gā-tiv), a. [< indagate + -ive.] Searching or inclined to search into or after; investigating.

The church might not be ambitious or indagative of such employment. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 244.

indagator† (in′dā-gā-tọr), n. [= Sp. Pg. indagador = It. indagatore, < L. indagator, < indagare, search: see indagate.] A searcher; one who seeks or inquires with diligence.

Awake, ye curious indagators, fond
Of knowing all but what avails you known.
Young, Night Thoughts, v.

indagatory† (in′dā-gā-tọ-ri), a. [< indagate + -ory.] Pertaining to indagation.—Indagatory suspension of opinion, reserve of definitive judgment with the intention of further inquiry.

indamage†, v. t. An obsolete form of endamage.

indanger†, v. t. An obsolete form of endanger.

indart (in-därt′), v. t. [Formerly also endart; < in-[2] + dart.] To dart inward.

But no more deep will I endart mine eye
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.
Shak., R. and J., i. 3.

indet†, a. [ME., also ynde, < OF. inde, ynde, azure, violet-colored, < L. India, India: see India.] Azure-colored.

It had hewes an hundred payre
Of gras and flouris, ynde and pers.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 67.

The tother hew next to fynde
Is al blew, men callen ynde. Cursor Mundi.

indear†, indearing†, etc. Obsolete forms of endear, etc.

indeavour† (in-dev′ọr), v. An obsolete form of endeavor.

indebt† (in-det′), v. t. [< *in-*2 + debt. Earlier in p. a. indebted.] To place in debt; bring under obligation.

Thy fortune hath indebted thee to none.
Daniel, To the King's Majesty.

indebted (in-det′ed), p. a. [Early mod. E. indetted, < ME. endetted, after OF. endeté, endebté, F. endetté = Sp. endeudado = Pg. endividado = It. indebitato, < ML. indebitatus, pp. of indebitare, charge with debt, indebitari (> It. indebitare = Sp. endeudar = Pg. endividar = Pr. endeptar = OF. endeter, endetter), be in debt, < L. in, in, + debitum, debt: see debt.] 1. Owing; being under a debt or obligation; having incurred a debt; held to payment or requital.

And yet I am endetted so therby
Of gold that I have borowed, trewely,
That whyl I lyve, I shal it quyte never.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 181.

A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays, at once Indebted and discharged. Milton, P. L., iv. 57.

2. Beholden; under obligation; owing gratitude, care, recognition, and the like.

Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Bp. Atterbury.

Indebted to some smart wig-weaver's hand
For more than half the tresses it [her head] sustains.
Cowper, Task, iv. 543.

indebtedness (in-det′ed-nes), n. 1. The state of being indebted, without regard to ability or inability to pay the debt.—2. The amount owed; debts collectively: as, the indebtedness of an individual or a corporation.

indebtment (in-det′mẹnt), n. [< indebt + -ment.] The state of being indebted; indebtedness.

Fear thou a worse prison, if thou wilt needs willingly live and die in a just indebtment, when thou mayest be at once free and honest. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The gentlemen of this country had . . . become deeply involved in that state of indebtment which has since ended in so general a crush of their fortunes.
Jefferson, in Wirt's Patrick Henry (ed. 1841), p. 45.

indecence† (in-dē′sẹns), n. [< F. indécence = Sp. Pg. indecencia = It. indecenza, < L. indecentia, unbecomingness, unseemliness, < indecen(t-)s, unbecoming, unseemly, indecent: see indecent.] Same as indecency.

Carried to an indecence of barbarity.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, III., Int.

indecency (in-dē′sẹn-si), n.; pl. indecencies (-siz). [As indecence: see -cy.] 1. The quality or condition of being indecent; want of decency; unbecomingness; especially, extreme vulgarity or obscenity of speech, action, or representation; immorality.

Pope . . . was shocked at the indecency of a rake who, at seventy, was still the representative of the monstrous profligacy of the Restoration. Macaulay, Leigh Hunt.

2. That which is indecent or unbecoming; language, or behavior, or pictorial representation, etc., that violates modesty or decorum; specifically, that which is obscene or grossly vulgar.

They who, by speech or writing, present to the ear or to the eye of modesty any of the indecencies I allude to, are pests of society. Beattie, Moral Science, I. ii. 5.

Public indecency, in law, the exhibition of something indecent: an indefinite term, ordinarily excluding mere indecency of language. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in England and the United States, have usually limited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books or prints, or the exhibition of a monster—acts which have a direct bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society. McJunkins v. State, 10 Ind. 145.

=Syn. 1. Indelicacy, etc. (see indecorum); immodesty, grossness, obscenity.

indecent (in-dē′sẹnt), a. [= F. indécent = Sp. Pg. It. indecente, < L. indecen(t-)s, unbecoming, unseemly, indecent, < in- priv. + decen(t-)s, becoming, seemly, decent: see decent.] Not decent. (a) Unbecoming; unseemly; violating propriety in language, behavior, etc.

Who [Job] behaved himself with admirable patience and submission to the will of God, under all his severe afflictions, insomuch that he did not suffer an indecent expression to come from him. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. ix.

(b) Grossly vulgar; offensive to modesty; obscene; lewd.

When wine has given indecent language birth,
And forc'd the floodgates of licentious mirth.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 263.

=Syn. (b) Indelicate, indecorous, immodest, gross, shameful, impure, filthy, obscene, nasty.

Indecidua (in-dē-sid′ụ-ạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of indeciduus, not deciduous: see indeciduous.] A series of placental mammalians which are indeciduate; the Nondeciduata: opposed to Deciduata.

indeciduate (in-dē-sid′ụ-āt), a. [< *in-*3 + deciduate.] Not deciduate, as a placenta: applied also to those placental mammals in which the uterus develops no decidua or deciduous membrane. See deciduate.

indeciduous (in-dē-sid′ụ-us), a. [< NL. indeciduus, < L. in- priv. + deciduus, falling: see deciduous.] Not deciduous or liable to fall, as leaves; lasting; evergreen.

The indeciduous and unshaven locks of Apollo.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v. 21.

indecimable† (in-des′i-ma-bl), a. [< *in-3 + decimable, < decima(te) + -able.] Not liable to decimation; not liable to the payment of tithes. Cowell.

indecipherable (in-dē-sī′fėr-ạ-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + decipherable.] Not decipherable; incapable of being deciphered or interpreted.

indecision (in-dē-sizh′ọn), n. [= F. indécision = Sp. indecisión = Pg. indecisão; as *in-*3 + decision.] Want of decision; vacillation of purpose; irresolution.

Indecision . . . is the natural accomplice of violence.
Burke, Appeal to Old Whigs.

=Syn. Irresolution, etc. (see decision); vacillation, hesitation, uncertainty.

indecisive (in-dē-sī′siv), a. [= F. indécisif; as *in-*3 + decisive.] Not decisive; not bringing to a decision; inconclusive.

Hence it was that operations languid and indecisive beyond any recorded in history . . . make up the military history of Italy during the course of nearly two centuries.
Macaulay, Machiavelli.

indecisiveness (in-dē-sī′siv-nes), n. The state of being indecisive; an unsettled state.

indeclinable (in-dē-klī′na-bl), a. and n. [= F. indéclinable = Sp. indeclinable = Pg. indeclinavel = It. indeclinabile, < L. indeclinabilis, inflexible, unchangeable, indeclinable, < in- priv. + declinabilis, declinable: see declinable.] I. a. In gram., not declinable; not varied by declension; showing no variety of form for case, number, or the like.

II. n. In gram., a word that is not declined.

In ways first trodden by himself excels,
And stands alone in indeclinables:
Conjunction, preposition, adverb.
Churchill, Rosciad.

indeclinably (in-dē-klī′na-bli), adv. 1†. Without declining or turning aside.

To follow indeclinably . . . the discipline of the Church of England. Bp. Mountagu, Appeal to Cæsar, p. 111.

2. Without grammatical declension.

indecomposable (in-dē-kọm-pō′za-bl), a. [= F. indécomposable; as *in-*3 + decomposable.] Not decomposable; incapable of decomposition, or of being resolved into parts or elements.

The general indecomposable character of the lava in this Archipelago. Darwin, Geol. Observations, i. 129.

indecorous (in-dē-kō′rus or in-dek′ọ-rus), a. [= It. indecoro (cf. Sp. Pg. It. indecoroso, < ML. indecorosus), < L. indecorus, unseemly, unbecoming, < in- priv. + decorus, seemly, becoming: see decorous.] Not decorous; violating propriety or the accepted rules of conduct; unseemly.

Graceful and becoming in children, but in grown . . . men indecorous, as the sports of boyhood would seem in advanced years. J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 123.

=Syn. Unbecoming, unseemly, improper, rude, unmannerly.

indecorously (in-dē-kō′rus-li or in-dek′ọ-rus-li), adv. In an indecorous manner.

indecorousness (in-dē-kō′rus-nes or in-dek′ọ-rus-nes), n. The quality of being indecorous; violation of propriety or good manners.

indecorum (in-dē-kō′rum), n. [= Sp. Pg. indecoro, indecorum, < L. indecorum, neut. of indecorus: see indecorous.] 1. Lack of decorum; impropriety of behavior; violation of the accepted rules of conduct.—2. An indecorous or unbecoming act; a breach of decorum.

As if a herald, in the atchievement of a king, should commit the indecorum to set his helmet sideways and close, not full-faced and open in the posture of direction and command. Milton, Tetrachordon.

Indecorums in respect of style may possibly be accounted for as attempts at humor by one who has an imperfect notion of its ingredients.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 261.

=Syn. Indecorum, Indelicacy, Indecency. An indecorum violates a rule or rules of civility or order: as, it is an indecorum to interrupt a speaker in debate; an indelicacy and an indecency are a low and a high degree of violation of the rules of modesty: as, there would be a manifest indelicacy, not to say indecency, in his putting himself forward for a public office; indelicacies or indecencies in speech or action. Indecency is used rather freely for anything shameful in conduct.

indeed (in-dēd′), adv. [< ME. indede; being the prep. phrase in deed, sometimes with adj. in very deed, in fact: see *in*1 and deed.] In fact; in reality; in truth: used emphatically, or as noting a concession or admission; or interjectionally, as an expression of surprise; or interrogatively, for the purpose of obtaining confirmation: as, do you believe it? yes, indeed; indeed! that is surprising; indeed? I can hardly believe it.

Be it done euyn in dede as thi dissire is!
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2426.

Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!
John i. 47.

No man can justly censure or condemn another, because indeed no man truly knows another.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 4.

The name of freedom, indeed, was still inscribed on their banners, but the spirit had disappeared.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 1.

[Originally written separately as two words, as still when an adjective, as very, qualifies the noun.

And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power. Ex. ix. 16.]

indefatigability (in-dē-fat″i-ga-bil′i-ti), n. [< indefatigable: see -bility.] The state or quality of being indefatigable; unweariedness; persistency.

His indefatigability of study cannot be paralleled.
Life of Bp. Andrews (1650).

indefatigable (in-dē-fat′i-ga-bl), a. [= OF. indefatigable, < L. indefatigabilis, that cannot be tired out, < in- priv. + defatigabilis*, that can be tired out: see defatigable.] Not defatigable; incapable of being fatigued not easily exhausted; not yielding to fatigue; unremitting in labor or effort.

Of all men they [learned men] are the most indefatigable, if it be towards any business that can hold or detain their mind. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 21.

The French were indefatigable in their efforts to obtain a naval ascendency on the coast.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv.

=Syn. Unwearied, untiring, tireless, unflagging, persevering, assiduous, persistent, sedulous.

indefatigableness (in-dē-fat′i-ga-bl-nes), n. Indefatigability.

indefatigably (in-dē-fat′i-ga-bli), adv. In an indefatigable manner; without weariness; without yielding to fatigue.

A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose writings have highly deserved of both. Dryden.

indefatigation† (in-dē-fat-i-gā′shọn), n. [< *in-*3 + defatigation.] Unweariedness.

Holding themselves to be not inferiour (as indeed they were not) either to the indefatigation or skill of the Greek geographers. J. Gregory, Posthuma (1650), p. 267.

indefeasibility (in-dē-fē-zi-bil′i-ti), n. [< indefeasible: see -bility.] The quality or character of being indefeasible, or not liable to be made void: as, the indefeasibility of a title.

indefeasible (in-dē-fē′zi-bl), a. [Formerly also indefeisible; < *in-*3 + defeasible.] Not defeasible; not to be defeated or made void; that cannot be set aside or overcome.

Others objected that, if the blood gave an indefeasible title, how came it that the Lady Jane's mother did not reign? Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1553.

indefeasibleness (in-dē-fē′zi-bl-nes), n. Indefeasibility.

indefeasibly (in-dē-fē′zi-bli), adv. In an indefeasible manner; so as not to be defeated or made void; so as not to be set aside or overcome.

As truly and as indefeasibly royal as the House of Stuart. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xvi.

indefectibility (in-dē-fek-ti-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. indefectibilité = Sp. indefectibilidad = Pg. indefectibilidade = It. indefettibilità; as indefectible + -ity: see -bility.] The quality of being indefectible, or subject to no defect or decay.

His [God's] unity first, then his eternity and indefectibility, his immense omnipresence.
Barrow, Works, II. viii.

indefectible (in-dē-fek′ti-bl), a. [= F. indéfectible = Sp. indefectible = Pg. indefectivel = It. indefettibile, < ML. indefectibilis* (in deriv. indefectibiliter), < L. in- priv. + ML. defectibilis*, defectible: see defectible.] Not defectible; not liable to defect, failure, or decay; unfailing; not defeasible.

Certitudes, indeed, do not change, but who shall pretend that assents are indefectible?
J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 232.

indefective (in-dē-fek'tiv), a. [= Pg. indefectivo = It. indefettivo, < ML. indefectivus, not defective, imperishable, < L. in- priv. + LL. defectivus, imperfect: see defective.] Not defective; perfect; complete. [Rare.]

Repentance and forgiveness stand in the breach, and supply the impossibilities of indefective obedience.
South, Works, VIII. xii.

indefeisible†, a. An obsolete spelling of indefeasible. Dr. H. More.

indefensibility (in-dē-fen-si-bil'i-ti), n. The quality or state of being indefensible.

indefensible (in-dē-fen'si-bl), a. [= OF. endefensible, also indefensable; as in-[3] + defensible.] Not defensible; that cannot be defended, maintained, or justified, by either force or speech: as, an indefensible frontier; conduct that is indefensible.

Thomas . . . had seen three instances of persons raised from the dead by our Saviour, . . . which must needs . . . render his unbelief and doubting of our Saviour's own resurrection (so unquestionably attested) utterly indefensible.
South, Works, V. iv.

indefensibleness (in-dē-fen'si-bl-nes), n. The character of being indefensible; indefensibility.

indefensibly (in-dē-fen'si-bli), adv. In an indefensible manner; so as to admit of no defense.

If there is propriety, however, in thus representing the amours of guilty intoxication, by which figure Milton calls it, some of the terms of expression are still indefensibly indelicate.
Mickle, tr. of Camoëns's Lusiad, ix., note 32.

indefensive† (in-dē-fen'siv), a. [< in-[3] + defensive.] Having no defense; undefended.

The sword awes the indefensive villager.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 337.

indeficiency† (in-dē-fish'en-si), n. [< indeficien(t) + -cy.] The quality of being indeficient or unfailing.

A sermon about the indeficiency of faith, final perseverance, etc.
Strype, Abp. Parker, an. 1595.

indeficient† (in-dē-fish'ent), a. [= OF. indeficient = Sp. Pg. It. indeficiente, < LL. indeficien(t-)s, not deficient, < L. in- priv. + deficien(t-)s, deficient: see deficient.] Unfailing.

In this field [Heaven]
The indeficient spring no winter fears.
Fletcher, Christ's Triumph after Death, st. 37.

indefinable (in-dē-fī'na-bl), a. [< in-[3] + definable.] Not definable; incapable of being defined or exactly described; not susceptible of definition: as, an indefinable boundary; an indefinable word; indefinable sensations.

That scramble after the undefined and indefinable rights that ends always in despotism.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 107.

indefinably (in-dē-fī'na-bli), adv. In an indefinable manner; so as not to be capable of definition.

indefinite (in-def'i-nit), a. [= F. indéfini = Sp. indefinido = Pg. indefinido, indefinito = It. indefinito, < L. indefinitus, indefinite, < in- priv. + definitus, limited, definite: see definite.] 1. Not definite; not defined; not precise; vague: as, an indefinite time, proposition, term, or sensation.

It were to be wished that, now that those begin to quote chymical experiments that are not themselves acquainted with chymical operations, men would leave off that indefinite way of vouching "the chymists say this" or "the chymists affirm that."
Boyle, Works, I. 460.

2. Infinite in number. The term was introduced by Pascal. Descartes distinguished between the indefinite, which has no particular limit, and the infinite, which is incomparably greater than anything having a limit. The distinction is considered as highly important by many metaphysicians.

The indefinite is sometimes confounded with the infinite; though there are hardly two notions which, without being contradictory, differ more widely. The indefinite has a subjective, the infinite an objective relation. The one is merely the negation of the apprehension of limits, the other the negation of the existence of limits.
Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, iv.

The strength of a bar of metal is the total effect of an indefinite number of molecular adhesions.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 29.

3. Specifically, in bot., uncertain in number or too great to be easily counted: for example, the stamens when more than 10, and not clearly in multiples of the ground number of the flower, are said to be indefinite.—4. In logic, indeterminate in logical quantity; not distinguishing between "some" and "all."

Indefinite propositions, those in which the subject is not overtly or articulately declared to be either universal, particular, or individual.
Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, xiii.

Indefinite article. See article, 11.—Indefinite growth of branches, the mode of growth of those branches that grow onward indefinitely until arrested by the cold of autumn, as in the rose, raspberry, sumac, and honey-locust. The terminal or uppermost buds are consequently young and unmatured, and are usually killed by the frosts of winter.—Indefinite inflorescence, a flower-cluster that develops internode after internode of the axis, and one or more bracts at each node, with a flower in the axil of each bract, until its strength or capability is exhausted. Also called indeterminate inflorescence.—Indefinite integral, in math., an integral in which the limits of integration are not fixed, the upper limit being variable and the lower limit being usually left arbitrary.—Indefinite numeral, pronoun, etc. See the nouns.—Indefinite proposition, in logic, a proposition which has for its subject a common term without any sign to indicate distribution or non-distribution: as, "man is mortal."—Indefinite term, in logic, an infinite or infinitated term: a term with a sign of negation prefixed, as non-man.=Syn. 1. Undefined, loose, unlimited, indeterminate, uncertain, vague, inexact, obscure, indistinct, confused.

indefinitely (in-def'i-nit-li), adv. With indefiniteness; without settled limitation or precision; infinitely.

In his [Theobald's] reports of copies and editions he is not to be trusted without examination. He speaks sometimes indefinitely, when he has only one.
Johnson, Pref. to Shakespeare.

indefiniteness (in-def'i-nit-nes), n. The character of being indefinite, undefined, unlimited, or not precise and certain.

The indefiniteness of the charge implies a generality.
Bp. Hall, Best Bargain.

indefinitude (in-dē-fin'i-tūd), n. [= It. indefinitudine; as in-[3] + definitude.] 1. Number or quantity beyond determination or estimation. [Rare.]

They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not indefinitude, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Indefiniteness; want of precision.

This is indeed shown in the vacillation or indefinitude of Aristotle himself in regard to the number of the modes.
Sir W. Hamilton, Discussions, iv.

indefinity† (in-dē-fin'i-ti), n. [< indefinite + -ity.] Vagueness; indefinitude.

He can insinuate the vilest falsehoods in the world, and upon trial come off upon the ambiguity or indefinity of his expressions.
Roger North, Examen, p. 144.

indeformable (in-dē-fôr'ma-bl), a. [< in-[3] + deformable.] Rigid; incapable of deformation.

No visible motion is produced in an ordinary indeformable body, such as we meet in nature, by the action of two equal forces acting in opposite directions along the same line.
Minchin, Statics, I. 5.

indehiscence (in-dē-his'ens), n. [< indehiscen(t) + -ce.] In bot., the property of being indehiscent.

indehiscent (in-dē-his'ent), a. [< in-[3] + dehiscent.] In bot., not dehiscent; not opening spontaneously when mature, as a capsule or anther.

The capsule is indehiscent, and the spores are set free only by its decay.
Bessey, Botany, p. 358.

indelebility, indeleble, etc. See indelibility, etc.

indelectable (in-dē-lek'ta-bl), a. [= OF. indelectable; as in-[3] + delectable.] Not delectable; unpleasant; unamiable.

Then stiffened and starched . . . into dry and indelectable affectation, one sort of these scholars assume a style as rough as frequently are their manners.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, VIII. 327.

indeliberate (in-dē-lib'e-rāt), a. [= F. indélibéré = Sp. Pg. indeliberado = It. indeliberato; as in-[3] + deliberate.] Not deliberate; unpremeditated.

A man drinks himself into a present rage, or distraction of mind; in which condition he is perhaps carried to commit a rape or a murder, which action is indeed in itself sudden and indeliberate.
South, Works, VII. x.

indeliberated† (in-dē-lib'e-rā-ted), a. [< in-[3] + deliberated.] Not deliberated upon.

Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indeliberated, as in children who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions.
Abp. Bramhall.

indeliberately (in-dē-lib'e-rāt-li), adv. In an indeliberate manner; without deliberation or premeditation.

indeliberation (in-dē-lib-e-rā'shon), n. [= F. indélibération = Sp. indeliberación = Pg. indeliberação = It. indeliberazione; as in-[3] + deliberation.] Lack of deliberation.

She should have no liturgy at all, but the worship of God be left to the managing of chance, and indeliberation, and a petulant fancy.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 253.

indelibility, indelebility (in-del-i-bil'i-ti, -ē-bil'i-ti), n. [< indelible: see -bility.] The quality of being indelible.

My lords, upon a late occasion this question of the indelibility of the sacred character came to be much agitated in this house.
Horsley, Speech, April 13, 1804.

indelible, indeleble (in-del'i-bl, -ē-bl), a. [Prop. indeleble; = F. indélebile = Sp. indeleble = Pg. indelevel = It. indelebile, < L. indelebilis, that cannot be destroyed, < in- priv. + delebilis, that can be destroyed: see deleble.] 1. Not deleble; not to be blotted out; incapable of being effaced or obliterated.

Moreover, the character of the chancellour is esteemed so sacred and inviolable that it remains altogether indeleble but by death onely.
Evelyn, State of France.

There is an indelible mark of goodness in those who sincerely possess it.
Steele, Tatler, No. 211.

He carried with him into his new service the brand not only of failure, but of indelible disgrace.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv.

2. Not to be annulled. [Rare.]

They are endued with indelible power from above to feed, to govern this household.
Bp. Sprat.

Indelible ink. See ink[1].=Syn. 1. Ineffaceable, ingrained, abiding.

indelibleness, indelebleness (in-del'i-bl-nes, -ē-bl-nes), n. The quality of being indelible.

indelibly, indelebly (in-del'i-bli, -ē-bli), adv. So as to be indelible; so as not to be blotted out or effaced.

Let the characters of good things stand indelibly in thy mind.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., iii. 10.

indelicacy (in-del'i-kā-si), n.; pl. indelicacies (-siz). [< indelica(te) + -cy.] The character or quality of being indelicate; want of delicacy; coarseness of manners or language; offensiveness to modesty or refined taste.

There is no wonder, therefore, that Lord Kaimes . . . should have expressed himself upon this subject of the indelicacy of English comedy.
H. Blair, Rhetoric, xlvii.

=Syn. Indecency, etc. (see indecorum), grossness, vulgarity.

indelicate (in-del'i-kāt), a. [= F. indélicat; as in-[3] + delicate.] Not delicate; wanting delicacy; offensive to a refined sense of propriety, or to modesty or purity of mind; beyond the bounds of proper reserve or restraint.

He . . . seemed . . . most eager to preserve the acquaintance, and without any indelicate display of regard . . . was soliciting the good opinion of her friends.
Jane Austen, Pride and Prejudice, p. 225.

Immorality and indelicacy are different things. Rabelais is indelicate to the last degree, but he is not really immoral. Congreve is far less indelicate, but far more immoral.
J. Hadley, Essays, p. 347.

indelicately (in-del'i-kāt-li), adv. In an indelicate manner; with indelicacy; unbecomingly; indecently.

indemnification (in-dem″ni-fi-kā'shon), n. [< indemnify + -ation: see -fication.] 1. The act of indemnifying or securing against loss, damage, or penalty.—2. That which indemnifies; reparation; reimbursement.

indemnify (in-dem'ni-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. indemnified, ppr. indemnifying. [< L. indemnis, unhurt, + facere, make: see indemnity and -fy.] 1. To preserve or secure against loss, damage, or penalty; save harmless: followed by against, formerly by from.

I believe the states must at last engage to the merchants here that they will indemnify them from all that shall fall out.
Sir W. Temple, To Lord Arlington.

2. To make good to; reimburse; remunerate: followed by for.

Its enterprising navy indemnified the nation for the scantiness of its territory at home.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., Int.

Of the servile Hindoos we are told that "they indemnify themselves for their passiveness to their superiors by their tyranny, cruelty, and violence to those in their power."
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 461.

3. To engage to make good or secure against anticipated loss; give security against (future damage or liability).=Syn. Compensate, Recompense, Remunerate, Reimburse, Indemnify, Requite. Compensate and recompense are very general words for paying or rendering an equivalent, in money or otherwise. Either of them may mean to make a loss good to one. Remunerate has not this meaning, being confined to the idea of payment for expense or service with money or its equivalent. To reimburse a person is to make a loss or expenditure good to him with money. Indemnify formerly meant to save a person from damage or loss, but now much more often means to make good after loss or the damage of property. To requite is to render a full return. Requite is perhaps more often used in a bad sense. Archaically recompense may be used in a good or a bad sense for return: as, "Recompense to no man evil for evil," Rom. xii. 17; "Recompense injury with justice, and recompense kindness with kindness," Confucius, Analects (trans.), i. 4. The others are always used in a good sense. See requital.

indemnitee (in-dem-ni-tē'), n. [Irreg. < indemnit(y) + -ee[1].] The person to whom indemnity or promise of indemnity is given. [This word is of recent origin; and although objection has been made to its formation, its analogy to other legal terms and its convenience have given it considerable currency.]

indemnitor (in-dem'ni-tor), n. [Irreg. < indemnit(y) + -or.] One who has promised to indemnify another person against loss or liability.

indemnity (in-dem′ni-ti), n. [< F. indemnité = Sp. indemnidad = Pg. indemnidade = It. indennità, < LL. indemnita(t-)s, security from loss or damage, < L. indemnis, unhurt, undamaged, < in- priv. + damnum, hurt, damage: see damage.] 1. Security given against or exemption granted from damage, loss, injury, or punishment.

I am content to graunt him for the while that they wyl sufficiently prouide for th*indempnitye* of the witnesses.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 970.

2. Indemnification; compensation for loss, damage, or injury sustained; reimbursement.

A promise is held out of an indemnity, in the shape of new territory, for the expenses of Prussia in the war, should it come to a happy issue.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, App. ii., p. 408.

3. In law, that which is given to a person who has assumed or is about to assume a responsibility at the request or for the benefit of another, in order to make good to him any loss or liability which has or may come upon him by so doing. More specifically—(a) The actual reimbursement of such loss or discharge of such liability. (b) A transfer, mortgage, or pledge of property, or the giving of an obligation, to provide for future reimbursement or discharge in case loss or liability should occur. There is an important distinction, in this latter use of the term as designating a contract for future protection, between indemnity against loss and indemnity against liability. If the object of a contract for indemnity is expressed as being to secure against loss or damage, or in other equivalent words, the obligation becomes enforceable only when actual loss or damage has been incurred. If it is expressed to be against liability, or in equivalent words, the obligation is enforceable whenever the person to whom it is given becomes liable, by conduct or forbearance such as was contemplated, and the other does not promptly relieve him of the liability by satisfying it at once, so as to prevent his incurring loss or damage. Thus, upon an indemnity "against costs," the party is entitled to receive not what costs he is liable to pay, but only what costs he has actually paid.—Act of indemnity, an act or decree absolving a public officer or other person who has used doubtful powers, or usurped an authority not belonging to him, from the technical legal penalties or liabilities therefor, or from making good losses incurred thereby. In Great Britain an indemnity act was formerly passed every year, until the general act of 31 and 32 Vict., c. 72, § 16, was passed to absolve those who had failed to take an oath of office required of them.—Bond of indemnity. See bond[1].

indemonstrability (in-dē-mon-stra-bil′i-ti), n. [< indemonstrable: see -bility.] The condition or quality of being indemonstrable.

indemonstrable (in-dē-mon′stra-bl), a. [= F. indémontrable = Sp. indemostrable, < LL. indemonstrabilis, that cannot be proved, < in- priv. + demonstrabilis, that can be proved: see demonstrable.] 1. Not demonstrable; incapable of being demonstrated.

Because the degree of malignity in every errour was oftentimes undiscernable, and most commonly indemonstrable, their zeal was alike against all.
Jer. Taylor, Liberty of Prophesying, § 2.

2. Immediately evident; axiomatical; not capable of being made more evident.

We find likewise some of the axioms of geometry mentioned by Aristotle as axioms, and as indemonstrable principles of mathematical reasoning.
Reid, Intellectual Powers, vi. 7.

indemonstrableness (in-dē-mon′stra-bl-nes), n. The character of being indemonstrable.

indenization (in-den-i-zā′shon), n. Same as endenization.

indenize† (in-den′īz), v. t. Same as endenize.

indenizen (in-den′i-zn), v. t. Same as endenizen.

indent[1] (in-dent′), v. t. [< in-[1] + dent[1], after indent[2].] 1. To make a dent or depression in, as by a blow or by pressure; dent or dint.

With shields indented deep in glorious wars.
Pope, Odyssey, xix.

2. To dent or press in; form as a dent or depression.

There was a struggle within her, which found expression in the depth of the few last lines the parasol indented into the table-cloth.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 2.

indent[2] (in-dent′), v. [< ME. indenten, endenten, indent (def. I., 2), < OF. endenter, F. endenter = Sp. Pg. endentar = It. indentare, < ML. indentare, make notches in like teeth, notch, jag, indent (a document), < L. in, in, + den(t-)s = E. tooth: see dent[2].] I. trans. 1. To make notches in resembling teeth; cut into points or jags like a row of teeth; notch; jag; serrate.

Our siluer Medway (which doth deepe indent
The Flowrie Medowes of My natiue Kent).
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

Thus did he indent a passage for this Riuer.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 83.

Fold upon fold of the indented hills and islands melting from the brightness of the sea into the untempered brilliance of the sky.
J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 208.

The niches which surround the three high doors . . . and indent the four great buttresses.
H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 11.

Specifically—2. Formerly, to notch the edges of (two copies of a writing, as a deed, covenant, articles of agreement, etc., in which two parties had an interest), as a conventional means of identification and security. It was the custom to write duplicates of the deed or covenant on one sheet, and then cut them apart by a waving or jagged line. One part was given to each party in interest, and its genuineness could be subsequently attested by the coincidence of its indented margin with the indented margin of the other part.

And for to deliuere, be bill endented, to the newe Aldirman and maistres, alle manere of ornemens and other diuerse nescesaries to the fraternite longynge.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 450.

Articles of agreement, indented, between the spectators or hearers . . . and the author.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, Ind.

Hence—3. To covenant or bargain for; transfer by covenant; indenture.

We should follow his word in serving of him, and take it no less than idolatry or image-service, whatsoever thing is indented by man, saint, or angel, and not by him, concerning his worship and service.
J. Bradford, Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 318.

Below them [the upper and ruling classes] were the indented servants, some of whom were convicts, and some of whom had bound themselves for a term of years to defray the expenses of their transportation.
Johns Hopkins Hist. Studies, III. ii.

4. In type-setting and writing, to throw or sink inward by a blank space in the margin, as the first line of a paragraph; hence, to begin, or exceptionally to begin and end, with a fixed amount of blank space, whether evenly or unevenly, as lines of poetry or of type specially arranged. See indention[2].

Indenting after a Break . . . is an m Quadrat . . . set at the beginning of a line. But when verses are indented, two, three, or four m Quadrats are used.
J. Moxon, Mechanical Exercises, II. 226.

Authors should make the beginning of a new paragraph conspicuous to the compositor, by indenting the first line of it far enough to distinguish it from the preceding line.
Stower, Printer's Grammar, p. 164.

II. intrans. 1†. To move in a zigzag course; wind in and out; double in moving.

His head growes giddy, and his foot indents,
A mighty fume his troubled brain torments.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Ark.

Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch [the hare] Turn and return, indenting with the way.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 704.

2. To contract; bargain; make a compact.

Shall we buy treason? and indent with feres?
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3.

The Polanders indented with Henry Duke of Anjou, their new chosen king, to bring with him an hundred families of artificers into Poland.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 58.

I fire with indignation, when I see persons wholly destitute of education and genius indent to the press.
Goldsmith, Polite Learning, xi.

★ indent[2] (in-dent′), n. [< indent[2], v.] 1. A cut or notch in the margin, or a recess like a notch; an indentation.

It [the Trent] shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1.

The deep-worn ruts
Of faith and habit, by whose deep indent
Prudence may guide if genius be not lent.
Lowell, The Brakes.

The Bay of Chaleurs or other important indents of the coasts.
Westminster Rev., CXXV. 402.

2. A writing, as a deed, covenant, contract, order for goods, articles of agreement, etc., having the edges indented (see indent[2], v. t., 2, 3); hence, any covenant.

In negotiating with princes we ought to seeke their faour by humilitie, and not by sternnesse, nor to trafficke with them by way of indent or condition, but frankly, and by manner of submission to their wils.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (ed. Arber), p. 299.

3. An indented certificate issued by the United States government at the close of the Revolution, for the principal or interest due on the public debt. Burrill.

indentation[1] (in-den-tā′shon), n. [< indent[1] + -ation. In form the same as indentation[2], which goes with indent[2], the verbs indent[1] and indent[2] being partly confused: see indent[1] and indention[1].] A small hollow or depression; a dent or slight pit, as from a blow or from pressure; an impressed cavity: as, the indentations in a battered shield.

She showed the indentations made by the lieutenant-governor's sword-hilt in the door-panels of the apartment.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

An indistinct indentation of a round stamp, about the size of an American one-cent piece.
N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. 270.

indentation[2] (in-den-tā′shon), n. [= F. indentation = Pg. endentação, < ML. as if indentatio(n-)*, a notching, < indentare, notch, indent: see indent[2].] 1. The act of indenting, or the state of being indented; the act of notching, or of cutting into points or inequalities like a row of teeth.—2. A cut or notch in a margin; a recess or depression.—3. In printing. See indention[2].

indented (in-den′ted), p. a. [< indent[2] + -ed[2]. Cf. equiv. F. indenté = Sp. Pg. endentado, < ML. indentatus, pp. of indentare, indent: see indent[2].] 1. Having the edge or margin cut into points like teeth; zigzag: as, an indented paper; an indented molding. Indented moldings are a common ornamental feature in medieval architecture.

Indented Molding.

It [a snake] unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away.
Shak., As you Like it, iv. 3.

Specifically—2. In entom.: (a) Having one or more angular notches: said of margins and of the edges of color-marks. (b) Having one or more sharp depressions: as, an indented stria or surface.—3. In her., like dancetté, but cut with smaller teeth: thus, a fesse indented will have eight or nine points, as opposed to three or four of dancetté. Also inraced and danché.—Indented at a distance, in her., having notches or projecting teeth with a short horizontal outline between them. It is usual to express in the blazon the number of dents—that is, notches or projections.—Indented battery. See battery.—Indented embowed, in her., same as hacked.—Indented in point, in her., having the dents or notches of the whole width of the bearing, so that the points reach alternately to the opposite sides. Thus, a fesse indented in point, or a fesse indented per fesse in point, is divided by a zigzag line which touches both of its edges.—Indented line, in fort., a serrated line having salient and reëntering angles and sides which defend each other.—Indented parapet, a parapet having vertical recesses in its interior slope, forming standing-places for the men to fire along the front of the work.

Indentee borderwise.

indentee (in-den-tē′), a. [< F. indenté, indented: see indented.] In her., having indents not joined to each other, but set apart.

indentilly (in-den-til′i), a. [< OF. endentelé, equiv. to endenté, indented: see indented, and cf. dentil, dentel.] In her., having long indents, somewhat resembling piles conjoined: as, a fesse indentilly at the bottom.

Fesse Indentilly at the bottom.

indention[1] (in-den′shon), n. [< indent[1] + -ion.] A dent or denting in; an impressed hollow; a slight depression.

Should the piece of paper [adhering to the block] remain unnoticed for some time, it will make a small indention in the block, and occasion a white or grey speck in the impressions printed after its removal.
Chatto, Wood Engraving, p. 564.

indention[2] (in-den′shon), n. [A short form for indentation[2], with ref. to indent[2], indenting, in printers' use.] In type-setting and writing, an indenting or sinking inward by a blank space, as of the beginning of a line beyond that of adjoining lines; hence, any determinate space left before the beginning, or exceptionally after the end, of lines, whether alternating or equal throughout, as in poetry, etc.

The mere indention of an em [is] scarcely perceptible when the measure is very long.
Adams, Typographia, p. 113.

Diamond indention, in printing, an indenting of every line after the first with even shortening on both sides, and with an increasing blank, so that the printed lines tend to a point on the last line.—Hanging indention, an indention of uniform amount at the beginning of each line except the first, that one being of full width, and so overhanging the others, as with the matter below a title-word in this dictionary. A paragraph so indented is called a hanging paragraph.—Motto indention, an indention forming a blank of about one half the width of the measure on the left-hand side.

indentment† (in-dent′ment), n. [< indent[2] + -ment.] Indenture. Bp. Hall.

indenture (in-den′tūr), n. [< OF. endenture, < ML. indentura (cf. It. indentatura), an indenture, < indentare, indent: see indent[2].] 1. The act of indenting, or the state of being indented; indentation.

The general direction of the shore . . . is remarkably direct east and west, with only occasional indentures and projections of bays and promontories.
Mitford, Hist. Greece (ed. 1829), VIII. 317.

Till lips and teeth bite in their sharp indenture.
A. C. Swinburne, A Cameo.

2. In law: (a†) A deed between two or more parties with mutual covenants, having the edge indented for identification and security. See indent[2], n., 2.

Their [the Javans'] Crisses or Daggers are two foote long, waued Indenture fashion.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 542.

Each [deed] should be cut or indented . . . on the top or side, to tally or correspond with the other; which deed so made is called an indenture. Blackstone, Com., II. xx.

(b) Now, in general, a deed or sealed agreement between two or more parties.

It was a common clause in the indentures of children apprenticed in Hereford that they should not be compelled to live on Salmon more than two days in a week.
Quoted in Walton's Complete Angler, p. 126.

Then, strongly fencing ill-got wealth by law,
Indentures, Cov'nants, Articles they draw.
Pope, Satires of Donne, ii. 94.

The sheriff is himself to bring up the names of the persons chosen and the writ, until by the statute of Henry IV. in 1406 the indenture tacked to the writ is declared to be the sheriff's return. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 419.

indenture (in-den'tūr), v.; pret. and pp. indentured, ppr. indenturing. [< indenture, n.] I. trans. 1†. To indent; wrinkle; furrow.

Though age may creep on, and indenture the brow.
Woty, Autumnal Song.

2. To bind by indenture: as, to indenture an apprentice.

I was suspected to be some runaway indentured servant.
Franklin, Autobiog., p. 37.

II.† intrans. To run in a zigzag course; double in running.

They took
Their staves in hand, and at the good man strook;
But, by indenturing, still the good man scap'd.
Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 134.

indepartable†, a. [ME., < in-[3] + departable.] Not to be parted; indivisible.

Thre persons in-departable perpetuel were euere, ★ Of o wyl, of o wit. Piers Plowman (C), xix. 27.

independence (in-dē-pen'dens), n. [= F. indépendance = Sp. Pg. independencia = It. independenza, indipendenza, < NL. independentia*, < independen(t-)s*, independent: see independent.] 1. The state of being independent; exemption from dependence upon another or others, or from another's control; self-support or self-government.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

We commonly say that the rich man can speak the truth, can afford honesty, can afford independence of opinion and action; — and that is the theory of nobility.
Emerson, Farming.

By independence we intend to set forth the negative side of sovereignty — that is, to deny that any other state has any right to interfere with the exercise of a state's rights and sovereign powers. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 37.

2. That which renders one independent; property or income sufficient to make one independent of others; a competency.

In old-fashioned times an independence was hardly ever made without a little miserliness as a condition.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 12.

Declaration of Independence, in U. S. hist., a document promulgated by the second Continental Congress, setting forth the reasons for severing the connection of the thirteen colonies with Great Britain, and proclaiming their existence as "free and independent states." The Declaration opens with a preamble in regard to human rights, recapitulates the offenses of the reigning king (George III.) toward the colonies, recounts the efforts made by them for reconciliation, and closes with a solemn assertion of independence. A resolution in favor of independence was introduced by Richard Henry Lee of Virginia, June 7th, 1776, and after debate was referred to a committee of five. The chairman of this committee, Thomas Jefferson, drafted the Declaration, which was reported June 28th, debated from the 1st to the 3d of July, slightly modified, and, after considerable opposition, passed on July 4th by the votes of 12 of the 13 colonial delegations (the New York delegation refusing to vote). The signatures of the members were affixed at different times. — Independence day. See day[1]. — Law of independence. See laws of motion, under motion. = Syn. 1. Liberty, etc. See freedom.

independency (in-dē-pen'den-si), n. [As independence: see -cy.] 1. Independence.

To support the independency of the other powers of Europe. Goldsmith, Seven Years' War, i.

There is no such thing as an absolute independency of antecedents. W. Sharp, D. G. Rossetti, p. 39.

2. Eccles., the principle that the individual congregation or church is a society strictly voluntary and autonomous, standing directly under the authority of Jesus Christ, living in immediate dependence on him, and responsible to him alone for its beliefs and acts as a Christian society; specifically, the principles of the Independents or English Congregationalists, as distinguished from those of the Congregationalists of the United States. Independency is distinguished from Episcopacy by having no gradation of ministerial or clerical orders, and no officials superior to the laity and invested with administrative or judicial authority; and from Presbyterianism by having no gradation of courts or representative bodies possessed of legislative and judicial functions. (See Independent, n., and congregationalism.) In its extreme form it is the absolute freedom of the local church from external control of any kind. Also independentism.

The Leyden church is the purest of Independency, alike in England and America. Encyc. Brit., XII. 725.

Independency is possible without Congregationalism.
R. W. Dale, Manual of Cong. Principles, p. 76.

independent (in-dē-pen'dent), a. and n. [Formerly also independant; = F. indépendant = Sp. Pg. independente = It. independente, indipendente, < NL. independen(t-)s*, not dependent, < L. in- priv. + dependen(t-)s, dependent: see dependent.] I. a. 1. Not dependent; not requiring the support or not subject to the control or controlling influence of others; not relying on others for direction or guidance; not subordinate; of things, not standing in a relation of dependence to something else: used absolutely or followed by of, formerly sometimes by on: as, a person's fortunes in life are quite independent of the configuration of the planets at his nativity.

The town of St. Gaul is a Protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

Let us, for a moment, imagine the legislature of New York independent on that of Great Britain.
A. Hamilton, Works, II. 55.

I am independent, sir, as well as rich; I am my own mistress. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxxvii.

2. Not due to or connected with dependence; pertaining to or permitting freedom of action; free of control or restraint: as, an independent income, estate, or position; independent action.

Choosing rather far
A dry but independent crust, hard earn'd.
Cowper, Task, iv. 409.

3. Not subject to bias or influence; self-directing.

For a' that, an' a' that,
His riband, star, an' a' that,
The man o' independent mind,
He looks an' laughs at a' that.
Burns, For A' That.

4. Proceeding from or expressive of a spirit of independence; free; easy; self-confident; bold; unconstrained: as, an independent air or manner. — 5. Irrespective; exclusive; without taking note or notice: followed by of.

A gradual change is also more beneficial, independent of its being more safe. Brougham.

I mean the account of that obligation in general under which we conceive ourselves bound to obey a law, independent of those resources which the law provides for its own enforcement. R. Ward.

6. [cap.] Of or pertaining to the Independents or Congregationalists; belonging to the Independents.

A very famous Independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison, Spectator.

How had that man of God and exemplary Independent minister, Mr. Ainsworth, of persecuted sanctity, conducted himself when a similar occasion had befallen him at Amsterdam? George Eliot, Felix Holt, xv.

7. In math., not depending upon another for its value: said of a quantity or function. — 8. Having a competency; able to live well without labor; well-to-do.

As I am an idle personage, . . . and pay my bill regularly every week, I am looked upon as the only independent gentleman of the neighborhood.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 300.

Functions independent of a group of operations, a set of n functions such that none of the n operations of the group performed on any one of them gives another of them. — Independent chord or harmony, in music, a chord that is complete, concordant, and final in itself, not needing another chord to form a resolution or completion of it. — Independent circuits, in math. See circuit. — Independent company, contractor, covenant. See the nouns. — Independent drill, a machine-tool having several drills so arranged that each in turn may be used in forming the same hole. See drill[1]. — Independent equations. See equation. — Independent Evangelical Church of Neuchâtel. See church. — Independent party. Same as Greenback party (which see, under greenback). — Independent treasury, variable, etc. See the nouns. = Syn. 6. Congregational, Independent. See congregational.

II. n. 1. One who acts with independence; one who acts in accordance with his own will, judgment, or conscience. — 2. [cap.] Eccles., one who maintains the principles of independency, or the freedom of the local church from external control; specifically, in England, a name given to a Congregationalist. The Independents of England differ from the Congregationalists of the United States in laying less stress upon and making less provision for the fellowship of the local churches. The name Congregationalists is assumed by both the English and American bodies; the use of the name Independent as a denominational title is almost exclusively confined to Great Britain. The English Independents attained great political power at the time of the Long Parliament and the Commonwealth.

3. [cap. or l. c.] In politics: (a) One who acts independently of any organized party; one who opposes or supports measures or men on independent grounds.

When the Chicago convention was held, the Young Republicans of Massachusetts and the Independents of Pennsylvania joined with the scratchers of New York in sending a representation. The Nation, XXXV. 422.

(b) One of an organized party assuming the name "Independent"; specifically, in U. S. politics, a member of the party otherwise called the Greenback party.

The ground being . . . cleared for the work of reform, the Independents propose in their resolutions to get rid of "the gold base fallacy," and issue paper money on "the faith and resources of the Government."
The Nation, XVIII. 388.

independented† (in-dē-pen'den-ted), a. [< independent + -ed[2].] Governed by the principles of the Independents.

The new titles or style of bodyed and congregated, associated or independented, and new-fangled Churches.
Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 43.

independentism (in-dē-pen'den-tizm), n. [< independent + -ism.] Same as independency, 2.

Anabaptisme or Presbyterisme, or Independentisme, . . . rudely justled Episcopacy out of the Church of England.
Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 564.

independently (in-dē-pen'dent-li), adv. 1. In an independent manner; with independence. — 2. Apart from or without regard to something else: followed by of: as, independently of being safe, it is more beneficial.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing everything independently the one of the other. Dryden.

Independently of the strength of its works, it [Tarento] was rendered nearly inaccessible by its natural position.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 10.

independing† (in-dē-pen'ding), a. [< in-[3] + depending.] Not depending or dependent; independent.

These, therefore, being distinct and proper actions, do necessarily evince an independing and self-subsisting agent. Bp. Hall, Invisible World, ii. 1.

indepravate† (in-dep'rā-vāt), a. [< LL. indepravatus, uncorrupted, < L. in- priv. + depravatus, pp. of depravare, corrupt, deprave: see deprave.] Undepraved; pure.

O let these Wounds, these Woundes indepraued,
Be holy Sanctuaries for my whole Man.
Davies, Holy Roode, p. 28.

indeprecable (in-dep'rē-ka-bl), a. [< L. indeprecabilis, that cannot be averted by prayer, < in- priv. + deprecabilis (LL.), that may be entreated: see deprecable.] Incapable of being deprecated. Coles, 1717.

indeprehensible† (in-dep-rē-hen'si-bl), a. [< LL. indeprehensibilis, indiscoverable, < in- priv. + deprehensibilis*, that can be seized: see deprehensible.] Incapable of being seized or apprehended; incomprehensible.

A case perplexed and indeprehensible.
Bp. Morton, Discharge of Imput., p. 174.

indeprivable (in-dē-prī'va-bl), a. [< in-[3] + deprivable.] 1. Incapable of being deprived. — 2. Incapable of being taken away. [Rare.]

It [the sovereign good] should not be transient nor derived from the will of others, nor in their power to take away; but be durable, self-derived, and . . . indeprivable.
Harris, Happiness, i.

inder, inderly. See inner, innerly.

indescribability (in″des-krī″ba-bil'i-ti), n. 1. Lack of the quality of being describable; incapability of being described.

I have now done my best to describe what . . . I may term the indescribability of Transatlantic warfare.
G. A. Sala, Daily Telegraph, London, Sept. 21, 1864.

2. Something which cannot be described.

Ably conveying the assumed hoyden, and falling somewhat short of critical conception in the indescribabilities.
The Examiner, 1824, p. 456. N. E. D.

indescribable (in-des-krī'ba-bl), a. and n. [< in-[3] + describable.] I. a. Not describable; incapable of being described.

II. n. pl. Trousers. [A humorous euphemism.]

A pair of indescribables of most capacious dimensions.
Dickens, Sketches (Greenwich Fair).

indescribably (in-des-krī'ba-bli), adv. In an indescribable manner; so as not to admit of description.

indescriptive (in-des-krip'tiv), a. [< in-[3] + descriptive.] Not descriptive; not containing a just description. [Rare.]

indesert (in-dē-zėrt'), n. [< in-[3] + desert[2].] Lack of merit or desert. [Rare.]

'Tis my own indesert that gives me fears.
Steele, Lying Lover, ii. 1.

indesignate (in-des'ig-nāt), a. Not designate; indefinite.

indesinent (in-des'i-nent), a. [= It. indesinente; < in-[3] + desinent.] Not ceasing; perpetual. [Rare.]

The last kind of activity . . . is much more noble, more indesinent, and indefeasible than the first.
A. Baxter, Human Souls, I. 351.

indesinently (in-des'i-nent-li), adv. Without cessation. [Rare.]

His verdant blood
In brisk saltation circulates and flows Indesinently vigorous.
C. Smart, The Hop-Garden, i.

indesirable† (in-dē-zīr'a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + desirable.] Undesirable.

indestructibility (in-dē-struk-ti-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. indestructibilité = Sp. indestructibilidad = Pg. indestructibilidade; as in-[3] + destructibility.] The character of being indestructible: as, the indestructibility of matter and energy.

indestructible (in-dē-struk'ti-bl), a. [= F. indestructible = Sp. indestructible = Pg. indestructivel = It. indistruttibile; as in-[3] + destructible.] Not destructible; incapable of being destroyed.

Our consciousness of the Absolute is not negative but positive, and is the one indestructible element of consciousness, "which persists at all times, under all circumstances, and cannot cease until consciousness ceases."
H. Spencer, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXV. 455.

indestructibleness (in-dē-struk'ti-bl-nes), n. Indestructibility.

indestructibly (in-dē-struk'ti-bli), adv. So as to be indestructible.

indeterminable (in-dē-tėr'mi-na-bl), a. [= F. indéterminable = Sp. indeterminable = Pg. indeterminavel = It. indeterminabile, < LL. indeterminabilis, that cannot be defined, < in- priv. + determinabilis, that can be defined: see determinable.] 1. Incapable of being determined, ascertained, or fixed.

Either the question is indeterminable, or, which is worse, men will never be convinced.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 3, Ded.

2. Not to be determined or ended; interminable. [Rare.]

His memory is indeterminable and unalterable, ever remembering to do us good.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 37.

3. In nat. hist., not definable; incapable of specialization: said of a specimen which, from its nature or condition, cannot be properly classified and named.

indeterminableness (in-dē-tėr'mi-na-bl-nes), n. The character of being indeterminable.

indeterminate (in-dē-tėr'mi-nāt), a. [< ME. indeterminat = F. indéterminé = Sp. Pg. indeterminado = It. indeterminato, < LL. indeterminatus, undefined, unlimited, < L. in- priv. + determinatus, defined, limited: see determinate, a.] Not determinate; not settled or fixed; not definite; uncertain; not precise; not exclusively possessing either of a pair of contradictory attributes.

The greatest part of the questions and controversies that perplex mankind, depending on the doubtful and uncertain use of words, or (which is the same) indeterminate ideas, which these are made to stand for.
Locke, Human Understanding, To the Reader.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions.
Newton, Opticks.

Indeterminate analysis, a branch of algebra in which there is always given a greater number of unknown quantities than of independent equations, on which account the number of solutions is indefinite.—Indeterminate coefficients, in math., a method of analysis invented by Descartes, the principle of which consists in this, that if we have an equation of the form in which the coefficients A, B, C are constant, and x a variable which may be supposed as small as we please, each of these coefficients, taken separately, is necessarily equal to 0.—Indeterminate constant, contract, curvature, equation, etc. See the nouns.—Indeterminate form, in math., one of the forms whose values are indeterminate, but to which definite conventional values are attached.—Indeterminate inflorescence, in bot., same as indefinite inflorescence, which see under indefinite.—Indeterminate multiplier, in alg., a multiplier whose value is at first left indeterminate, and afterward fixed to suit the exigencies of the problem.—Indeterminate problem, in math., a problem which admits of an infinite number of solutions, or one in which there are fewer imposed conditions than there are unknown or required results.—Indeterminate quantity, in math., a quantity that admits of an infinite number of values.—Indeterminate series, in math., a series whose terms proceed by the powers of an indeterminate quantity.

$$A + Bx + Cx^2 + Dx^3 + &c. = 0,$$

$$\frac{0}{0}, \frac{\infty}{\infty}, 0 \times \infty, 0^0, \infty^0, 1^\infty, \text{etc.},$$

indeterminately (in-dē-tėr'mi-nāt-li), adv. So as to be indeterminate; indefinitely; without precision.

The unpractised mind . . . indeterminately feels and thinks about itself and the field of its existence.
J. Martineau, Materialism, p. 18.

indeterminateness (in-dē-tėr'mi-nāt-nes), n. The character of being indeterminate; lack of settled limits; want of precision; indefiniteness.

We have but to remember that, growing clustered together as Oysters do, they must interfere with one another in various ways and degrees, to see how the indeterminateness of form and the variety of form are accounted for. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 251.

Index of indeterminateness. See index.

indetermination (in-dē-tėr-mi-nā'shon), n. [= F. indétermination = Sp. indeterminación = Pg. indeterminação = It. indeterminazione; as in-[3] + determination.] Lack of determination; an unsettled or wavering state, as of the mind: want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done and may not be done, may happen or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the cause. Abp. Bramhall, Ans. to Hobbes.

indetermined (in-dē-tėr'mind), a. Undetermined.

The eternal height of indetermin'd space!
The eternal depth of condescending grace!
Brooke, Universal Beauty, v.

indeterminism (in-dē-tėr'mi-nizm), n. [< in-[3] + determinism.] The doctrine that, though the will is somewhat influenced by motives, it is not entirely governed by them, but has a certain freedom and spontaneity. Hodgson.

The cloisters of Christendom resounded . . . with disputations about determinism and indeterminism.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 441.

indeterminist (in-dē-tėr'mi-nist), n. [As indetermin-ism + -ist.] A believer in indeterminism.

indevirginate† (in-dē-vėr'ji-nāt), a. [< in-[3] + devirginate.] Not devirginate or deprived of virginity.

Pallas, . . .
Who still lives indevirginate.
Chapman, Homeric Hymn to Venus.

indevote† (in-dē-vōt'), a. [= F. indévot = Sp. Pg. indevoto = It. indevoto, indivoto, < LL. indevotus, undevout, < in- priv. + L. devotus, attached, faithful, LL. devout: see devote, devout, a.] Not devout; indevout.

There are so many of the same arguments, and so indevote an age. Bentley, Letters, p. 181.

indevoted† (in-dē-vō'ted), a. [< in-[3] + devoted.] Not devoted.

Mr. Cowley's connections with some persons indevoted to the excellent chancellor.
Bp. Hurd, Dialogues, iii., note.

indevotion (in-dē-vō'shon), n. [= F. indévotion = Sp. indevoción = Pg. indevoção = It. indevozione, indivozione; as in-[3] + devotion.] Lack of devotion; absence of devout affections; impiety; irreligion.

If we live in an age of indevotion, we think ourselves well assoiled if we be warmer than their ice.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 57.

The greatness of the example may entice us on a little farther than the customs of the world, or our own indevotions, would engage us.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 84.

indevout (in-dē-vout'), a. [< in-[3] + devout. Cf. indevote.] Not devout; irreligious.

A wretched, careless, indevout spirit.
Jer. Taylor, Sermon (1653).

★ index (in'deks), n.; pl. indexes, indices (in'dek-sez, -di-sēz). [Formerly also indice (< F.); = F. index, formerly indice = Sp. indice = Pg. It. indice, an index, < L. index (indic-), a discoverer, informer, spy; of things, an indicator, the forefinger, a title, superscription; < indicare, point out, show: see indicate.] 1. That which points out; anything that shows, indicates, or manifests.

Whatever stripes of ill-luck La Fleur met with in his journeyings, there was no index in his physiognomy to point them out by. Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 34.

The standing army, the arsenal, the camp, and the gibbet do not appertain to man. They only serve as an index to show where man is now; what a bad, ungoverned temper he has, what an ugly neighbor he is; how his affections halt; how low his hope lies. Emerson, War.

2. In logic, a sign which signifies its object by virtue of being really connected with it. Demonstrative and relative pronouns are nearly pure indices, because they denote things without describing them; so are the letters on a geometrical diagram, and the subscript numbers which in algebra distinguish one value from another without showing what those values are.

3. Something intended to point out, guide, or direct, as the hand of a clock or a steam-gage, the style of a sun-dial, an arm of a guide-post, or the figure of a hand (☞).

There was a sun-dial in the centre of the court; the sun shone on the brazen plate, and the shadow of the index fell on the line of noon.
Peacock, Melincourt, xxxii.

4. A detailed alphabetic (or, rarely, classified) list or table of the topics, names of persons, places, etc., treated or mentioned in a book or a series of books, pointing out their exact positions in the volume.

Methinks tis a pitiful piece of knowledge that can be learnt from an index, and a poor ambition to be rich in the inventory of another's treasure.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, xv.

English grammars usually draw the distinction that indexes is the form used in speaking of the plural of index, as of a book, while indices is the scientific term, as in algebra. N. and Q., 6th ser., X. 69.

5†. Prelude; prologue.

Ah me, what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4.

An index and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. Shak., Othello, ii. 1.

6. (a) In anat., the forefinger or pointing finger. (b) In ornith., the principal or middle digit of the wing of a bird: so called by those who hold that it is homologous with the forefinger of a mammal; by those who hold that the middle digit of the wing is the middle digit of a mammal, the pollex or thumb of a bird's wing is called the index.—7. In math., the figure or letter which shows to what power a quantity is involved; the exponent. In the theory of numbers the index of a number to a given base for a given prime modulus of which that base is a prime root is the index of the power of the base which is congruous to the number. (See exponent, 3.) The index-law is the principle that $a^b a^c = a^{b+c}$. The word index is, besides, used in various special senses in mathematics. See phrases below.

8. In crystal., in the notation of Whewell and Miller, one of three whole numbers which define the position of a face of a crystal: in the notation of Bravais, four numbers constitute the indices of a face of a hexagonal crystal.—9. In musical notation, a direct.—10. [cap.] Same as Index Expurgatorius.

The Index and Inquisition still survive, and the censures of the Church are not obsolete, though her last offices are more frequently rejected than withheld.
Quarterly Rev., CXLV. 297.

Alveolar, basilar, cephalic, facial, etc., index. See craniometry.—Discriminantal index. See discriminantal.—Index finger. See def. 6 (a), and index-finger.—Index Librorum Prohibitorum (Index of Prohibited Books), Index Expurgatorius (Expurgatory Index), catalogues of books comprising respectively those which Roman Catholics are absolutely forbidden to read, and those which they must not read unless in editions expurgated of objectionable passages. They are prepared by the Congregation of the Index, a body of cardinals and their assistants. Pope Paul IV. published a list of forbidden books in 1557 and 1559. The Council of Trent in 1562 attempted the regulation of the matter, but finally referred it to the Pope. He (Pius IV.) published the "Index Tridentinus" in 1564, often reprinted with additions under the title "Index Librorum Prohibitorum."—Index of a line relatively to a quadric surface, the quotient of the square of its secant by the fourth power of the parallel semidiameter.—Index of a logarithm, otherwise called the characteristic, the integral part of the logarithm; the index is always one less than the number of integral figures in the given number. Thus, if the given number consist of four figures, the index of its logarithm is 3; if of five figures the index is 4, and so on. See logarithm.—Index of a plane relatively to a quadric surface, the product of its distances from its pole and from the center of the quadric.—Index of a point relatively to a quadric surface, the product of its two distances from the surface in any direction divided by the square of the parallel semidiameter.—Index of a series of curves of order n satisfying $\frac{1}{2}n(n+3) - 1$ conditions, the number of these curves passing through an arbitrary point.—Index of friction. Same as coefficient of friction (which see, under coefficient).—Index of indeterminateness of a problem, the excess of the number of unknowns over that of the really independent equations.—Index of refraction, in optics, the ratio between the sines of the angles of incidence and refraction for a ray of light passing from one medium (usually the air) into another. Thus, this ratio for a ray passing from air into water is about 4:3, or, more exactly, 1.336, which is therefore the index of refraction of water. Also called refractive index. See refraction.

The index of refraction in the passage of light from one medium into another must be equal to the relation that the rapidity of propagation of light in the first medium bears to its rapidity in the second.
Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 236.

Index rerum, an index of subjects.—Index verborum, an index of words; a verbal index.

index (in'deks), v. t. [< index, n.] 1. To point out, as an index; indicate. [Rare.]

Whose iron-gray wool and wrinkled face indexed his age at near seventy years. The Century, XXIX. 683.

2. To make an index to, or place in an index: as, to index a book, or the contents of a book.

Where are the Somerset County records kept? Have they been indexed and calendared; or are they still in utter confusion? N. and Q., 7th ser., II. 69.

index-correction (in′deks-kō-rek″shon), n. In astron., the correction that has to be applied to an observation taken with an instrument that has an index-error.

index-digit (in′deks-dij″it), n. The forefinger; the index-finger; also, that digit in other animals which represents the human index.

index-error (in′deks-er″or), n. The reading of the graduated limb of an astronomical or other instrument in the position of the telescope in which the reading ought to be zero.

index-finger (in′deks-fing″gėr), n. The forefinger: so called from its being used in pointing.

index-gage (in′deks-gāj), n. A measuring instrument with a pointer and dial, or some other means of indicating the distance between its jaws. The object to be measured is placed between the jaws, and the scale gives the measurement.

index-glass (in′deks-glȧs), n. In reflecting astronomical instruments, a plane speculum, or mirror of quicksilvered glass, which moves with the index, and is designed to reflect the image of the sun or other object upon the horizon-glass, whence it is again reflected to the eye of the observer. See sextant.

indexical (in-dek′si-kal), a. [< index + -ic-al.] Having the form of an index; pertaining to an ★index.

Besides lists of indexes and indexical works.
The American, VIII. 267.

indexically (in-dek′si-kal-i), adv. In the manner of an index.

I would have the names of those scribblers printed indexically at the beginning or end of the poem, with an account of their works for the reader. Swift.

index-law (in′deks-lâ), n. In math. See index, 7.

indexless (in′deks-les), a. [< index + -less.] Destitute of an index.

My bewildering indexless state. Carlyle, in Froude.

indexlessness (in′deks-les-nes), n. The state of being without an index. [Rare.]

Certainly no reader of the last year's volume of the Gazette can complain, in Carlylean phrase, of its indexlessness.
Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 174.

★index-machine (in′deks-ma-shēn″), n. In weaving, a modification of the Jacquard loom mechanism, in which the cards of the original Jacquard device are replaced by a shedding motion, effecting the same results as the cards so far as the pattern is concerned, but affording some advantages not obtainable in the primitive device; a dobby. In one form of index-machine pins arranged in accordance with the prescribed pattern are inserted in the bars or slats of a lath-work, the bars corresponding to the cards of the older device. In all kinds of index-machines the devices employed have for their object to throw in or out of action a series of hooks or bars which actuate the healds to form a shed for the passage of the shuttle according to a previously conceived system. The attachment is sometimes placed at the top and sometimes at the end of the loom. In Eccles's improvement a device is added for throwing the shedding motion out of action, and to permit the weaving of plain borders for handkerchiefs, etc.

indexterity (in-deks-ter′i-ti), n. [= F. indextérité; as in-[3] + dexterity.] Lack of dexterity, skill, or readiness in any respect; clumsiness; awkwardness; unskilfulness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes.
Harvey, Consumptions.

indfine (ind′fin), n. [Ir., < ind, head, + fine, tribe, family.] One of the groups into which the ancient Irish clans were divided. See geilfine.

The eldest member of the Iarfine moved into the Indfine; and the eldest member of the Indfine passed out of the organization altogether.
Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 209.

India (in′di-ȧ). [< L. India, < Gr. 'Ινδία, India: see Indian.] In an attributive use: Indian; pertaining to India or the East Indies; made in, named from, or connected with India: as, India goods; the India trade. In English law or usage India generally means "all territories and places within her Majesty's dominions which are subject to the Governor-General of India." The principal territories under British administration are Bengal, Madras, Bombay, Northwestern Provinces, Central Provinces, Panjâb, Assam, and Burma. Many native states are under British protection.—East India Company, a company formed for carrying on commerce in India and the East Indies. Various companies were organized under this name about the seventeenth century, as the Dutch, Swedish, Danish, French, etc., East India Companies. The most famous was the English East India Company, chartered in 1600; it founded many factories in India in the seventeenth century, and in the eighteenth acquired extensive political power over a large part of the country. It was governed by a court of directors, chosen from the wealthiest stockholders. A joint share in the government was in 1784 given to a board of control in London, and in 1834 the property of the company was vested in the crown and administered for it by the company; but in consequence of the Indian mutiny of 1857–58 all power was in 1858 transferred to the crown.—India cotton, a heavy kind of figured chintz, used for upholstering.—India docks, in London, extensive docks and warehouses formerly used for the accommodation of the shipping engaged in the East and West India trade.—India ink, or China ink, or Chinese ink, a black pigment made originally and principally in China and Japan (though inferior imitations are made elsewhere). It is probably made from a carefully prepared lampblack, which is formed into a paste with a solution of gum in water and pressed into and dried in molds, forming sticks of various shapes. Also Indian ink.—India matting, a kind of grass matting made in India, usually from Cyperus tegetum.—India mull, a thin, soft muslin made in India, and used for dresses and trimmings. See mull.—India myrrh. See myrrh.—India opium. See opium.—India paper, a thin, soft, absorbent paper, usually of a pale-buff tint, made in China and Japan, and imitated in Europe and the United States, where it is used for the first or finest impressions of engravings, called India proofs.—India proof, an early and choice impression taken from an engraved plate or block on India paper.—India rubber. See india-rubber.—India senna. See senna.—India shawl, a Cashmere shawl. See Cashmere.

indiadem (in-di′ȧ-dem), v. t. [< in-[2] + diadem.] To place or set in a diadem, as a gem. [Rare.]

Whereto shall that be likened? to what gem Indiademed? Southey.

Indiaman (in′di-ȧ-man), n.; pl. Indiamen (-men). In general, a ship engaged in the India trade; specifically and strictly, a ship of large tonnage, formerly officered and armed by the East ★India Company for that trade.

Indian (in′di-an), a. and n. [Also in U. S. colloq. or dial. use Injin, Injun; = F. Indien = Sp. Pg. It. Indiano (cf. D. Indiaansch = G. Indianisch = Dan. Sw. Indiansk, a.), < LL. Indianus, < L. India, Gr. 'Ινδία, India, L. Indus, Gr. 'Ινδός, an Indian, < L. Indus, Gr. 'Ινδός, the river so called, OPers. Hindu, Zend Hindu, Pers. Hind. Hind, < Skt. sindhu, a river.] I. a. 1. Of, pertaining, or relating to India or to the Indies (now specifically called the East Indies in distinction from the West Indies), or to the languages of India.

The springs
Of Ganges or Hydaspes, Indian streams.
Milton, P. L., iii. 436.

Ere yet the morn
Breaks hither over Indian seas.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xxvi.

2. Pertaining or relating (a) originally to the West Indies or their inhabitants; (b) now, in an extended sense, to the whole race of American Indians or aborigines: as, Indian arrows; an Indian blanket; an Indian name.

Then smote the Indian tomahawk
On crashing door and shattering lock.
Whittier, Pentucket.

Listen to this Indian Legend,
To this Song of Hiawatha!
Longfellow, Hiawatha, Prol.

3. Made of maize or Indian corn: as, Indian meal; Indian bread.

If I don't make a johnny-cake every day, Kier says, "Ma, why don't you make some Indian bread?"
Mrs. Whitcher, Widow Bedott, p. 70.

Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an officer of the U. S. Interior Department charged with the management of the Indian tribes (exclusive of Alaska) and of the transactions of the government with them.—East Indian cork-tree. See cork-tree.—Indian aconite. Same as Nepal aconite (which see, under aconite).—Indian agency. See agency, 4.—Indian apple, the May apple, Podophyllum peltatum.—Indian architecture, the architecture peculiar to India or Hindustan. It comprehends a great variety of styles, which have been classified as the Buddhist styles, as exemplified not only in the Buddhist works within the borders of Hindustan, but also in those of Burma, Ceylon, Java, China, and Tibet (see Buddhist); the Jain style, developed from preëxisting styles after A. D. 450; the Dravidian or Tamul style of southern India (see Tamul); the Northern Hindu, Indo-Aryan, or Sanskrit style, a cognate style occurring in the valley of the Ganges and its tributaries (see Sanskrit); the Chalukyan style, prevailing in the intermediate region between the last two; the Modern Hindu, Indian-Saracenic, or Mohammedan, comprehending the forms assumed by Indian architecture under the influence of Mohammedan ideas and traditions; and the local developments peculiar to Cashmere and some other districts. No stone architecture existed in India before 250 B. C. The earliest stone buildings reproduce closely the details and constructive forms of the elaborately framed and decorated wooden architecture previously practised, forms more proper to construction in stone being gradually developed. The buildings of the first five or six centuries of stone architecture are Buddhist. Among the most remarkable of the works of Indian architecture are the rock-cut temples and halls, such as those at Ellora, where series of courts, pillared chambers, porches, cells, and cloisters extend for miles, all excavated from the solid rock, and covered with elaborate carving. Lofty towers and pagodas, and the conical pseudo-domes of the Jains, built in horizontal courses, are also characteristic. A system of horizontal architraves is consistently applied; and many of the piers and columns in the later works display capitals resembling closely those of some medieval styles of Europe. But no regular order appears, like those of the classical styles; nor can the development of an arched style be consecutively traced, in spite of many patent resemblances to European art, as in the palace of Madura. The carved decoration is usually exceedingly rich and varied, introducing freely human and animal forms, and often covering piers, arches, and flat surfaces, both without and within. Sculpture was at its best in the fourth and fifth centuries A. D., but shows the Oriental characteristic of decline almost from the beginning. Animals and botanical details are well done; the human figure, though life-like, is conventionalized and not beautiful. Indian architecture has been very thoroughly and intelligently treated by native writers.—Indian balm, the purple trillium or birthroot, a native of North America. See Trillium.—Indian bark, bay, bean, bee-king. See the nouns.—Indian berry, Cocculus Cocculus, a climbing shrub of the family Menispermaceæ, a native of India and the Malay islands. It bears panicles of flowers 1 to 1½ feet long. The fruit, when dried, is known as cocculus indicus. See Cocculus.—Indian blue. Same as indigo.—Indian bread. See def. 3.—Indian chickweed. See chickweed.—Indian chocolate. See Geum.—Indian club, a heavy club shaped somewhat like a large bottle, used in gymnastic exercises to develop the muscles of the arms, chest, etc.—Indian copal. Same as white dammar-resin (which see, under dammar-resin).—Indian corn, a native American plant, Zea Mays, otherwise called maize, and its fruit. See maize.

Indian Architecture, Dravidian style.
Detail of Horse Court, Temple of Madura.

The Summers [in New England] are commonly hot and dry, there being seldom any Rain, yet are the Harvests good, the Indian Corn requiring more heat than wet to ripen it. S. Clarke, Plantations of the English in [America (1670), p. 29.

Indian couch-grass, a name sometimes given to the Bermuda grass, Capriola Dactylon. See Bermuda grass, under grass.—Indian Councils Act. See council.—Indian country, a term which has varied in application with the changes in Indian occupation of lands within the territory of the United States. It is now understood as meaning all the country to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, whether within a reservation or not, except, perhaps, the regions occupied by Indians in Alaska, whose title to the soil, or right of occupancy, is disputed.—Indian cress. See cress.—Indian crocus, a name for some of the species of the genus Pleione, of the family Orchidaceæ. They are dwarf epiphytic plants with large, handsomely colored flowers, and are natives of the alpine regions of northern India.—Indian cucumber. Same as cucumber-root.—Indian currant. See currant[2].—Indian dart or dart-iron, a peculiar harpoon used in killing swordfish.—Indian drug†, a name for tobacco. Nares.

His breath compounded of strong English beere
And th' Indian drug would suffer none come neere.
John Taylor, Works (1630).

Indian elm, the slippery elm, Ulmus fulva.—Indian fan-palm, fig. See the nouns.—Indian file. See file[3].

The party . . . moved up the pathway in single or Indian file. Scott, Waverley, xxxviii.

Indian fire, a pyrotechnic composition, used as a signal-light, consisting of sulphur, realgar, and niter. It burns with a brilliant white flame.—Indian fort. See mound-builder.—Indian geranium. See geranium.—Indian ginger. Same as wild ginger. See ginger[1].—Indian giver, one who takes back a gift after having bestowed it upon another: in allusion to the fact that an Indian expects an equivalent for his gift, or its return. [Colloq., U. S.]—Indian grass. See millet.—Indian greenfinch. Same as yellow finch (which see, under finch[1]).—Indian hazelnuts. Same as bonduc-seeds.—Indian heliotrope, hemp, indigo. See the nouns.—Indian hen, the American bittern, Botaurus mugitans or B. lentiginosus. See bittern[2].—Indian ink. See India ink, under India.—Indian ipecac, ivy, jalap, lake, etc. See the nouns.—Indian meal, meal made from maize or Indian corn.—Indian millet. See millet.—Indian mound. See mound-builder.—Indian myrobalan. Same as hara-nut.—Indian oak, the teak-tree, Tectona grandis. See teak.—Indian ocher. Same as Indian red (which see, under red).—Indian ox, the brahminy bull.—Indian physic. See Gillenia.—Indian pipe. See Indian-pipe.—Indian plague. See plague.—Indian plantain. See Cacalia.—Indian pudding. (a) Same as hasty-pudding, 2. [Rare.]

He was making his breakfast from a prodigious earthen dish, filled with milk and Indian pudding.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 152

(b) A baked, boiled, or steamed pudding made with Indian meal, molasses, and suet, and in New England in former times almost universally, and still quite extensively, forming a part of the Sunday dinner.

The Indian pudding, with its gelatinous softness, matured by long and patient brooding in the motherly old oven. H. B. Stowe, Minister's Wooing, xvi.

Indian red, reed, reservation, rice, etc. See the nouns. —Indian ringworm. Same as dhobie's itch (which see, under dhobie).—Indian shot. See Indian-shot.—Indian steel. Same as wootz.—Indian summer, in the United States, a period in autumn characterized by calm and absence of rain. This condition is especially well manifested in the upper Mississippi valley, where it is in conspicuous contrast with the climatic phenomena which precede and follow it. West of the belt of States lying adjacent to the Mississippi the rainfall is so small that the chief characteristic of the Indian summer is not exceptional enough to excite attention; and from the Mississippi valley eastward, the autumnal periods of calm and dryness become more and more irregular in their occurrence, and are, on the whole, of shorter duration. Hence in the Eastern States any period of unusually quiet, dry, and hazy weather, even if it lasts only a few days, may be designated the Indian summer, provided it occurs at any time between the middle of September and the early part of December. The haze which fills the air at such times is simply the dust and smoke which are not blown away by the wind, but float near the earth's surface. The origin and original meaning of the name are unknown, notwithstanding many hypotheses and much research. It appears first in 1784 as in general use from Maine to Virginia and westward.

That delicious season known as "Indian Summer" is often prolonged into December, when a calm, soft, hazy atmosphere fills the sky, through which, day after day, the sun, shorn of his beams, rises and sets like a globe of fire. J. W. Foster, The Mississippi Valley, p. 205.

What visionary tints the year puts on,
When falling leaves falter through motionless air!
Lowell, An Indian-Summer Reverie.

The warm, late days of Indian Summer came in, dreamy and calm and still, with just frost enough to crisp the ground of a morning, but with warm trances of benignant, sunny hours at noon. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 337.

Indian tobacco, Raputium inflatum: same as gagroot. —Indian turnip, a North American plant, Arisæma triphyllum, which has a very acrid root resembling a small turnip, one or two leaves, divided into three leaflets, and blossoms resembling those of plants of the genus Arum.—Indian walnut. See walnut.—Indian yellow. See yellow.—Order of the Indian Empire, an order instituted in 1878 for British subjects in India, to commemorate the assumption by Queen Victoria of the title of Empress of India, and open to natives as well as to persons of European extraction.—West Indian bark. See bark[2].

Indian Turnip (Arisæma triphyllum). a, inflorescence, the spathe turned back; b, male, and c, female spadix.

II. n. 1. A member of one of the native races of India or the East Indies; an East Indian.

The fig-tree, not that kind for fruit renown'd,
But such as at this day, to Indians known,
In Malabar or Decan spreads her arms.
Milton, P. L., ix. 1102.

2. A European who resides or has resided in the East Indies; an Anglo-Indian.

He [Colonel Newcome] appeared at Bath and at Cheltenham, where, as we know, there are many old Indians. Thackeray, Newcomes, xxi.

Our best Indians, . . . in the idleness and obscurity of home [Great Britain], . . . look back with fondness to the country where they have been useful and distinguished. Elphinstone, in Colebrooke, I. 366.

3. An aboriginal native of North or South America: so named by Columbus and other early navigators, who thought that the lands discovered by them were parts of India. In English writers of the sixteenth century this name is confined to those tribes with whom the Spaniards came in contact; after 1600 it is applied also to the aboriginal inhabitants of North America generally

Now we are ready, I think, for any assault of the Indians; . . .
Let them come, if they like, be it sagamore, sachem, or pow-wow. Longfellow, Courtship of Miles Standish, i.

He was an Indian of the Llanos, . . . and had actually been upon the Oronoco. Kingsley, Westward Ho, xxi.

Mr. Prescott, in Schoolcraft's Indian Tribes, also states that the North American Indians do not pray to the Great Spirit. Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilization, p. 254.

East Indian, a native or an inhabitant of the East Indies. —Red Indian, one of the aborigines of America: so called from the copper color of their skin. Also called red man and, colloquially, redskin.—West Indian, a native or an inhabitant of the West Indies.

Indian (in'di-an), v. i. [< Indian, n., 3.] To prowl about or live like an Indian. [Colloq., U. S.]

Jake Marshall and me has been Indianing round these 'ere woods more times 'n you could count. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 189.

indianaite (in-di-an'a-īt), n. [< Indiana + -ite[2].] A kind of white clay found in Lawrence county, Indiana, and used in making porcelain.

Indian-arrow (in'di-an-ar″ō), n. The burning-bush, Euonymus atropurpureus, a small ornamental American shrub.

Indian-cup (in'di-an-kup), n. A plant of the genus Sarracenia; a pitcher-plant.

Indianeer (in″di-a-nēr′), n. [< Indian + -eer.] An Indiaman. [Rare.]

Indian-eye (in'di-an-ī), n. A pink, Dianthus plumarius: so called from the eye-shaped marking of the corolla.

Indian-heart (in'di-an-härt), n. A plant of the genus Cardiospermum, particularly C. corindum: so called from the prominent, white, heart-shaped scars on the seed, which mark the point of attachment.

Indianian (in-di-an'i-an), a. and n. [< Indiana (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Indiana, one of the interior States of the United States.

II. n. An inhabitant or a native of the State of Indiana.

Indianist (in'di-an-ist), n. [< Indian + -ist.] A student of, or an expert in, the languages and history of India.

The problems remained unsolved, because the Sinologues had known no Sanskrit and the Indianists had known no Chinese. F. W. Farrar, Families of Speech, p. 13.

indianite (in'di-an-īt), n. [< Indian, a., 1, + -ite[2].] In mineral., a variety of anorthite found in the Carnatic, where it is the gangue of corundum.

Indian-pipe (in'di-an-pīp), n. The corpse-plant or pine-sap, Monotropa uniflora: so named from the resemblance of the plant when in flower to a white clay pipe. See cut under Monotropa.

Indian-poke (in'di-an-pōk), n. The American white or false hellebore, Veratrum viride.

Indian-root (in'di-an-röt), n. The American spikenard, Aralia racemosa.

Indian-sal, Indian-saul (in'di-an-sal, -sâl), n. A large East Indian tree, Shorea robusta, the wood of which is widely used in Bengal, and ranks next to teak. Also called sal-tree.

Indian's-dream (in'di-anz-drēm), n. A North American fern, Pellæa atropurpurea.

Indian-shoe (in'di-an-shö), n. The moccasin-flower, Cypripedium: so called from the resemblance of the inflated lip to a moccasin.

Indian-shot (in'di-an-shot), n. A plant of the genus Canna, particularly C. Indica: so called from the hard shot-like seeds, of which there are several in the pod. See cut under Canna.

india-rubber (in'di-ä-rub'ėr), n. 1. An elastic gummy substance, the coagulated milky juice of various plants; gum elastic; caoutchouc. India-rubber is derived from a large number of plants and is obtained by tapping the stem or branches and coagulating the milky juice which flows from the wound. The twenty-five most important plants which yield india-rubber in commercial quantities are natives of the tropics and belong to the families Moraceæ, Euphorbiaceæ, Apocynaceæ, and Asclepiadaceæ. The most important genera yielding india-rubber are the following (which see, under their respective names): Castilla, Ficus, Hevea, Manihot, Pacouria (in supplement), and Sapium. See also rubber, in the supplement. It is the most freely elastic of substances. Its elasticity may be removed by stretching it and placing it in this condition in cold water, but is regained by immersion in warm water. It yields to pressure in any direction, and returns instantly to its original form when the pressure is removed. Cold renders it hard and stiff, but never brittle. Heat makes it supple. It melts at a temperature of 248° F., partially decomposing, and forming a viscous mass which does not again become solid when cold. It vaporizes at 600° F. At a red heat it yields a gas at the rate of 30,000 cubic feet per ton, which has a high illuminating power. When ignited in contact with the air it burns freely, with a bright flame and a great deal of smoke. India-rubber dissolves in bisulphid of carbon, naphtha, benzol, washed ether, and chloroform, and in the oils of cajeput, lavender, sassafras, and in turpentine. An oily liquid which is an excellent solvent is obtained from the gum itself by exposing it to a temperature of 600° F. in a close vessel. When treated with sulphur, as in the process of vulcanizing, india-rubber becomes black and takes a horny consistence, retaining its elasticity even when cold, and is more easily worked, so that its value for many commercial purposes is greatly increased. Since the process of vulcanization was discovered (by Charles Goodyear in 1844), pure rubber is rarely used, the vulcanized or changed rubber being far preferable for almost every use.

2. An overshoe made of india-rubber. [Colloq., U. S.]—India-rubber tree, the name of several trees which produce india-rubber, but particularly of Ficus elastica. In the West Indies F. lævigata is so designated.—India-rubber vine, an East Indian twining asclepiadaceous plant, Cryptostegia grandiflora, now also introduced sparingly into the West Indies. It yields a very pure caoutchouc.

Indic (in'dik), a. [< L. Indicus, < Gr. Ἰνδικός, pertaining to India or the Indians, < Ἰνδία, India, Ἰνδός, Indian: see Indian.] Originating or flourishing in India: a comprehensive epithet sometimes applied to the Indo-European (Aryan) languages of India, including the ancient Sanskrit, Prakrit, and Pali, and the modern Hindi, Hindustani, Marathi, Bengali, etc.

indical† (in'di-kal), a. [< L. index (indic-), an index, + -al.] Related to or derived from indexes.

I confess there is a lazy kind of Learning which is only indical. Fuller, Worthies, Norfolk.

indican (in'di-kan), n. [< NL. indicum, indigo (see indigo), + -an.] The natural glucoside ($C_{14}H_{17}NO_6$) by the decomposition of which indigo blue is produced from the various species of indigo-producing plants. It forms orthorhombic crystals containing 3 molecules of H_2O. The hydrated crystals melt at 51° C., the anhydrous compound at 102° C. By the action of dilute mineral acids it splits up, forming indigo blue and glucose.

indicant (in'di-kant), a. and n. [< L. indican(t-)s, ppr. of indicare, show, point out: see indicate.] I. a. Serving to indicate, point out, or suggest.

II. n. That which serves to point out or indicate; specifically, in med., that which indicates a suitable remedy or treatment, as a symptom or combination of symptoms, or the history of the case.

indicate (in'di-kāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. indicated, ppr. indicating. [< L. indicatus, pp. of indicare (> It. indicare = Sp. Pr. indicar = F. indiquer), point out, indicate, < in, in, to, + dicare, declare, orig. point: see diction. Cf. index.] 1. To point out; show; suggest, as by an outline or a word, etc.: as, the length of a shadow indicates the time of day; to indicate a picture by a sketch.

Above the steeple shines a plate
That turns and turns to indicate
From what point blows the weather.
Cowper, The Jackdaw (trans.).

A white-washed, high-roofed, one-storied building in front was indicated as the dâk bungalow and posting station. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 135.

2. Especially, to give a suggestion of; serve as a reason or ground for inferring, expecting, using, etc.; also, merely suggest; hint: as, a falling barometer indicates rain or high wind; certain symptoms indicate certain remedies in the treatment of disease.

Surely the uniformity of the phænomenon indicates a corresponding uniformity in the cause. Macaulay, Milton.

Indicated duty, the work done by a steam-engine per unit weight of coal consumed, as shown by the steam-engine indicator.—Indicated horse-power. See horse-power.—Indicated power, the power of the steam-engine as measured by the instrument called an indicator.=Syn. To mark, signify, denote, manifest, evidence, betoken.

indication (in-di-kā'shon), n. [= F. indication = Pr. indicatio = Sp. indicación = Pg. indicação = It. indicazione, < L. indicatio(n-), a showing, < indicare, show: see indicate.] 1. The act of indicating or pointing out; a showing; exhibition; manifestation; prognostication.

Without which you cannot make any true analysis and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. That which serves to indicate or point out; intimation; information; mark; token; sign; symptom.

Configurations and indications of the various phases of the moon, the motion and place of the sun in the ecliptick, and divers other curious indications of celestial motions. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 340.

3. In med., a special symptom or group of symptoms calling for a special remedy or mode of treatment; thus, the occurrence of fluctuation in an abscess is an indication for operation.

indicative (in-dik'a-tiv), a. and n. [= F. indicatif = Pr. indicatiu = Sp. Pg. It. indicativo = G. indicativ, < LL. indicativus, serving to point out, < L. indicare, pp. indicatus, point out.] I. a. 1. Pointing out; bringing to notice; giving intimation or knowledge of something not visible or obvious; showing.

And I understand . . . the truth of this manner of operation in the instance of Isaac blessing Jacob, which in the several parts was expressed in all forms, indicative, optative, enunciative.
Jer. Taylor, Divine Institution of the Office Ministerial.

It often happens that clouds are not so indicative of a storm as the total absence of clouds.
J. Burroughs, The Century, XXV. 674.

2. In gram., noting that mode of the verb which indicates (that is, simply predicates or affirms), without any further modal implication: as, he writes; he is writing; they run; has the mail arrived?

II. n. In gram., the indicative mode. See I., 2. Abbreviated ind.

indicatively (in-dik'a-tiv-li), adv. In a manner to show or signify.

indicator (in'di-kā-tor), n. [= F. indicateur = Sp. Pg. indicador = It. indicatore, < LL. indicator, one who points out, < L. indicare, point out: see indicate.] 1. One who indicates or points out; that which points out, directs, or reports, as a grade-post on a railroad, the pointer on a steam-gage, etc. It is used in compound names to describe a number of gaging or indicating appliances: as, leak-indicator, speed-indicator, etc.

Reasoning by analogy, we find that, in many cases of bodily disease, the state of the mind is the first indicator of the mischief going on in the system.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 213.

Specifically—(a) A steam (cylinder) pressure-gage. It is an apparatus for recording the variations of pressure or vacuum in the cylinder of a steam-engine. The accompanying cut represents a type of the indicator. The pipe with the stop-cock is screwed to the cylinder so that when the cock is opened the pressure of the steam within may enter the cylinder above, press the piston upward against the action of a spring constructed to give a definite resistance in pounds per square inch, and cause the lever-arm to rise and mark on the hollow cylinder at the left a vertical trace, the altitude of which measures the pressure. A card or a sheet of paper may be fitted to this cylinder, and the trace be made on the paper. The hollow cylinder is free to revolve. Such graphic curves are called indicator-diagrams, the marked card being called an indicator-card. See indicator-diagram, under diagram. (b) A signal-telegraph consisting of a dial having the letters of the alphabet printed upon it, and a pointer that traverses the circle, pausing before the letters of the word transmitted, thus spelling out the message. See telegraph. (c) In a microscope, an arrangement for marking the position of a particular object in the field of view. Quekett's indicator was a steel finger connected with the eyepiece. (d) In mining, an arrangement by means of which the position of the cage in the shaft is known to the man in charge of the winding-engine. (e) In the theory of numbers, the exponent of that power of any number less than and prime to any modulus, which power is the least power of the same number congruous to unity. (f) In anat., the extensor indicis, a muscle which extends the forefinger, as in the act of pointing. It arises from the back of the ulna, and is inserted into the index-finger, which can thus be straightened independently of the other fingers. [In this sense only the plural is indicatores.] 2. In ornith.: (a) A honey-guide; a species of the genus Indicator or family Indicatoridæ. (b) [cap.] The typical and leading genus of Indicatoridæ, established by Vieillot in 1816. I. major and I. minor are examples. See Indicatoridæ.—Celestial indicator, an apparatus for finding the relative positions of the principal stars and constellations. — Hydraulic indicator. See hydraulic.—Indicator-card. See def. 1 (a), above.—Indicator-diagram. See def. 1 (a), above.—Indicator-muscle, the extensor indicis.—Low-water indicator, a device for showing the depth of water in a steam-boiler, usually a glass tube placed vertically at the end of the boiler in which the water rises.—Stock-indicator, an electric-telegraph machine which records automatically in letters and figures, on a strip of paper called a tape, the names and prices of stock and other funds sent out from a central office, and, in general, news of a character likely to affect the money-market. Also called ticker.

Indicator.

Steam-pressure Indicator.
a, connection to engine-cylinder; b, cylinder which contains piston and rod; c, end of piston-rod connected with spiral spring; d, connection between piston-rod and lifting-rod; e, lifting-rod which raises and lowers pencil-bar; f, spring; g, pencil-bar; h, pencil; i, cord wound around base of drum which causes it to revolve when fastened to moving part of engine; j, drum or cylinder around which is wound the chart or indicator-card for marking; k, guides for pencil-bar; l, spring-clip.

Stock-indicator.
a, paper tape; b, type-wheel; c, ink-pad roller.

Indicatoridæ (in"di-kā-tor'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Indicator + -idæ.] A family of zygodactyl picarian birds, related to the barbets (Capitonidæ) and woodpeckers (Picidæ); the honey-guides or indicators. It is a small family of about 12 species of small dull-colored birds, noted for serving as guides to places where honey may be found. They build pensile nests, lay white eggs, and some are said to be parasitic, like cuckoos. Three species inhabit the Oriental region, Indicator xanthonotus of India, I. malayanus of Malacca, and I. archipelagicus of Borneo. The rest are African, as I. major, etc.

Indicatorinæ (in-di-kā-tō-rī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Indicator + -inæ.] The honey-guides as a subfamily of Cuculidæ, or of some other family of zygodactyl birds. W. Swainson; G. R. Gray; A. H. Garrod.

indicatory (in'di-kā-tō-ri), a. [< indicate + -ory.] Serving to show or make known; showing.

The box which covers the coil and indicatory part of the thermometer is merely to protect it from accidental injury. Sir C. W. Thomson, Depths of the Sea, p. 294.

indicatrix (in-di-kā'triks), n. [NL., fem. to indicator.] 1. In geom., the curve of intersection of any surface with a plane indefinitely near and parallel to the tangent-plane at any point. The indicatrix is a hyperbola, a pair of parallel lines, or an ellipse, according as the surface is anticlastic, cylindrical, or synclastic, at the point of tangency. 2. In the theory of equations, a curve which exhibits the joint effect of the two middle criteria of Newton's rule, in the case of an equation of the fifth degree having all its roots imaginary.—Spherical indicatrix, the spherical curve traced on a unit sphere by the extremity of a radius drawn parallel to the tangent of a tortuous curve.

indicavit (in-di-kā'vit), n. [L., he has shown, 3d pers. sing. perf. ind. act. of indicare, show: see indicate.] In Eng. eccles. law, a variety of the writ of prohibition.

indice† (in'dis), n. [< F. indice, < L. index, index: see index.] An index.

Too much talking is ever the indice of a foole.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

indices, n. Latin plural of index.

indicia (in-dish'i-ą), n. pl. [L., pl. of indicium, a notice, information, discovery, sign, mark, token, < index (indic-), index: see index.] Discriminating marks; badges; tokens; indications; symptoms: as, indicia of fraud; indicia of disease.

indicible† (in-dis'i-bl), a. [< F. indicible, < ML. indicibilis, that cannot be said, < in- priv. + dicibilis, < L. dicere, say: see diction.] Unspeakable; inexpressible.

If the malignity of this sad contagion spend no faster before winter, the calamity will be indicible.
Evelyn, To Lord Cornebery, Sept. 9, 1665.

indicot, n. An obsolete form of indigo.

indicolite (in-dik'ō-līt), n. [< Gr. ἰνδικόν, indigo, + λίθος, stone.] In mineral., a variety of tourmaline of an indigo-blue color, sometimes with a tinge of azure or green. Also indigolite.

indict (in-dīt'), v. t. [Formerly also endict; the c is a mod. insertion, in imitation of the orig. L.; prop., as the pron. shows, indite, endite, the older form being now differentiated in sense; < OF. enditer, endicter, inditer, indicter, indict, accuse, point out, < L. indictare, declare, accuse, freq. of indicere, pp. indictus, declare, appoint (in sense appar. in part confused with L. indicare, point out), < in, in, + dicere, say: see diction.] 1. To compose; write: properly and still usually written indite (which see.) [Obsolete or archaic.]—2†. To appoint publicly or by authority; proclaim.

And therefore, as secular princes did use to indict or permit the indiction of synods of bishops, so, when they saw cause, they confirm'd the sentences of bishops and pass'd them into laws. Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, iii. 4.

I am told we shall have no Lent indicted this year.
Evelyn.

3. To find chargeable with a criminal offense, and in due forms of law to accuse of the same, as a means of bringing to trial: specifically said of the action of a grand jury. See indictment.

No matter in the phrase that might indict the author of affectation. Shak., Hamlet (Globe ed.), ii. 2.

About the same Time, Robert Tresilian, Chief Justice, came to Coventry, where he indicted two thousand Persons. Baker, Chronicles, p. 143.

You are here indicted by the names of Guildford Dudley, Lord Dudley, Jane Gray, Lady Jane Gray, of capital and high treason against our most sovereign lady the queen's majesty. Dekker and Webster, Sir Thomas Wyat.

=Syn. 3. Charge, Indict, etc. See accuse.

indictable (in-dī'ta-bl), a. [< indict + -able.] 1. Capable of being indicted; liable to indictment: as, an indictable offender.—2. That may subject one to an indictment; that may be punished by a proceeding commenced by indictment: as, an indictable offense.

indictee (in-dī-tē'), n. [< indict + -ee[1].] One who is indicted.

indicter, indictor (in-dī'tėr, -tọr), n. One who indicts.

And then maister More saith yet further that vpon indightmentes at Sessions the indighters vse not to shewe ye names of them that gaue them informacion.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 987.

indiction (in-dik'shon), n. [= F. indiction, < L. indictio(n-), a declaration of imposition of a tax, LL. a space of 15 years, < indicere, declare: see indict.] 1†. A declaration; proclamation.

After a legation "ad res repetendas," and a refusal, and a denunciation, and indiction of war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

The emperor subscribed with his own hand, and in purple ink, the solemn edict or indiction.
Gibbon, Decline and Fall, xvii.

2. A fiscal period of fifteen years, established by Constantine the Great after the reorganization of the Roman Empire, being the term during which the annual tax on real property was paid on the basis of a valuation made and proclaimed at the beginning of each quindecennial period. This became a common and convenient means for dating ordinary transactions.

By a very easy connection of ideas, the word indiction was transferred to the measure of tribute which it prescribed, and to the annual term which it allowed for payment. Gibbon, Decline and Fall, xvii.

Hence—3. In chron., a year bearing a number, or the number attached to the year, showing its place in a cycle of fifteen years, counting from A. D. 313. To find the indiction, add 3 to the number of the year in the vulgar era, and divide by 15; the remainder is the indiction, or, if there is no remainder, the indiction is 15. There were three varieties, differing only in the commencement of the year: the original Greek or Constantinopolitan, reckoned from September 1st of what we consider the previous year; the Roman or Pontifical (a bad designation, since it was not used preferentially in the bulls of the popes), beginning with the civil year, January 1st, December 25th, or March 25th; and the Constantinian, Imperial, or Cæsarean (due to a blunder of the Venerable Bede), beginning September 24th.

Giuen in the moneth of November, and vpon the tenth Indiction. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 20.

The name and use of the Indictions, which serve to ascertain the chronology of the middle ages, was derived from the regular practice of the Roman Tributes.
Gibbon, Decline and Fall, xvii.

indictive† (in-dik'tiv), a. [< LL. indictivus, < L. indicere, pp. indictus, declare: see indict, indiction.] Proclaimed; declared.

In all the funerals of note, especially in the publick or indictive, the corpse was first brought, with a vast train of followers, into the forum.
Kennet, Antiquities of Rome, ii. 5.

indictment (in-dīt'ment), n. [Formerly also endictment; < indict + -ment.] 1. The act of indicting; accusation; formal charge or statement of grievances; formal complaint before a tribunal.

All their lives,
That by indictment, and by dint of sword,
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., Iv. 1.

2. In law, the formal complaint by which a criminal offense, found by the grand jury to have been committed, is by it charged against the supposed offender for presentation to the court, that he may be put on trial. It is generally drafted by the public prosecutor, and is termed a bill until it has received the sanction of the grand jury, which must be by the concurrence of at least twelve of the jurors, attested by oath or affirmation.

An indictment is a written accusation of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, preferred to, and presented upon oath by, a grand jury.
Blackstone, Com., IV. xxiii.

3. In Scots law, a form or process by which a criminal is brought to trial at the instance of the lord advocate. It runs in the name of the lord advocate, and, addressing the panel by name, charges the latter with being guilty of the crime for which he is to be brought to trial.—Bill of indictment. See def. 2.—Finding an indictment, the act of the grand jury, on investigating an offense, in approving an indictment of the supposed offender.

indictor, n. See indicter.

indienne (F. pron. aṅ-di-en'), n. [F., fem. of Indien, Indian: see Indian.] Printed calico, especially that printed in bright colors with a rather small pattern: the French term, often used in English.

indifference (in-dif'e-rens), n. [< F. indifférence = Sp. indiferencia = Pg. indifferença = It. indifferenza, < L. indifferentia, < indifferen(t-)s, indifferent: see indifferent.] 1. The state of being indifferent, as between persons or things; absence of prepossession or bias; impartiality.

He is through such pryde farre fro such indifference & equitie as ought and must be in the judges which he sayth I assigne. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1008.

After praise and scorn,
As one who feels the immeasurable world,
Attain the wise indifference of the wise.
Tennyson, A Dedication.

2. The state of being indifferent or apathetic; the absence of definite preference or choice; want of differentiation or variation of feeling; absence of special interest; apathy; insensibility.

Many, we may easily suppose, have manifested this willingness to die from an impatience of suffering, or from that passive indifference which is sometimes the result of debility and bodily exhaustion. Sir H. Halford.

This absolute indifference to the sight of human suffering does not represent the full evil resulting from the gladiatorial games. Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 295.

3. The character of being indifferent or immaterial; want of essential difference with respect to choice, use or non-use, etc.; immateriality; unimportance: as, the indifference of particular actions or things.—4. The condition of being indifferent in character or quality; a falling short of the standard of excellence; comparative mediocrity: as, the indifference of one's penmanship or work.

Also indifferency.

Doctrine of indifference, an opinion current in the twelfth century concerning the question of the nature of universals: namely, that nothing exists except individuals, but that, if the mind neglects the peculiar properties of this or that individual, and considers only those characters wherein one individual agrees with others, the object of thought, though still the individual, is in the state of being a species or genus.—Liberty of indifference, freedom from necessity; the freedom of the will: so called because before the choice or election is made the action of the will is undetermined as to acting or not acting, a state called indifference of action.—Point of magnetic indifference. See magnetic.—Syn. 1. Neutrality, etc. See neutrality.—2. Insensibility, Impassibility, etc. (see apathy); Inattention, etc. (see negligence); carelessness, coolness, coldness, heedlessness, nonchalance.—4. Poorness, low grade.

indifferenced† (in-dif'e-renst), a. Having an appearance of indifference. Davies.

I again turned to her, all as indifferenced over as a girl at the first long-expected question, who waits for two more. Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, III. 186.

indifferency (in-dif'e-ren-si), n. Same as indifference.

An I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 3.

Thus do all things preach the indifferency of circumstances. The man is all. Emerson, Compensation.

indifferent (in-dif'e-rent), a. and n. [< ME. indifferent, < OF. indifferent, F. indifférent = Sp. indiferente = Pg. It. indifferente, < L. indifferen(t-)s, not different, < in- priv. + different(t-)s, different: see different.] I. a. 1. Without difference of inclination; not preferring one person or thing to another; neutral; impartial; unbiased; disinterested: as, an indifferent judge, juror, or arbitrator.

My lords, be as the law is,
Indifferent, upright; I do plead guilty.
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, v. 1.

This general and indifferent temper of mine doth more nearly dispose me to this noble virtue.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 2.

2. Feeling no interest, anxiety, or care; unconcerned; apathetic: as, a man indifferent to his eternal welfare.

I'll give you your Revenge another time, when you are not so indifferent; you are thinking of something else now, and play too negligently.
Congreve, Way of the World, i. 1.

In every man's career are certain points
Whereon he dares not be indifferent.
Browning, Bishop Blougram's Apology.

3. Not making a difference; having no influence or preponderating weight; immaterial; of no account: as, it is indifferent which road we take.

Dangers are to me indifferent. Shak., J. C., i. 3.

4. Regarded without difference of feeling; not exciting special interest; uninteresting.

Mutual love gives an importance to the most indifferent things, and a merit to actions the most insignificant.
Steele, Spectator, No. 263.

I cannot say that I particularly wish him to have more affection for me than he has. . . . When people are long indifferent to us, we grow indifferent to their indifference.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxi.

5. Falling short of any standard of excellence; of common or mediocre quality or kind; only passable or tolerable; ordinary.

Ham. Good lads, how do ye both?
Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things that it were better my mother had not borne me. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 1.

A man who has been brought up among books, and is able to talk of nothing else, is a very indifferent companion. Addison, The Man of the Town.

6. In biol., undifferentiated; primitive; common; not specialized.—Indifferent cells or tissues. See cell.—Indifferent equilibrium. See equilibrium, 1.=Syn. 2. Cold, cool, lukewarm, inattentive, heedless.

II. n. 1. One who is indifferent or apathetic.

The mass of Christians throughout the world are even now no better than indifferents.
Contemporary Rev., LIII. 180.

2. That which is indifferent or an object of indifference; that which affords no decisive ground of choice.

Now, where there are no indifferents and no choice between them, rights are never wider than duties.
F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 191.

indifferentiated (in-dif-e-ren'shi-ā-ted), a. [< in-[3] + differentiate + -ed[2].] Not differentiated.

indifferentism (in-dif'e-ren-tizm), n. [< indifferent + -ism.] 1. Systematic indifference; avoidance of choice or preference; specifically, the principle that differences of religious belief are essentially unimportant; adiaphorism.

The zeal for liberal studies, the luxury of life, the religious indifferentism, the bureaucratic system of state government, which mark the age of the Italian Renaissance. J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 171.

A large number of voters abstained from indifferentism rather than from real hostility to Home Rule.
Nineteenth Century, XX. 599.

2. In metaph., the doctrine of absolute identity; the doctrine that to be in idea or thought and to exist are one and the same thing. See absolute identity, under absolute.

indifferentist (in-dif'e-ren-tist), n. [< indifferent + -ist.] One who is indifferent or neutral in any cause; specifically, one who adopts the attitude of religious indifferentism.

indifferently (in-dif'e-rent-li), adv. 1. In an indifferent manner; without difference or distinction; impartially; without concern or preference.

Set honour in one eye, and death i' the other,
And I will look on both indifferently.
Shak., J. C., i. 2.

You are both equal and alike to me yet, and so indifferently affected by me as each of you might be the man if the other were away. B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iv. 2.

Grant . . . that they may truly and indifferently minister justice.
Book of Common Prayer, [English] Communion Service, [Prayer for Church Militant.

2. Not particularly well, but still not ill; tolerably; passably.

I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2.

But I am come to myself indifferently well since, I thank God for it. Howell.

I took my leave very indifferently pleased, but treated with wondrous good breeding. Gray, Letters, I. 123.

indiffusible (in-di-fū'zi-bl), a. [< in-[3] + diffusible.] Not diffusible.

indigence (in'di-jens), n. [< F. indigence, < L. indigentia, need, want, < indigen(t-)s, needy: see indigent.] The condition of being indigent; insufficiency of means of subsistence; poverty; penury.

It is the care of a very great part of mankind to conceal their indigence from the rest. Johnson.

=Syn. Penury, Want, etc. See poverty.

indigency (in'di-jen-si), n. Same as indigence.
Bentley.

indigene (in'di-jēn), a. and n. [< F. indigène, < L. indigenus, born in a country, native: see indigenous.] I. a. Indigenous; native.

They were Indigene, or people bred vpon that very soyle. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 491.

II. n. One who or that which is native or indigenous; a native or aborigine; an autochthon.

It might have been expected that the plants which would succeed in becoming naturalized in any land would generally have been closely allied to the indigenes; for these are commonly looked at as specially created and adapted for their own country.
Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 112.

★ indigenous (in-dij'e-nus), a. [= F. indigène = Sp. indígena = Pg. indigena = It. indigeno, < LL. indigenus, born in a country, native, L. indigena, a native, < indu, within (< in, in), + gignere, genere, bear: see -genous.] 1. Born or originating in a particular place or country; produced naturally in a country or climate; native; not exotic.

Negroes . . . are not indigenous or proper natives of America. Sir T. Browne.

He belonged to the genuinely indigenous school of Spanish poetry. Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 335.

Under the Frankish law, "the tything-man is Decanus, the hundred-man Centenarius"; and whatever may have been their indigenous names, divisions into tens and hundreds appear to have had . . . an independent origin among Germanic races. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 512.

2. Figuratively, innate; inherent; intrinsic.

Joy and hope are emotions indigenous to the human mind. Is. Taylor.

=Syn. Native, etc. See original, a.

indigenously (in-dij'e-nus-li), adv. In an indigenous manner; by indigenous means.

The art seems not to have indigenously extended beyond that stage in any but arid regions. Science, XI. 220.

indigent (in'di-jent), a. [< F. indigent = Sp. Pg. It. indigente, < L. indigen(t-)s, needy, ppr. of indigere, need, be in want of, < indu, in, + egere, need, be in want.] 1†. Wanting; lacking: followed by of.

Such bodies have the tangible parts indigent of moisture.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How do I see that our Sex is naturally indigent of Protection? Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, ii. 1.

2. Lacking means of comfortable subsistence or support; wanting necessary resources; needy; poor.

The nakedness of the indigent world may be clothed from the trimmings of the vain. Goldsmith, Vicar, iv.

=Syn. Destitute, necessitous, reduced.

indigently (in'di-jent-li), adv. In an indigent or destitute manner.

indigest† (in-di-jest'), a. and n. [= F. indigeste = Pr. indigest = Sp. Pg. It. indigesto, < L. indigestus, unarranged, < in- priv. + digestus, pp. of digerere, arrange, digest: see digest.] I. a. Not digested; crude; unformed; shapeless.

To fortify the most indigest and crude stomach.
B. Jonson, Volpone, ii. 1.

Me thinkes a troubled thought is thus exprest,
To be a chaos rude and indigest.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, i. 2.

II. n. A crude mass; a disordered state of affairs.

Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born
To set a form upon that indigest
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.
Shak., K. John, v. 7.

indigested (in-di-jes'ted), a. [< in-[3] + digested.] 1. Not digested in the stomach; not changed or prepared for nourishing the body; undigested; crude.

All dreams, as in old Galen I have read,
Are from repletion and complexion bred,
From rising fumes of indigested food.
Dryden, Cock and Fox, l. 142.

2. Not regularly disposed or arranged; not reduced to form and method; mentally crude: as, an indigested scheme.

They cannot think any doubt resolv'd, and any doctrine confirm'd, unlesse they run to that indigested heap and frie of Authors which they call Antiquity.
Milton, Prelatical Episcopacy.

In hot reformations, in what men more zealous than considerate call making clear work, the whole is generally crude, harsh, and indigested. Burke, Economical Reform.

3. In phar., not digested; not prepared or softened with the aid of heat, as chemical substances.—4†. In med., not advanced to suppuration: as, an indigested wound.

indigestedness (in-di-jes'ted-nes), n. The state of being indigested.

They looked on the Common Law as a study that could not be brought into a scheme, nor formed into a rational science, by reason of the indigestedness of it.
Quoted in Bp. Burnet's Life of Hale.

indigestibility (in-di-jes-ti-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. indigestibilité = Pr. indigestibilitat = It. indigestibilità; as indigestible + -ity.] The state or quality of being indigestible.

indigestible (in-di-jes'ti-bl), a. [< F. indigestible = Sp. indigestible = It. indigestibile, < LL. indigestibilis, < in- priv. + digestibilis, digestible: see digestible.] 1. Not digestible physically; unassimilable, as food.

Brown bread, oatmeal porridge, etc., are taken for the very aperient action they induce, owing to the irritating nature of the indigestible husks they contain.
Quain, Med. Dict.

2. Not digestible mentally; not to be assimilated by the mind; not to be stomached or brooked; incomprehensible or unendurable: as, an indigestible statement; an indigestible affront.

Who but a boy, fond of the florid and the descriptive, could have poured forth such a torrent of indigestible similes? T. Warton, Poems attributed to Rowley, p. 79.

indigestibleness (in-di-jes'ti-bl-nes), n. Indigestibility.

indigestibly (in-di-jes'ti-bli), adv. Not digestibly; so as not to be digested.

indigestion (in-di-jes'chon), n. [= F. indigestion = Sp. indigestión = Pg. indigestão = It. in- digestione, < LL. indigestio(n-), indigestion, < in- priv. + digestio(n-), digestion.] Want of digestion; incapability of or difficulty in digesting food; dyspepsia.

Fat Brom Van Bummel, who was suddenly carried off by an indigestion. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 393.

indigestive (in-di-jes'tiv), a. [= OF. indigestif; as in-[3] + digestive.] Affected by indigestion; dyspeptic.

She was a cousin, an indigestive single woman, who called her rigidity religion. Dickens, Great Expectations, xxv.

indigitate† (in-dij'i-tāt), v. t. [< ML. indigitatus, pp. of indigitare, < L. in, in, on, + digitus, a finger: see digit.] To indicate with or as if with the finger; point out.

Horace, . . . Juvenal, and Persius were no prophets, although their lines did seem to indigitate and point at our times. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 6.

★ We are not to indigitate the parts transmitted. Harvey.

indigitation† (in-dij-i-tā'shon), n. [< indigitate + -ion.] The act of pointing out with or as if with the finger; indication.

We shall find them [the stewards of Christ] out by their proper direction and indigitation.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 30.

Which things I conceive no obscure indigitation of providence.
Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

indiglucin (in-di-glö'sin), n. [< Gr. ἰνδικόν, indigo, + γλυκύς, sweet, + -in[2].] The syrupy mass obtained from the liquid from which indirubin has been separated, by adding excess of acetate of lead, filtering, and treating with excess of ammonia. It is now believed that indiglucin is merely impure glucose.

indign†(in-dīn'), a. [< ME. indign, indigne (also undign), < OF. (also F.) indigne = Sp. Pg. indigno = It. indegno, < L. indignus, unworthy, < in- priv. + dignus, worthy: see digne, and cf. condign.] Unworthy.

It were the most indigne and detestable thinge that good lawes shulde be subiecte and under euyll men.
Joye, Expos. of Daniel, vi.

And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!
Shak., Othello, i. 3.

She her selfe was of his grace indigne.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. i. 30.

indignance† (in-dig'nans), n. [< ML. indignantia, indignation, < L. indignan(t-)s, indignant: see indignant.] The quality of being indignant; indignation.

With great indignaunce he that sight forsook.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xi. 13.

indignancy† (in-dig'nan-si), n. Same as indignance.

Engrossed by the pride of self-defence, and the indignancy of unmerited unkindness, the disturbed mind of Camilla had not yet formed one separate reflection.
Miss Burney, Camilla, iii. 1.

indignant (in-dig'nant), a. [< L. indignan(t-)s, ppr. of indignari (> It. indignare, indegnare = Sp. Pg. indignar = Pr. indignar, endignar = F. indigner), consider as unworthy, be angry or displeased at (cf. indignus, unworthy: see indign), < in- priv. + dignari, consider as worthy, < dignus, worthy: see digne.] Affected with indignation; moved by mixed emotions of anger and scorn; provoked by something regarded as unjust, ungrateful, or unworthy.

When the British warrior queen,
Bleeding from the Roman rods,
Sought, with an indignant mien,
Counsel of her country's gods.
Cowper, Boadicea.

=Syn. Incensed, provoked, exasperated.

indignantly (in-dig'nant-li), adv. 1. In an indignant manner; with indignation.—2†. Unworthily; disgracefully; with indignity. [An erroneous use.]

To others he wrote not, especially the mayor, because he took himself so indignantly used by him as he disdained so far to grace him.
Strype, Abp. Whitgift, an. 1602.

indignation (in-dig-nā'shon), n. [< ME. indignacion, indignacioun, < OF. (also F.) indignation = Pr. indignacio, endignacio = Sp. indignación = Pg. indignação = It. indignazione, < L. indignatio(n-), displeasure, < indignari, pp. indignatus, be displeased at: see indignant.] 1. Anger, especially anger excited by that which is unjust, ungrateful, or base; anger mingled with contempt or abhorrence; scornful displeasure.

And why that he maked hyt thus,
This was the resoun y-wyss—
That no man schulde sytt aboue other,
Ne haue indignacioun of hys brother.
Arthur (ed. Furnivall), l. 48.

When Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation against Mordecai. Esther v. 9.

The resentful feeling sometimes receives the name of "Righteous Indignation," from the circumstance that some great criminality or flagrant wrong has been the instigating cause. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 144.

2. Effect of indignant feeling; anger expressed or manifested in judgment, punishment, or violence.

O, let them [the heavens] . . . hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3.

The face [of the Colossus] is something disfigured by time, or indignation of the Moores, detesting images.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 102.

Indignation meeting, a meeting of the public, or of any particular class of citizens, called for the purpose of giving formal expression to indignation against something done or threatened, and to devise means to correct or prevent it. [U. S.]

Instead of those indignation meetings set on foot in the time of William the Testy, where men met together to rail at public abuses, groan over the evils of the time, and make each other miserable, there were joyous meetings of the two sexes to dance and make merry.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 404.

=Syn. 1. Vexation, Indignation, etc. See anger[1].

indignify† (in-dig'ni-fī), v. t. [< in-[3] + dignify; or as indign + -i-fy.] To treat unworthily or unbecomingly.

Where that discourteous Dame with scornfull pryde
And fowle entreaty him indignifyde.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. i. 30.

indignity (in-dig'ni-ti), n.; pl. indignities (-tiz). [= F. indignité = Sp. indignidad = Pg. indignidade = It. indignità, indegnità, < L. indignita(t-)s, unworthiness, unworthy behavior, < indignus, unworthy: see indign.] 1†. Unworthiness; shamefulness; base character or conduct.

Fie on the pelfe for which good name is sold,
And honour with indignitie debased!
Spenser, F. Q., V. xi. 63.

He had rather complaine than offend, and hates sin more for the indignity of it than the danger.
Bp. Hall, An Humble Man.

2. Contemptuous conduct unjustly directed toward another; any action designed to lower the dignity of another; injury accompanied with insult.

Stung with the thousand indignities I had met with, I was willing to cast myself away. Goldsmith, Vicar, xx.

To a native of rank, arrest was not merely a restraint, but a foul personal indignity.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

=Syn. Insult, Indignity, etc. (see affront); contumely, slight, disrespect, dishonor.

indignly† (in-dīn'li), adv. In an indign manner; unworthily.

O Saviour, didst thou take flesh for our redemption to be thus indignly used? Bp. Hall, The Crucifixion.

The Israelites were but slaues, and the Philistins were theire masters: so much more indignely, therefore, must they needs take it, to be thus affronted by one of theire owne vassals. Bp. Hall, Samson's Victory.

★indigo (in'di-gō), n. [Formerly also indico; = D. G. Dan. Sw. indigo = F. indigo, < Sp. indigo, indico, OSp. endico = Pg. indico = It. indico, OIt. indigo, endego = MHG. indich, G. indich, < L. indicum, < Gr. ἰνδικόν, indigo, lit. Indian (sc. φάρμακον, dye), neut. of Ἰνδικός, L. Indicus, Indian, < Ἰνδία, India: see Indic, Indian.] 1. A substance obtained in the form of a blue powder from leguminous plants of the genus Indigofera, and used as a blue dye. See indigo-plant. Indigo does not exist ready-formed in the indigo-plant, but is produced by the decomposition of a glucoside called indican. The plant is bruised and fermented in vats of water, depositing a blue substance, which is collected and dried in the form of the cubic cakes seen in commerce. In this state indigo has an intensely blue color and an earthy fracture, the kind most esteemed being that which, when rubbed by a hard body, assumes a fine copper-red polish. The indigo of commerce, besides indigo blue, consists of indigo red, indigo brown, and some earthy glutinous matters. Also called Indian blue.

2. The violet-blue color of the spectrum, extending, according to Helmholtz, from G two thirds of the way to F in the prismatic spectrum. The name was introduced by Newton, but has lately been discarded by the best writers.—Bastard indigo or false indigo, an American leguminous shrub, Amorpha fruticosa. Also called wild indigo. See Amorpha.—Carmine of indigo. See indigo carmine.—Egyptian indigo, a leguminous plant, Cracca Apollinea (Galega Apollinea). It is narcotic, and yields a fine blue dye. The leaves are occasionally mixed with Alexandrian senna, and the plant is commonly cultivated in Nubia for its indigo.—False indigo. (a) See bastard indigo. (b) An American leguminous plant, Baptisia australis. See Baptisia. Also called blue false indigo and wild indigo.—Indian indigo, the common indigo of cultivation, Indigofera tinctoria.—Indigo blue, indigotin, the blue coloring matter of indigo, $C_{16}H_{10}N_2O_2$, on which the value of commercial indigo depends. It is a crystalline solid, without odor or taste, and insoluble in water, alcohol, or ether; but when exposed to the action of certain deoxidizing agents, it becomes soluble in alkaline solutions, losing its blue color. It is precipitated without color by the acids, and instantly becomes blue again on exposure to the air. Indigo blue may be prepared from commercial indigo by treating it with dilute acids, alkalis, and alcohol, or by acting with oxidizing agents upon indigo white. It forms fine right rhombic prisms which have a blue color and metallic luster. In solution it is employed occasionally in dyeing, under the name of Saxony or liquid blue. Also called vat-blue and indigotin.—Indigo brown, a brown resinous compound obtained by boiling an aqueous solution of indican for some time, and then treating with an acid. It consists of a mixture of indihumin, $C_8H_8NO_5$, soluble in alcohol, and indiretin, $C_{18}H_{17}NO_{10}$, insoluble in alcohol. Indihumin is probably the indigo brown of Berzelius.—Indigo carmine, the sodium salt of indigotin disulphonic acid (see indigo extract, below), which is used for dyeing silk in a sulphuric-acid bath. It is sometimes used as a water-color in painting, and as a washing-blue in laundries.—Indigo extract, the solution obtained by dissolving indigo in strong sulphuric acid. It is the indigotin disulphonic acid. It is used in dyeing wool.—Indigo red, a substance (C_8H_5NO) obtained by the decomposition of indican, especially when oxalic or tartaric acid is used. It forms long red needles, insoluble in caustic alkalis, but soluble in cold concentrated sulphuric acid, giving a beautiful purple color. This solution, on dilution with water, can be used for dyeing silk, cotton, and wool. It is not affected by boiling with dilute sulphuric acid and bichromate of potassium, a character which distinguishes it from indigotin. Also called indigo purple and indirubin.—Indigo white, a crystalline substance ($C_{16}H_{12}N_2O_2$) obtained by subjecting commercial indigo to the action of reducing agents, such as alkaline fluids containing iron protosulphate, or a mixture of grape-sugar, alcohol, and strong soda lye. It forms a yellow solution in alkaline fluids, but on free exposure to the air absorbs oxygen and is reconverted into indigo blue. This is the best method of obtaining the latter in a pure state, whence indigo white is also called indigogen.—Soluble indigo. Same as indigo carmine.—Sulphate of indigo, a dyers' name for indigo extract. (See above.)—Wild indigo. See Amorpha and Baptisia.

indigo-berry (in'di-gō-ber''i), n. 1. The name of the fruit of several species of rubiaceous trees of the genus Randia, particularly R. aculeata, the fruits of which are used in dyeing.—2. The fruit of the South American plant Passiflora tuberosa, a member of the passion-flower family.

indigo-bird (in'di-gō-bèrd), n. A painted-finch of North America, Cyanospiza or Passerina cyanea, belonging to the family Fringillidæ. It is about 6½ inches long. The male is indigo-blue, rich and constant on the head, glancing greenish on some parts, and the face, back, wings, and tail are blackish. The female is plain brown, with a black stripe along the gonys. It inhabits the eastern United States and Canada, nests in bushes, lays 4 or 5 bluish-white eggs, and is often kept as a cage-bird for the beauty of its plumage and song. Also called indigo-finch.

Indigo-bird (Cyanospiza or Passerina cyanea).

indigo-broom (in'di-gō-bröm), n. The wild indigo, Baptisia tinctoria.

indigo-copper (in'di-gō-kop''èr), n. In mineral., same as covellin.

Indigofera (in-di-gof'e-rä), n. [NL., < indigo + L. ferre = E. bear[1].] A large genus of plants, of the family Fabaceæ, tribe Galegeæ, and type of the subtribe Indigofereæ, including about 350 species, indigenous in the warmer parts of Asia, Africa, and America. They are herbs or shrubs, with pinnate or digitate leaves, and small rose-colored or purplish flowers in axillary spikes or racemes. Some of the species yield indigo. See indigo-plant.

Indigofereæ (in''di-gō-fer'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham), < Indigofera + -eæ.] A subtribe of plants, of the family Fabaceæ and tribe Galegeæ, typified by the genus Indigofera. They are herbs or shrubs having axillary flowers in racemes or spikes, and a two-valved legume. Also called Indigoferinæ.

indigo-finch (in'di-gō-finch), n. Same as indigo-bird.

indigogen, indigogene (in'di-gō-jen, -jēn), n. [= F. indigogène; as indigo + -gen.] Same as indigo white.

indigolite (in'di-gō-līt), n. Same as indicolite.

indigometer (in-di-gom'e-tèr), n. [< indigo + Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the coloring power of indigo.

indigometry (in-di-gom'e-tri), n. [< indigo + Gr. -μετρία, < μέτρον, a measure.] The art or method of determining the coloring power of indigo.

indigo-mill (in′di-gō-mil), n. A mill for grinding indigo into a paste. It is a quadrangular tank with semi-cylindrical bottom, having two lids so arranged as to leave between their inner margins a parallel-sided opening. A set of six iron rollers pivoted to a swinging frame operate upon the indigo at the bottom of the tank, the frame being caused to oscillate by a bar attached to it and extending upward through the opening between the lids, the bar being pivoted to a support at the upper end and actuated by a crank-mechanism. The paste when sufficiently triturated is drawn off through a stop-cock.

indigo-plant (in′di-gō-plant), n. A plant of the genus Indigofera, from which indigo is obtained. The species most commonly cultivated under this name is I. tinctoria, a native of the East Indies and other parts of Asia, and grown in many parts of Africa and America. It is a shrubby plant about 3 or 4 feet high, with narrow pinnate leaves and long narrow pods. The West Indian indigo-plant is I. Anil, a short-podded plant, native of the West Indies and the warmer parts of America, and cultivated in Asia and Africa. Both are extensively grown for making indigo.

Indigo-plant (Indigofera tinctoria). a, flower; b, fruit.

indigo-snake (in′di-gō-snāk), n. The gopher-snake, Spilotes couperi. [Local, southern U. S.]

indigotate (in′di-gō-tāt), n. [= F. indigotate; as indigot(ic) + -ate[1].] A compound of indigotic acid with a salifiable base or a metallic oxid: as, indigotate of ammonia or of mercury.

indigotic (in-di-got′ik), a. [= F. indigotique = Sp. indigótico; as indigot(in) + -ic.] 1. Pertaining to or derived from indigotin.—2. In bot., very deep blue.—Indigotic acid†, an acid probably identical with 5-nitrosalicylic acid.

indigotin (in′di-gō-tin), n. [< indigo + -t- inserted + -in[2].] Same as indigo blue (which see, under indigo).

indigo-weed (in′di-gō-wēd), n. The wild or false indigo. See Baptisia.

indihumin (in-di-hū′min), n. [< indi(go) + humus + -in[2].] See indigo brown, under indigo.

indilatory† (in-dil′ạ-tō-ri), a. [< in-[3] + dilatory.] Not dilatory or slow.

Since you have firmed — new orders — you would be pleased in like manner to give them a new form of indilatory execution.
Cabbala, Sup., Cornwallis to the Span. King, an. 1654.

indiligence† (in-dil′i-jens), n. [= F. indiligence = Sp. Pg. indiligencia = It. indiligenza; as in-[3] + diligence[1].] Lack of diligence; slothfulness.

If we put off our armour too soon, we . . . are surprised by indiligence and a careless guard.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 641.

Is it not . . . an indignity, that an excellent conceit and capacity, by the indiligence of an idle tongue, should be disgrac'd?
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

indiligent† (in-dil′i-jent), a. [= F. indiligent = Pg. indiligente; as in-[3] + diligent.] Not diligent; idle; slothful.

A person that hath right on his side is cold, indiligent, lazie, and unactive, trusting that the goodness of his cause will do it alone.
Jer. Taylor, Works, II. vii.

indiligently† (in-dil′i-jent-li), adv. Without diligence.

I had spent some years (not altogether indiligently) under the ferule of such masters as the place afforded.
Bp. Hall, Account of Himself.

indiminishable† (in-di-min′ish-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + diminishable.] Undiminishable.

Have they not been bold of late to check the Common Law, to slight and brave the indiminishable Majestie of our highest Court, the Law-giving and Sacred Parliament?
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

indin (in′din), n. [< ind(igo) + -in[2].] A crystalline substance ($C_{16}H_{10}N_2O_2$) of a beautiful rose color, isomeric with indigo blue.

indirect (in-di-rekt′), a. [= F. Pr. indirect = Sp. Pg. indirecto = It. indiretto, < L. indirectus, not direct, < in- priv. + directus, direct: see direct.] 1. Not direct in space; deviating from a straight line; devious; circuitous: as, an indirect course in sailing.

O pity and shame, that they, who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread Paths indirect, or in the midway faint!
Milton, P. L., xi. 631.

2. Not direct in succession or descent; not lineal; of irregular derivation; out of direct line from the prime source or origin: as, indirect descent or inheritance; an indirect claim; indirect information.

His title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3.

3. Not direct in relation or connection; not having an immediate bearing or application; not related in the natural way; oblique; incidental; inferential: as, an indirect answer; an indirect effect; indirect taxes.

The direct effect of this change was important. The indirect effect has been more important still.
Macaulay, Sir J. Mackintosh.

The second kind of indirect labour is that employed in making tools or implements for the assistance of labour.
J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., I. ii. § 4.

The direct losses occasioned by the decay of our ocean commercial marine are insignificant in comparison with the indirect losses due to the loss of trade from an inability to make exchanges promptly, regularly, and cheaply with foreign countries.
D. A. Wells, Merchant Marine, p. 39.

4. Not direct in action or procedure; not in the usual course; not straightforward; not fair and open; equivocal: as, indirect means of accomplishing an object.

He needs no indirect or lawless course
To cut off those that have offended him.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 4.

They [the covetous] made new principles, and new discourses, such which were reasonable in order to their private indirect ends, but not to the public benefit.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 11, Pref.

Indirect dealing will be discovered one time or other.
Tillotson.

The judges ought to be plentifully provided for, that they may be under no temptation to supply themselves by indirect ways.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, Conclusion.

Indirect demonstration. See demonstration.—Indirect discourse, the form in which, in any language, the words or thoughts of another are reported, as distinguished from direct discourse, or the reporting of them in the other's own words. It involves subordinate or dependent construction, the use of certain tense or mode forms, etc. Thus, he said he was on the way and should soon arrive is indirect discourse; he said, "I am on the way and shall soon arrive," is direct. Also called, in Latin, oratio obliqua.—Indirect equilibration, the adjustment of a group of organisms to changing circumstances by the destruction of members of the group or by atrophy of organs which are not adapted to those circumstances.—Indirect evidence, in law, evidence which raises an inference as to the truth of a matter in dispute, not by means of the actual knowledge which any witness had of the fact, or actual statement of it by a competent document, but by showing collateral facts which render the main fact more or less probable or certain.—Indirect inference. See inference.—Indirect object, in gram., a substantive word dependent on a verb less immediately than an accusative governed by it: usually said of a dative, answering to an English noun with to or for.—Indirect predication. See direct predication, under direct.—Indirect proof, in logic, same as apagoge, 1 (b).—Indirect syllogism, a syllogism whose cogency can be made more evident by a reduction.—Indirect tax. See tax.—Indirect testimony, testimony given for another purpose than that of making known the fact directly testified to.=Syn. 1–3. Roundabout, tortuous.—4. Unfair, dishonest, dishonorable.

indirection (in-di-rek′shon), n. [= F. indirection; as indirect + -ion.] Oblique or irregular course or means; unfair or deceitful action or proceeding; indirectness.

I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection!
Shak., J. C., iv. 3.

He [Franklin] was . . . a Statesman . . . who never solicited an office, nor used any indirection to retain one when it was in his possession.
Theodore Parker, Historic Americans, p. 16.

indirectly (in-di-rekt′li), adv. 1. In an indirect manner; not in a straight line or course; not expressly; not by direct or straightforward means.

St. Paul, that calls the Cretans liars, doth it but indirectly, and upon quotation of their own poet.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 4.

Political control indirectly entails evils on those who exercise it, as well as on those over whom it is exercised.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 443.

The University of Oxford finds in Aristotle one of her most powerful engines of ethical, and indirectly of Christian teaching.
Gladstone, Might of Right, p. 129.

2. Unfairly; crookedly.

If any reports have come unto your Lordship's ears that in the causes of my Lord of Essex I have dealt indirectly, I assure your Lordship they have done me wrong.
E. Waterhouse (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 472).

indirectness (in-di-rekt′nes), n. The condition or quality of being indirect; obliquity; unfairness; dishonesty.

indiretin (in-di-rē′tin), n. [< indi(go) + ret- for res(in) + -in[2].] See indigo brown, under indigo.

indirubin (in-di-rö′bin), n. Same as indigo red (which see, under indigo).

indiscernible (in-di-zėr′ni-bl), a. and n. [= F. indiscernable = Sp. indiscernible = Pg. indiscernivel = It. indiscernibile; as in-[3] + discernible.] I. a. Not discernible; incapable of being discerned; not visible or perceptible.

These small and almost indiscernible beginnings and seeds of ill humour have ever since gone on in a very visible increase and progress.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1689.

II. n. That which is not discernible.—Principle of the identity of indiscernibles, the doctrine of Leibnitz that things altogether alike are one and the same individual.

indiscernibleness (in-di-zėr′ni-bl-nes), n. Incapability of being discerned.

I should haue shew'd you also the indiscernibleness (to the eye of man) of the difference of these distant states, till God by his promulgate sentence haue made the separation.
Hammond, Works, IV. 494.

indiscernibly (in-di-zėr′ni-bli), adv. In an indiscernible manner; so as not to be seen or perceived.

indiscerpibility (in-di-sėr-pi-bil′i-ti) n. [< indiscerpible: see -bility.] The condition or quality of being indiscerpible.

Endowing it [a being] with such attributes as are essential to it, as indiscerpibility is to the soul of man.
Dr. H. More, Immortal. of Soul, Pref.

indiscerpible (in-di-sėr′pi-bl), a. [< in-[3] + discerpible.] Not discerpible; incapable of being destroyed by dissolution or separation of parts.

I have taken the boldness to assert, that matter consists of parts indiscerpible, understanding by indiscerpible parts particles that have indeed real extension, but so little that they cannot have less and be anything at all, and therefore cannot be actually divided.
Dr. H. More, Immortal. of Soul, Pref.

Which supposition is against the nature of any immaterial being, a chief property of which is to be indiscerpible.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, iii.

indiscerpibleness (in-di-sėr′pi-bl-nes), n. Indiscerpibility. Also indiscerptibleness.

indiscerpibly (in-di-sėr′pi-bli), adv. In an indiscerpible manner. Also indiscerptibly.

indiscerptibility (in-di-sėrp-ti-bil′i-ti), n. [< indiscerptible: see -bility.] Same as indiscerpibility.

indiscerptible (in-di-sėrp′ti-bl), a. [< in-[3] + discerptible.] Same as indiscerpible.

Truth or absolute existence is one, immutable, unconditioned, indiscerptible.
J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, I. 124.

He also [E. Montgomery], taught by biological research, is quite convinced that the feeling and thinking subject is an identically enduring, indiscerptible unity.
Mind, IX. 367.

indisciplinable (in-dis′i-plin-a-bl), a. [= F. indisciplinable = Sp. indisciplinable = Pg. indisciplinavel = It. indisciplinabile, < ML. indisciplinabilis, < L. in- priv. + LL. disciplinabilis, disciplinable: see disciplinable.] Incapable of being disciplined, or subjected to discipline; undisciplinable.

Necessity renders men of phlegmatick and dull natures stupid and indisciplinable.
Sir M. Hale, Provision for the Poor, Pref.

indiscipline (in-dis′i-plin), n. [= F. indiscipline = Sp. Pg. indisciplina, < LL. indisciplina, want of education, < L. in- priv. + disciplina, education: see discipline.] Lack of discipline or instruction; disorder.

The [army of the] Scots . . . not only exacting contributions, but committing . . . great excesses of indiscipline.
Hallam, Const. Hist., II. 176.

But there were degrees in demoralization; the émigrés and the English contended for the prize of indiscipline.
Athenæum, No. 3074, p. 393.

indiscoverable (in-dis-kuv′ėr-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + discoverable.] Undiscoverable.

Nothing can be to us a law which is by us indiscoverable.
Conybeare, Sermons, II. 166.

indiscovery† (in-dis-kuv′ėr-i), n. [< in-[3] + discovery.] Want of discovery; failure of a search or an inquiry.

Although in this long journey we miss the intended end, yet are there many things of truth disclosed by the way; and the collateral verity may, unto reasonable speculations, requite the capital indiscovery.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 12.

indiscreet (in-dis-krēt′), a. [= F. indiscret = Sp. Pg. It. indiscreto; as in-[3] + discreet.] Not discreet; wanting in discretion or prudence; not in accordance with sound judgment.

By the indiscreet steering of Ralph Skinner, their boat was overset. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 103.

A devotee is one of those who disparage religion by their indiscreet and unseasonable introduction of the mention of virtue on all occasions.
Steele, Spectator, No. 354.

It is on these occasions that the wise man shows his wisdom above the indiscreet, who must needs tell all he knows at all times. Alcott, Table-Talk, p. 88.

=Syn. Imprudent, unwise, injudicious, inconsiderate, rash.

indiscreetly (in-dis-krēt'li), adv. In an indiscreet manner; without prudence or judgment.

To speak indiscreetly what we are obliged to hear, by being hasped up with thee in this publick vehicle, is in some degree assaulting us on the high road. Spectator, No. 132.

indiscreetness (in-dis-krēt'nes), n. Want of discreetness; indiscretion.

indiscrete (in-dis-krēt'), a. [< L. indiscretus, not separated, < in- priv. + discretus, separated: see discrete.] Not discrete or separated.

The terrestrial elements were all in an indiscrete mass of confused matter. Pownall, Antiquities, p. 132.

indiscretion (in-dis-kresh'ọn), n. [= F. indiscrétion = Pr. indiscretio = Sp. indiscreción = Pg. indiscrição = It. indiscrezione, indiscrizione; as in-[3] + discretion.] 1. The condition or quality of being indiscreet; want of discretion or judgment; imprudence; rashness.

My friend's rash indiscretion was the bellows
Which blew the coal, now kindled to a flame.
Ford, Lady's Trial, iii. 3.

Misfortune is not crime, nor is indiscretion always the greatest guilt. Burke.

2. An indiscreet or imprudent act; a step showing lack of judgment or caution.

By what they haue done in his absence, the world may see what they would haue done in his presence, had he not prevented their indiscretions.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 233.

indiscriminate (in-dis-krim'i-nāt), a. [< in-[3] + discriminate.] Not discriminate; not carefully discriminated or discriminating; undistinguishing; promiscuous: as, indiscriminate praise; an indiscriminate faultfinder.

Could ever wise man wish, in good estate,
The use of all things indiscriminate?
Bp. Hall, Satires, V. iii. 25.

All parties strangely rushed into a war, destined . . . to subvert, crush, and revolutionize, with indiscriminate fury, every continental party and government drawn into its vortex. Everett, Orations, I. 497.

indiscriminately (in-dis-krim'i-nāt-li), adv. In an indiscriminate manner; without distinction; confusedly; promiscuously.

The common people call wit mirth, and fancy folly: fanciful and folliful they use indiscriminately. Shenstone.

Luxurious mansions are dropped down indiscriminately among mean abodes and the homes of dirt.
Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 104.

indiscriminating (in-dis-krim'i-nā-ting), a. [< in-[3] + discriminating.] Undiscriminating; not making distinctions.

Undeveloped intellectual vision is just as indiscriminating and erroneous in its classings as undeveloped physical vision. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 5.

The confiscation was absolutely indiscriminating.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv.

indiscrimination (in-dis-krim-i-nā'shọn), n. [< in-[3] + discrimination.] The quality of being indiscriminate; want of discrimination or distinction.

Since God already had hindered him [Herod] from the executions of a distinguishing sword, he resolved to send a sword of indiscrimination and confusion.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 73.

indiscriminative (in-dis-krim'i-nā-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + discriminative.] Not discriminative; making no distinction.

indiscussed† (in-dis-kust'), a. [< LL. indiscussus, not discussed, < L. in- priv. + discussus, pp. of discutere, discuss: see discuss.] Not discussed.

But upon reasons light in themselves or indiscussed in me I might mistake your often long and busie letters.
Donne, To Sir H. G.

indisin (in'di-sin), n. [Irreg. < indi(go) + -s- inserted + -in[2].] A violet coloring matter obtained when aniline containing toluidine is oxidized. Also called mauvein and Perkin's violet, having been discovered by Perkin in 1856. It is little used in dyeing at the present day.

in disparte (in dis-pär'tē). [It.: in, in; disparte, apart, aside; cf. dispart.] In dramatic music, aside.

indispensability (in-dis-pen-sa-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. indispensabilité = Sp. indispensabilidad = Pg. indispensabilidade = It. indispensabilità; as indispensable + -ity: see -bility.] 1. The state or quality of being indispensable; indispensableness.

Contrary to all their notions about the eternity and indispensability of the natural law.
P. Skelton, Deism Revealed, iii.

I have nothing to do with its possibility, but only with its indispensability. Ruskin, Lectures on Art.

2†. The condition of being without dispensation or license.

The indispensability of the first marriage.
Lord Herbert.

★ indispensable (in-dis-pen'sa-bl), a. [Formerly also, improp., indispensible; = F. indispensable = Sp. indispensable = Pg. indispensavel = It. indispensabile, < ML. indispensabilis* (in adv. indispensabiliter), < L. in- priv. + ML. dispensabilis, dispensable: see dispensable.] 1†. Not to be set aside, evaded, or escaped; inevitable.

Age and other indispensable occasions. Fuller.

All other learned men thought the law was moral and indispensable. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1532.

2. Not to be dispensed with; not to be omitted or spared; absolutely necessary or requisite.

I went as far as Hounslow with a sad heart, but was obliged to return upon some indispensible affaires.
Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 17, 1678.

I find from experiments that humble-bees are almost indispensable to the fertilization of the heart's-ease (Viola tricolor), for other bees do not visit this flower.
Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 79.

All of us alike, Pagan, Mussulman, Christian, have practised the arts of public speaking as the most indispensable resource of public administration and of private intrigue. De Quincey, Style, ii.

3†. Not permissible by dispensation or license; incapable of being legalized.

Zanchius . . . absolutely condemns this marriage, as incestuous and indispensable.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, Add. i.

indispensableness (in-dis-pen'sa-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being indispensable or absolutely necessary.

Thus these fathers bore witness to the indispensableness of classical literature for a higher Christian education, and the church has ever since maintained the same view.
P. Schaff, Hist. Christ. Church, III. § 4.

The Presbyterians in England were the first to assert the indispensableness of a particular form of organization.
The Century, XXXII. 488.

indispensably (in-dis-pen'sa-bli), adv. In an indispensable manner; necessarily; unavoidably.

It was thought indispensably necessary that their appearance should equal the greatness of their expectations.
Goldsmith, Vicar, xiv.

indispersed†, a. [< in-[3] + dispersed.] Unscattered; not dispersed abroad. Dr. H. More.

indispose (in-dis-pōz'), v. t.; pret. and pp. indisposed, ppr. indisposing. [< F. indisposer (cf. Sp. indisponer = Pg. indispor), indispose, < in- priv. + disposer, dispose: see dispose.] 1. To render averse or unfavorable; disincline.

The capricious operation of so dissimilar a method of trial in the same cases, under the same government, is of itself sufficient to indispose every well regulated judgment towards it. A. Hamilton, Federalist, No. lxxxiii.

When our hearts are in our work, we shall be indisposed to take the trouble of listening to curious truths (if they are but curious), though we might have them explained to us. J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 214.

Professor Dowden's pleadings for Shelley, though they may sometimes indispose and irritate the reader, produce no obscuring of the truth.
M. Arnold, Nineteenth Century, XXIII. 25.

2. To render unfit or unsuited; disqualify.

Nothing can be reckoned good or bad to us in this life any farther than that it prepares or indisposes us for the enjoyments of another. Bp. Atterbury.

indisposed (in-dis-pōzd'), p. a. Affected with indisposition or illness; somewhat ill; slightly disordered.

It made him rather indisposed than sick. I. Walton.

Acres. Odds blushes and blooms! she has been as healthy as the German spa.
Faulk. Indeed!—I did hear that she had been a little indisposed. Sheridan, The Rivals, ii. 1.

indisposedness (in-dis-pō'zed-nes), n. The condition or quality of being indisposed; disinclination; indisposition.

Not that we should in the midst of a sensible indisposedness of heart fall suddainly into a fashionable devotion. Bp. Hall, Extremes of Devotion.

indisposition (in-dis-pō-zish'ọn), n. [< F. indisposition = Sp. indisposición = Pg. indisposição = It. indisposizione, < ML. indispositio(n-), unsuitableness, < L. in- priv. + dispositio(n-), disposition: see disposition, indispose.] 1. The state of being indisposed in mind; disinclination; unwillingness; aversion; dislike: as, an indisposition to travel.

The mind by every degree of affected unbelief contracts more and more of a general indisposition towards believing. Bp. Atterbury.

2. Lack of tendency or appetency: as, the indisposition of two substances to combine.—3†. Unsuitableness; inappropriateness.

This is not from any failure or defect in the illumination itself, but from the indisposition of the object, which, being thus blacken'd, can neither let in nor transmit the beams that are cast upon it. South, Works, III. ii.

4. Slight illness or ailment; tendency to sickness.

He [the Prince] came back with Victory, yet he brought back with him such an Indisposition of Body that he was never thoroughly well after. Baker, Chronicles, p. 125.

Two kinds of disease are apt to beset the emigrant: the first is the climatic indisposition already mentioned; the second, the real climatic disease. Science, VII. 169.

=Syn. 1. Reluctance, backwardness.—4. Distemper, Malady, etc. See disease.

indisputability (in-dis-pū″- or in-dis″pū-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. indisputabilité = Pg. indisputabilidade; as indisputable + -ity.] Indisputableness.

indisputable (in-dis-pū'- or in-dis'pū-ta-bl), a. [= F. indisputable = Sp. indisputable = Pg. indisputavel = It. indisputabile, < LL. indisputabilis, indisputable, < L. in- priv. + disputabilis, disputable: see disputable.] Not disputable; not to be disputed; undoubtedly true; incontrovertible; incontestable.

For it shall be sufficient for him to have . . . the king's indisputable prerogative. Sir T. More, Utopia, Introd. Dis.

The two regions of indisputable certainty are the two extremes of the mental world, Sensation and Abstraction.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind (ed. 1874), I. 266.

=Syn. Unquestionable, undeniable, irrefragable, indubitable, certain, positive, obvious.

indisputableness (in-dis-pū'- or in-dis'pū-ta-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being indisputable.

indisputably (in-dis-pū'- or in-dis'pū-ta-bli), adv. In an indisputable manner; in a manner or degree not admitting of dispute; unquestionably.

Physical pain is indisputably an evil, yet it has been often endured, and even welcomed.
Macaulay, Mill on Government.

indisputed† (in-dis-pū'ted), a. [< in-[3] + disputed.] Undisputed.

This moral principle of doing as you would be done by is certainly the most indisputed and universally allowed of any other in the world, how ill soever it may be practised by particular men.
Sir W. Temple, Popular Discontents.

indissipable (in-dis'i-pa-bl), a. [= It. indissipabile; as in-[3] + dissipable.] Incapable of being dissipated. Imp. Dict.

indissociable (in-di-sō'shia-bl), a. [< LL. indissociabilis, inseparable, < L. in- priv. + dissociabilis, separable: see dissociable.] Incapable of being dissociated or separated; inseparable: as, indissociable states of consciousness. H. Spencer.

indissolubility (in-dis″ō-lū-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. indissolubilité = Sp. indisolubilidad = Pg. indissolubilidade = It. indissolubilità; as indissoluble + -ity.] The quality of being indissoluble. (a) Incapability of being dissolved or liquefied. See dissolve, 1, and solution.

From whence steel has its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility. Locke.

(b) Perpetuity of obligation or binding force.

To give this contract [marriage] its most essential quality, namely indissolubility. Warburton, Works, IX. xvii.

indissoluble (in-dis'ō-lū-bl), a. [= F. indissoluble = Sp. indisoluble = Pg. indissoluvel = It. indissolubile, < L. indissolubilis, that cannot be dissolved, < in- priv. + dissolubilis, that can be dissolved: see dissoluble.] 1. Not dissoluble or dissolvable; incapable of being dissolved. See dissolve, 1, and solution.

Their union will be so indissoluble that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead. Boyle.

2. Not dissoluble in force or obligation; not to be rightfully broken or violated; perpetually binding or obligatory; firm; stable: as, an indissoluble covenant.

I do not find in myself such a necessary and indissoluble sympathy to all those of my blood.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 5.

The most distant provinces of the Peninsula were knit together by a bond of union which has remained indissoluble. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., i. 15.

Indissoluble association. See association.

indissolubleness (in-dis'ō-lū-bl-nes), n. Indissolubility.

The most durable perseverance of the indissolubleness of the alcalisate salt . . . is (in great part) a lasting effect of the same violence of the fire. Boyle, Works, V. 209.

indissolubly (in-dis'ō-lū-bli), adv. In an indissoluble manner; so as not to be dissolved, sundered, or broken.

On they move
Indissolubly firm. Milton, P. L., vi. 69.

indissolvable (in-di-zol'va-bl), a. [Formerly also indissolvible; < in-[3] + dissolvable.] That cannot be dissolved or loosened; indissoluble.

It is from God that two are made one by an indissolvable tie. Warburton, Works, IX. xvii.

indissolvableness (in-di-zol'va-bl-nes), n. Indissolubility.

indistancy† (in-dis'tan-si), n. [< in-[3] + distance.] Lack of distance or separation; closeness.

By way of determination and indistancy. Bp. Pearson, Expos. of Creed, v.

indistinct (in-dis-tingkt'), a. [< ME. indistinct* (in adv. indistinctly); = F. Pr. indistinct = Sp. indistinto = Pg. indistincto = It. indistinto, < L. indistinctus, not distinguishable, obscure, < in- priv. + distinctus, distinct: see distinct.] 1. Not distinct to the senses; not clearly distinguishable or perceptible; not to be discriminated; confused; blurred; obscure: as, indistinct outlines; an indistinct sound.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water. Shak., A. and C., iv. 12.

Nature speaks her own meaning with an indistinct and faltering voice. J. Caird.

2. Not distinct to the mind; not clearly defined as to parts or details; indefinite; confused: as, indistinct notions. See clear, 6.—3. Not giving or having distinct impressions, images, or perceptions; dim; dull; imperfect: as, indistinct vision; an indistinct remembrance.

Thy indistinct expressions seem Like language utter'd in a dream.
Cowper, To Mary (1793).

=Syn. Undefined, indistinguishable, dim, vague, uncertain, ambiguous.

indistinctible† (in-dis-tingk'ti-bl), a. [< in-[3] + distinct + -ible.] Indistinguishable.

A favourite old romance is founded on the indistinctible likeness of two of Charlemagne's knyghtes, Amys and Amelion. T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, III., Dis. on [the Gesta Romanorum.

indistinction (in-dis-tingk'shon), n. [= F. indistinction = Sp. indistinción = Pg. indistincção = It. indistinzione; as in-[3] + distinction.] 1. Lack of distinction in kind or character; confusion; indiscrimination.

The indistinction of many of the same name . . . hath made some doubt. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err.

There is nothing in any one of these so numerous love songs to indicate who or what the lady was. . . . Was it always one woman? or are there a dozen here immortalized in cold indistinction?
R. L. Stevenson, Charles of Orleans.

2. Absence of distinction in condition or rank; equality; sameness.

An indistinction of all persons, or equality of all orders, is far from agreeable to the will of God. Bp. Sprat.

3. Indistinctness; obscurity; dimness. [Rare.]

The winds bore the warning sounds away;
Wild indistinction did their place supply;
Half heard, half lost, th' imperfect accents die.
W. Harte, Eulogius.

indistinctive (in-dis-tingk'tiv), a. [< in-[3] + distinctive.] 1. Indistinguishable from others. —2. Not capable of distinguishing or of making distinction.

indistinctiveness (in-dis-tingk'tiv-nes), n. 1. The state or quality of being indistinguishable from others.

The general indistinctiveness from distance.
De Quincey.

2. Incapacity for distinguishing or making distinctions. Worcester, Supp.

indistinctly (in-dis-tingkt'li), adv. [< ME. indistinctly; < indistinct + -ly[2].] 1. In an indistinct manner; not clearly or definitely; obscurely; dimly: as, the border is indistinctly marked; the words were indistinctly pronounced.

In its sides it was bounded distinctly, but on its ends confusedly and indistinctly. Newton, Opticks.

2†. Without distinction or preference.

The hoore [white]
And every hewe [of swine] to have in places warme
Is indistinctly good, and may not harme.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 99.

indistinctness (in-dis-tingkt'nes), n. 1. The quality or condition of being indistinct; confusion; uncertainty; obscurity; faintness; dimness: as, indistinctness of vision or of voice.—2. In psychol., a character of sensation or its derivatives consisting in a lack of self-insistence or of delimitation from the other, simultaneously present contents of consciousness. Distinctness or indistinctness may be predicated of all intellectual processes as known by introspection; in attention, the processes are distinct, in inattention, indistinct. As a last source of indistinctness may be mentioned the intrusion of feeling into the intellectual domain.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 407.

indistinguishable (in-dis-ting'gwish-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + distinguishable.] Not distinguishable; incapable of being distinguished, separated, or discriminated.

The screams which accompany bodily suffering are indistinguishable from those which accompany suffering of mind. H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 496.

indistinguishableness (in-dis-ting'gwish-a-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being indistinguishable. H. Spencer.

indistinguishably (in-dis-ting'gwish-a-bli), adv. So as not to be distinguishable.

indistinguished† (in-dis-ting'gwisht), a. [< in-[3] + distinguished.] Indiscriminate; confused.

In that indistinguisht mass all things seemed one.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 14.

indistinguishing† (in-dis-ting'gwish-ing), a. [< in-[3] + distinguishing.] Undistinguishing; indiscriminative. Johnson.

indistributable (in-dis-trib'ū-ta-bl), a. [< in-[3] + distributable.] Incapable of distribution or apportionment.

That in respect of which all are to count alike cannot be happiness itself, which is indistributable.
H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, p. 236.

indisturbance (in-dis-tėr'bans), n. [< in-[3] + disturbance.] Freedom from disturbance; repose; tranquillity; calmness.

What is called by the Stoicks apathy, and by the Scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

inditch (in-dich'), v. t. [< in-[1] + ditch.] To bury in a ditch.

Deserv'dst thou ill? well were thy name and thee,
Wert thou inditched in great secrecie.
Bp. Hall, Satires, iii. 2.

One was cast dead into the Thames at Stanes, and drawne with a boat and a rope downe some part of the river, and dragged to shore and indiched.
John Taylor, Works (1630).

indite (in-dīt'), v.; pret. and pp. indited, ppr. inditing. [Formerly also endite; < ME. enditen, < OF. enditer, enditier, inditer, etc., write, accuse: see indict.] I. trans. 1. To put into verbal form; compose; write.

He cowde songes make and wel endite,
Juste and eek daunce, and wel purtreye and write.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 95.

Nigel writing his verses, polishing the great medieval satire Burnellus, or inditing the prose letter in which he castigates the faults of the secular clergy.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 145.

2. To conceive the form of; arrange for utterance or writing: only in the place cited.

My heart is inditing a good matter. [Revised version, "My heart overfloweth with a goodly matter."] Ps. xlv. 1.

3†. In the following passage, to invite: perhaps a misprint.

She will indite him to some supper.
Shak. (Globe ed.), R. and J., ii. 4.

II. intrans. To compose; write.

Thou art young and handsome yet, and well enough
To please a widow; thou canst sing, and toll
These foolish love-tales, and indite a little.
Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 1.

inditement (in-dīt'ment), n. [< indite + -ment.] 1. The act of inditing.—2†. That which is indited; an indictment.

The inditement was drawn, and the case pleaded before the governour of Macedon, for that the Romans did send no governours at that time into Greece.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 410.

inditer (in-dī'tėr), n. [Formerly also enditer; < ME. enditer, enditour, < OF. enditour, < enditer, indite: see indite.] One who indites; a writer or scribbler.

The first were of enditours
Of olde Cronike, and eke auctours.
Gower, Conf. Amant., viii.

Himself will be acknowledged, by all that read him, the basest and hungriest enditer that could take the boldness to look abroad. Milton, Colasterion.

The Muses are no longer invoked by every unhappy inditer of verse. Story, Misc. Writings, p. 367.

indium (in'di-um), n. [NL., < L. ind(icum), indigo, a blue pigment (see indigo), + -ium.] Chemical symbol, In; atomic weight, 114. A rare metallic element found in the zinc-blende of Freiberg, Saxony, and some other localities, and discovered by means of the spectroscope: so called from its giving a blue line in the spectrum. It is a very soft white metal, lustrous, malleable, of specific gravity 7.42, fusing at 176° C. Its compounds impart a violet tint to flame.

indivertible (in-di-vėr'ti-bl), a. [< in-[3] + divertible.] Not divertible; incapable of being turned aside or out of a course.

Thomas Coventry, . . . indivertible from his way as a moving column. Lamb, Elia, p. 152.

individable† (in-di-vī'da-bl), a. [< in-[3] + dividable.] Not dividable; indivisible.

The best actors in the world . . . for . . . scene individable, or poem unlimited. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2.

individed† (in-di-vī'ded), a. [< in-[3] + divided.] Undivided.

St. Cyril, in his first book against Julian, thinks there was a representation of the blessed individed Trinity.
Bp. Patrick, On Gen. xviii. 2.

★ individual (in-di-vid'ū-al), a. and n. [= F. individuel = Sp. Pg. individual = It. individuale, < ML. individualis (cf. F. individu = Sp. Pg. It. individuo), < L. individuum, an indivisible thing, neut. of individuus, indivisible, undivided, < in- priv. + dividuus, divisible: see dividuous.] I. a. 1†. Indivisible; inseparable.

He [Don Carlos] hath neither Office, Command, Dignity, or Title, but is an individual Companion to the King.
Howell, Letters, I. iii. 9.

To have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear.
Milton, P. L., iv. 486.

2. Not susceptible of logical subdivision; determinate in every respect; having a continuity of existence in all its changes; not divisible without loss of identity.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide United, as one individual soul.
Milton, P. L., v. 610.

Everything in nature is individual, and 'tis utterly absurd to suppose a triangle really existent which has no precise proportion of sides and angles.
Hume, Human Nature, I. § 7.

3. Of but one person or thing; pertaining or peculiar to, or characteristic of, a single person or thing, or each separate person or thing: opposed to collective: as, individual character; individual labor or effort; individual action.

As touching the manners of learned men, it is a thing personal and individual.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 29.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err.

The members of a primitive horde, loosely aggregated, and without distinctions of power, coöperate for immediate furtherance of individual sustentation, and in a comparatively small degree for corporate sustentation.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 448.

4. Serving or intended for the use of one person only: as, an individual salt-cellar. [Colloq.]—5. Of which each is different or of a different design from the others: as, a set of individual coffee-cups (that is, a harlequin set).—Individual difference, liability, etc. See the nouns.—Individual property, property which belongs to one person and is not shared by others with whom he is united: as, the individual property of a partner.

II. n. A single thing; a being, animate or inanimate, that is or is regarded as a unit.

And the individual withers, and the world is more and more. Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

(a) That which is not susceptible of logical subdivision, but is completely determinate, so that only one of a pair of contradictory attributes can be possessed by it.

Every genus, though one, is multiplied into many; and every species, though one, is also multiplied into many, by reference to those beings which are their proper subordinates. Since then no individual has any such subordinates, it can never in strictness be considered as many, and so is truly an individual as well in nature as in name.
Harris, Hermes, iv.

(b) A thing which by being in only one place at one time, or otherwise, has a continuity of existence in time. (c) Especially, a human being; a person.

The tyranny of an individual is far more supportable than the tyranny of a caste. Macaulay, Mirabeau.

A "nation" is really changed, so far as the individuals composing it are concerned, every moment of time by the operation of the laws of population.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 464.

(d) In biol., any organism or part of an organized whole regarded as having (actually or in certain relations) an independent existence. The word is often applied specifically to one of a group or colony of organisms to distinguish it from the colony or group. Thus, many botanists regard each bud as a true individual, the whole plant or tree constituting a colony or compound organism.

A biological individual is any concrete whole having a structure which enables it, when placed in appropriate conditions, to continuously adjust its internal relations to external relations, so as to maintain the equilibrium of its functions. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 74.

(e) A person merely; a man. [Colloq.]—Vague individual, something indicated as individual, but not explicitly designated, as "that man": opposed to determinate individual. See determinate.=Syn. Personage, etc. See person.

individualisation, individualise, etc. See individualization, etc.

individualism (in-di-vid'ū-al-izm), n. [= F. individualisme = Sp. Pg. individualismo; < individual + -ism.] 1. The quality of being distinct or individual; subsistence as a distinct entity; individual character.—2. Individuality or independence in action; the principle of acting according to one's own will or for one's own ends; individual as opposed to associate action or common interests.

The institution [communism] provides that there shall be no quarrelling about material interests; individualism is excluded from that department of affairs.
J. S. Mill, Socialism, p. 114.

Human progress has been by strong societies with a well-developed social and public virtue. The excessive development of individualism within a society has been its weakness and ruin. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 219.

Hence—3. That theory of government which favors the non-interference of the state in the affairs of individuals: opposed to socialism or collectivism.

Socialism and individualism are merely two contrary general principles, ideals, or methods, which may be employed to regulate the constitution of economical society.
Rae, Contemporary Socialism, p. 209.

4. In logic: (a) The tendency to the doctrine that nothing is real but individual things. The doctrine is, for example, that the laws of nature are not real, but only the things whose mode of behavior is formulated in these laws.

Is such a more adequate philosophy to be found in the idealistic individualism of Leibnitz?
E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 71.

(b) The doctrine of pure egoism, or that nothing exists but the individual self.

individualist (in-di-vid′ū-al-ist), n. and a. [= F. individualiste = Sp. Pg. individualista; as individual + -ist.] I. n. One who accepts any theory or doctrine of individualism.

The extremest individualist would shrink from destroying government altogether, and repealing the whole of the criminal law. Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 148.

II. a. Of or pertaining to individualism; individualistic.

The world has not been made on this Socialist principle alone, nor on this individualist principle alone.
Contemporary Rev., LIV. 380.

individualistic (in-di-vid′ū-a-lis′tik), a. [< individual + -ist-ic.] Of or pertaining to individualism or to individualists.

English socialism is individualistic, but tends toward a gradual elimination of the personal element from politics, industry, and commerce. N. A. Rev., CXX. 280.

★individuality (in-di-vid-ū-al′i-ti), n.; pl. individualities (-tiz). [= F. individualité = Sp. individualidad = Pg. individualidade = It. individualità, < ML. individualita(t-)s, < individualis, individual: see individual and -ity.] 1. The condition or mode of being individual. (a) The being individual in contradistinction to being general. (b) Existence independent of other things; that which makes the possession of characters by the subject a distinct fact from their possession by another subject. (c) The unity of consciousness; the connection between all the different feelings and other modifications of consciousness which are present at any one instant of time. (d) The simplicity of the soul; the indivisible unity of the substance of the mind as it exists at any instant. (e) Personality; the essential characters of a person. [This use of the word, which has not a wide currency, tends to vagueness, owing to confusion with the meaning (b).]

According to Kant, it cannot be properly determined whether we exist as substance or as accident, because the datum of individuality is a condition of the possibility of our having thoughts and feelings.
Sir W. Hamilton, Metaph., xix.

Individuality, like personal identity, belongs properly to intelligent and responsible beings. Consciousness reveals it to us that no being can be put in our place, nor confounded with us, nor we with others. We are one and indivisible. Fleming, Vocab. of Philos.

Any one of the myriads of millions of molecules might take the place of any other. But if each is considered as having some destiny to fulfill, some end to which it is adapted, that end defines its individuality.
N. Porter, Human Intellect, § 627.

Individuality in its highest form is not merely negative and exclusive, but also positive and inclusive; it is not merely the consciousness of a self in opposition to other things and beings, but also the consciousness of a self in relation to and unity with them.
E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 80.

2. The particular or distinctive character of an individual; that quality, or aggregate of qualities, which distinguishes one person or thing from another; idiosyncrasy: as, a person of marked individuality.

I have heretofore been proud of my individuality, and resisted, so far as one may, all the world's attempts to merge me in the mass.
G. W. Curtis, Int. to Cecil Dreeme, p. 2.

3. A personality; a personage; an individual. [Rare.]

Crispi's . . . tall figure and snow-white mustache make him one of the striking individualities of the Chamber, and he has in his face the unmistakable look of a man of power and courage. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 183.

4. The existence, efforts, interests, or concerns of the individual as distinguished from the interests or concerns of the community.

To them the will, the wish, the want, the liberty, the toil, the blood of individuals is as nothing. Individuality is left out of their scheme of government. The state is all in all. Burke, A Regicide Peace, ii.

individualization (in-di-vid″ū-al-i-zā′shon), n. [= F. individualisation = Sp. individualización = Pg. individualisação.] The act of individualizing, or the state of being individualized. Also spelled individualisation.

That minuteness of individualisation which we have no sufficient store of similars to entrap.
Hodgson, Phil. of Reflection, II. v. § 2.

individualize (in-di-vid′ū-al-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. individualized, ppr. individualizing. [= F. individualiser = Sp. individualizar = Pg. individualisar; as individual + -ize.] 1. To note or consider separately or as individuals: as, careful observation individualizes the features of a landscape.—2. To stamp with individual character; give a distinctive character to; distinguish: as, Carlyle's peculiar style strongly individualizes his works.

Also spelled individualise.

individualizer (in-di-vid′ū-al-ī-zėr), n. One who or that which individualizes. Also spelled individualiser. Imp. Dict.

individually (in-di-vid′ū-al-i), adv. 1. In an individual or distinctive manner; as individuals; separately: as, apple-trees differ individually, but not specifically; all were individually summoned.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it? Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

2. Indivisibly; incommunicably.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the Godhead.
Hakewill, Apology.

3. Personally; in an individual capacity, as distinguished from official or corporate capacity. See individual, a., 3.

individuand (in-di-vid′ū-and), a. [< ML. individuandus, gerundive of individuare, individuate: see individuate.] In logic, capable of being embodied in an individual; bringing a general form into individual existence.—Individuand nature, any general form or character constituting the essence of a species or other general class.

individuant (in-di-vid′ū-ant), a. [< ML. individuan(t-)s, ppr. of individuare: see individuate.] Bringing a general form into individual existence.—Individuant difference, a special form or individual difference, conceived as the principle of individuation.

individuate (in-di-vid′ū-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. individuated, ppr. individuating. [< ML. individuatus, pp. of individuare (> It. individuare = Sp. Pg. individuar = F. individuer), make individual, < L. individuus, individual: see individual.] To make individual; give the character of individuality to; discriminate or mark as distinct; individualize.

Two or more such aggregates, . . . well individuated by their forms and structures, are united together.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 185.

The conception of the most complex matter and its manifold energies individuated as a living organism.
Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 18.

individuate (in-di-vid′ū-āt), a. [< ML. individuatus, pp.: see the verb.] 1†. Undivided; indivisible.

O Thou, the third in that eternal trine,
In individuate unity divine!
The Student (1751), II. 311.

2. In metaph., rendered individual; brought down from the ideal world of forms to the world of individual existence; individuated.

See the wonder of beauty matched with the individuate [i. e., peculiar to this individual] adjunct, unsoiled constancy. Ford, Honour Triumphant, iii.

Individuate nature, a general form as it exists in an individual.

★individuation (in-di-vid-ū-ā′shon), n. [= F. individuation = Sp. individuación = Pg. individuação = It. individuazione, < ML. individuatio(n-), < individuare, individuate: see individuate.] 1. In metaph., the determination or contraction of a general nature to an individual mode of existence; the development of the individual from the general. The principle of individuation is the (supposed) general cause of such transformation of the general into the individual. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries there was much controversy among the scholastic philosophers as to what this principle may be, whether matter or form, or a peculiar and indescribable hæcceity. The difficulty has reappeared in later metaphysical thought, as in the philosophy of Schopenhauer; it is, indeed, inherent in every idealistic system which begins with thought, or the general, as the first principle.

What is the individuation of the soul in the state of separation? Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 62.

2. Separate or individual existence or independence; that by which such individuality is developed and maintained.

Grouping under the word Individuation all processes by which individual life is completed and maintained, and enlarging the meaning of the word Genesis so as to include all processes aiding the formation and perfecting of new individuals, we see that the two are fundamentally opposed. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 327.

individuator (in-di-vid′ū-ā-tọr), n. One who or that which individuates.

He is composed of the same individual matter, for it hath the same distinguisher and individuator, to wit, the same form or soul.
Sir K. Digby, On Browne's Religio Medici.

individuify† (in-di-vid′ū-i-fī), v. t. [< L. individuus, individual, + -ficare, make: see -fy.] To individualize.

The statute of additions was made in the first of King Henry the Fifth to individuifie (as I may say) and separate persons from those of the same name.
Fuller, General Worthies.

individuity† (in″di-vi-dū′i-ti), n. [= F. individuité = Sp. (obs.) individuidad = It. individuità, < LL. individuita(t-)s, indivisibility, < L. individuus, indivisible: see individual.] Separate existence; individual character.

Zorobabel's Temple, acquiring by Herod's bounty more beauty and bigness, continued the same Temple, God's unintermitted service (the life and soul thereof) preserving the individuity or oneness of this Temple with the former. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, III. iv. § 6.

indivine† (in-di-vīn′), a. [< *in-*3 + divine.] Ungodly; unholy.

His brother Clarence (O crime capitall!)
He did rebaptize in a butt of wine,
Being jelous of him (how soere loiall):
A Turkish providence most indivine.
Davies, Microcosmos, p. 57.

indivinity† (in-di-vin′i-ti), n. [= F. indivinité; as *in-*3 + divinity.] Lack of divinity or divine power.

How openly did he [Ammon] betray his indivinity unto Crœsus . . . [with] the excuse of his impotency upon the contradiction of fate! Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 10.

indivisibility (in-di-viz-i-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. indivisibilité = Sp. indivisibilidad = Pg. indivisibilidade = It. indivisibilità; < indivisible + -ity.] The state or property of being indivisible.

When I speak of indivisibility, that imagination create not new troubles to herself, I mean not such an indivisibility as is fancied in a mathematical point; but as we conceive in a sphere of light made from one lucid point or radiant center.
Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism, App., x.

A pestle and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

indivisible (in-di-viz′i-bl), a. and n. [= F. indivisible = Pr. endivisible = Sp. indivisible = Pg. indivisivel = It. indivisibile, < LL. indivisibilis, not divisible, < in- priv. + divisibilis, divisible: see divisible.] I. a. Not divisible into parts or fragments; incapable of being divided, separated, or broken; inseparable.

Let there be, therefore, betweene our selves and our subjects, an indiuisible vnitie of friendship and peace, and safe trade of marchandise. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 128.

The right of sovereignty in all nations is inalienable and indivisible. J. Adams, Works, IV. 308.

II. n. That which is indivisible; specifically, in geom., one of the elements, supposed to be infinitely small, into which a body or figure may be resolved.

It is not with evidences of fact as it is with logical or mathematical demonstrations, which seem to consist in indivisibles, for that which thus is demonstratively true is impossible to be false.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 129.

The method of indivisibles, a method of calculating areas, volumes, centers of gravity, etc., invented by Bonaventura Cavalieri in 1635, and more or less used until the invention of the integral calculus. It is a modification of the ancient method of exhaustions.

indivisibleness (in-di-viz′i-bl-nes), n. Indivisibility.

indivisibly (in-di-viz′i-bli), adv. In an indivisible manner; so as not to be capable of division.

indivision (in-di-vizh′ọn), n. [= OF. indivision = Sp. indivision; < L. in- priv. + divisio(n-), division: see division.] The state of being undivided. [Rare.]

I will take leave to maintain the indivision of the Church of England in the dogmatical point of faith. Bp. Hall.

indivulsively† (in-di-vul′siv-li), adv. [< *in-*3 + divulsive + *-ly*2.] Inseparably; so as not to be torn or rent asunder.

They [the highest souls] are so near akin to that highest good of all as that they so naturally and indivulsively cleave to the same. Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 566.

Indo-. [< Gr. 'Ινδο-, stem of 'Ινδός, Indian: see Indian.] An element in compound geographical or ethnological adjectives and nouns, meaning 'Indian,' concerning or involving India (together with some other country or people): as, Indo-Chinese, Indian and Chinese, relating to India and China.

Indo-Briton (in'dō-brit'ọn), n. A person of British parentage born in India.

Indo-Chinese (in'dō-chī-nēs'), a. Of or pertaining to Indo-China, the southeastern peninsula of Asia, or to its people or their languages.

indocibility (in-dos-i-bil'i-ti), n. [< LL. indocibilita(t-)s, unteachableness, < indocibilis, unteachable: see indocible.] The state or quality of being indocible or unteachable; indocility; unteachableness. [Rare.]

indocible† (in-dos'i-bl), a. [= OF. indocible, < LL. indocibilis, unteachable, < in- priv. + docibilis, teachable: see docible.] Not docible; not capable of being taught or trained, or not easily instructed; intractable; unteachable. [Rare.]

Enough, if nothing else, to declare in them a disposition not only sottish, but indocible, and averse from all civility and amendment.
Milton, Articles of Peace with the Irish.

They are as ignorant and indocible as any fool.
M. Griffith, Fear of God and the King (1660), p. 72.

indocibleness† (in-dos'i-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being indocible. [Rare.]

Peevishness and indocibleness of disposition.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 312.

indocile (in-dos'il or in-dō'sil), a. [= F. indocile = Sp. indócil = Pg. indocil = It. indocile, < L. indocilis, unteachable, < in- priv. + docilis, teachable: see docile.] Not teachable; not submissive to instruction or guidance; intractable.

Some of the Elephants are very gentle and governable, others are more indocil and unruly.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 69.

It was an indocile, a scornful, and a sarcastic face; the face of a man difficult to lead, and impossible to drive.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, iv.

indocility (in-dō-sil'i-ti), n. [= F. indocilité = Sp. indocilidad = Pg. indocilidade = It. indocilità, < LL. indocilita(t-)s, < L. indocilis, unteachable: see indocile.] The state or quality of being indocile; unteachableness; intractableness.

If I still persevere in my old opinions, it is no small comfort to me that it is not with regard to doctrines properly yours that I discover my indocility.
Burke, To Sir H. Langrishe.

indoct† (in-dokt'), a. [= Sp. indocto = It. indotto, < L. indoctus, unlearned, < in- priv. + doctus, learned, taught, pp. of docere, teach: see docile.] Unlearned.

Sick stomachs much receive, not much concoct;
So thou know'st much, I know, yet art indoct.
Owen, Epigrams (1677).

indoctrinate (in-dok'tri-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. indoctrinated, ppr. indoctrinating. [Formerly also endoctrinate; < ML. indoctrinatus*, pp. of indoctrinare* (> It. indottrinare = Sp. indoctrinar = OF. endoctriner, endotriner), indoctrinate, < in, in, + doctrinare, teach, < doctrina, teaching: see doctrine.] To imbue with learning, or with a particular doctrine or principle; cause to hold as a doctrine or belief; instruct.

A master that . . . took much delight in indoctrinating his young unexperienced favourite. Clarendon.

If a teacher have any opinion which he wishes to conceal, his pupils will become as fully indoctrinated into that as into any which he publishes.
Emerson, Spiritual Laws.

indoctrination (in-dok-tri-nā'shọn), n. [< indoctrinate + -ion.] The act of indoctrinating, or the state of being indoctrinated; instruction in doctrines or principles.

indoctrinator (in-dok'tri-nā-tọr), n. [< indoctrinate + -or.] One who indoctrinates, or instructs in principles or doctrines.

indoctrine† (in-dok'trin), v. t. [Also endoctrine; < ML. indoctrinare*, indoctrinate: see indoctrinate.] To indoctrinate.

Ptolemæus Philadelphus was endoctrined in the science of good letters by Strabo.
Donne, Hist. Septuagint (1633), p. 2.

indoctrinization (in-dok'tri-ni-zā'shọn), n. [< indoctrine + -ize + -ation.] Instruction in doctrine; indoctrination.

We have, Protestant and Romanist alike, a common essential Christianity, abundantly sufficient for the purposes of the public schools, and all that remains for specific indoctrinization may easily be left to the Sabbath-schools and the churches respectively.
A. A. Hodge, New Princeton Rev., III. 32.

Indo-English (in'dō-ing'glish), a. and n. I. a. Of or relating to the English who are born or reside in India.

II. n. pl. English who are born or reside in India.

Indo-European (in'dō-ū-rọ-pē'ạn), a. and n. I. a. Of India and Europe: a term applied to a family of languages also called Aryan and sometimes Japhetic or Sanskritic or (by the Germans) Indo-Germanic, and generally classified into seven chief branches, viz. Indic or Indian (Sanskrit, Hindustani, etc.), Iranian or Persic (Zend, Pehlevi, Parsi, Persian, etc.), Celtic, Greek, Italic (Latin, Oscan, Umbrian, and the Romance tongues), Slavo-Lettic (Russian, Lithuanian, Lettish, etc.), and Teutonic or Germanic (including English, German, etc.). But the Slavo-Lettic branch is also divided into two, Slavic and Lettish; the Armenian is better separated from the Iranian, in which it has been generally included; and the Albanian is now regarded as belonging to the family, and an independent branchlet.

II. n. A member of one of the races speaking the Indo-European languages; an Aryan.

Indogæa (in-dọ-jē'ạ), n. [NL., < L. Indus (India) + Gr. γαῖα, earth.] In zoögeog., the Indogæan realm. See Indogæan.

Indogæan (in-dọ-jē'ạn), a. [< Indogæa + -an.] In zoögeog., Indian or Oriental: noting a prime division or zoölogical realm of the earth's land-surface, including in general terms Asia south of the Himalayas (south of the isotherm separating the Eurygæan realm) and eastward through Farther India and the Indomalayan archipelago to Wallace's line.

indogene (in'dọ-jēn), n. [For indigene*, < indigo + -ene; or for indigogene*, < indigo + -gene, -gen.] A name given by Baeyer to the group which is characteristic of indigo and some related compounds.

Indo-Germanic (in'dọ-jėr-man'ik), a. Indian and Germanic; Indo-European; Aryan.

indoin (in'dọ-in), n. [< ind(ig)o + -in[2].] A blue flocculent precipitate ($C_{32}H_{20}N_4O_5$) obtained when o-nitrophenyl propiolic acid in sulphuric-acid solution is treated with ferrous sulphate. It differs from indigo in not easily yielding a sulphonic acid on heating.

indol (in'dol), n. [< ind(igo) + -ol.] A crystalline compound, having feeble basic properties, formed by the reduction of derivatives of indigo by zinc-dust. It is also produced in the putrefaction of albuminoids, but is antiseptic in its effect. It is largely used in an aqueous solution as a test for lignified cell-walls, staining them a bright red.

indolence (in'dọ-lens), n. [= F. indolence = Sp. Pg. indolencia = It. indolenza, indolenzia, idleness, < L. indolentia, freedom from pain, < indolen(t-)s*, free from pain: see indolent.] The state of being indolent. (a) Freedom from pain, grief, care, or trouble. [Obsolete except in medical use. See indolent, 1.]

I have ease, if it may not rather be called indolence.
Bp. Hough.

Indolence is methinks an intermediate state between pleasure and pain, and very much unbecoming any part of our life after we are out of the nurse's arms.
Spectator, No. 100.

For mere indolence resulting from insensibility, or join'd with it, if it be happiness, is a happiness infinitely diminish'd: that is, it is no more a happiness than an unhappiness, upon the confine of both, but neither.
Wollaston, Religion of Nature, § 17.

(b) Love of ease; indisposition to labor; avoidance of exertion of mind or body; idleness; laziness.

Their houses [in Nicomedia] are mostly up the side of the hills, and the Christians live towards the top, as it does not suit so well with the Turkish indolence to take the pains to ascend so high.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 96.

They passed their lives in voluptuous indolence.
Irving, Alhambra, p. 322.

=Syn. Sloth, slothfulness, inertness, sluggishness. See idle.

indolency (in'dọ-len-si), n. Same as indolence.

As there must be indolency where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Bp. Burnet.

Let Epicurus give indolency as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest. Dryden.

Even these men themselves have had recourse to indolency [ἀπονία], and the good state and disposition of the body. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 480.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in men's minds; sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency. Locke, Human Understanding, II. xx. 11.

indolent (in'dọ-lent), a. [= F. indolent = Sp. Pg. It. indolente, < L. indolen(t-)s*, free from pain, < in- priv. + dolen(t-)s, ppr. of dolere, be in pain, grieve: see dolent.] 1. In med., causing little or no pain: as, an indolent tumor.—2. Avoiding, or characterized by the avoidance of, exertion; indulging or given to indulgence in ease; indisposed to labor; lazy; listless; sluggish: as, an indolent person or life.

Ill fits a chief who mighty nations guides . . .
To waste long nights in indolent repose.
Pope, Iliad, ii. 30.

Some are too indolent to read anything till its reputation is established. Johnson, Rambler, No. 2.

They [Indians] become drunken, indolent, feeble, thievish, and pusillanimous. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 344.

=Syn. Lazy, Slothful, etc. (see idle); Supine, Careless, etc. (see listless).

indolently (in'dọ-lent-li), adv. In an indolent manner; without activity or exertion; lazily.

Calm and serene you indolently sit. Addison.

indoles (in'dọ-lēz), n. [L., an inborn or native quality, < indu, within (< in, in), + olere*, grow: see adolescent.] Natural disposition or temperament; natural tendencies or proclivities, whether of mind or body. [Rare.]

indomable† (in-dom'a-bl), a. [< OF. indomable = Sp. indomable = Pg. indomavel = It. indomabile, < L. indomabilis, untamable, < in- priv. + domabilis, tamable: see domable.] Indomitable. Coles, 1717.

indomitable (in-dom'i-ta-bl), a. [= F. indomptable, < ML. indomitabilis*, untamable, < L. in- priv. + ML. domitabilis*, tamable, < domitare, tame: see domable.] That cannot be tamed, subdued, or repressed; untamable: applied chiefly to human beings and their attributes: as, indomitable energy, obstinacy, courage, etc.

He [Warren Hastings] pursued his plan with that calm but indomitable force of will which was the most striking peculiarity of his character. Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

Of his perilous adventures,
His indomitable courage.
Longfellow, Hiawatha, iv.

indomptable† (in-domp'ta-bl), a. [< F. indomptable, < ML. indomitabilis*, untamable: see indomitable.] Indomitable. Tooke.

indomptible† (in-domp'ti-bl), a. An erroneous ★form of indomptable. Irving.

Indonesian (in-dọ-nē'si-ạn), a. [< L. Indi, < Gr. 'Ινδός, Indian, + νῆσος, island.] Of or from the East Indian islands. [Rare.]

The presence of this [pre-Malay Caucasic] Indonesian element, as it is called by Dr. Hamy, may now be regarded as an ascertained fact. Encyc. Brit., XV. 324.

indoor (in'dōr), a. [< in doors, prep. phrase.] 1. Situated, carried on, performed, employed, etc., within doors, and not in the open air: as, an indoor service.

Indoor amusements only became more lively and varied in consequence of the stop put to outdoor gayety.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xviii.

2. Downward (into the cylinder): as, the indoor stroke of the piston of a Cornish engine. [Cornwall, Eng.]—Indoor relief, stroke, etc. See the nouns.

indoors (in'dōrz'), prep. phr. as adv. [< in[1] + doors; cf. adoors and outdoors.] Within doors; into or inside a house or building.

A pretty face is well, and this is well,
To have a dame indoors, that trims us up,
And keeps us tight. Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

★Indo-Pacific (in'dō-pạ-sif'ik), a. Relating to the Indian and Pacific oceans.—Indo-Pacific region, the tropical portion of the confluent Indian and Pacific oceans regarded as a continuous ocean or area.

indophenol (in-dọ-fē'nol), n. [< ind(ig)o + phenol.] A coal-tar color used in dyeing, produced by the simultaneous oxidation of a phenol and a paradiamine. It comes into commerce as a blue powder resembling indigo. It produces on cotton and wool indigo-blue shades, fast to light and bleaching-powder, but destroyed by even weak acids.—Indophenol blue. Same as naphthol blue (which see, under naphthol).

indorsable, endorsable (in-, en-dôr'sa-bl), a. [< indorse, endorse, + -able.] Capable of being indorsed.

indorsation, endorsation (in-, en-dôr-sā'shọn), n. [< indorse, endorse, + -ation.] The act of indorsing.

Endorsation means the act of endorsing, endorsement the result of that act. N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 96.

indorse, endorse (in-, en-dôrs'), v. t.; pret. and pp. indorsed, endorsed, ppr. indorsing, endorsing. [= F. endosser, OF. endosser, endoser = Pr. endossar = Sp. endosar = Pg. endossar = It. indossare, < ML. indorsare (also indossare, after Rom.), put on the back, indorse, < L. in, on, + dorsum, the back: see dorse[1].] 1†. To place something on the back of; burden; load.

Nor wanted . . . elephants indorsed with towers Of archers. Milton, P. R., iii. 329.

2. To write one's name, or some brief remark, statement, or memorandum, on the back of (a paper or document), as in assigning, or guaranteeing the payment of, a note or bill of exchange, or in briefing or docketing legal papers, invoices, etc.: as, the bill was indorsed to the bank; he was looking for a friend to indorse his note; a letter indorsed "London, 1868": loosely used of writing added upon any part of a document.

The direction is individuall, as Beza himself takes it; as if a letter be indorsed from the lords of the counsell to the Bishop of Durham or Salisbury.
Bp. Hall, Def. of Humb. Remonst.

What he [Hastings] has endorsed on the bonds, or when he made the endorsement, or whether in fact he has made it at all, are matters known only to himself.
Burke, Affairs of India.

3. To sanction; ratify; approve: as, to indorse a statement or the opinions of another.

This perchance may be your policy, to endorse me your brother, thereby to endear me the more to you.
Howell, Letters, iv. 1.

Mr. Mill does not endorse the Berkeleian denial of the objective reality. J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 82.

4. In her., to place back to back.

Terrible creatures to the rabble rout, but which couch or rise, turn the head regardant or extend the paw, display or indorse their wings, at Merlin's beck.
The Century, XXIX. 178.

Indorsed writ, in Eng. law practice, a process for commencing an action, bearing an indorsement showing the demand sued for: used in some cases to dispense with the formality and delay of pleading.

indorse, endorse (in-, en-dôrs'), n. [< indorse, endorse, v.] In her., a bearing like the pale, but of much less width. It is commonly charged one on each side of the pale. It is often considered a subordinary.

indorsed, endorsed (in-, en-dôrst'), a. In her.: (a) Placed back to back: same as adorsed. (b) Having an indorse on each side: said of the pale.

indorsee, endorsee (in-, en-dôr-sē'), n. [< indorse, endorse, + -ee[1].] The person or party to whom any right is assigned or transferred by indorsement, as by indorsing a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument.

indorsement, endorsement (in-, en-dôrs'ment), n. [= F. endossement = Pg. endossamento, < ML. indorsamentum* (also, after Rom., indossamentum), < indorsare, indorse: see indorse.] 1. Superscription; a noting of the contents of any paper on its back; a docketing; briefing.

As this collection will grow daily, I have digested it into several bundles, and made proper endorsements on each particular letter. Tatler, No. 164.

2. In law, an incidental or subsidiary writing upon the back of a paper, writing, or other document, to the contents of which it relates or pertains. A memorandum indorsed is more permanently and inseparably connected with the principal document than one made upon another paper and annexed. More specifically—3. In commercial law: (a) The signature of the payee of a note, bill, or check, or that of a third person, written on the back of the note or bill in evidence of his transfer of it, or of his assuring its payment, or both. An indorsement may be: (1) in full, mentioning the name of the person in whose favor the indorsement is made; (2) in blank, consisting simply of the name of the indorser written on the back of the instrument without qualifying words; (3) absolute, binding the indorser to pay on no other condition than the failure of the prior parties to do so, and of due notice to him of their failure (an indorsement in blank by a party or holder is in legal effect absolute); (4) conditional, containing some other condition to the indorser's liability; (5) restrictive, so worded as to restrict the further negotiability of the instrument; (6) qualified, without recourse; (7) joint, made when a note is payable to several persons who are not partners. Successive indorsements are made by several persons rendering themselves liable in the order in which they indorse. (b) The transfer or assurance so manifested.—4. Ratification; sanction; approval.

It has so narrow a basis, therefore, that it can never receive the endorsement of the public.
American Publishers' Circular.

He [Classen] gives Bötticher's work a hearty indorsement. Amer. Jour. Philol., VI. 506.

Accommodation indorsement. See accommodation bill, under accommodation.—Blank indorsement. See def. 3 (a) (2).—Indorsement without recourse, an indorsement by which a payee or holder, by writing "without recourse," or similar words, with his name, merely transfers the paper without assuming any liability upon it.—Irregular indorsement, an indorsement made by a stranger before indorsement by the payee, and usually intended to be a mere assurance of payment to the payee without the indorser becoming an apparent party to any transfer of the paper.—Special indorsement, an indorsement with qualifying words, such as, "pay to A. B. or order," or "for collection."

indorser, endorser (in-, en-dôr'sėr), n. The person who indorses or writes his name on the back of a note or bill of exchange.

indorsor, endorsor (in-, en-dôr'sọr), n. Same as indorser.

indotint (in'dō-tint), n. and a. [< Ind(ia ink) + tint.] I. n. In photog., a print produced in printing-ink by a special process from a gelatin surface bearing an image in relief, or the process by which such prints are produced: as, an indotint, or a picture in indotint.

II. a. Of, pertaining to, or noting such pictures, or the process by which they are produced.

indowt, v. t. An obsolete form of endow.

Indra (in'drą), n. [Skt., of unknown derivation.] In Hindu myth., in the oldest or Vedic religion, the god of the thunder-storm, whose office it is to transfix the demon that hides and keeps back the rain, and to pour this out upon the earth. He is the most conspicuous and most lauded god in the Vedic pantheon. In the later religion he is the chief of the gods of second rank. He is represented in various ways in painting and sculpture.

indraft, indraught (in'drâft), n. [< in[1] + draft[1], draught[1].] 1. A drawing in; a draft or drawing of something into a place or situation; an inward flow or current, as of air, caused by some attracting or impelling force or an undercurrent of sea-water.

Those foure Indraughts were drawne into an inward gulfe or whirlepoole. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 122.

Having been long tossed in the ocean of this world, he will by that time feel the indraught of another.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., iii. 22.

A new indraft of rough barbaric blood was poured into the population. Sir E. Creasy, Eng. Const., p. 35.

2†. An opening from the sea into the land; an inlet; a passage inward.

Ebbs and floods there could be none when there were no indraughts, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.

Navigable rivers are indraughts to obtain wealth.
Bacon.

indraw (in-drâ'), v. i. [< in[1] + draw.] To draw in or inward.

He trauailed alone, and purposely described all the Northerne Islands, with the indrawing seas.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 122.

The moon is continually moving faster and faster, as if upon an indrawing spiral which ultimately would precipitate her upon the earth. New Princeton Rev., I. 51.

indrawn (in'drân), a. [< in[1] + drawn.] Drawn in; introverted; manifesting or indicative of mental abstraction or introspection: as, an indrawn look. [Rare.]

"Lancaster—the name is not unknown to me," remarked Mr. Grant, but in an indrawn tone, characteristic of a man accustomed to commuuing with himself.
J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 17.

A pace or two behind him stood Mr. Peck, regarding the effect of this apparition upon the company with the same dreamy, indrawn presence he had in the pulpit.
Howells, Annie Kilburn, xviii.

indread† (in-dred'), v. i. [< in-[2] + dread. Cf. adread.] To fear or be afraid.

So Isaak's sonnes indreading for to feel
This tyrant, who pursued him at the heel, Dissundring fled.
T. Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, i. 57.

indrench† (in-drench'), v. t. [< in-[2] + drench[1].] To overwhelm with water; drown; drench.

Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. Shak., T. and C., i. 1.

indri (in'dri), n. [< Malagasy indri, lo! see! erroneously taken as the name.] The babakoto, Indris or Lichanotus brevicaudatus, a lemurine quadruped of Madagascar, of the subfamily Indrisinæ and the family Lemuridæ. The tail is extremely short; the hind limbs are disproportionately long; and both hands and feet are, on account of their large size and the separation of the thumbs and great toes, well fitted for grasping. The muzzle is short and nearly naked; the pelage is soft and woolly, and very variable in coloration. The animal is of about the size of a cat, lives in trees, and has a wailing cry.

Indri, or Babakoto (Indris brevicaudatus).

Indris (in'dris), n. [NL., < indri, q. v.] The typical genus of Indrisinæ, having 30 teeth, a rudimentary tail, long hind limbs, prehensile paws, a short snout, and a woolly coat. Geoffroy St. Hilaire. See indri. Also called Lichanotus.

Indrisinæ (in-dri-sī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Indris + -inæ.] A subfamily of Lemuridæ, comprising the genera Indris or Lichanotus, Avahis or Microrhynchus, and Propithecus. The indri and avahi are leading representatives.

indubious (in-dū'bi-us), a. [< L. indubius, not doubtful, < in- priv. + dubius, doubtful: see dubious.] 1. Not dubious or doubtful; certain. —2. Not doubting; unsuspecting.

Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipestilential spirits. Harvey.

indubiously (in-dū'bi-us-li), adv. Without doubt; undoubtedly.

Clearly and indubiously the election of bishops and presbyters was in the apostles' own persons.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 219.

indubitable (in-dū'bi-tą-bl), a. [= F. indubitable = Sp. indubitable = Pg. indubitavel = It. indubitabile, < L. indubitabilis, that cannot be doubted, < in- priv. + dubitabilis, that can be doubted: see dubitable.] Not dubitable; too plain to admit of doubt: as, indubitable proof.

There may be an indubitable certainty where there is not an infallible certainty.
Bp. Wilkins, Natural Religion, i. 3.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts, Improvement of Mind.

=Syn. See list under indisputable.

indubitableness (in-dū'bi-tą-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being indubitable.

indubitably (in-dū'bi-tą-bli), adv. In an indubitable manner; unquestionably; without or beyond doubt; evidently.

These are oracles indubitably clear and infallibly certain. Barrow.

Had he lived in the age of the crusades, he would indubitably have headed one of those expeditions himself.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 21.

An inference of this kind could not so indubitably be drawn. Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, ii.

indubitate[1]† (in-dū'bi-tāt), v. t. [< L. indubitatus, pp. of indubitare, doubt of, < in, in, + dubitare, doubt: see dubitate.] To cause to be doubted; bring into doubt. Sir T. Browne.

indubitate[2]† (in-dū'bi-tāt), a. [< L. indubitatus, not doubted, < in- priv. + dubitatus, pp. of dubitare, doubt: see doubt[1], n.] Undoubted; evident; certain.

Thou hast an heir indubitate,
Whose eyes already sparkle majesty.
Chapman, Alphonsus, Emperor of Germany, iv. 3.

induce (in-dūs'), v. t.; pret. and pp. induced, ppr. inducing. [< ME. enducen (= OF. induire (> E. endue[3]), F. enduire = Pr. enduire, endurre = Sp. inducir = It. indurre, inducere), < L. inducere, lead in, bring in or to, introduce, < in, in, + ducere, lead: see duct. Cf. abduce, adduce, conduce, produce, etc. Cf. also induct.] 1†. To lead in; bring in; introduce.

In til a potte of erthe enduce a floure,
Uppon his bough downe bounden ther to dwelle.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 152.

In place of these foure Trocheus ye might induce other feete of three times, as to make the three sillables.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 105.

These induced the masquers, which were twelve nymphs.
B. Jonson, Masque of Blackness.

2†. To draw on; place upon.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould on their ill-natur'd land Induce laborious. J. Philips, Cider, i.

And o'er the seat, with plenteous wadding stuff'd, Induc'd a splendid cover. Cowper, Task, i. 32.

3. To lead by persuasion or influence; prevail upon; incite.

I do believe,
Induc'd by potent circumstances, that You are mine enemy. Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4.

Pray what could induce him to commit so rash an action? Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, i.

4. To lead to; bring about by persuasion or influence; bring on or produce in any way; cause: as, his mediation induced a compromise; opium induces sleep.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Apoplexy, induced by the excesses of the preceding night, Sir Giles's confidential leech pronounced to be the cause of his sudden dissolution.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 18.

Solitude induced reflection, a reliance of the mind on its own resources, and individuality of character.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 205.

5. In physics, to cause or produce by proximity without contact or apparent transmission, as a particular electric or magnetic condition in a body, by the approach of an electrically charged body or a magnet respectively.—6. To infer by induction.

From a sufficient number of results a proposition or law is induced, the authority of which increases with the number and weight of those results. Science, XII. 304.

=Syn. 3 and 4. Impel, Induce, etc. See actuate, and list under incite.

induced (in-dūst'), p. a. Caused by induction. —Induced current, in elect., a current excited by the variation of an adjacent current or of the surrounding magnetic field. See induction, 6.—Induced magnetism, magnetism produced in soft iron when a magnet is held near, or a wire through which a current is passing is coiled round it or brought near. See induction, 6.

inducement (in-dūs'ment), n. [< induce + -ment.] 1. That which induces; anything that leads the mind to will or to act; that which influences one's conduct; motive; incentive.

If this inducement move her not to love,
Send her a letter of thy noble deeds.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4.

All Mankind abhorr suffering so much that one of the great Inducements to the study of Morality of old was to find out some Antidotes against the common Accidents of Life. Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. v.

2†. A preamble, preface, or introductory explanation; an induction. See induction, n., 4.

Howsoeuer (in these wretched daies) the dedication of Bookes is growne into a wretched respect; because the Inducements looke a wrie, sometimes from vertue, pointing at ostentation (which is grosse), or at flatterie (which is more base), or else at gaine, which is the most sordid of all other. Sir T. More, Dedication, Int. to Utopia, p. clxxi.

3. In law, a statement which leads to the main statement; facts and circumstances stated by way of preliminary to show out of what the act or transaction directly in question arose.—Syn. 1. Incentive, etc. (see motive), incitement. See actuate.

inducer (in-dū'sėr), n. One who or that which induces, persuades, or influences.

induciæ (in-dū'shi-ē), n. pl. [L., more correctly indutiæ, a cessation of hostilities, a cessation, pause, delay.] In Scots law, the days which intervene between the citation of a defender and the day of his appearance in the action or process: more fully called induciæ legales.

inducible (in-dū'si-bl), a. [< induce + -ible.] 1. Capable of being induced; that may be caused, brought about, or made to take place. —2. Capable of being inferred by induction; that may be concluded or inferred.

That the extreme and remote parts of the earth were in this time inhabited is also inducible from the like testimonies. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 6.

induct (in-dukt'), v. t. [< L. inductus, pp. of inducere, lead in: see induce.] 1. To introduce; initiate.

We may be pretty certain that Mr. Rowson profited, in his turn, by his young master's liberality and gratitude for the pleasures to which the footman inducted him.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, lvi.

2. To introduce, especially into an office or employment; put formally in possession; inaugurate or install.

The prior, when inducted into that dignity, took an oath not to alienate any of their lands.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1553.

★ inductance (in-duk'tans), n. [< induct + -ance.] The coefficient of induction of an electric circuit, or the number of interlinkages of the circuit with the lines of magnetic force produced by unit current in the same or in another circuit. In the former case it is called self-inductance, in the latter mutual inductance. The practical unit of inductance is the henry. See induction, 6.

inductative† (in-duk'tā-tiv), a. [ME. inductatife; appar. < induct + -ative, but prob. intended for inductive.] Serving to induct.

Or natural goodnes of euery substance, is nothing els than his substaunciall being, which is ycleaped goodnes, so as it is inductatife, by meanes into the first goodnes.
Chaucer, Testament of Love, ii.

inducteous (in-duk'tē-us), a. [Irreg. < induct + -eous.] In elect., rendered electropolar by induction, or brought into the opposite electric state by the influence of inductive bodies.

inductile (in-duk'til), a. [< in-[3] + ductile.] Not ductile; not capable of being drawn into threads, as a metal.

inductility (in-duk-til'i-ti), n. [< inductile + -ity.] The quality of being inductile.

★ induction (in-duk'shon), n. [< ME. induccion, < OF. (also F.) induction = Pr. inductio = Sp. induccion = Pg. inducção = It. induzione, < L. inductio(n-), a leading in, bringing in or upon, an inference (tr. Gr. ἐπαγωγή), < inducere, lead in: see induce, induct.] 1. The act of inducting or bringing in.—2. Specifically, the introduction of a person into an office with the customary forms and ceremonies; installation; especially, the introduction of a clergyman into a benefice, or the official act of putting a clergyman in actual possession of the church and its temporalities, to which he has been presented: usually performed by virtue of a mandate under the seal of the bishop.—3†. Beginning; commencement; introduction.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1.

Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence and the king
In deadly hate the one against the other.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 1.

Some straight way said (their tungs with enuy fret)
Those wanton layes inductions were to vice.
G. Whetstone, Remembrance of Gascoigne. (Arber.)

4. In a literary work, an introduction or preface; a preamble; a prologue; a preliminary sketch or scene; a prelude, independent of the main performance, but exhibiting more or less directly its purpose or character: as, the induction to Shakspere's "Taming of the Shrew."

Gentlemen, Inductions are out of date, and a prologue in verse is as stale as a black velvet cloak and a bay garland. Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, Prol.

The opening or induction to these tales contains perhaps the most poetical passages in Berceo's works.
Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 28.

5. In logic, the process of drawing a general conclusion from particular cases; the inference from the character of a sample to that of the whole lot sampled. Aristotle's example is: Man, the horse, and the mule are animals lacking a gall-bladder; now, man, the horse, and the mule are long-lived animals; hence, all animals that lack the gall-bladder are long-lived. Logicians usually make it essential to induction that it should be an inference from the possession of a character by all the individuals of the sample to its possession by the whole class; but the meaning is to be extended so as to cover the case in which, from the fact that a character is found in a certain proportion of individuals of the sample, its possession by a like proportion of individuals of the whole lot sampled is inferred. Thus, if one draws a handful of coffee from a bag, and, finding every bean of the handful to be a fine one, concludes that all the beans in the bag are fine, he makes an induction; but the character of the inference is essentially the same if, instead of finding that all the beans are fine, he finds that two thirds of them are fine and one third inferior, and thence concludes that about two thirds of all the beans in the bag are fine. On the other hand, induction, in the strict sense of the word, is to be distinguished from such methods of scientific reasoning as, first, reasoning by signs, as, for example, the inference that because a certain lot of coffee has certain characters known to belong to coffee grown in Arabia, therefore this lot grew in Arabia; and, second, reasoning by analogy, where, from the possession of certain characters by a certain small number of objects, it is inferred that the same characters belong to another object, which considerably resembles the objects named, as the inference that Mars is inhabited because the earth is inhabited. But the term induction has a second and wider sense, derived from the use of the term inductive philosophy by Bacon. In this second sense, namely, every kind of reasoning which is neither necessary nor a probable deduction, and which, though it may fail in a given case, is sure to correct itself in the long run, is called an induction. Such inference is more properly called ampliative inference. Its character is that, though the special conclusion drawn might not be verified in the long run, yet similar conclusions would be, and in the long run the premises would be so corrected as to change the conclusion and make it correct. Thus, if, from the fact that female births are generally in excess among negroes, it is inferred that they will be so in the United States during any single year, a probable deduction is drawn, which, even if it happens to fail in the special case, will generally be found true. But if, from the fact that female births are shown to be in excess among negroes in any one census of the United States, it is inferred that they are generally so, an induction is made, and if it happens to be false, then on continuing that sort of investigation, new premises will be obtained from other censuses, and thus a correct general conclusion will in the long run be reached. Induction, as above defined, is called philosophical or real induction, in contradistinction to formal or logical induction, which rests on a complete enumeration of cases and is thus induction only in form. A real induction is never made with absolute confidence, but the belief in the conclusion is always qualified and shaded down. Socratic induction is the formation of a definition from the consideration of single instances. Mathematical induction, so called, is a peculiar kind of demonstration used by Fermat, and better termed Fermatian inference. This demonstration, which is indispensable in the theory of numbers, consists in showing that a certain property, if possessed by any number whatever, is necessarily possessed by the number next greater than that number, and then in showing that the property in question is in fact possessed by some number, N; whence it follows that the property is possessed by every number greater than N.

Socrates used a kind of induccion by askyng many questions, the whiche when thei were graunted he broughte therupon his confirmacion concerning the present controversie; which kinde of argumente hath his name of Socrates himself, called by the learned Socrates induction.
Sir T. Wilson, Rule of Reason.

Our memory, register of sense,
And mould of arts, as mother of induction.
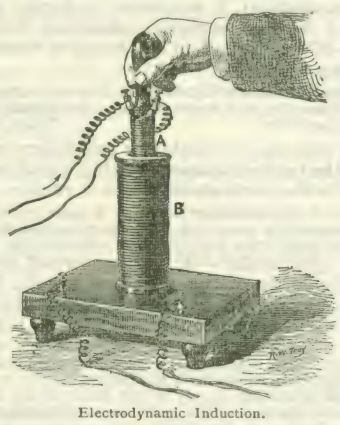
Lord Brooke, Human Learning (1633), st. 14.



Inductions will be more sure, the larger the experience from which they are drawn. Bancroft, Hist. Const., I. 5.

6. In physics, the process by which a body having electrical or magnetic properties calls forth similar properties in a neighboring body without direct contact; electrical influence. Statical or electrostatic induction is the production of an electrical charge upon a body by the influence of another body which is charged with statical electricity. For example, if a brass sphere A having an electrostatic charge is brought near to a neutral conductor B, it calls forth or induces in it a state of electrification opposite to that of A on the nearer end a, and of the same kind on b. The presence of the charges on the surface of B may be shown by the divergence of the pith balls. The charge at a is bound by the charge on A, while that at b is free. If a ground connection is made, as by touching B with the finger, that at b will pass off, leaving only the opposite kind of charge on B, which, if the sphere A is removed, will then diffuse itself over the whole surface and be free, B becoming charged negatively by induction with Statical Induction.

negative electricity if the charge of A be positive. It can be shown by experiment that the inductive influence is transmitted through the non-conducting medium, which may be considered as in a state of strain or tension. It is found, further, that the character of the medium determines the amount of induced electricity. The power of a non-conducting substance to transmit this influence, as compared with that of dry air, is called its specific inductive capacity, or dielectric capacity. For example, for glass it is several times that of dry air. The principle of statical induction is involved in the electrophorus, in the Holtz and other influence or induction machines, and in the condenser, as in the Leyden jar. Voltaic or electrodynamic induction is the production of an electric Electrodynamic Induction.

current or rather an electromotive force by the influence of an electric current, and is called self-induction or extra current, if it is the induction of the current upon its own circuit, mutual induction, if it is the induction of the current upon another circuit. When the current is induced by the action of a magnet, or when a magnetic condition is induced by an electric current, the phenomenon is spoken of as electromagnetic induction. Suppose we have a coil or bobbin of insulated copper wire connected with a source of electric current, called the primary coil, A, and another hollow coil of wire, also insulated, called the secondary coil, B, whose poles are connected with a galvanometer. It will be found that if A is first inserted within B, and then a current is sent through A, at the instant when the circuit is made a momentary current (induced current) will be induced in B, opposite in direction to that of A; also that, when the primary circuit is broken, there will be a momentary induced current in the same direction as that in A—that is, in an opposite direction to the current induced in making the primary circuit, B. If, therefore, the primary current is rapidly made and broken, the wire of the secondary coil will be traversed by a current whose direction is alternating. A similar result will be produced if the primary current is varied rapidly in strength, an increase in strength producing an inverse, and a decrease a current in the same direction. If while A is continually traversed by a current it is first inserted within B and then withdrawn, an induced current will be caused in B, first inverse and on the withdrawal in the same direction, and so on. Similarly, if a magnet is first introduced within B and then withdrawn, the result is to induce in B a current respectively inverse and direct to the amperian currents of the magnet considered as a solenoid. (See Ampère's theory, under theory.) Again, if a piece of soft iron is placed within the coil B, and a magnet is rapidly approached and withdrawn from it, the effect (see magnetic induction, below) is to magnetize the soft iron, and with the approach of the magnet this magnetism increases in strength, and (analogous to case 3, above) a current inverse to the amperian current is induced, and conversely when the magnet is taken away. The principles of electromagnetic induction are used in the induction-coil (which see), in all magneto-electric and dynamo-electric machines (see under electric), and also in the telephone (which see), and in many other devices. Induced currents can be made to have a very high electromotive force, it being in many cases comparable with that produced by a Holtz machine; but this depends upon the relative number of turns of the secondary coil as compared with that of the primary coil. Magnetic induction is the production of magnetic properties in a magnetic substance, as a bar of soft iron, by a neighboring magnet or by an electric current. The effect of the magnet is to develop the magnetic polarity of each molecule of the soft iron, and hence to make the whole bar a magnet, with poles reversed as compared with the inducing magnet. If several pieces of soft iron are placed near together, the inductive effect is transmitted from the first to the second, and so on. The magnetic induction in a magnet, or magnetic medium, is the force which would exist within a narrow crevice cut out of the magnet with its plane sides normal to the direction of force. See magnetic.—Flow of induction. See flow[1].—Induction by simple enumeration. See enumeration.—Mutual induction, the reaction of two electric circuits upon each other, due to variations in the distance between them or in the strength of the current carried by them.—Peristaltic induction, a term applied by Thomson to the mutual electrostatic induction between the wires of a multiple cable.—Self-induction, the reaction of a circuit upon itself, due to variations in shape or current strength. See def. 6, above.

Magnetic Induction.

inductional (in-duk′shọn-ạl), a. [< induction + -al.] Relating to or characterized by induc★tion; inductive.

induction-balance (in-duk′shọn-bal″ạns), n. An electrical device consisting of two primary coils through which an alternating current is sent, and two secondary coils so connected that the currents induced in them just balance or neutralize each other. This condition is indicated by the silence of a telephone connected with the secondary coils; but if the current in one of the coils is varied in intensity, as by introducing within it a piece of metal, the balance will be disturbed, and this is announced by the telephone. The instrument has been used to measure the change of conductivity of metals by certain alloys. A simplified modification of it was employed to search for a bullet in a human body, the proximity of the metal being sufficient to disturb the balance.

induction-bridge (in-duk′shọn-brij), n. An induction-balance arranged in a manner similar to a Wheatstone's bridge and used for induction and other electrical measurements.

induction-coil (in-duk′shọn-koil), n. In elect., an apparatus for producing currents by induction, and for utilizing them. It consists essentially of two coils wound on a hollow cylinder, within which is a core formed of a bar of soft iron or a bundle of soft iron wires. One of the coils (see induction, 6), called the primary coil, of comparatively coarse wire, is connected with the battery by means of an arrangement for making and breaking connection with it, so as to produce temporary currents; the other, the secondary coil, of very fine wire, is wound round the first, but carefully insulated from it, and in it is generated a current by induction Induction-coil.

every time the current begins or stops in the primary coil. The currents produced by the induction-coil may have a very high electromotive force and hence great power of overcoming resistance. With a very large induction-coil, in the construction of the secondary coil of which nearly 300 miles of wire were used, sparks over 40 inches in length have been obtained. The induction-coil is often called the Ruhmkorff coil, or inductorium. See transformer.

induction-machine (in-duk′shọn-mạ-shēn″), n. A machine for generating electricity by means of induction: generally applied to machines generating static electricity by induction.

induction-pipe (in-duk′shọn-pīp), n. In a steam-engine, the pipe through which the live steam passes to the steam-chest.

induction-port (in-duk′shọn-pōrt), n. The opening from the steam-chest of a steam-engine, into the cylinder through which live steam flows: also analogously used for similar openings in air-engines, gas-engines, etc.

induction-valve (in-duk′shọn-valv), n. In an engine, the valve controlling the induction of ★live steam to the cylinder.

inductive (in-duk′tiv), a. [= OF. and F. inductif = Pr. inductiu = Sp. Pg. inductivo = It. induttivo, < LL. inductivus, serving to induce or to infer, < L. inducere, pp. inductus, induce, induct: see induce, induct.] 1. Leading or drawing; inducing; tempting: with to. [Rare.]

A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve.
Milton, P. L., xi. 519.

2. Tending to induce or cause; productive: with of. [Rare.]

They may be probable and inductive of credibility.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. In logic, pertaining to or of the nature of induction: as, inductive syllogism, reasoning, or proof.

To fulfil the conditions of inductive inquiry, we ought to be able to observe the effects of a cause coming singly into action, while all other causes remain unaltered.
Jevons, Pol. Econ., p. 20.

4. Having the character of an induction or prologue; introductory.

The introduction or exposition forms an integral part of the action, even if (as with the Greeks) it be presented in the form of a Prologue, or (as in some of our older English plays and in many modern dramas) by means of a separate Induction, or even by an inductive Dumb-show.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., Int., p. xi.

5. In elect.: (a) Able to produce electricity by induction: as, inductive force. (b) Operating by induction: as, an inductive electrical machine. (c) Facilitating induction; susceptible of being acted on by induction: as, certain substances have a great inductive capacity. See induction, 6.

Those substances which are good dielectrics are said to possess a high inductive capacity.
S. P. Thompson, Elect. and Mag., p. 56.

Dr. John Hopkinson is pursuing his examination of the specific inductive capacity of oils and other liquids.
Nature, XXXVII. 303.

Inductive inference. See induction, 5.—Inductive philosophy, the name given by Bacon to science founded on induction or observation; experimental science.—Inductive reasoning. See deductive reasoning, under deductive.—Inductive retardation, in telegraphy, the retardation of speed, or the slowness of signaling, caused by the electrostatic capacity of the line.—Inductive science, any special branch of science founded on positive observed fact. Formerly, when induction was supposed to be peculiarly appropriate to physics and natural history, the phrase was usually restricted to those sciences, but at the present day it would be understood to embrace almost every science, when properly pursued, except mathematics and perhaps theology and law.—Specific inductive capacity. See capacity and induction.

inductively (in-duk′tiv-li), adv. In an inductive manner; by induction or inference.

It [reviling] is utterly useless to all rational intents and purposes, and this I shall make appear inductively, by recounting the several ends and intents to which with any colour of reason it may be designed; and then, by showing how utterly unfit it is to reach or affect any of them.
South, Works, VIII. vii.

inductivity (in-duk-tiv′i-ti), n. [< inductive + -ity.] The power or capacity for induction; specifically, a measure or coefficient of induction, as of magnetic induction; specific inductive capacity.

When the inductivities are equal, there is a material ★simplification. Philos. Mag., XXVI. 367.

inductometer (in-duk-tom′e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < induct(ion) + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument used by Faraday for measuring the degree or rate of electric induction, or for comparing the specific inductive capacities of various substances, consisting of three insulated metallic plates, placed parallel to and at equal distances from one another, each exterior plate being connected with an insulated gold leaf of an ★electroscope.

inductor (in-duk′tọr), n. [< L. inductor, one who stirs up, an instigator, lit. 'one who leads in,' < inducere, pp. inductus, lead in: see induce, induct.] 1. One who inducts; the person who inducts another into an office or charge.—2. In elect., any part of an instrument or apparatus which acts inductively on another or is so acted upon. See earth-inductor.

inductorium (in-duk-tō′ri-um), n.; pl. inductoria, inductoriums (-ạ, -umz). [NL. (cf. L. inductorium, a covering), < L. inducere, pp. inductus, lead in, bring on: see induce, induct.] Same as induction-coil.

A large inductorium, capable of giving a spark in air of about twenty inches in length.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXI., Supp., p. 43.

inductoscope (in-duk′tọ-skōp), n. [Irreg. < induct(ion) + Gr. σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument for detecting magnetic or electric induction.

induct-pipe (in-dukt′pīp), n. A pipe which inducts or lets in air, etc.

inductric (in-duk′trik), a. [Irreg. < induc(tion) + (elec)tric.] In elect., acting on other bodies by induction, as an electrified body; relating to induction. Faraday.

indue[1] (in-dū′), v. t.; pret. and pp. indued, ppr. induing. [Also endue (see endue[1]); < L. induere, put on (dress), get into, prob. < ind-, on, + u-, ev-, put on, in exuere, put off.] 1. To put on, as a garment. [Archaic.]

That with a clean and purified heart
The fitlier I may indue my robe.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, v. 2.

By this time the baron had indued a pair of jackboots of large dimensions. Scott.

2. To clothe; invest. [Archaic.]

Indu'd with robes of various hue she flies,
And flying draws an arch (a segment of the skies).
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., x.

See where she stands! a mortal shape indued
With love and life and light and deity.
Shelley, Epipsychidion.

The more I strove to indue myself in actual righteousness, the wider gaped the jaws of hell within me.
H. James, Subs. and Shad., p. 126.

indue[2] (in-dū′), v. t.; pret. and pp. indued, ppr. induing. [A var. of endue[2], q. v.] 1. To furnish; supply; endow.

He it indued, of his liberality,
With pleasant possessions & large liberty.
Rob. of Gloucester, II. 597, App.

Of those, some were so from their sourse indewd
By great Dame Nature. Spenser, F. Q., II. ii. 6.

Lords of the wide world, and wild watery seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls.
Shak., C. of E., ii. 1.

2†. To inure; accustom.

Her clothes spread wide;
And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up:
Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indued
Unto that element. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7.

induement (in-dū′mẹnt), n. [< indue[1] + -ment.] Same as enduement.

They sit still, and expect guifts, and prostitute every induement of grace, every holy thing to sale.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

indulge (in-dulj′), v.; pret. and pp. indulged, ppr. indulging. [= It. indulgere, < L. indulgere, be kind or complaisant to, give oneself up to, appar. < in, in, on, + dulgere*, of uncertain origin, connected by some with dulcis, sweet, gracious, by others with Gr. δολιχός, long, Skt. dīrgha, long.] I. trans. 1. To be kind or complaisant to; yield to the wish or humor of; gratify by compliance; refrain from restraining; humor: as, to indulge a child.

Pelham . . . felt that an ally [like Pitt] so little used to control, and so capable of inflicting injury, might well be indulged in an occasional fit of waywardness.
Macaulay, William Pitt.

Georgiana, who had a spoiled temper, a very acrid spite, a captious and insolent carriage, was universally indulged.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, ii.

2†. To grant, as a favor; bestow in compliance with desire or petition; accord.

But we indulge ourselves no such liberties as these.
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

Ancient privileges, favours, customs, and acts of grace indulged by former kings to their people must not without high reason and great necessities be revoked by their successors. Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, iii. § 2.

3. To give way to; give free course to: as, to indulge a propensity or a passion.

In the first ranks indulge thy thirst of fame;
Thy brave example shall the rest inflame.
Pope, Iliad, xv. 558.

[They] think if they are abstemious with regard to . . . wine, they may indulge their other appetites.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, lviii.

The Indulged, in Scottish hist., those ministers of the Presbyterian Church who in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. accepted government toleration and protection. See indulgence, 5.

The feud between the Indulged and the "non-Indulged" took the place of that between Resolutioners and Protesters. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 683.

=Syn. 1. Humor, etc. (see gratify); favor, pamper.

II. intrans. 1. To gratify one's self freely; give free course to the gratification of one's desires or appetites: followed by in before the object of desire, etc.: as, to indulge in the use of tobacco.

Most men are more willing to indulge in easy vices than to practise laborious virtues. Johnson.

2†. To yield; give way: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Government of the Tongue.

indulgement (in-dulj'ment), n. [< indulge + -ment.] Indulgence. [Rare.]

indulgence (in-dul'jens), n. [< ME. indulgence = F. indulgence = Pr. indulgencia, endulgencia, endulgensia = Sp. Pg. indulgencia = It. indulgenza, < L. indulgentia, < indulgen(t-)s, indulgent: see indulgent.] 1. The act of indulging; forbearance of restraint or control; gratification of desire or humor; also, the character of being indulgent.

As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your indulgence set me free.
Shak., Tempest, Epil.

Some sons
Complain of too much rigour in their mothers:
I of too much indulgence.
Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, i. 1.

It was by this indulgence of men in their sins, that vile Sect of the Gnosticks gained so much ground in the beginnings of Christianity. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. ii.

2. Something with which one is indulged or gratified; a favor granted; an act of grace.

Hee was for his blinde zeal punished with blindnesse; of which, soone after hee recouered by diuine indulgence. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 327.

3. In com., forbearance of present payment; an extension, through favor, of the time in which a debt can be paid: as, to grant an indulgence of three months on a note.—4. In Rom. Cath. theol.: (a) Remission of sins: used in this sense by the earlier ecclesiastical writers. (b) A remission of the punishment which is still due to sin after sacramental absolution, this remission being valid in the court of conscience and before God, and being made by an application of the treasure of the church on the part of a lawful superior. Eusebius Amort, History of Indulgences, quoted in Cath. Dict.

Indulgences are classed as plenary or partial, general (that is, for the whole church) or particular, etc.

An Indulgence is a remission, granted out of the Sacrament of Penance, of that temporal punishment which, even after the sin is forgiven, we have yet to undergo either here or in Purgatory. Full Catechism of Catholic Religion (1863).

Indulgence cannot be obtained for unforgiven sin. Before any one can obtain for himself the benefit of an indulgence the guilt must have been washed away and the eternal punishment, if his sin has been mortal, must have been forgiven. Cath. Dict.

(c) Relaxation of an ecclesiastical law, or exemption of a particular individual from its provisions: properly called dispensation.—5. In Scottish hist., in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., permission to hold religious services.

His uncle's family attended the ministry of one of those numerous Presbyterian clergymen who, complying with certain regulations, were licensed to preach without interruption from the government. This indulgence, as it was called, made a great schism among the Presbyterians, and those who accepted of it were severely censured by the more rigid sectaries, who refused the proffered terms. Scott, Old Mortality, v.

Congregation of Indulgences. See congregation, 6 (a). —Declaration of Indulgence, in Eng. hist., a royal proclamation promising greater religious freedom to nonconformists. The principal were: (a) A proclamation by Charles II. in 1671 or 1672, promising the suspension of penal laws relating to ecclesiastical matters which were directed against nonconformists. It was rejected by Parliament. (b) A proclamation by James II. in 1687, annulling penal laws against Roman Catholics and nonconformists, and abolishing religious tests for office. The refusal to read this declaration by several prelates led to their trial, and was one of the causes of the revolution of 1688.—Sale of indulgences, the traffic ascribed to some of the popes of the 16th century, consisting in the granting of remission of temporal penalties due to sin in return for certain payments. Catholics admit that there were some local abuses but deny any papal responsibility. The sale of indulgences by the Dominican preacher Tetzel in 1517 called forth the opposition of Luther and the publication of his theses, and thus led to the German Reformation. = Syn. 1. Lenience, tenderness, kindness. See gratify.

indulgency† (in-dul'jen-si), n. Indulgence.

indulgent (in-dul'jent), a. [= F. indulgent = Sp. Pg. It. indulgente, < L. indulgen(t-)s, ppr. of indulgere, indulge: see indulge.] Disposed or prone to indulge, humor, gratify, or give way to one's own or another's desires, etc., or to be compliant, lenient, or forbearing; showing or ready to show favor; favorable; indisposed to be severe or harsh, or to exercise necessary restraint: as, an indulgent parent; to be indulgent to servants.

God or angel guest
With man, as with his friend, familiar used To sit indulgent. Milton, P. L., ix. 3.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease.
Dryden, Æneid, v. 936.

Indulgent gales,
Supply'd by Phœbus, fill the swelling sails.
Pope, Iliad, i. 624.

He was quick to discern the smallest glimpse of merit; he was indulgent even to gross improprieties, when accompanied by any redeeming talent. Macaulay, Dryden.

= Syn. Lenient, forbearing, tolerant, gentle. See gratify.

indulgential (in-dul-jen'shal), a. [< L. indulgentia, indulgence, + -al.] Relating to ecclesiastical indulgences.

'Tis but getting some of those rusty pieces which Pope Sixtus the Fifth found once under the rubbish of an old wall, then presently you are fitted with rare indulgential privileges. Brevint, Saul and Samuel, x.

indulgently (in-dul'jent-li), adv. In an indulgent manner; with indulgence, leniency, or compliance, or without severity or restraint.

My mother, father,
And uncle love me most indulgently,
Being the only branch of all their stocks.
Beau. and Fl., Four Plays in One.

indulger (in-dul'jėr), n. One who indulges.

And if (as Saint Peter saith) the severest watchers of their nature have task hard enough, what shall be hoped of the indulgers of it? W. Montague, Devoute Essays, I. xiii. § 5.

indulgiate†, v. t. [Irreg. < indulge + -ate[2].] To indulge. Davies.

Sergius Oratus was the first that made pits for them about his house here, more for profit than to indulgiate his gluttony. Sandys, Travailes, p. 293.

induline (in'dū-lin), n. [< ind(igo) + -ul-, L. dim. suffix, + -ine[2].] A name of various coal-tar colors used in dyeing. The various members of the group called indulines are made by different processes, but all possess somewhat similar dyeing properties. Those used for dyeing cotton are insoluble in water, and require to be dissolved in alcohol. For dyeing wool and silk they are made soluble in water by strong sulphuric acid. They all yield dark dull-blue colors similar to indigo. They are fairly fast to light, only moderately so to weak alkalis, but withstand the action of acids perfectly. These colors are all closely related to violaniline (which see). Those soluble in alcohol are obtained by phenylizing violaniline. They are known by a variety of commercial names, as violaniline, nigrosine, Elberfeld blue, bengaline, aniline gray, Coupier's blue, Roubaix blue, etc.

indult (in-dult'), n. [= F. indult = Sp. Pg. It. indulto, < LL. indultum, an indulgence, privilege, neut. of L. indultus, indulged, pp. of indulgere, indulge: see indulge.] 1†. An indulgence; license; permission; grant.

The free and voluntary indult of temporal princes. Bp. Sanderson, Works, II. 246.

2. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., a license or permission granted by the Pope for the performance of some act not sanctioned by the common law of the church; an exemption; a privilege.

In former times indults chiefly related to the patronage of church dignities or benefices. Cath. Dict.

Of course every Roman Catholic knows that now mass may not be said after midday, except by a special indult. N. and Q., 6th ser., XII. 271.

3. In Spain, an impost formerly paid to the king on everything brought in galleons from America.

indult† (in-dult'), v. t. [= Sp. Pg. indultar = It. indultare, < L. indultus, pp. of indulgere, indulge: see indulge.] To indulge; grant; permit; accord.

So many magnificent colleges, athenæes, houses and schooles, founded and erected for them and their professors, and endowed with lands, . . . and vnto them royale priuiledges indulted. Stow, Universities, xlviii.

indultif†, n. An error for inductyf (inductive) in the following extract as given by Halliwell.

Than of brod cloth a gerde, be my lyf;
Me thinketh this is a verry indultyf.
Occleve. (Halliwell.)

★ indulto (in-dul'tō), n. [< It. indulto, indult: see indult.] Same as indult.

indumentum (in-dū-men'tum), n. [L., a garment, < induere, put on (clothes): see indue[1].] 1. In bot., any hairy covering or pubescence which forms a coating. Gray.—2. In ornith., plumage; a bird's feathers, collectively considered.

induperator (in-dū'pe-rā-tor), n. [L., var. of imperator, emperor: see imperator, emperor.] An emperor: used affectedly in the passage quoted.

To chaunt and carroll forth the alteza and excelsitude of this monarchall fludy induperator. Nashe, Lenten Stuffe (Harl. Misc., VI. 157).

induplicate (in-dū'pli-kāt), a. [< L. in, in, on, + duplicatus, pp. of duplicare, double: see duplicate.] In bot.: (a) Having the edges bent abruptly toward the axis: said of the parts of the calyx or corolla in estivation. (b) Having the edges rolled inward and then arranged about the axis without overlapping: said of leaves in vernation.

induplication (in-dū-pli-kā'shon), n. [< induplicate + -ion.] The state of being induplicate; something induplicate.

The whole induplication is enclosed in a transparent structureless membrane. Frey, Histol. and Histochem. (trans.), p. 389.

induplicative (in-dū'pli-kā-tiv), a. [As induplicate + -ive.] Same as induplicate.

indurable† (in-dūr'a-bl), a. An obsolete form of endurable.

indurance†, n. An obsolete form of endurance.

indurascent† (in-dū-ras'ent), a. [< indur(ate) + -ascent, equiv. to -escent.] In bot., hardening by degrees, as the permanent petioles of a tragacanth-bush. Lindley.

indurate (in'dū-rāt), v.; pret. and pp. indurated, ppr. indurating. [< L. induratus, pp. of indurare, harden, < in, in, + durare, harden: see dure and endure.] I. intrans. 1. To grow hard; harden; become hard: as, clay indurates by drying and by extreme heat.—2†. To become fixed or habitual; pass into use; inure.

And now, through custom or rather corruption, it has indurated that a mass priced at three or four denars or one shilling is bought and sold by a blind people and by wicked simoniacal priests. Quoted in Pusey's Eirenicon, p. 37.

II. trans. 1. To make hard: as, extreme heat indurates clay.

On the flood,
Indurated and fix'd, the snowy weight
Lies undissolv'd. Cowper, Task, v. 98.

2. To make hard in feeling; deprive of sensibility; render obdurate.

And love's and friendship's finely pointed dart
Fall blunted from each indurated heart.
Goldsmith, Traveller, l. 232.

indurate† (in'dū-rāt), a. [= OF. endure; < L. induratus, pp.: see the verb.] Hardened; unfeeling; indurated.

And if he persever with indurate minde the space of twoo yeares. Holinshed, Chron.

The nature of those hard and indurate adamant stones is to draw all to them.
★ Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 13.

indurated (in'dū-rā-ted), p. a. In bot., zoöl., and anat., hardened; made thick and dense; calloused: as, an indurated swelling: applied in entomology to hard spots or elevations on a soft surface, etc.

induration (in-dū-rā'shon), n. [= F. induration = Sp. induración = Pg. induração; as indurate + -ion.] 1. The act of hardening, or the process of growing hard; the state of being indurated or of having become hard.

Fire is the cause of induration, but respective to clay. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 161.

2. Hardness of heart; insensibility; obduracy; want of pliancy.

A certain induration of character which had arisen from long habits of business. Coleridge.

3. An indurated, hardened, or callous part.—Brown induration of the lungs, a hardening or induration of the lung-tissue, which becomes red in color with brown spots scattered through it. The capillaries are dilated, and there is more or less increase of the connective tissue and epithelial proliferation. The brown spots are due to small extravasations of blood. Such tissue occurs in the lungs of persons affected with mitral disease, and is produced by the passive hyperemia consequent on the cardiac lesion.

indurative (in'dū-rā-tiv), a. [= It. indurativo; as indurate + -ive.] Producing induration; hardening: as, an indurative process.

Indurative changes in the solid viscera lead to venous obstruction. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 255.

indure†, v. An obsolete form of endure.

indusia, n. Plural of indusium.

indusial (in-dū'zi-al), a. [< indusium + -al.] Composed of or containing indusia or the cases of larvæ.—Indusial limestone, in geol., a fresh-water limestone found in Auvergne, France, supposed to be composed of the agglomerated indusia or cases of the larvæ of caddis-flies.

indusiate (in-dū'zi-āt), a. In bot., having an indusium.

The induziate sorus of this family of Ferns. Sachs, Botany (trans.), p. 395.

indusiated (in-dū'zi-ā-ted), a. Same as indusiate.

indusium (in-dū'zi-um), n.; pl. indusia (-ä). [L., a tunic, < inducre, put on: see indue[1].] 1. In

Rom. antiq., one of the two tunics commonly worn by both men and women, probably the outer tunic, though some archæologists have contended that it was the inner tunic of the women.—2. In bot.: (a) The covering of the sori or fruit-dots in ferns. Frequently the indusium is only an excrescence of the epidermis—that is, the epidermis is simply lifted up and forms a covering of various shapes, being sometimes lateral, sometimes shield-shaped, sometimes spherical, etc. In other cases it is formed by an outgrowth of the tissue of the frond itself, and may then be composed of several layers of cells, and its border may be entire or ciliate. In the Lygodieæ each sporangium is inclosed in a pocket-shaped formation from the tissue of the leaf, as if in a bract. In certain genera, as Notholäna, Cheilanthes, Pteris, etc., the margin of the frond is folded or rolled back over the sori, forming a sort of false indusium, as there is no new formation from the frond. In certain other forms it is beneath the sporangia, as in Woodsia, when it is said to be inferior. Called by Cooke hyposporangium. (b) A collection of hairs united so as to form a sort of cup, and inclosing the stigma of a flower.—3. In entom., the coat or covering of a larval insect, as the case of a caddis-worm.—4. In anat., the amnion, ★the innermost membrane enveloping the fetus.

Indusium.

1, part of a fertile pinnule of Lygodium palmatum showing the scale-like imbricate indusia. 2, pinnule of Filix bulbifera with hood-like indusium. 3, part of a pinnule of Asplenium Trichomanes with linear indusium. 4, pinnule of Polystichum acrostichoides with orbicular indusium. 5, pinnule of Woodsia obtusa showing inferior indusium which early bursts into irregular lobes. 6, section of pinnule of Dryopteris Filix-mas through the sorus, showing origin of indusium from tissues of frond: a, a, indusium; b, frond; c, c, sporangia. (Fig. 6 highly magnified.)

industrial (in-dus'tri-al), a. and n. [= OF. industrial, F. industriel = Sp. Pg. industrial = It. industriale, < ML. industrialis, pertaining to industry, < L. industria, industry: see industry.] I. a. Pertaining to industry or its results; relating to or connected with productive industry or the manufacture of commodities: as, the industrial arts; an industrial exhibition; industrial activity or depression.

Much of the national loan has been taken by citizens of the industrial classes. Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 168.

The breaking down of the ancient political divisions . . . is furthered by that weakening of them consequent on the growing spirit of equality fostered by industrial life. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 462.

Industrial accession, in Scots law, the addition made to the value of a subject by human art or labor exercised thereon.—Industrial school, a school for teaching one or more branches of industry; also, a school for educating neglected children, reclaiming them from evil habits, and training them to habits of industry.=Syn. Industrious, Industrial. See industrious.

II. n. A person engaged in an industrial pursuit; a producer of commodities; one engaged in manufacturing, as contrasted with commercial and extractive pursuits.

Of Comte's three fundamental classes of society, . . . the second or proletariate was subdivided into merchants, industrials, and agriculturists. N. A. Rev., CXX. 266.

The establishment of these industrials, in which the working force of the whole family finds active employment. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 350.

industrialism (in-dus'tri-al-izm), n. [= F. industrialisme; as industrial + -ism.] Devotion to industrial pursuits and interests; predominance of industrial interests or activity; also, the characteristics of industrial life, especially of the manufacturing industry.

Has he not seen the Scottish Brassmith's Idea [the steam-engine] . . . rapidly enough overturning the whole system of Society; and for Feudalism and Preservation of the Game, preparing us, by indirect but sure methods, Industrialism and the Government of the Wisest? Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 4.

When industrialism has grown predominant, the violence and the deception which warriors glory in come to be held criminal. H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 38.

That vindictive and short-sighted revolution which is extirpating it [the monastic system] from Europe is destroying one of the best correctives of the excessive industrialism of our age. Lecky, Europ. Morals, III. 156.

industrialist (in-dus'tri-al-ist), a. [= F. industrialiste; as industrial + -ist.] Marked by the influence of industrialism; characterized by industry.

What Saint-Simon desired . . . was an industrialist state directed by modern science. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 197.

industrialize (in-dus'tri-al-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. industrialized, ppr. industrializing. [< industrial + -ize.] To imbue with the spirit of industrialism; interest in industrial pursuits.

Contempt of civilians, patronage of "trades-people," survive from the middle-age predominance of the noblesse, through this necessity, with a persistence that strikes our industrialized sense as puerile. New Princeton Rev., V. 328.

industrially (in-dus'tri-al-i), adv. In an industrial manner; with reference to industrial pursuits or interests.

industrious (in-dus'tri-us), a. [= F. industrieux = Sp. Pg. It. industrioso, < L. industriosus, diligent, active, industrious, < industria, diligence, industry: see industry.] 1. Given to industry; acting or working with diligence; sedulous: as, a person industrious in business.

He himself, . . . being very excellently learned, and industrious to seeke out the trueth of these thinges concerning the originall of his owne people, hath . . . sett downe the testimonyes of the auncientes truely. Spenser, State of Ireland.

He is not so well opinion'd of himselfe as industrious to make other, and thinke [thinks] no vice so preiudiciall as blushing. Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Forward Bold Man.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Sir W. Temple.

Supply
Is obvious, plac'd within the easy reach
Of temperate wishes and industrious hands.
Cowper, Task, i. 599.

2. Marked by industry; done with or characterized by diligence; busily pursued, performed, or employed: as, an industrious life; industrious researches.

They gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Shak., K. John, ii. 2.

Yet man, laborious man, by slow degrees . . .
Plies all the sinews of industrious toil.
Cowper, Heroism, l. 69.

3†. Expert; clever; shrewd.

They that be called industrious do most craftely and depely vnderstande in al affayres what is expedient, and by what meanes & wayes they may sonest exployte them. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 23.

=Syn. Industrious, Industrial; busy, laborious, active, hard-working, sedulous. Industrious, having the activity or the moral quality of industry; industrial, connected with the application of industry to manufactures: as, the industrious ant; industrial statistics.

Headlong sent
With his industrious crew to build in hell.
Milton, P. L., i. 751.

An industrial spirit creates two wholly different types of character—a thrifty character and a speculating character. Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 146.

industriously (in-dus'tri-us-li), adv. In an industrious manner; with habitual diligence; assiduously.

Principles, let me add, which were still more industriously disseminated at the Revolution by Locke, at the Accession by Hoadly, and a hundred years before either by Hooker. Mason, Ded. to Soame Jenyns.

industriousness (in-dus'tri-us-nes), n. The quality of being industrious; diligence.

Industrialism is not to be confounded with industriousness. H. Spencer, Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 1.

industry (in'dus-tri), n.; pl. industries (-triz). [Early mod. E. also industrie, industree; = D. G. industrie = Dan. Sw. industri, < F. industrie = Pr. industria, endustria = Sp. Pg. It. industria, < L. industria, diligence, activity, industry, < industrius, OL. indostruus, diligent, active, industrious; formation unknown.] 1. Habitual diligence in any employment or task, whether bodily or mental; sedulous attention to business; assiduity.

During which time, in every good behest,
And godly worke of Almes and charitee,
Shee him instructed with great industree.
Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 45.

Sterile with idleness, or manured with industry.
Shak., Othello, i. 3.

2. Productive labor; specifically, labor employed in manufacturing; manufacture; hence, a particular branch of work; a trade: as, the iron industry; the cotton industry: often used, in the plural, of trades in general: as, the arts and industries of a country.

The food of labourers and the materials of production have no productive power; but labour cannot exert its productive power unless provided with them. There can be no more industry than is supplied with materials to work up and food to eat. J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., I. v. 1.

The industry of making straw hats began at Hatboro', as many other industries have begun in New England, with no great local advantages. Howells, Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 130.

=Syn. 1. Application, Diligence, etc. (see assiduity); activity, laboriousness.

indute† (in-dūt'), a. [< L. indutus, pp. of induere, clothe: see indue[1].] Clothed; indued. Halliwell.

indutive (in-dū'tiv), a. [< L. induere, pp. indutus, put on: see indue[1].] In bot., having the usual integumentary covering: said of seeds. [Rare.]

induviæ (in-dū'vi-ē), n. pl. [L., clothes, < induere, put on: see indue[1].] In bot., the withered leaves which remain persistent on the stems of some plants.

induvial (in-dū'vi-al), a. [< induviæ + -al.] In bot., persistent as an envelop: applied to a calyx when it is persistent and covers the fruit, as that of Physalis Alkekengi. [Rare.]

induviate (in-dū'vi-āt), a. [< induviæ + -ate[1].] In bot., covered with induviæ.

indweller (in'dwel″ėr), n. [< in[1] + dweller.] One who dwells in a place; an inhabitant. [Chiefly poetical.]

Since which, those Woods, and all that goodly Chase, Doth to this day with Wolves and Thieves abound:
Which too-too true that lands in-dwellers since have found.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vi. 55.

An house ready to fall on the head of the indweller.
Bp. Hall, Occasional Meditations, § 110.

indwelling (in'dwel″ing), a. Dwelling within; living interiorly; specifically, abiding in the mind or soul; having a permanent mental lodgment: as, an indwelling faith.

These souls may become temples for indwelling Divinity. Channing, Perfect Life, p. 25.

Energy . . . is the symbol expressive of that indwelling capacity of doing work possessed by every agent. G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, 1st ser., V. i. § 4.

Indwelling grace. See grace.

indwelling (in'dwel″ing), n. [< ME. indwelling, < in[1] + dwelling.] A dwelling within; especially, lodgment or habitation in the mind or soul.

The personal indwelling of the Spirit in believers.
South, Works, V. vii.

Then will humanity on earth be the partner of its Redeemer's love, the sanctuary for his indwelling.
Bibliotheca Sacra, XLIII. 506.

ine†, n. pl. A Middle English form of eyen, former plural of eye[1].

-ine[1]. See -in[1].

-ine[2]. See -in[2].

inearth (in-ėrth'), v. t. [< in-[1] + earth[1]. Cf. inter[1].] To put into the earth; inter. [Poetical.]

Nor did I then comply, refusing rest,
Till I had seen in holy ground inearth'd
My poor lost brother. Southey.

The Ethiop, keen of scent,
Detects the ebony,
That deep-inearth'd, and hating light,
A leafless tree, and barren of all fruit,
With darkness feeds her boughs of raven grain.
Southey, Thalaba, i.

inebriacy (in-ē'bri-ā-si), n. [< inebria(te) + -cy.] The habit of drunkenness.

No faith in any remedy for inebriacy, except as an aid to . . . strong purpose . . . of the one who suffers from it. Christian Union, Dec. 27, 1876.

inebriant (in-ē'bri-ant), a. and n. [= OF. inebriant, < L. inebrian(t-)s, ppr. of inebriare, make drunk: see inebriate.] I. a. Intoxicating.

II. n. Anything that intoxicates, as opium.

inebriate (in-ē'bri-āt), v.; pret. and pp. inebriated, ppr. inebriating. [< L. inebriatus, pp. of inebriare (> It. inebriare = Sp. Pg. inebriar = Pr. enieurar, eniurar = F. enivrer), make drunk, < in, in, + ebriare, make drunk, < ebrius, drunk: see ebrious.] I. trans. 1. To make drunk; intoxicate.

The bubbling and loud hissing urn Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
That cheer but not inebriate wait on each.
Cowper, Task, iv. 40.

2. Figuratively, to exhilarate extravagantly; intoxicate mentally or emotionally.

Let me be wholly inebriated with love, and that love wholly spent in doing such actions as best please thee. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 73.

The Water blush'd, and started into Wine
Full of high sparkling vigour, taught by mee
A sweet inebriated extasy.
Crashaw, tr. of Grotius, quoted in N. and Q., [7th ser., V. 301.

The inebriating effect of popular applause. Macaulay.

II.† intrans. To become intoxicated or stupefied.

Fish that come from the Euxine Sea into the fresh water do inebriate and turn up their bellies. Bacon.

inebriate (in-ē'bri-āt), a. and n. [< L. inebriatus, pp.: see the verb.] I. a. Drunk; intoxicated, literally or figuratively.

Thus spake Peter as a man inebriate and made drounken with the swetenesse of this vision, not knowing what he sayed. J. Udall, On Luke ix.

II. n. A habitual drunkard.

Some inebriates have their paroxysms of inebriety terminated by much pale urine, profuse sweats, etc. Darwin.

inebriation (in-ē-bri-ā'shon), n. [= OF. inebriation, inebriacion = It. inebriazione, < LL. inebriatio(n-), drunkenness, < L. inebriare, pp. inebriatus, make drunk: see inebriate.] The act of inebriating, or the state of being inebriated; drunkenness; hence, extravagant exhilaration of any kind; mental or moral intoxication.

Reason and philosophy . . . did not preserve him [Napoleon] from the inebriation of prosperity, or restrain him from indecent querulousness in adversity. Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

"Thou art an homunculus, Abel," responded Master Elliman, waving to and fro betwixt inebriation and an attempt to be merry. S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 6.

inebriety (in-ē-brī'e-ti), n. [< L. in- intensive + ebrieta(t-)s, drunkenness: see ebriety, and cf. inebrious.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

Sudden partial loss of consciousness of variable duration he believes to occur in the majority of cases of inebriety when there are no symptoms of intoxication. Amer. Jour. Psychol., I. 518.

inebriism (in-ē'bri-izm), n. [Irreg. < inebrious + -ism; or abbr. of inebriatism.*] Habitual inebriety.

Dr. ——— has written an original and instructive book, and he can be congratulated upon having made a permanent contribution to the subject of inebriism. Alien. and Neurol., VII. 716.

inebrious (in-ē'bri-us), a. [= It. inebrioso, < L. in- intensive + ebrius, drunken: see ebrious.] 1. Drunk or partly drunk; inebriated.

The worthy but inebrious burgomaster Vandunk. A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., II. 217.

2. Causing drunkenness; intoxicating.

Whilst thou art mixing fatal wines below,
Such that with scorching fever fill our veins,
And with inebrious fumes distract our brains.
Tom Brown, Works, IV. 331.

ineche†, v. t. [ME., < in[1] + eche, now eke: see eke, v.] To add; insert.

If that I at loves reverence
Have any word ineched for the beste,
Doth therwithal ryght as youreselven leste.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1329.

inedia (in-ē'di-ạ), n. [= Sp. Pg. It. inedia, < L. inedia, abstinence from food, fasting, starvation, < in- priv. + edere, eat: see eat, edible.] 1. Starvation.—2. Abstinence; an eating less than usual. E. Phillips, 1706.

inedibility (in-ed-i-bil'i-ti), n. [< inedible: see -bility.] The quality or condition of being inedible.

A great many species [of beetles] with a soft shell, that invites attack, are protected by their inedibility, and are usually lustrous and bright. Science, VIII. 561.

inedible (in-ed'i-bl), a. [< ML. inedibilis, not eatable, < L. in- priv. + LL. edibilis, eatable: see edible.] Not eatable; unfit or unsuitable for food: as, inedible roots; an inedible fruit.

A very peculiar and yet widely current mode of protection is by becoming distasteful and inedible to the attacking animal. Science, VIII. 561.

inedita (in-ed'i-tạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. ineditus, not made known, unpublished, < in- priv. + editus, pp. of edere, give out, make known: see edit.] Unpublished compositions; pieces written but not published.

The luminous exposition of the grammar and the happy choice of the pieces in the chrestomathy—all inedita—with the admirable notes drawn from an enormous reading in MS. sources, make them altogether different from ordinary text-books. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 141.

inedited (in-ed'i-ted), a. [< in-[3] + edited, after L. ineditus (> It. Pg. inedito = Sp. inédito = F. inédit), not made known: see inedita.] Not edited; unpublished; not made known by publication; not issued: as, an inedited manuscript.

An inedited coin of Michael Palæologus, Emperor of Nicæa. Numis. Chron., 3d ser., I. 277.

Ineducabilia (in-ed″ū-kā-bil'i-ạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of ineducabilis, < in- priv. + educabilis, educable: see Educabilia.] The lower one of two main series of monodelphian or placental mammals, consisting of the orders Chiroptera, Insectivora, Glires or Rodentia, and Bruta or Edentata, whose cerebrum is comparatively small, leaving much of the olfactory lobes and of the cerebellum exposed, and whose corpus callosum is oblique, ends before the vertical of the hippocampal sulcus, and has no well-defined rostrum. The series exactly corresponds with the Microsthenes of Dana, and with the Lissencephala of Owen. See Educabilia. C. L. Bonaparte; T. N. Gill.

ineducabilian (in-ed″ū-kā-bil'i-an), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Ineducabilia, or having their characters.

II. n. An ineducabilian mammal.

ineducable (in-ed'ū-kā-bl), a. [< in-[3] + educable.] Not educable; not capable of being taught.

He is childish, not to say babyish, in intellect, and ineducable beyond the first standard. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 272.

ineffability (in-ef-ạ-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. ineffabilité = Sp. inefabilidad = Pg. ineffabilidade = It. ineffabilità; as ineffable + -ity: see -bility.] The condition or quality of being ineffable; ★unspeakableness.

ineffable (in-ef'ạ-bl), a. [= F. ineffable = Sp. inefable = Pg. ineffavel = It. ineffabile, < L. ineffabilis, unutterable, < in- priv. + effabilis, that can be uttered: see effable.] 1. Incapable of being expressed in words; unspeakable; unutterable; inexpressible: as, the ineffable joys of heaven; ineffable disgust.

A book which comes from God . . . is given to us, on purpose to open to us some discoveries concerning the divine nature, its essence, and ineffable perfections. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. x.

In their branching veins
The eloquent blood told an ineffable tale.
Shelley, Alastor.

2. That must not be spoken: as, the ineffable name. See Jehovah.

ineffableness (in-ef'ạ-bl-nes), n. The quality of being ineffable or unutterable; unspeakableness.

ineffably (in-ef'ạ-bli), adv. In an ineffable manner; so as not to be expressed in words; unspeakably.

But in this indefinite description there is something ineffably great and noble. Guardian, No. 89.

ineffaceable (in-e-fā'sạ-bl), a. [= F. ineffaçable; as in-[3] + effaceable.] Not effaceable; incapable of being effaced.

The mediæval systems of education have left marks in history as ineffaceable as mediæval theories of government in Church and State. Stillé, Stud. Med. Hist., p. 361.

ineffaceably (in-e-fā'sạ-bli), adv. In an ineffaceable manner; so as not to be effaceable.

ineffectible† (in-e-fek'ti-bl), a. [Also ineffectable; < in-[3] + effectible.] 1. That cannot be effected; impracticable.—2. That cannot be effected by ordinary physical means; supernatural; occult.

There he, in an ineffectible manner, communicates himself to blessed spirits, both angels and men. Bp. Hall, Soul's Farewell to Earth.

ineffective (in-e-fek'tiv), a. [= F. ineffectif = Pg. ineffectivo; as in-[3] + effective.] Not effective; not producing any effect, or the effect desired; wanting effective energy or operation; inefficient; impotent: as, ineffective efforts; an ineffective blow.

An ineffective pity and a lazy counsel, an empty blessing and gay words, are but deceitful charity. Jer. Taylor, Works, I. xii.

The rules and prohibitions of morality, taken by themselves, are ineffective, but heaven and hell all can understand. J. R. Seeley, Nat. Religion, p. 161.

ineffectively (in-e-fek'tiv-li), adv. In an ineffective manner; without effect; weakly.

ineffectiveness (in-e-fek'tiv-nes), n. The quality of being ineffective.

ineffectual (in-e-fek'tụ-al), a. [< in-[3] + effectual.] Not effectual; not producing or not able to produce the desired effect; of no efficacy; inefficient: as, an ineffectual remedy.

Thou thyself with scorn
And anger wouldst resent the offer'd wrong, Though ineffectual found. Milton, P. L., ix. 301.

Even our blessed Saviour's preaching, who spake as never man spake, was ineffectual to many. Stillingfleet, Works, II. x.

All day they [the army of the Christians] made ineffectual attempts to extricate themselves from the mountains. Irving, Granada, p. 92.

=Syn. Fruitless, Unavailing, etc. See useless.

ineffectuality (in-e-fek-tụ-al'i-ti), n. [< ineffectual + -ity.] 1. The quality of being ineffectual; ineffectualness.—2. That which is ineffectual; something that fails to produce the desired effect. [Rare.]

Lope de Vega . . . plays at best, in the eyes of some few, as a vague aurora borealis, and brilliant ineffectuality. Carlyle, Sir Walter Scott.

ineffectually (in-e-fek'tụ-al-i), adv. In an ineffectual manner; without effect; in vain.

Hereford was surprised on the 18th of December by Colonel Birch and Colonel Morgan, after it had been besieged for about two months ineffectually by the Scotts. Ludlow, Memoirs, I. 145.

ineffectualness (in-e-fek'tụ-al-nes), n. The condition or quality of being ineffectual; want of power to produce effect; inefficacy.

The ineffectualness of the mountebank's medicines was soon discovered. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1548.

ineffervescence (in-ef-ėr-ves'ens), n. [< in-[3] + effervescence.] Lack of effervescence; a state of not effervescing.

ineffervescent (in-ef-ėr-ves'ent), a. [< in-[3] + effervescent.] Not effervescent or effervescing; not subject to effervescence.

ineffervescibility (in-ef-ėr-ves-i-bil'i-ti), n. [< ineffervescible: see -bility.] The quality of being ineffervescible.

ineffervescible (in-ef-ėr-ves'i-bl), a. [< in-[3] + effervescible.] Not capable of effervescence.

inefficacious (in-ef-i-kā'shus), a. [< L. inefficax (> It. inefficace = Sp. ineficaz = Pg. inefficaz = Pr. ineficax = F. inefficace), inefficacious, < in- priv. + efficax, efficacious: see efficacious.] Not efficacious; not having power to produce the effect desired; of inadequate force.

The authority of Parliament must become inefficacious, as all other authorities have proved, to restrain the growth of disorders either in India or in Europe. Burke, Affairs of India.

inefficaciously (in-ef-i-kā'shus-li), adv. In an inefficacious manner; without efficacy or effect.

inefficaciousness (in-ef-i-kā'shus-nes), n. The character or quality of being inefficacious; lack of effect, or of power to produce the desired effect.

To this we may probably impute that strange inefficaciousness we see of the word. Alas! men rarely apply it to the right place. Lively Oracles, p. 194.

inefficacy (in-ef'i-kā-si), n. [= Sp. ineficacia = Pg. It. inefficacia, < LL. inefficacia, < L. inefficax, inefficacious: see inefficacious.] Lack of efficacy or power to produce the desired effect; ineffectualness; failure of effect.

I suppose they must talk of assignats, as no other language would be understood. All experience of their inefficacy does not in the least discourage them. Burke, Rev. in France.

inefficiency (in-e-fish'en-si), n. [< inefficien(t) + -cy.] The condition or quality of being inefficient; lack of efficiency; incompetency; inadequacy.

The inefficiency of our own minds as causal agents. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 332.

inefficient (in-e-fish'ent), a. [< in-[3] + efficient.] Not efficient; not producing or not capable of producing the desired effect; incapable; incompetent; inadequate: as, inefficient measures; an inefficient police.

He is as insipid in his pleasures as inefficient in every thing else. Chesterfield.

inefficiently (in-e-fish'ent-li), adv. In an inefficient or incapable manner.

inelaborate (in-ē-lab'ọ-rāt), a. [< in-[3] + elaborate.] Not elaborate; not wrought with care. Coles, 1717.

inelastic (in-ē-las'tik), a. [< in-[3] + elastic.] Not elastic; not returning after a strain; lacking elasticity. The so-called 'incompressible' fluids (liquids) are sometimes called inelastic fluids. See fluid, n.

Doubtless . . . the elastic and the inelastic fluids will be distinguished by appropriate designations in English. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., ix.

inelasticate (in-ē-las'ti-kāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inelasticated, ppr. inelasticating. [< inelastic + -ate[2].] To make inelastic; deprive of elasticity.

Each thread [of caoutchouc] is inelasticated individually in the act of reeling. Ure, Dict., I. 701.

inelasticity (in-ē-las-tis'i-ti), n. [< in-[3] + elasticity.] The character of being inelastic; lack of elasticity.

inelegance (in-el'ē-gans), n. [= F. inélégance = It. ineleganza, < LL. inelegantia, inelegance, < L. in- priv. + elegantia, elegance: see elegance.] 1. The state or character of being inelegant; want of elegance or refinement; lack of any quality required by good taste.

Whene'er his images betray'd
Too strong a light, too weak a shade,
Or in the graceful and the grand Confess'd inelegance of hand.
Cawthorne, Birth and Education of Genius.

She was conspicuous from the notorious inelegance of her figure. T. Hook, Jack Brag.

2. That which is inelegant or ungraceful: as, inelegances of style.

inelegancy (in-el'ē-gan-si), n. Same as inelegance.

inelegant (in-el'ē-gant), a. [= F. inélégant = Sp. Pg. It. inelegante, < L. inelegan(t-)s, not elegant, < in- priv. + elegan(t-)s, elegant: see ele- gant.] Not elegant; ungraceful; unrefined; deficient in any quality required by correct taste. [Obsolete as used in the first extract.]

Most ample fruit,
Of beauteous form, . . . pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat.
J. Philips, Cider, i.

Modern criticks, having never read Homer but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. W. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

=Syn. Ungraceful, homely, plain, clumsy, ungainly, rough, awkward.

inelegantly (in-el′ē-gant-li), adv. In an inelegant manner; ungracefully; rudely.

Nor will he, if he have the least taste or application, talk inelegantly. Chesterfield.

The pediment of the southern transept is pinnacled, not inelegantly, with a flourished cross.
T. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

ineligibility (in-el′i-ji-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inéligibilité, < ML. ineligibilita(t-)s, < ineligibilis, ineligible: see ineligible.] 1. Lack of eligibility in any respect; the character of being unworthy to be selected or chosen; unfitness; inexpediency: as, the ineligibility of a suitor.—2. Specifically, the condition of being ineligible to a specified office or employment; disqualification for election or choice: as, the ineligibility of a candidate.

ineligible (in-el′i-ji-bl), a. [= F. inéligible = Pg. inelegivel = It. ineligibile, < ML. ineligibilis, that cannot be chosen, < in- priv. + eligibilis*, that can be chosen: see eligible.] 1. Not eligible, in general; unworthy of choice; unsuitable; inexpedient: as, an ineligible site for a building.

In the first view, appeals to the people at fixed periods appear to be nearly as ineligible as appeals on particular occasions as they emerge. A. Hamilton, Federalist, No. 50.

2. Specifically, not eligible to a specified office or post of honor; legally or otherwise disqualified.

He that cannot be admitted cannot be elected; and, the votes given to a man ineligible being given in vain, the highest number of an eligible candidate becomes a majority. Johnson, The False Alarm.

I wish that at the end of the four years they had made him [the President] forever ineligible a second time.
Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 266.

ineligibly (in-el′i-ji-bli), adv. In an ineligible manner.

ineliminable (in-ē-lim′i-na-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + eliminable.] Not eliminable; that cannot be eliminated, thrown out, or set aside.

The number of laborers is an ineliminable element in the problem. What is the amount of possible wages?
F. A. Walker, N. A. Rev., CXX. 108.

ineloquence (in-el′ō-kwens), n. [< ineloquen(t) + -ce.] The state or quality of being ineloquent; want of eloquence; a habit of silence or reserve in speech.

To us, as already hinted, the Abbot's eloquence is less admirable than his ineloquence, his great invaluable talent of silence. Carlyle, Past and Present, ii. 11.

ineloquent (in-el′ō-kwent), a. [= F. inéloquent = Pg. It. ineloquente, < LL. ineloquen(t-)s, < L. in- priv. + eloquen(t-)s, eloquent: see eloquent.] Not eloquent; wanting the quality or characteristics of eloquence.

To whom thus Raphael answer'd heavenly meek:
Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men,
Nor tongue ineloquent. Milton, P. L., viii. 219.

ineloquently (in-el′ō-kwent-li), adv. In an ineloquent manner; without eloquence.

ineluctable (in-ē-luk′ta-bl), a. [= F. inéluctable = Pg. ineluctavel = It. ineluttabile, < L. ineluctabilis, < in- priv. + eluctabilis, that may be escaped from, < eluctari, struggle out: see eluctate.] Not to be overcome or escaped from.

She realized that she and he were alike helpless—both struggling in the grip of some force outside themselves, inexorable, ineluctable.
Mrs. H. Ward, Robert Elsmere, xxviii.

ineludible (in-ē-lū′di-bl), a. [= Sp. ineludible; as *in-*3 + eludible.] Not eludible; not to be eluded or escaped.

One would think that an opinion so very obnoxious, and so lyable to such grand inconveniences, should not be admitted but upon most pressing reasons and ineludible demonstrations. Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, ii.

inembryonate (in-em′bri-on-āt), a. [< *in-*3 + embryonate.] Not embryonate; not formed in embryo. [Rare.]

inemendable† (in-ē-men′da-bl), a. [= It. inemendabile; as *in-*3 + emendable.] Not to be emended; not to be atoned for: said formerly of certain crimes. Kersey, 1708.

inenarrable†, a. [< OF. inenarrable, F. inénarrable = Sp. inenarrable = Pg. inenarravel = It. inenarrabile, < L. inenarrabilis, that cannot be described, < in- priv. + enarrabilis, that can be described, < enarrare, describe, relate in detail: see enarration.] Incapable of being narrated or told.

This blyssed Lorde is to be set by aboue al thynge, he is to be loued best, for his inenarrable goodnes.
Bp. Fisher, Seven Penitential Psalms, Ps. cxlvii.

The princes then, and nauie that did bring These so inenarrable troopes, and all their soyles, I sing.
Chapman, Iliad, ii.

inenchyma (in-eng′ki-mä), n. [NL., < L. in, in, + Gr. ἐγχυμα, an infusion: see enchymatous.] In bot., a fibrocellular tissue the elements of which have the appearance of spiral vessels. Baillon.

inept (in-ept′), a. [= F. inepte = Sp. Pg. inepto = It. inetto, < L. ineptus, unsuitable, improper, senseless, < in- priv. + aptus, suitable: see apt. Cf. inapt.] 1. Not apt, fit, or suitable; inapt.

The Aristotelian philosophy is inept for new discoveries, and therefore of no accommodation to the use of life.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, xix.

The genius of the order [of Druids] admitted of no inept member. For the acolyte unendowed with the faculty of study, all initiation ceased.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I. 18.

2. Inappropriate; out of place; foolish.

To view attention as a special state of intelligence, and to distinguish it from consciousness, is utterly inept.
Sir W. Hamilton.

The suggestion which from a later standpoint appears inept may be recognized as ingenious from the earlier.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, I. 303.

Inepti (in-ep′ti), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. ineptus, stupid: see inept.] 1. A term proposed by Illiger (1811) to include birds related to the dodo, Didus ineptus.—2. In Bonaparte's system of classification (1854), the fourth order of Aves, of his subclass Insessores (see Altrices), consisting of the family Dididæ, in which he misplaces the struthious genus Æpyornis, together with his Ornithoptera and Cyanornis: the last two are equivalent to Apterornis of Selys. The group is thus an artificial one.

ineptitude (in-ep′ti-tūd), n. [= OF. and F. ineptitude = Sp. ineptitud = It. inettitudine, < L. ineptitudo, < ineptus, inept: see inept. Cf. inaptitude.] The quality or state of being inept; lack of aptness or adaptation; unfitness; unsuitableness; inaptitude; foolishness.

To avoid therefore that ineptitude for society, which is frequently the fault of us scholars, . . . I take care to visit all publick solemnities. Tatler, No. 203.

The unthinking ineptitude with which even the routine of life is carried on by the mass of men.
H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 303.

It would seem likely that the French word [Topinambour] is an endeavour to imitate phonetically the red Indian name of the plant [artichoke], a process for which the French usually show an extraordinary ineptitude.
N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. 110.

ineptly (in-ept′li), adv. In an inept manner; unsuitably; awkwardly; foolishly.

They [the Peripateticks] ineptly fansied . . . [the crystalline humour of the eye] to be the immediate organ of vision wherein all the species of external objects were terminated. Ray, Works of Creation, ii.

ineptness (in-ept′nes), n. The quality of being inept; unfitness; awkwardness; ineptitude.

The feeblenesse and miserable ineptnesse of Infancy.
Dr. H. More, Pre-existency of the Soul, Pref.

inequable (in-ē′kwa-bl or in-ek′wa-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + equable.] Not equable; not uniform; changeable; fitful: as, an inequable climate or temper.

inequal (in-ē′kwal), a. [< ME. inequal, < OF. inequal, F. inégal = Sp. inigual = It. ineguale, inuguale, inequale, < L. inæqualis, not equal, uneven, < in- priv. + æqualis, equal: see equal.] 1†. Unequal; unjust.

Welcome all toils the inequal fates decree,
While toils endear thy faithful charge to thee.
Shenstone, Judgment of Hercules.

Such a divulsion may be made in glass by but an inæqual motion between the neighbouring parts.
Boyle, Works, I. 459.

2. In entom., covered with irregular elevations and depressions: said of a surface.—Inequal hour, an hour formed by dividing the day (from sunrise to sunset) and the night (from sunset to sunrise) into twelve parts each.

inequalitarian (in-ē-kwol-i-tā′ri-an), n. [< inequality + -arian.] A believer in inequality; one who upholds the principle of social or political inequality. [Rare.]

In practice they [the English people] are what I may call determined inequalitarians.
Gladstone, N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 202.

★ inequality (in-ē-kwol′i-ti), n.; pl. inequalities (-tiz). [= OF. inequalité, F. inégalité = Sp. igualdad = It. inegualità, < L. inæqualita(t-)s, unequalness, unevenness, < inæqualis, unequal: see inequal.] 1. Lack of equality in character or attributes; unlikeness between things of the same kind; diversity; disparity: as, inequality in size, numbers, etc.; the inequality of the fingers.

Though human souls are said to be equal, yet is there no small inequality in their operations.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., iii. 14.

2. Lack of equality in the state or condition of a person or thing; want of uniformity of relation, level, surface, etc.; variation or variableness; unevenness: as, inequalities of temper; inequalities of rank or fortune; inequalities of the earth's surface.

An infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and valleys. Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), I. 483.

Inequality of condition is . . . indispensable to progress. Calhoun, Works, I. 56.

The inequality . . . desired by the artist and the man of science is an inequality in fame; that desired by the productive laborer is an inequality in riches.
W. H. Mallock, Social Equality, p. 123.

3. Injustice; partiality.

We sometimes find men complaining of inequalities in events, which were indeed the effects of a most equal providence. Warburton, Divine Legation, v. § 4.

4. In astron., the deviation in the motion of a planet or satellite from its uniform mean motion.—5. In alg., an expression of two unequal quantities connected by either of the signs of inequality > or <; thus, $a > b$, signifying that a is greater than b, and $a < b$, signifying that a is less than b, are inequalities.—Diurnal inequality. See diurnal.—First inequality† (inæqualitas soluta), that inequality in the motion of a planet or of the moon which is irrespective of its angular distance from the sun. In the case of a planet it is corrected by the equation of the argument, in that of the moon by the equation of the orbit (see both, under equation).—Second inequality† (inæqualitas alligata), that inequality in the motion of a planet or of the moon which depends upon its angular distance from the sun, and disappears at oppositions and conjunctions. In the case of the moon it is the evection (which see).—Third inequality† of the motion of the moon, the variation (which see).—Fourth inequality† of the motion of the moon, an inequality discovered by Tycho Brahe, consisting in a quicker motion of the moon while the sun is in perigee than while he is in apogee. Its greatest effect upon the longitude is about 12′.

inequation (in-ē-kwā′shon or -zhon), n. [< *in-*3 + equation.] In math., an inequality. See inequality, 5.

inequidistant (in-ē-kwi-dis′tant), a. [< *in-*3 + equidistant.] Not equidistant; not equally distant.

inequilateral (in-ē-kwi-lat′e-ral), a. [< *in-*3 + equilateral.] 1. Not equilateral; having unequal sides: as, an inequilateral triangle.—2. In conch., specifically, having the anterior and posterior ends of each valve, as divided by an imaginary vertical line from the umbones, unequal. All true or lamellibranch bivalves are more or less inequilateral, while the brachiopods, with very few exceptions, are equilateral. Those lamellibranchs which are least inequilateral, as for example the Lucinidæ, are described as subequilateral. See inequivalve.

3. In Foraminifera, not having the convolutions of the shell in the same plane, but obliquely wound around an axis.—4. In bot., unsymmetrical from the greater development of one side, as the leaves of Begonia, the elm, etc.

in equilibrio (in ē-kwi-lib′ri-ō). See equilibrium, 1.

inequilobate (in-ē-kwi-lō′bāt), a. [< L. in- priv. + æquus, equal, + NL. lobus, lobe: see lobate. Cf. equilobed.] Unequally lobed; having unequal lobes.

inequipotential (in-ē″kwi-pō-ten′shal), a. [< *in-*3 + equipotential.] In a condition of unequal stresses; potentially unstable.

inequipotentiality (in-ē″kwi-pō-ten-shi-al′i-ti), n. [< inequipotential + -ity.] A condition of potential instability, as that of a glacier.

inequitable (in-ek′wi-ta-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + equitable.] Not equitable; not according to the principles of equity; unjust.

Nor when they were in partnership with the farmer, as often was the case, have I heard that they had taken the lion's share. The proportions seemed not inequitable.
Burke, Rev. in France.

Inequitable government can be upheld only by the aid of a people correspondingly inequitable in its sentiments and acts. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 398.

inequitably (in-ek′wi-ta-bli), adv. In an inequitable manner; unjustly; unfairly.

Conditions which if passed into law would, it is contended, press inequitably upon employers.
The Engineer, LXV. 303.

inequitate† (in-ek′wi-tāt), v. t. [< L. inequitatus, pp. of inequitare, ride upon or over, < in, on, + equitare, ride: see equitation.] To ride on; ride over or through. Sir T. More.

Inequitelæ (in-ē-kwi-tē′lē), n. pl. [NL., prop. Iniquitelæ*, < L. iniquus, unequal (see iniquous), + tela, web.] A group of true spinning-spiders, having conical, convergent, slightly exserted spinnerets arranged in a rosette, eight unequally large eyes arranged in two transverse rows, and very slender legs: opposed to Tubitelæ and Orbitelæ. These spiders spin irregular webs, the threads of which cross in all directions, whence the name.

inequity (in-ek′wi-ti), n.; pl. inequities (-tiz). [< in-3 + equity. Cf. iniquity, ult. of the same formation.] Lack of equity or abstract justice; disagreement with equitable principles; injustice; also, an unjust action or proceeding.

The inequity implied by it [militant organization] ramifies throughout all social relations.
H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 109.

The looseness, the uncertainty, the recklessness, the possible misapprehension, of this form of vengeance [the vendetta], apart from higher considerations, is its condemnation. To this we must add its radical inequity.
N. A. Rev., CXXXIX. 74.

inequivalve (in-ē′kwi-valv), a. [< in-3 + equivalve.] In conch., having unequal valves, as a bivalve mollusk; having one of the valves larger than the other: applied both to lamellibranch bivalves, in which the valves are lateral, and to brachiopods, in which the valves are a dorsal and a ventral one. An inequilateral valve is unsymmetrical in itself; an inequivalve bivalve has one valve unsymmetrical with the other. An oyster-shell is both inequilateral and inequivalve, having a flat valve and a deep valve, neither of which is equal-sided.

The shell [of a brachiopod] is always inequivalve and equilateral: that is to say, each valve is symmetrical within itself, and more or less unlike the other valve.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 397.

inequivalved (in-ē′kwi-valvd), a. [< inequivalve + *-ed*2.] Same as inequivalve.

inequivalvular (in-ē-kwi-val′vū-lär), a. [< inequivalve, after valvular.] Same as inequivalve.

ineradicable (in-ē-rad′i-ka-bl), a. [< in-3 + eradicable.] Not eradicable; incapable of being eradicated.

An ineradicable bloodstain on the oaken stair yet bids defiance to the united energies of soap and sand.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 16.

ineradicably (in-ē-rad′i-ka-bli), adv. In an ineradicable manner; so as not to be eradicable.

inerasable (in-ē-rā′sa-bl), a. [< in-3 + erasable.] Not to be erased or obliterated: as, the inerasable records of sin.

inergetical† (in-ėr-jet′i-kal), a. Having no energy or activity.

Those eminent stars and planets that are in the heavens are not to be considered by us as sluggish inergetical bodies, or as if they were set only to be as bare candles to us, but as bodies full of proper motion, of peculiar operation, and of life.
Boyle, Works, V. 640.

inerm (in-ėrm′), a. [= F. inerme = Sp. Pg. It. inerme, < L. inermis, unarmed, < in- priv. + arma, arms: see *arm*2.] In bot., unarmed; destitute of prickles or thorns, as a leaf. Also inermous.

Inermes (in-ėr′mēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. inermis, unarmed: see inerm.] A group of achætous gephyrean worms, represented by such genera as Sipunculus and Priapulus; the spoon-worms, or Sipunculacea proper: opposed to Armata or Chætifera. Also Inermi.

Inermia (in-ėr′mi-ạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. inermis, unarmed: see inerm.] A tribe of dictyonine silicious sponges without uncinates and scopulæ. It contains the family Meandrospongidæ.

inermian (in-ėr′mi-an), a. [< Inermia + -an.] Of or pertaining to the Inermia.

inermous (in-ėr′mus), a. Same as inerm.

inerrability (in-ėr-a-bil′i-ti), n. [< inerrable: see -bility.] The condition or quality of being inerrable; freedom or exemption from error or from the possibility of erring; infallibility.

It is now meet, that I add some few words: viz., what our opinion is of the inerrability of a General Council, truly so called, and qualified as hath been formerly described.
Hammond, A Parænesis, v. § 13.

inerrable (in-ėr′a-bl), a. [= Sp. inerrable = It. inerrabile, < LL. inerrabilis, unerring, < in- priv. + errabilis*, erring: see errable.] Incapable of erring; exempt from error or mistake; infallible.

He [the sonne] is the profoundite of thy inerrable wysedom, so yt he knew what was profytable for us, and what was acceptable to thee.
Bp. Fisher, Seven Penitential Psalms.

inerrableness (in-ėr′a-bl-nes), n. Inerrability.

Infallibility and inerrableness . . . [are] assumed and inclosed by the Romish Church.
Hammond, Works, I. 479.

inerrably (in-ėr′a-bli), adv. With freedom from error; infallibly.

inerrancy (in-er′an-si), n. [= Sp. inerrancia; as inerran(t) + -cy.] The quality of being inerrant; freedom from error.

In neither case does it [Article XIX.] militate against the inerrancy of the whole Church collectively.
Pusey, Eirenicon, p. 40.

A writer must be enviably confident of his own perceptive inerrancy, thus to set up . . . his individual aversion and approbation as criteria for the decisions of his fellow-beings.
F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 196.

inerrant (in-er′ant), a. [= Sp. Pg. inerrante; as in-3 + *errant*1.] Unerring; free from error.

Is there any one who does not hold that the original autograph manuscripts of the Holy Scriptures were absolutely inerrant?
Christian Union, XXXV. 20.

inerratic (in-e-rat′ik), a. [< in-3 + erratic.] Not erratic or wandering; fixed.

inerring† (in-ėr′ing), a. [< in-3 + erring, ppr. of err, v.] Unerring.

inerringly† (in-ėr′ing-li), adv. Unerringly. Glanville.

inert (in-ėrt′), a. [= F. inerte = Sp. Pg. It. inerte, < L. iner(t-)s, unskilled in any art, inactive, indolent, < in- priv. + ar(t-)s, art: see *art*2.] 1. Having no inherent power of action, motion, or resistance; without inherent force; inanimate; lifeless: applied to matter in its intrinsic character: as, an inert mass of clay; an inert corpse.

But if you'l say that motion is not of the nature of matter, but that it is inert and stupid of it self—then it must be moved from some other.
Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism, ii. 1.

Then the head fell back upon his shoulder, and there was a piteous murmur and a flutter, as he laid his inert burden on the grass.
J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 291.

2. Indisposed or unable to move or act; inactive; sluggish: as, an inert drug.

Accordingly, as we ascend from creatures that are inert to creatures that are vivacious, we advance from weak to strong skeletons, internal or external.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 2.

Is it not strange, if the albuminate of mercury is so inert, that the disinfection of these cultures should be so successful?
Science, XIII. 64.

Inert pupa, in entom., a pupa which exhibits no movements, or only very slight ones: opposed to active pupa.

★=Syn. Inactive, Lazy, etc. (see idle); lifeless, passive.

inertia (in-ėr′shiạ), n. [= F. inertie = Sp. Pg. inercia = It. inerzia, < L. inertia, lack of art or skill, inactivity, indolence, NL. inertia (def. 2), < iner(t-)s, unskilled, inactive: see inert.] 1. Lack of activity; sluggishness; passiveness; inertness.—2. In physics, that property of matter by virtue of which it retains its state of rest or of uniform rectilinear motion so long as no foreign cause changes that state. Also called vis inertiæ (force of inertia). Quantitatively considered, inertia is the same as mass. The term was introduced by Kepler. See *mass*2 and momentum.

How the force must be applied which causes a body, in spite of its inertia, to move on a curve, is easily understood from some common instances.
Tait, Properties of Matter, § 115.

The ether by means of which light is transmitted, though possessed of inertia, is not, like the atmosphere, affected by the force of gravity.
W. A. Miller, Elem. of Chem., I. 141.

3. In med., want of activity; sluggishness: a term especially applied to the condition of the uterus when it does not contract properly in parturition.—Center of inertia. See *center*1.—Electric inertia, the resistance offered by a circuit to sudden changes of current, due to self and mutual induction, but not to electrostatic charge.—Ellipsoid of inertia. See ellipsoid.—Inverse ellipsoid of inertia. See momental ellipsoid, under ellipsoid.—Magnetic inertia, that property of a magnetic substance which prevents its being instantaneously magnetized when subjected to magnetic force.—Moment of inertia. (a) Of a body or system of bodies upon or round an axis, the sum of the products obtained by multiplying each element of mass by the square of its distance from the axis. (b) With regard to a plane or point, the sum of the elements of mass each multiplied by the square of its distance from the given plane or point.—Principal screw of inertia, one of a system of screws equal in number to the degrees of freedom of the body whose inertia is considered, such that an impulsive wrench about any one of these screws will make the body begin to twist about that screw alone. See screw.—Product of inertia, with reference to two orthogonal axes or two planes perpendicular to those axes, the sum of the elements of mass each multiplied by the product of its distances from the two planes.—Reduced inertia of a machine, the mass which, concentrated at the driving-point, would have the same kinetic energy as the entire machine.—The principal axes of inertia. See *axis*1.

inertial (in-ėr′shial), a. [< inertia + -al.] Pertaining to inertia; of the nature of inertia.

This the author attempts by means of the subsidiary conceptions which he puts forward of "the inertial system, the inertial scale, inertial rotation, and inertial rest."
Mind, XII. 151.

inertion (in-ėr′shon), n. [Irreg. < inert + -ion.] Inertia; inertness; absence of exertion. [Rare.]

Inaction, bodily and intellectual, pervading the same character, cannot but fix disgust upon every stage and every state of life. Vice alone is worse than such double inertion.
Miss Burney, Camilla, i. 5.

The young and impatient poet was mortified with the inertion of public curiosity.
I. D'Israeli, Calam. of Authors, II. 75.

inertitude† (in-ėr′ti-tūd), n. [< LL. inertitudo* (given from a glossary in the erroneous form inersitudo), inertia, < L. iner(t-)s, inert: see inert.] Inertness. Coles, 1717.

inertly (in-ėrt′li), adv. In an inert manner; inactively; sluggishly.

Dread Chaos, and eternal Night! . . .
Suspend awhile your force inertly strong.
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 7.

inertness (in-ėrt′nes), n. The state or quality of being inert. (a) Lack of activity or exertion; habitual indisposition to action or motion; sluggishness.

It is not humanity, but laziness and inertness of mind, which produces the desire of this kind of indemnities.
Burke, Policy of the Allies.

The Universities are not, as in Hobbes's time, "the core of rebellion," no, but the seat of inertness.
Emerson, Fugitive Slave Law.

(b) The state of being inherently destitute of the power of motion or action; that property by which bodies tend to persist in a state of rest, or of motion derived from external force. See inertia.

So long and deep a swoon as is absolute insensibility and inertnesse may much more reasonably be thought to blot out the memory of another life.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, v.

The especial characteristic by which we distinguish dead matter is its inertness.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 53.

inerudite (in-er′ö-dīt), a. [= It. inerudito, < L. ineruditus, uninstructed, < in- priv. + eruditus, instructed: see erudite.] Not erudite; unlearned. Imp. Dict.

inescapable (in-es-kā′pa-bl), a. [= OF. inescapable; as in-3 + escapable.] Not to be eluded or escaped, or escaped from; inevitable.

She was looking along an inescapable path of repulsive monotony.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxvi.

Looking back over the history of the nation, we can now see that the civil war was inescapable.
The Century, XXXIV. 155.

inescate† (in-es′kāt), v. t. [< L. inescatus, pp. of inescare (> It. inescare), allure with bait, < in, in, + esca, bait.] To bait; allure with bait; allure; tempt.

Proteus like in all formes and disguises [they] goe abroad in the night, to inescate and beguile young women.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 496.

inescation† (in-es-kā′shon), n. [< LL. inescatio(n-), < inescare, allure with bait: see inescate.] The act of baiting or alluring; temptation.

Herein lies true fortitude and courage, in overcoming all the deceitful allurements and inescations of flesh and blood.
Hallywell, Excellence of Moral Virtue (1692), p. 107.

inescutcheon (in-es-kuch′on), n. [< in-2 + escutcheon.] In her., a small escutcheon, or the representation of a shield, used either as a bearing or charged upon the escutcheon for a special purpose, as an escutcheon of pretense, or very small and borne in chief by a baronet, in which case it is charged with the red hand of Ulster. When there are several inescutcheons, they are usually called escutcheons.

Inescutcheon.

inesite (in′e-sīt), n. A hydrated silicate of manganese and calcium, occurring in masses having a fibrous and radiated structure and flesh-red color. It is found in the Dillenburg region, Germany, and also in Sweden, where it has been called rhodotilite.

inespecially†, adv. [An erroneous form, due to a confusion of in especial, improp. written as one word, with especially.] Especially.

Inespecially for as muche as, a great number of hys souldyers beinge eyther deade or maymed wyth woundes, the matter was driuen to so hard a point that fewe remayned able to make defence.
Golding, tr. of Cæsar, fol. 136.

in esse (in es′ē). [L. (NL.): in, in; esse, be (here used as a noun, being): see ens, essence.] In being; in actuality; actually existing. Compare in posse.

Over the sofa, Mrs. Bayham Badger when Mrs. Dingo. Of Mrs. Bayham Badger in esse I possess the original, and have no copy.
Dickens, Bleak House, xiii.

inessential (in-e-sen′shal), a. [< in-3 + essential.] 1. Not essential; unessential.

The setting of flowers in hair, and of ribands on dresses, were also subjects of frequent admiration with you, not inessential to your happiness.
Ruskin.

2. Immaterial. [Rare.]

His inessential figure cast no shade
Upon the golden floor.
Shelley, Queen Mab, vii.

Prime sister of th' inessential bands,
Erect, persuasive Expectation stands.
Brooke, Constantia.

inestimable (in-es'ti-ma-bl), a. [< ME. inestimable, < OF. (also F.) inestimable = Pr. inestimable = Sp. inestimable = Pg. inestimavel = It. inestimabile, < L. inæstimabilis, inestimable, < in- priv. + æstimabilis, worthy of estimation: see estimable.] 1. Not to be estimated or computed; beyond measure.

"The inestimable wasting and consumption of the ancient revenues of the realm" was noticed as "manifestly apparent" by the Commons on their first grant of a subsidy to queen Elizabeth.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 28.

2. Of very great value or excellence: as, inestimable blessings.

A most inestimable rich crosse, very gorgeously adorned with wondrous abundance of pretious stones.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 46.

Heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 4.

The heathen Philosophers thought that vertue was for its owne sake inestimable, and the greatest gaine of a teacher to make a soule vertuous.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

inestimably (in-es'ti-ma-bli), adv. So as to be incapable of being estimated or rated.

A crown in some sort proportionate to, and yet inestimably outvaluing, the toils and difficulties requisite to obtain it. Boyle, Works, II. 388.

ineunt (in'ē-unt), n. [< L. iniens (ineunt-), ppr. of inire, go in, begin: see initial.] In math., a point of a curve.

The line through two consecutive ineunts of the curve is the tangent at the ineunt. The point of intersection of two consecutive tangents is the ineunt on the tangent.
Cayley, Sixth Memoir on Quantics (1859), § 185.

ineunt-point (in'ē-unt-point), n. Same as ineunt.

inevasible (in-ē-vā'zi-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + evasible.] Not evasible; incapable of being evaded.

inevidence† (in-ev'i-dens), n. [= Pg. inevidencia; as *in-*3 + evidence.] The quality of being inevident; lack of evidence; obscurity.

Charge them, says St. Paul, that they trust not in uncertain riches—that is, in the obscurity or inevidence of riches. Barrow, Works, I. 1449.

inevident† (in-ev'i-dent), a. [= Pg. inevidente; < *in-*3 + evident.] Not evident; not clear or obvious; obscure. [Rare.]

They may as well be deceived by their own weakness as persuaded by the arguments of a doctrine which other men, as wise, call inevident.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 294.

inevitability (in-ev″i-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [= OF. inevitabilite, < ML. inevitabilita(t-)s, < L. inevitabilis, inevitable: see inevitable.] The state or character of being inevitable; inevitableness.

Ambition . . . falls under the inevitability of such accidents, which either could not be foreseen or not prevented. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 77.

inevitable (in-ev'i-ta-bl), a. [= OF. inevitable, F. inévitable = Sp. inevitable = Pg. inevitavel = It. inevitabile, < L. inevitabilis, unavoidable, < in- priv. + evitabilis, avoidable: see evitable.] Not evitable; unavoidable; admitting of no escape or evasion: as, inevitable calamities.

Thei would destroy ye fre wil of man & lay ye weight of their owne synnes to ye charge of God's ineuytable presciens, & their own ineuitable destiny.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 645.

Alcides bore not long his flying foe,
But, bending his inevitable bow,
Reach'd him in air, suspended as he stood,
And in his pinion fix'd the feather'd wood.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xii.

Not warped . . . into that constraint or awkwardness which is the inevitable effect of conscious exposure to public gaze. De Quincey, Style, i.

The profound ignorance of all agricultural pursuits inevitable in a man who had passed life hitherto in towns.
Lady Holland, in Sydney Smith, v.

Inevitable accident. (a) An accident which ordinary and reasonable human care or foresight could not guard against. (b) In a more strict sense, equivalent to an act of God (which see, under act).—The inevitable, that which cannot be avoided or evaded; that which is sure to happen: as, it is in vain to fight against the inevitable.

inevitableness (in-ev'i-ta-bl-nes), n. The state or character of being inevitable; inevitability.

There was such an infallibility, inevitableness, in that which he [a prophet] had said, as that his very saying of it seemed to them some kind of cause to the accomplishing thereof. Donne, Sermons, vi.

inevitably (in-ev'i-ta-bli), adv. In an inevitable manner; so as to render escape or evasion impossible; unavoidably.

Power is as inevitably lost by inactivity as it is gained by activity. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 310.

inewe† (i-nū'), v. t. [Early mod. E. ineaw; < *in-*2 + *ewe*2.] To dip or plunge into water.

And [when] the sharp, cruel hawks they at their backs do view, Themselves for very fear they instantly ineawe.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xx. 234.

in ex. An abbreviation of in (the) exergue. See exergue.

inexact (in-eg-zakt'), a. [= F. inexact = Sp. Pg. inexacto = It. inesatto; as *in-*3 + exact.] Not exact; not precisely correct, accurate, or punctual.

inexactitude (in-eg-zak'ti-tūd), n. [= F. inexactitude = Sp. inexactitud; as *in-*3 + exactitude.] The state or character of being inexact or inaccurate; inexactness.

This résumé will afford me a suitable opportunity of exhibiting the numerous inexactitudes into which both Kupffer and Meynert have fallen.
Alien. and Neurol., VI. 315.

We have another example furnished of geographical inexactitude. The American, VIII. 379.

inexactly (in-eg-zakt'li), adv. In an inexact manner; not exactly; not with accuracy or precision; not correctly.

He [William of Orange] spoke and wrote French, English, and German, inelegantly, it is true, and inexactly, but fluently and intelligibly. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

This element of earthquake motion, the velocity of transmission through the earth's crust, is very inexactly known.
Science, IV. 518.

inexactness (in-eg-zakt'nes), n. The quality of being inexact; incorrectness; want of precision.

inexcitability (in-ek-sī-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< inexcitable: see -bility.] The state or quality of being inexcitable. Roget.

inexcitable (in-ek-sī'ta-bl), a. [= F. inexcitable, < L. inexcitabilis, < in- priv. + LL. excitabilis, that may be excited: see excitable.] Unexcitable; not to be easily excited or roused.

What pleasure, late emploid, letts humour steepe
Thy lidds in this inexcitable sleepe?
Chapman, tr. of Homer's Hymn to Venus.

inexcusability (in-eks-kū-za-bil'i-ti), n. [< inexcusable: see -bility.] The quality or state of being inexcusable or unjustifiable.

The worst of all the sins committed by the Leaguers in history, surpassing murder itself in criminality and inexcusability, was breaking up the Harkhallow hunt.
The Academy, Dec. 8, 1888, p. 368.

inexcusable (in-eks-kū'za-bl), a. [= F. inexcusable = It. inescusabile, < L. inexcusabilis, < *in-*3 + excusabilis, excusable: see excusable.] Not excusable; incapable of being excused or justified: as, inexcusable folly.

Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art, that judgest. Rom. ii. 1.

Of all hardnesses of heart, there is none so inexcusable as that of parents towards their children. Spectator, No. 181.

=Syn. Unjustifiable, unpardonable, indefensible.

inexcusableness (in-eks-kū'za-bl-nes), n. The character or state of being inexcusable.

Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition of this very thing, that they knew God, but for all that did not glorify him as God. South, Sermons, II. 263.

inexcusably (in-eks-kū'za-bli), adv. In an inexcusable manner; unpardonably.

He that sins against these inward checks presumes, and, what is more, he presumes inexcusably.
South, Works, VII. xi.

inexcussible† (in-eks-kus'i-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + excuss + -ible.] Not to be seized and detained by law.

inexcussibly† (in-eks-kus'i-bli), adv. In an inexcussible manner.

inexecrable (in-ek'sē-kra-bl), a. [Appar. < *in-*2 intensive + execrable; but prob. an orig. misprint for inexorable.] Most execrable. For this form, in the following passage some modern editions substitute inexorable.

O, be thou damn'd, inexecrable dog!
And for thy life let justice be accus'd.
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1.

inexecutable (in-ek-sē-kū'ta-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + executable.] Not executable; incapable of being executed, performed, or enforced.

The king has accepted this constitution, knowing beforehand that it will not serve; he studies it, and executes it in the hope mainly that it will be found inexecutable.
Carlyle, French Rev., II. v. 5.

inexecution (in-ek-sē-kū'shon), n. [< *in-*3 + execution.] Lack or neglect of execution; nonperformance: as, the inexecution of a treaty.

He . . . decided quarrels arising between husbands and wives, without there ever being any inexecution or complaint against his decisions and decrees.
Spence, tr. of Varilla's Hist. Medici (1686), p. 306.

inexertion (in-eg-zėr'shon), n. [< *in-*3 + exertion.] Want of exertion; defect of effort or action. Imp. Dict.

inexhalable (in-eks-hā'la-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + exhalable.] Not exhalable; incapable of being exhaled or evaporated.

A new-laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a greater stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhalable parts into consistence. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 28.

inexhausted† (in-eg-zâs'ted), a. [< *in-*3 + exhausted.] Unexhausted.

A quarre of free stone . . . ministreth that inexhausted plenty of stone for their houses. Coryat, Crudities, I. 27.

Nay, we might yet carry it farther, and discover, in the smallest particle of this little world, a new inexhausted fund of matter, capable of being spun out into another universe. Spectator, No. 420.

inexhaustibility (in-eg-zâs-ti-bil'i-ti), n. [< inexhaustible: see -bility.] Inexhaustibleness.

inexhaustible (in-eg-zâs'ti-bl), a. [= OF. inexhaustible: < *in-*3 + exhaustible.] Not exhaustible; incapable of being exhausted, spent, or wearied; unfailing: as, an inexhaustible supply of water; inexhaustible patience.

An inexhaustible flow of anecdote. Macaulay.

They [mountaineers] are, however, almost inexhaustible by toil. A. B. Longstreet, Georgia Scenes, p. 207.

Inexhaustible bottle, a toy used by conjurers, consisting of an opaque bottle, usually of sheet-iron or gutta-percha, with several inclosed vials, which communicate with the exterior by small finger-holes, each vial having a neck or tube which passes up into the neck of the bottle. Different kinds of liquor are put into the vials, and any one of these can be poured out at pleasure by removing the finger from the corresponding hole, thus admitting air to the bottom of the vial, and permitting the liquor to escape.

inexhaustibleness (in-eg-zâs'ti-bl-nes), n. The state of being inexhaustible. Bailey, 1727.

inexhaustibly (in-eg-zâs'ti-bli), adv. In an inexhaustible manner or degree.

Cambridge is delightfully and inexhaustibly rich.
H. James, Jr., Portraits of Places, p. 302.

It [a scientific pursuit] may be full of an occupation for the thoughts so inexhaustibly interesting as to make ennui, in such a man's life, an extinct and almost fabulous form of evil. J. R. Seeley, Nat. Religion, p. 116.

inexhaustive (in-eg-zâs'tiv), a. [< *in-*3 + exhaustive.] 1. Not exhaustive; that does not exhaust, empty, or totally consume.—2†. Not to be exhausted or spent.

Those aromatick gales
That inexhaustive flow continual round.
Thomson, Spring, l. 477.

inexist (in-eg-zist'), v. i. [< *in-*2 + exist.] To exist in something else; inhere. [Rare.]

The ancients, holding the eternity of forms and ideas, supposed them substances inexisting within the divine mind. A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. i. 11.

inexistence[1]† (in-eg-zis'tens), n. [= Sp. inexistencia; as *in-*2 + existence.] Existence within; inherence. Also inexistency.

Concerning these gifts we must observe also that there was no small difference amongst them, as to the manner of their inexistence in the persons who had them.
South, Sermons, III. 414.

They [spirits] are not divided from the subsistence of the Father, but are in the Father, and the Father in them, by a certain inexistence, or inhabitation so called.
Bp. Bull, Works, II. v.

inexistence[2] (in-eg-zis'tens), n. [= F. inexistence; as *in-*3 + existence.] Lack of existence; non-existence.

When we talk of these as instances of inexistence, we do not mean that, in order to live, it is necessary we should be always in jovial crews. Steele, Spectator, No. 100.

inexistency† (in-eg-zis'ten-si), n.; pl. inexistencies (-siz). Same as inexistence[1].

If you examine what those forms and ideas were, you will find they were not God, nor attributes, nor yet distinct substances, but inexistencies in him: which inexistency was a very convenient term, implying somewhat that was both a substance and not a substance, and so carrying the advantages of either.
A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. i. 15.

inexistent[1]† (in-eg-zis'tent), a. [= Sp. Pg. inexistente; as *in-*2 + existent.] Existing in something else; inherent. Also inexisting.

Though it could be proved that earth is an ingredient actually inexistent in the vegetable and animal bodies, . . . yet it would not necessarily follow that earth, as a preexistent element, does with other principles convene to make up those bodies. Boyle, Works, I. 578.

inexistent[2] (in-eg-zis'tent), a. [< *in-*3 + existent.] Not existing; having no existence; pertaining to non-existence.

Oh sleep! thou sweetest gift of heaven to man,
Still in thy downy arms embrace my friend,
Nor loose him from his inexistent trance.
Steele, Lying Lover, v. 1.

inexorability (in-ek″sō-ra-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. inexorabilité = Pg. inexorabilidade = It. inesorabilità: see inexorable and -bility.] The character or quality of being inexorable or unyielding to entreaty.

Your father's inexorability not only grieves but amazes me. Johnson, in Boswell.

inexorable (in-ek'sō-ra-bl), a. [= F. inexorable = Sp. inexorable = Pg. inexoravel = It. inesorabile, < L. inexorabilis, < in- priv. + exorabilis, that can be moved by entreaty: see exorable.] Not to be persuaded or moved by entreaty or prayer; unyielding; unrelenting: as, an inexorable creditor; inexorable law.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
O, ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., i. 4.

They pay off their protection to great crimes and great criminals by being inexorable to the paltry frailties of little men. Burke, Nabob of Arcot.

But she
No saint — inexorable — no tenderness —
Too hard, too cruel. Tennyson, Princess, v.

=Syn. Inexorable, Unrelenting, Relentless, Implacable; immovable. Inexorable, literally not to be moved or changed by prayer or petition, expresses an immovable firmness in refusing to do what one is entreated to do, whether that be good or bad; it is also used figuratively: as, inexorable death, time, fate. The other three words apply to feeling, which is generally bad, but unrelenting and relentless may by figure apply also to action: as, an unrelenting pursuit; a relentless massacre. Implacable applies wholly to feeling, meaning unappeasable, and in this use is the strongest of the three; it goes with such strong words as animosity and resentment.

Kieft was inexorable, and demanded the murderer.
Bancroft, Hist. U. S., II. 289.

Slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 1.

Only in destroying I find ease
To my relentless thoughts. Milton, P. L., ix. 130.

Let there be nothing between us save war and implacable hatred. Longfellow, Courtship of Miles Standish, iv.

inexorableness (in-ek'sō-ra-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being inexorable.

The former aversation and inexorableness is taken away.
Chillingworth, Sermon on Rom. viii. 34.

inexorably (in-ek'sō-ra-bli), adv. In an inexorable manner; so as to be immovable by entreaty.

There find a Judge inexorably just.
Cowper, Hope, l. 227.

inexpansible (in-eks-pan'si-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + expansible.] Incapable of being expanded, dilated, or diffused. Tyndall.

inexpectable† (in-eks-pek'ta-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + expectable.] Not to be expected; not to be looked for.

With what inexspectable, unconceivable mercy were they answered! Bp. Hall, Works, V. 223.

inexpectant (in-eks-pek'tant), a. [< *in-*3 + expectant.] Not expecting; unexpectant.

Loverless and inexpectant of love.
Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xiii.

inexpectation† (in-eks-pek-tā'shon), n. [< *in-*3 + expectation.] The state of having no expectation or prevision.

It is therefore fit we take heed of such things as are like Multiplying-glasses, and shew fears either more numerous or bigger far than they are. Such are inexpectation, unacquaintance, want of preparation.
Feltham, Resolves, ii. 5.

inexpected† (in-eks-pek'ted), a. [< *in-*3 + expected.] Not expected; unexpected.

An imposed and inexpected end. Ford, Line of Life.

inexpectedly† (in-eks-pek'ted-li), adv. [< *in-*3 + expected + *-ly*2.] Unexpectedly.

How could it bee otherwise, when those great spirits of hers, that had beene long used to an uncontrolled soveraignitie, finde themselves so inexpectedly suppressed.
Bp. Hall, Athalia and Joash.

inexpectedness† (in-eks-pek'ted-nes), n. Unexpectedness.

The inexpectedness of pleasing objects makes them many times the more acceptable. Bp. Hall, Esther Suing.

inexpectly† (in-eks-pekt'li), adv. [< *in-*3 + expect(ed) + *-ly*2.] Same as inexpectedly.

I startled to meet so inexpectly with the name of Bishop Hall disgracefully ranked with Priests and Jesuits.
Bp. Hall, Works, VIII. 503.

inexpedible† (in-eks-ped'i-bl), a. [< L. inexpedibilis, that cannot be extricated, < in- priv. + expedibilis*, < expedire, expedite, extricate: see expede.] Cumbersome; not to be got rid of. Bailey.

inexpedience (in-eks-pē'di-ens), n. [< inexpedien(t) + -ce.] Inexpediency. Johnson. [Rare.]

inexpediency (in-eks-pē'di-en-si), n. [< inexpedien(t) + -cy.] The condition or quality of being inexpedient, inappropriate, or unadvisable; unsuitableness to the purpose or circumstances; inadvisability.

By this subscription they seemed to allow the lawfulness of the garments, though on account of the inexpediency of them they declined to use them.
Strype, Abp. Parker, an. 1654.

It is not the rigour but the inexpediency of laws and acts of authority which makes them tyrannical.
Paley, Moral Philos., vi. 5.

inexpedient (in-eks-pē'di-ent), a. [< *in-*3 + expedient.] Not expedient; not suited to the purpose or the circumstances; not judicious or advisable.

A little reflexion will shew that they [certain pursuits] are indeed inexpedient — that is, unprofitable, unadvisable, improper in a great variety of respects.
Bp. Hurd, Works, VII. xlviii.

It is indeed possible that a tax might be laid on a particular article by a state which might render it inexpedient that a further tax should be laid on the same article by the union. A. Hamilton, Federalist, No. xxxii.

=Syn. Unadvisable.

inexpediently (in-eks-pē'di-ent-li), adv. Not expediently; unfitly.

inexpensive (in-eks-pen'siv), a. [< *in-*3 + expensive.] Not expensive or costly.

Leaving Millicent to bemoan his want of appetite, and to devise elegant but inexpensive suppers.
E. S. Sheppard, Charles Auchester, iii. 1.

inexperience (in-eks-pē'ri-ens), n. [= F. inexpérience = Sp. inexperiencia = Pg. inexperiencia = It. inesperienza, < LL. inexperientia, inexperience, < L. in- priv. + experientia, experience: see experience.] Want of experience, or of knowledge gained by experience: as, the inexperience of youth.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexperience of the world and ignorance of mankind.
Addison.

We hug the hopes of constancy and truth, . . .
But soon, alas! detect the rash mistake
That sanguine inexperience loves to make.
Cowper, Valediction, l. 56.

inexperienced (in-eks-pē'ri-enst), a. [< *in-*3 + experienced.] Lacking, or characterized by lack of, experience or the knowledge or skill gained by experience; not experienced.

But (as a child, whose inexperienc'd age Nor evil purpose fears nor knows) enjoys Night's sweet refreshment, humid sleep sincere.
J. Philips, Cider, ii.

In his letter introductory to Green's Arcadia, Nash uses the expression "in my inexperienced opinion."
F. Hall, False Philol., p. 32.

Left . . . the poor inexperienced bride
To her own devices.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 67.

=Syn. Unpractised, unversed, "raw," "green."

inexperiencedness (in-eks-pē'ri-enst-nes), n. Lack of experience; inexperience. [Rare.]

The damsel has three things to plead in her excuse: the authority of her parents, the persuasion of her friends, and the inexperiencedness of her age.
Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 318.

inexpert (in-eks-pėrt'), a. [= F. inexpert = Sp. Pg. inexperto = It. inesperto, < L. inexpertus, untried, unaccustomed, unproved, < in- priv. + expertus, tried, experienced: see expert.] Not expert; not skilled; not having knowledge or dexterity derived from practice.

By this means the secrets of state are frequently divulg'd, and matters of greatest consequence committed to inexpert and novice counsellors, utterly to seek in the full and intimate knowledge of affairs past.
Milton, Free Commonwealth.

O [Albion] inexpert in arms,
Yet vain of freedom, how dost thou beguile
With dreams of hope these near and loud alarms!
Akenside, To the Country Gentlemen of England.

In letters and in laws
Not inexpert. Prior.

inexpertness (in-eks-pėrt'nes), n. Lack of expertness.

inexpiable (in-eks'pi-a-bl), a. [= F. inexpiable = Sp. inexpiable = Pg. inexpiavel = It. inespiabile, < L. inexpiabilis, that cannot be atoned for, < in- priv. + expiabilis*, that can be atoned for: see expiable.] 1. Not to be expiated; admitting of no expiation or atonement: as, an inexpiable crime or offense.

If they do follow him into error, the matter is not so inexpiable. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 372.

Should I offend, by high example taught,
'Twould not be an inexpiable fault.
Pomfret, Love's Triumph over Reason.

2. Not to be satisfied or appeased by expiation; implacable.

They will not speake one to another: so inexpiable hatred doe the other Iewes conceiue against them.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 143.

My love how couldst thou hope, who took'st the way
To raise in me inexpiable hate? Milton, S. A., l. 839.

As well might we in England think of waging inexpiable war upon all Frenchmen for the evils which they have brought upon us in the several periods of our mutual hostilities. Burke, Rev. in France.

Inexpiable war, a war between Carthage and its mercenary troops which lasted for about three years after the close of the first Punic war (241 B. C.).

inexpiableness (in-eks'pi-a-bl-nes), n. The state of being inexpiable.

inexpiably (in-eks'pi-a-bli), adv. In an inexpiable manner or degree; so as to admit of no atonement.

Excursions are inexpiably bad;
And 'tis much safer to leave out than add.
Roscommon, On Translated Verse.

inexpiate† (in-eks'pi-āt), a. [< LL. inexpiatus, not expiated, < L. in- priv. + expiatus, pp. of expiare, expiate: see expiate.] Not expiated, appeased, or pacified.

To rest inexpiate were much too rude a part.
Chapman, Iliad, ix.

inexplainable (in-eks-plā'na-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + explainable.] Not explainable; incapable of being explained; inexplicable. Bailey, 1731.

inexplebly† (in-eks'plē-bli), adv. [< L. inexplebilis, insatiable, < in- priv. + explebilis*, < explere, fill up: see expletive.] Insatiably.

What were these harpies but flatterers, delators, and the inexpleably covetous? Sandys, Travailes, p. 8.

inexplicability (in-eks″pli-ka-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. inexplicabilité; as inexplicable + -ity: see -bility.] The character or quality of being inexplicable; also, something that is inexplicable.

The insistence upon this one ultimate inexplicability left no solid basis for the natural science of mind or body.
Mind, IX. 370.

inexplicable (in-eks'pli-ka-bl), a. and n. [= F. inexplicable = Sp. inexplicable = Pg. inexplicavel = It. inesplicabile, < L. inexplicabilis, that cannot be unfolded or loosed, < in- priv. + explicabilis, that can be unfolded: see explicable.] I. a. Not explicable; incapable of being explained or interpreted; not to be made plain or intelligible: as, an inexplicable mystery.

The groundlings, who for the most part are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb shows and noise.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2.

Their views become vast and perplexed, to others inexplicable, to themselves uncertain.
Burke, Rev. in France.

That night, by chance, the poet watching Heard an inexplicable scratching.
Cowper, Retired Cat.

There is always a charm to me in the inexplicable windings of these wayward tracks.
Higginson, Oldport Days, p. 242.

=Syn. Unaccountable, incomprehensible, inscrutable, mysterious.

II. n. pl. Trousers; "inexpressibles." [A humorous euphemism.]

He usually wore a brown frock-coat without a wrinkle, light inexplicables without a spot.
Dickens, Sketches (Mr. Minns).

inexplicableness (in-eks'pli-ka-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being inexplicable.

inexplicably (in-eks'pli-ka-bli), adv. In an inexplicable manner; in a way or to a degree that cannot be explained.

But what of all this, now the power of godliness is denyed by wicked men. How then? what is their case? Surely inexplicably, inconceivably fearefull.
Bp. Hall, The Hypocrite.

★ inexplicate (in-eks'pli-kāt), a. [< *in-*3 + explicate.] In bot., not completely rolled or closed up, as the apothecia of some lichens. [Rare.]

inexplicit (in-eks-plis'it), a. [< *in-*3 + explicit.] Not explicit or clear in terms or statement; not clearly stated.

inexplorable (in-eks-plōr'a-bl), a. [= F. inexplorable; as *in-*3 + explorable.] Not explorable; incapable of being explored, searched, or discovered.

inexplosive (in-eks-plō'siv), a. [< *in-*3 + explosive.] Not liable to explode; not of an explosive nature or character; free from explosions.

Going forth to enjoy themselves in the mild, inexplosive fashion which seems to satisfy Italian nature.
Howells, Venetian Life, xvii.

The inexplosive materials of which dynamite is compounded. The American, VIII. 38.

inexposable† (in-eks-pō'za-bl), a. [< *in-*3 + expose + -able.] Secure or free from exposure.

Those whom nature or art, strength or sleight, have made inexposable to easy ruin may pass unmolested.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 83.

inexpressible (in-eks-pres'i-bl), a. and n. [< *in-*3 + expressible.] I. a. Not expressible; incapable of being expressed; that cannot be uttered or represented in words; unspeakable; unutterable: as, inexpressible grief or joy.

Distance inexpressible
By numbers that have name.
Milton, P. L., viii. 113.

She bore an inexpressible cheerfulness and dignity in her aspect. Addison, Religions in Waxwork.

=Syn. Unspeakable, indescribable, ineffable.

II. n. pl. Trousers; "unmentionables." [A humorous euphemism.]

Such "mixed spirits" . . . as could condescend to don at the same time an Elizabethan doublet and Bond-street inexpressibles. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 39.

inexpressibly (in-eks-pres'i-bli), adv. In an inexpressible manner or degree; unspeakably; unutterably: as, an inexpressibly dreary day.

It [the hair] is . . . fastened with a bodkin, in a taste which we thought inexpressibly elegant. Cook, Second Voyage, II. xii.

inexpressive (in-eks-pres'iv), a. [= F. inexpressif = Pg. inexpressivo; as in-[3] + expressive.] 1. Not expressive; wanting expression; not distinctly significant or representative: as, an inexpressive gesture or portrait.

The inexpressive semblance of himself. Akenside.

2. Not to be expressed; inexpressible; ineffable. [Rare.]

The inexpressive strain
Diffuses its enchantment.
Akenside, Pleasures of the Imagination, i. 124.

Harpings high of inexpressive praise.
W. Mason, Elfrida, Chorus, Ode.

inexpressiveness (in-eks-pres'iv-nes), n. The state or quality of being inexpressive.

inexpugnable (in-eks-pug'- or in-eks-pū'na-bl), a. [= F. inexpugnable = Sp. inexpugnable = Pg. inexpugnavel = It. inespugnabile, < L. inexpugnabilis, that cannot be taken by assault, < in- priv. + expugnabilis, that can be taken by assault: see expugnable.] Not expugnable; that cannot be overcome by force, nor taken by assault; unconquerable; impregnable.

Its lofty embattled walls, its bold, projecting, rounded towers, that pierce the sky, strike the imagination, and promise inexpugnable strength. Burke, A Regicide Peace, iv.

This had been not only acknowledged by his Highness himself, but with vehement and inexpugnable reasons and authorities defended. R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., ii.

inexpugnably (in-eks-pug'- or in-eks-pū'na-bli), adv. In an inexpugnable manner; impregnably: as, "inexpugnably lodged," Dr. H. More.

inexsuperable† (in-ek-sū'pe-ra-bl), a. [Formerly also inexuperable; < L. inexsuperabilis, insurmountable, < in- priv. + exsuperabilis, surmountable: see exsuperable.] Not to be passed over or surmounted; impassable; insurmountable. Coles, 1717.

inextended (in-eks-ten'ded), a. [< in-[3] + extended.] Unextended; without extension.

They suppose it [the soul] to be inextended, or to have no parts or quantity. Watts, Essay towards Proof of a Separate State, § 1.

inextensibility (in-eks-ten-si-bil'i-ti), n. [< inextensible: see -bility.] The quality of being inextensible.

Its quality of inextensibility [that of timber] is greatly diminished in value to the constructor on account of the comparatively slight resistance it offers to compressing power. Encyc. Brit., IV. 448.

inextensible (in-eks-ten'si-bl), a. [= F. inextensible = Pg. inextensivel; as in-[3] + extensible.] That cannot be stretched; not extensible: applied in geometry to a surface which can be bent in any way, but only so that each element remains unchanged in magnitude and shape.

A physical line is flexible and inextensible, and cannot be cut. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 127.

The famous theorem that, in whatever way a flexible and inextensible surface may be deformed, the sum of the principal curvatures at each point will always be the same. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIII. 698.

inextension (in-eks-ten'shon), n. [< in-[3] + extension.] Lack of extension; unextended state.

in extenso (in eks-ten'sō). [ML. (NL.): L. in, in; ML. extenso, abl. of extensum, a full statement, an original from which an abridgment is made, neut. of L. extensus, pp. of extendere, stretch out: see in[1], in[2], extend.] At full length; in full; without abridgment: as, to print a paper in extenso.

inexterminable (in-eks-tėr'mi-na-bl), a. [= F. inexterminable, < LL. inexterminabilis, < in- priv. + exterminabilis, exterminable: see exterminable.] Not exterminable; incapable of being exterminated.

inextinct (in-eks-tingkt'), a. [< in-[3] + extinct.] Not extinct or quenched.

inextinguible† (in-eks-ting'gwi-bl), a. [= F. inextinguible = Sp. inextinguible = Pg. inextinguivel = It. inestinguibile; as in-[3] + extinguible,* < L. extinguere, extinguish (see extinguish), + -ible.] Inextinguishable.

The chaffe and strawe he shall burne up with inextinguible fyre. Sir T. More, Works, p. 825.

Being once afire, it [bitumen] is inextinguible, unlesse it be by throwing dust upon it. Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 444.

inextinguishable (in-eks-ting'gwish-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + extinguishable.] Not extinguishable; incapable of being extinguished; unquenchable.

So under fiery cope together rush'd
Both battels main, with ruinous assault
And inextinguishable rage. Milton, P. L., vi. 217.

The just Creator condescends to write,
In beams of inextinguishable light,
His names of wisdom, goodness, pow'r, and love,
On all that blooms below, or shines above.
Cowper, Hope, l. 134.

inextinguishably (in-eks-ting'gwish-a-bli), adv. In an inextinguishable manner; so as not to be extinguished.

inextirpable† (in-eks-tėr'pa-bl), a. [= F. inextirpable = Pg. inextirpavel = It. inestirpabile, < L. inexstirpabilis, that cannot be rooted out, < in- priv. + exstirpabilis,* that can be rooted out, < exstirpare, root out: see extirp, extirpate.] Not extirpable; incapable of being extirpated. E. Phillips, 1706.

in extremis (in eks-trē'mis). [L.: in, in; extremis, abl. pl. of extremus, extreme: see in[1], in[2], extreme.] In extremity. Used specifically—(a) Of a person at the point of death, implying a mortal wound or illness under which the sufferer, if conscious, is aware that his end is near. (b) Of a person or thing in extreme danger.

inextricable (in-eks'tri-ka-bl), a. [= F. inextricable = Sp. inextricable = Pg. inextricavel = It. inestricabile, inestrigabile, < L. inextricabilis, that cannot be disengaged or disentangled, < in- priv. + extricabilis,* that can be disengaged: see extricable.] Not extricable; that cannot be freed from intricacy or perplexity; not permitting extrication.

To deceive him
Is no deceit, but justice, that would break
Such an inextricable tie as ours was.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 2.

She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze. Blackmore.

Man
To man, were grappled in the embrace of war, Inextricable but by death or victory. Shelley, Hellas.

inextricableness (in-eks'tri-ka-bl-nes), n. The state of being inextricable.

There is no perplexity in thee, my God, no inextricableness in thee. Donne, Devotions (1625), p. 122.

inextricably (in-eks'tri-ka-bli), adv. In an inextricable manner; beyond extrication or disentanglement.

Her adamantine grapple from their decks
Fate threw, and ruin on the hostile fleet Inextricably fasten'd. Glover, Leonidas, vii.

The æsthetic and religious elements were inextricably interwoven. J. Caird.

inextricate† (in-eks'tri-kāt), a. [< LL. inextricatus, unextricated, undeveloped, < L. in- priv. + extricatus, pp. of extricare, extricate: see extricate.] Permitting no extrication or escape; inextricable.

But the equall fate
Of God withstood his stealth; inextricate
Imprisoning bands, and sturdy churlish swaines,
That were the heardsmen, who withheld with chains
The stealth attempter. Chapman, Odyssey, xi.

inexuperable†, a. Same as inexsuperable. Cockeram.

ineye† (in-ī'), v. t. [Late ME. eneye; < in-[1], en-[1], + eye[1]. Cf. inoculate.] To inoculate or bud; propagate, as a tree or plant, by the insertion of a bud.

Let sage experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and in-eyeing. J. Philips, Cider, i.

inf. An abbreviation (a) of the Latin infra, below; (b) of infinitive; (c) of infantry.

in facie curiæ (in fā'shi-ē kū'ri-ē). [L.: in, in; facie, abl. of facies, face; curiæ, gen. of curia, court: see in[1], in[2], face[1], facies, curia.] Before the court.

in facie ecclesiæ (in fā'shi-ē e-klē'zi-ē). [L.: in, in; facie, abl. of facies, face; ecclesiæ, gen. of ecclesia, church: see in[1], in[2], face[1], facies, ecclesia.] Before the church; with priestly sanction; with ecclesiastical publicity: said of marriage solemnized by the church, as distinguished from a clandestine or a purely secular contract.

infair, n. See infare.

infall† (in'fâl), n. [< in[1] + fall[1].] An incursion; an inroad. [Rare.]

Lincolnshire, infested with infalls of Camdeners, has its own Malignancies too. Carlyle, Cromwell, Letters, May, 1643.

infallibilism (in-fal'i-bi-lizm), n. [< infallible (ML. infallibilis) + -ism.] The principle of papal infallibility; belief in or adherence to the dogma of infallibility.

infallibilist (in-fal'i-bi-list), n. [< infallible (ML. infallibilis) + -ist.] One who maintains the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope.

Plantier, Archbishop of Nismes, . . . was a zealous infallibilist. Harper's Weekly, June 19, 1875.

infallibility (in-fal-i-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. infaillibilité = Sp. infalibilidad = Pg. infallibilidade = It. infallibilità, < NL. infallibilita(t-)s, < ML. infallibilis, infallible: see infallible.] 1. The quality of being infallible, or incapable of error or mistake; entire exemption from liability to error. In theology the doctrine of the infallibility of the church is the doctrine that the church as a whole cannot err in its spiritual faith and its religious teaching, and that consequently the religious teaching of the church is infallibly true. In Roman Catholic theology the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope is the doctrine that when the Pope speaks ex cathedra (that is, when he speaks officially and on matters of faith and morals) he is divinely guarded from all error. The theory of the Pope's official infallibility was long maintained by ultramontane theologians as the basis of pontifical supremacy; but it was first promulgated as a binding dogma by the Vatican Council in 1870, in the restricted form above given. See Old Catholics, under catholic.

Infallibility is the highest perfection of the knowing faculty, and consequently the firmest degree of assent. Tillotson.

The highest infallibility in the teachers doth not prevent the possibility or the danger of mistaking in the hearers. Stillingfleet, Works, IV. ii.

Infallibility . . . is just that which certitude is not; it is a faculty or gift, and relates not to some one truth in particular, but to all possible propositions in a given subject-matter. J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 214.

2. Incapability of failure; absolute certainty of success or effect: as, the infallibility of a remedy.

The prestige of the gun with a savage is in his notion of its infallibility. Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., I. 216.

infallible (in-fal'i-bl), a. [= F. infaillible = Sp. infalible = Pg. infallivel = It. infallibile, < ML. infallibilis, not fallible, < in- priv. + fallibilis, fallible: see fallible.] 1. Not fallible in knowledge, judgment, or opinion; exempt from fallacy or liability to error; unerring.

It is humane frailty to err, and no man is infallible here on earth. Milton, True Religion.

For not two or three of that order, . . . but almost the whole body of them, are of opinion that their infallible master has a right over kings, not only in the spirituals but temporals. Dryden, Religio Laici, Pref.

A man is infallible whose words are always true, . . . but a man who is certain in some one definite case is not on that account infallible. J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 215.

2. Unfailing in character or effect; exempt from uncertainty or liability to failure; absolutely trustworthy.

To whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs. Acts i. 3.

There is scarcely a disorder incident to humanity against which our advertising doctors are not possessed with a most infallible antidote. Goldsmith, Quack Doctors.

His face, that infallible index of the mind. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 150.

He . . . mended china with an infallible cement. R. T. Cooke, Somebody's Neighbors, p. 64.

infallibleness (in-fal'i-bl-nes), n. Infallibility; exemption from liability to failure or error.

I have not at all said enough of the infallibleness of fine technical work as a proof of every other good power. Ruskin, Lectures on Art.

infallibly (in-fal'i-bli), adv. In an infallible manner; without failure or mistake; certainly; surely.

If this disorder continues, learning and philosophy is infallibly torn to pieces. Bacon, Physical Fables, iii., Expl.

The lessening of the sun's heat would infallibly diminish the quantity of aqueous vapour, and thus cut off the glaciers at their source. Tyndall, Forms of Water, p. 21.

infamation† (in-fā-mā'shon), n. [< F. infamation = Sp. infamación = Pg. infamação = It. infamazione, < LL. infamatio(n-), calumny, defamation (not found in sense of 'reproach, rebuke'), < infamare, disgrace, defame, also reproach, rebuke, blame: see infame, v.] Reproach; blame; censure.

For vpon thys lesson he bryngeth in, as you see, his charitable infamacion of the cleargies crueltie. Sir T. More, Works, p. 915.

infame† (in-fām'), a. [< F. infâme = Pr. Sp. Pg. It. infame, < L. infamis, without (good) fame, of ill fame, < in- priv. + fama, fame: see fame. Cf. infamous.] Infamous.

I believe it is the first time that a scandalous infame state libel was honoured with a direct encomium in a solemn History that titles itself compleat. Roger North, Examen, p. 142.

infame† (in-fām'), v. t. [< F. infamer = Pr. infamar, enfamar = Sp. Pg. infamar = It. infamare, < L. infamare, bring into ill repute, defame, < infamis, of ill fame: see infame, a., infamous.] To reproach; censure; defame.

Yet bicause he was cruell by nature, he was infamed by writers. Holinshed, Chron., I. 8.

Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband. Bacon, Empire (ed. 1887).

Hitherto obscured, infamed,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end Created. Milton, P. L., ix. 797.

infamed (in-fāmd'), p. a. Defamed or disgraced: specifically applied in heraldry to a lion or other beast shown without a tail.

infamize (in'fā-mīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. infamized, ppr. infamizing. [< infame, a., + -ize.] To make infamous; defame. [Rare.]

With scornfull laughter (grace-less) thus began
To infamize the poor old drunken man.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Ark.

Is some knot of riotous slanderers leagued
To infamize the name of the king's brother?
Coleridge, Zapolya, i. 1.

infamonize† (in-fam'ō-nīz), v. t. A perverse extension of infamize. [Ludicrous.]

Dost thou infamonize me among potentates? thou shalt die. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2.

infamor†, n. [< infame, v., + -or.] One who brings infamy or disgrace.

Nor Rome shall not repute theim as hir naturall children, but as cruell enemies; and not for augmentours of the commonwelth, but infamours and robbers of clemency. Golden Book, xi.

infamous (in'fā-mus, formerly also in-fā'mus), a. [< OF. infameux, < ML. infamosus, equiv. L. infamis, of ill fame, ill spoken of: see infame, a., famous.] 1. Of ill fame; famous or noted for badness of any kind; notoriously evil; of vile character or quality; odious; detestable: applied to persons or things.

Is it not pity, I should lose my life
By such a bloody and infamous stroake?
Chapman, Byron's Tragedy, v. 1.

We had a very infamous wretched lodging.
Evelyn, Diary, March 23, 1646.

As the Christians are worse here than in any other parts, so also the Turks indulge those vices here to the highest degree for which they are generally infamous; with many of them, drinking wine takes the place of opium; but they are secret in this practice.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. 125.

The islanders, however, were not alone guilty of this infamous trade in men. Howells, Venetian Life, xvi.

After all, perhaps, the next best thing to being famous or infamous is to be utterly forgotten, for this also is to achieve a kind of definite result by living.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 347.

2. Involving or attributing infamy; branded, or that brands, with infamy: as, an infamous crime; infamous punishment.

Infamous punishments are mismanaged in this country, with respect both to the crimes and the criminals.
Paley, Moral Philos., vi. 9.

Infamous crime or offense, in law: (a) In the common-law rule of evidence disqualifying convicts to testify as witnesses or serve as jurors, an offense a conviction of which would at common law disqualify the person as a witness or juror, because creating a strong presumption against truthfulness; in general, an offense punishable in a state prison. (b) In the constitutional provision that no one can be held to answer for an infamous offense without presentment or indictment by grand jury, a crime punishable capitally or by imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary, with or without hard labor. In this sense restricted by some authorities to those offenses which involve falsehood and are calculated to affect injuriously the public administration of justice. =Syn. 1. Wicked, Heinous, etc. (see atrocious); disgraceful, shameful, grossly dishonorable, nefarious, execrable, ignominious.

infamously (in'fā-mus-li), adv. In an infamous manner or degree; odiously; scandalously; disgracefully.

Now was the time to unlock the sealed fountain of royal bounty which had been infamously monopolized and huckstered. Burke, Present Discontents.

infamousness (in'fā-mus-nes), n. The condition, quality, or character of being infamous; infamy. Bailey, 1727.

infamy (in'fā-mi), n. [= F. infamie, OF. infame = Pr. Sp. Pg. It. infamia, < L. infamia, ill fame, < infamis, of ill fame: see infame, a., infamous.] 1. Evil fame; public reproach or disgrace; scandalous repute.

Fie, what dishonour seek ye! what black infamy!
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 6.

Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand with most indelible characters of infamy the name and memory to posterity. Eikon Basilike.

2. Infamous character; disgracefulness; scandalousness; extreme baseness or vileness: as, the infamy of an action.—3. In law, the public disgrace or loss of character incurred by conviction of an infamous offense. See infamous. =Syn. 1. Obloquy, Opprobrium, etc. (see ignominy), dishonor.—2. Wickedness, atrocity, villainy, shamefulness. See atrocious.

★infancy (in'fan-si), n. [= F. enfance = Sp. Pg. infancia = It. infanzia, < L. infantia, inability to speak, infancy, < infan(t-)s, unable to speak, an infant: see infant.] 1†. Inability to speak distinctly; want of utterance; verbal hesitation.

So darkly do the Saxon Annals deliver their meaning with more than wonted infancy. Milton, Hist. Eng., v.

2. The state of being an infant; the earliest period of life, in formal classification reckoned as extending to the seventh year, but commonly or popularly as including only about two years, or the time of teething, after which childhood begins.

Great God, which hast this World's Birth made me see, Vnfold his Cradle, shew his Infancy.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., Eden.

The Babe yet lies in smiling infancy.
Milton, Nativity, l. 151.

Heaven lies about us in our infancy.
Wordsworth, Immortality, st. 5.

3. In common law, the period of a person's life from birth to the age of majority or legal capacity, at the end of the twenty-first year; nonage; minority.—4. Figuratively, that period in the history, existence, or development of a thing which corresponds to the earliest years of childhood; the first age, beginning, or early period: as, the infancy of the world; the infancy of an institution or an art.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed. Arbuthnot, Weights and Measures.

infandous† (in-fan'dus), a. [< L. infandus, unspeakable, < in- priv. + fandus, gerundive of fari, speak: see fate.] Unspeakable; unspeakably odious.

This infandous custom of swearing, I observe, reigns in England lately more than anywhere else.
Howell, Letters (10th ed.), I. v. 11.

infangtheft† (in'fang-thef), n. [ME. (ML.), repr. AS. infangenetheóf, < infangen, pp. of infon, onfōn, seize (< in, on, on, + fōn, pp. fongen, seize: see fang), + theóf, thief. Cf. outfangthef.] In old Eng. law, the privilege of the lord of a manor to sit in judgment upon thieves taken on his manor.

They shall haue Infangthefe, and that they shall be wreckefree, lastagefree, and louecopfree.
Charter granted by Edw. I. to Barons of the Cinque Portes, [quoted in Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 117.

In 20 Edward I. (1292), the prior of Kertmel was called, on a Quo Warranto, to show his right to have sheriff's turn, assize of bread and beer, wreck of sea, waif, infangenthef, to hold pleas of withernam, in Kertmel in Furneys, and to be exempt for himself and men from fines and amerciaments, and from suit and service to county and wapentake. Quoted in Baines's Hist. Lancashire, II. 678.

★infant (in'fant), n. and a. [= F. enfant, OF. enfant (> ult. ME. faunt) = Pr. enfan, effan, efan = Sp. Pg. It. infante, < L. infan(t-)s, a child that cannot yet speak, an infant, prop. adj., not speaking, < in- priv. + fan(t-)s, ppr. of fari, speak: see fable.] I. n. 1. A child during the earliest period of its life; a young child. See infancy.

And the stretis of the citee schulen be fillid with infauntis and maydens pleynge in the stretis of it.
Wyclif, Pistil on the II^d Wednesday of Advent, Zech. viii.

From fields of death when late he shall retire,
No infant on his knees shall call him sire.
Pope, Iliad, v. 498.

2. In law, a person who is not of full age; specifically (in Great Britain, the United States, etc.), one who has not attained the age of twenty-one years. Technically, by an application of the old rule that the law does not regard fractions of a day, it has been settled that a person becomes of age at the beginning of the last day of the twenty-first year. See age, n., 3.

3†. A noble youth. See child, n., 8.

The Infant [Arthur] hearkned wisely to her tale.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. viii. 25.

The noble infant [Rinaldo] stood a space Confused, speechless.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, xvi. 34.

Infant-class, infant-school, a class of or school for infants or young children, usually under seven years of age.

II. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, characterized by, or characteristic of infancy; hence, tender; infantile; incipient: as, infant beauty; infant fortunes.—2. Of or pertaining to the legal state of infancy; minor.

A very important part of the law of infancy . . . is that which determines the obligation of the parents in respect to infant children. Amer. Cyc., IX. 267.

3. Figuratively, not yet fully grown; still in an early stage of development or growth: as, infant colonies; an infant bud.

Within the infant rind of this weak flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 3.

Our humble petition to your honors . . . is, that you will be pleased to continue your favorable aspect upon these poor infant plantations.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 363.

Shall I shriek if a Hungary fail?
Or an infant civilisation be ruled with rod or with knout?
Tennyson, Maud, iv.

infant† (in'fant), v. t. [< F. enfanter = Pr. enfantar, effantar, efantar = It. infantare, bring forth, < LL. infantare, nourish as an infant, < L. infan(t-)s, an infant: see infant, n.] To bring forth as an infant; hence, to give origin or rise to.

But newly he was infanted,
And yet already he was sought to die.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Victory in Heaven.

If we imagine that all the godly Ministers of England are not able to new mould a better and more pious Liturgy then this which was conceav'd and infanted by an idolatrous Mother, how basely were that to esteeme of Gods Spirit! Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

Have not I invention afore him? learning to better that invention above him? and infanted with pleasant travel?
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

infanta (in-fan'tä), n. [Sp. Pg., fem. of infante: see infante.] A Spanish or Portuguese princess of the royal blood. See infante.

infante (in-fan'te), n. [Sp. Pg., an infant, child; specifically, as in def.: see infant, and cf. child, n., 8.] A son of a Spanish or Portuguese sovereign; in specific use as a title, a younger prince of the royal blood. The oldest son or heir apparent in Spain is called Prince of Asturias, and the heir apparent of Portugal was called Prince of Brazil until that country became independent.

infanthood (in'fant-hud), n. [< infant + -hood.] The state of being an infant; infancy.

infanticidal (in-fan'ti-sī-dal), a. [< infanticide + -al.] Relating to infanticide.

infanticide[1] (in-fan'ti-sīd), n. [= F. infanticide = Sp. Pg. It. infanticida, < LL. infanticida, one who kills an infant, < infan(t-)s, an infant, + -cida, < cædere, kill.] One who kills an infant.

Christians accounted those to be infanticides . . . who did but only expose their own infants.
Christophalgia (1680), p. 52.

infanticide[2] (in-fan'ti-sīd), n. [= F. infanticide = Sp. Pg. It. infanticidio, < LL. infanticidium, the killing of an infant, < L. infan(t-)s, an infant, + -cidium, < cædere, kill.] The killing of an infant; specifically, the destruction of a child, whether newly born, in the course of parturition, or still in utero; child-murder. In Christian and Hebrew communities infanticide has always been regarded as not less criminal than any other kind of murder; but in most others, in both ancient and modern times, it has been practised and regarded as even excusable, and in some enjoined and legally performed, as in cases of congenital weakness or deformity among some of the communities of ancient Greece.

Infanticide, as is well known, was . . . admitted among the Greeks, being sanctioned, and in some cases enjoined, upon what we should now call "the greatest happiness principle," by the ideal legislations of Plato and Aristotle, and by the actual legislations of Lycurgus and Solon.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 27.

Though among the Tasmanians the paternal instinct is described as having been strong, yet there was infanticide, and a new-born infant was buried along with its deceased mother. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 37.

★infantile (in'fan-til or -tīl), a. [= Sp. Pg. infantil = It. infantile, < L. infantilis, of or belonging to infants, < infan(t-)s, an infant: see infant.] 1. Of or belonging to infants or little children; pertaining to or characteristic of infancy or an infant.

The flie lies all the winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity till the following spring. Derham, Physico-Theology, viii. 6.

2. Of the character of an infant; infant-like.

The children at any age, however incapable of choice in other respects, however immature, or even infantile, are yet considered sufficiently capable to disinherit their parents. Burke, Popery Laws.

Hectic infantile fever, infantile remittent fever. See fever[1].—Infantile paralysis. See paralysis. =Syn. Infantine, etc. See childlike.

infantine (in'fan-tin or -tīn), a. [< infant + -ine.] Same as infantile.

The sole comfort of his declining years, almost in infantine imbecility. Burke, Marriage Act.

infantly† (in'fant-li), a. [< infant + -ly[1].] Infant-like; infantile; childish.

He utters such single matter in so infantly a voice.
Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, iii. 1.

★infantry (in'fan-tri), n. [< F. infanterie, < Sp. infantería = Pg. infanteria = It. infanteria, fanteria, infantry; < Sp. Pg. infante = It. infante, fante, a young person, a foot-soldier (orig. appar. a page to a knight: see infant, n., 3), < L. infan(t-)s, an infant: see infant.] 1. Soldiery serving on foot, as distinguished from cavalry; that part of a military establishment using small-arms, and equipped for marching and fighting on foot, constituting the oldest of the "arms" into which armies are conventionally divided: as, a company, regiment, or brigade of infantry. Abbreviated inf.

Claverhouse, . . . leading them [his cavalry] in squadrons through the intervals and round the flanks of the royal infantry, formed them in line on the moor.
Scott, Old Mortality, xix.

As soon as mounted infantry begins to attempt manœuvres on horseback, it necessarily becomes a very inferior cavalry. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 359.

2. [As if directly < infant, n., 1, + -ry.] Infants in general; an assemblage of children. [Humorous.]

There's a schoolmaster
Hangs all his school with his sharp sentences,
And o'er the execution place hath painted
Time whipt, as terror to the infantry.
B. Jonson, Masques, Time Vindicated.

infantryman (in'fan-tri-man), n.; pl. infantrymen (-men). A foot-soldier.

To re-enforce his own small body of cavalry with picked infantrymen. Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., xv. 53.

infarce† (in-färs'), v. t. Same as enforce.

By fury changed into a horrible figure, his face infarced with rancour. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, fol. 99 b.

My facts [deeds] infarst my life with many a flaw.
Mir. for Mags., p. 145.

Betweene which . . . they are rather infarced . . . than otherwise laid and reared orderly.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxxv. 13.

infarct (in-färkt'), n. [< L. infarctus*, prop. infartus or infarsus, pp. of infarcire, stuffed: see enfarce.] In pathol., that which stuffs; the substance of an infarction.

A hemorrhagic infarct is a firm, red, usually wedge-shaped patch, which is found in certain organs as the effect of arterial embolism. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 434.

infarcted (in-färk'ted), a. [< LL. infarctus*, pp. (see infarct), + -ed[2].] Characterized by infarction; stuffed; obstructed.

Sclerosis of the cortex in infantile syphilis . . . may possibly be sometimes primary, although generally it is the result of inflammation in infarcted areas.
The Lancet, No. 3411, p. 64.

infarction (in-färk'shon), n. [< infarct + -ion.] The act of stuffing or filling; the condition of being stuffed; the substance with which something is stuffed or filled. Formerly applied in pathology to a variety of morbid local conditions; now usually restricted to certain conditions caused by a local fault in the circulation.

An hypochondriack consumption is occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the spleen. Harvey.

The congestion and infarction following embolism are produced by an afflux of arterial blood into the territory from collateral channels. Quain, Med. Dict.

Just as a capsule forms around any foreign body, as around a bullet or an old infarction.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, III. 413.

Embolic infarction, the morbid condition in the area of distribution of an end-artery after it is obstructed as by an embolus. This may be red by reflux engorgement of its vessels and hemorrhage into the tissues (hemorrhagic infarction), or this engorgement may be wanting and the color of the necrosed tissue may be light (white infarction). The term hemorrhagic infarction is sometimes applied to simple hemorrhage into the tissues.

infare (in-fär'), v. i.; pret. and pp. infared, ppr. infaring. [< ME. infaren, < AS. infaran (= OFries. infara = D. invaren = MLG. invaren = G. einfahren), < in, in, + faran, fare, go: see fare[1].] To go in; enter. [Local, Eng.]

infare (in'fär), n. [< ME. infare, < AS. infaru, a going in, invasion, infær, entrance, < infaran, go in: see infare, v.] 1. An entertainment given to friends upon newly entering a house; a housewarming. Jamieson.

And quhen the houssis biggit wer,
He gert purway him rycht weill thar;
For he thoucht to mak an infar,
And to mak gud cher till his men.
Barbour, The Bruce, xvi. 340 (MS.).

2. A wedding reception; the housewarming entertainment given by a newly married couple. [Prov. Eng., Scotch, and U. S.]

Infare (groom's wedding dinner).
Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVII. 46.

There could be no wedding in a Hoosier village thirty or forty years ago without an infare on the following day. In those days the faring into the house of the bridegroom's parents was observed with great rejoicing.
E. Eggleston, Roxy, xxix.

Also infair.

infashionable† (in-fash'on-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + fashionable.] Unfashionable.

infatigable† (in-fat'i-ga-bl), a. [= F. infatigable = Sp. infatigable = Pg. infatigavel = It. infaticabile, infatigabile, < L. infatigabilis, that cannot be wearied, < in- priv. + (LL.) fatigabilis, that may be wearied: see fatigable.] Indefatigable.

Th' infatigable hand that never ceas'd.
Daniel, Civil Wars, vi.

infatuate (in-fat'ū-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infatuated, ppr. infatuating. [< L. infatuatus, pp. of infatuare (> It. infatuare = Sp. Pg. infatuar = F. infatuer), make a fool of, < in, in, + fatuus, foolish: see fatuous.] 1†. To make foolish; reduce to foolishness, or show the foolishness of.

God hath infatuated your high subtle wisdom.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 234.

We are furnished with answer enough to infatuate this pretence for lay-elders.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 249.

Almighty God . . . infatuated his [Shaftesbury's] counsels, and made him slip his opportunity.
Dryden, Post. to Hist. of League.

2. To affect with folly; inspire with an extravagant or foolish passion beyond the control of reason; excite to extravagant feeling or action: as, to be infatuated with pride, or with a woman.

Certainly then that people must needs be mad or strangely infatuated that build the chief hope of thir common happiness or safety on a single Person.
Milton, Free Commonwealth.

Such is the bewitching nature of spiritual Pride and Hypocrisie that it infatuates the minds of Men to their ruin. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

Some the style [of a book]
Infatuates, and through labyrinths and wilds
Of error leads them, by a tune entranc'd.
Cowper, Task, vi. 103.

infatuate (in-fat'ū-āt), a. [< L. infatuatus, pp.: see the verb.] Infatuated.

There was never wicked man that was not infatuate.
Bp. Hall, Asa.

infatuated (in-fat'ū-ā-ted), p. a. Manifesting extravagant folly; caused by infatuation: as, an infatuated passion for cards.=Syn. Absurd, Silly, Foolish, etc. (see absurd); deluded, doting. See also list under foolish.

infatuation (in-fat-ū-ā'shon), n. [= F. infatuation = Sp. infatuación = Pg. infatuação, < LL. infatuatio(n-), < L. infatuare, infatuate: see infatuate.] The act of infatuating, or the state of being infatuated; extravagant folly; fatuous devotion or passion: as, infatuation for an unworthy object.

Such is the infatuation of self-love, that, though in the general doctrine of the vanity of the world all men agree, yet almost every one flatters himself that his own case is to be an exception from the common rule.
H. Blair, Works, II. vii.

The infatuations of the sensual and frivolous part of mankind are amazing; but the infatuations of the learned and sophistical are incomparably more so. Is. Taylor.

infaust (in-fâst'), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. infausto, < L. infaustus, unfortunate, unpropitious, < in-, not, + faustus, propitious.] Unlucky; unfortunate; inauspicious. [Rare.]

It was an infaust and sinister augury for Austin Caxton.
Bulwer, The Caxtons, vii. 1.

Taurus, . . . whose infaust aspect may be supposed to preside over the makers of bulls and blunders.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 303.

infausting† (in-fâs'ting), n. [< infaust + -ing[1].] Unluckiness; ill fortune.

Hee did with all bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage as an ill prognosticke.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 196.

infeasibility (in-fē-zi-bil'i-ti), n. [< infeasible: see -bility.] The condition or quality of being infeasible; impracticability.

The infeasibility of the thing they petitioned for to be done with justice gave the denyall to their petition.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., III. v. 42.

infeasible (in-fē'zi-bl), a. [< in-[3] + feasible.] Not feasible; incapable of accomplishment; impracticable.

It was a conviction of the king's incorrigible and infatuated adherence to designs which the rising spirit of the nation rendered utterly infeasible. Hallam.

infeasibleness (in-fē'zi-bl-nes), n. Infeasibility.

Presently then, in conformitie to this order, he began the work; and being disabus'd in point of the infeasableness, pursu'd his task, and perfected it in less time than he had before lost in sleeping.
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, II. vi. § 3.

★ infect (in-fekt'), v. t. [< ME. infecten, enfecten, < OF. infecter, F. infecter = Sp. Pg. infectar = It. infettare, infect, < L. infectus, pp. of inficere, put in, dip in, dye, mix, spoil, infect, < in, in, + facere, do, make: see fact. Cf. affect, confect, etc.] 1. To affect as with something infused or instilled; imbue; impregnate; permeate: used especially of that which is bad or hurtful, but sometimes also of that which is good or indifferent.

He [a dead dragon] Enfecte the firmament with his felle noise [offensive savor].
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 936.

One droppe of poyson infecteth the whole tunne of Wine; one leafe of Colloquintida marreth and spoyleth the whole pot of porredge. Lyly, Euphues (1579), p. 39.

Breathing . . . a holy vow
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight.
Shak., K. John, iv. 3.

Men have used to infect their meditations, opinions, and doctrines with some conceits which they have most admired. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 56.

Our sweating hinds their salads now defile,
Infecting homely herbs with fragrant oil.
Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, vi. 91.

I had been reading Fichte, and Emerson, and Carlyle, and had been infected by the spirit of these great men.
Tyndall, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 334.

Specifically—2. To taint with disease or the seeds of disease, either physical or moral: as, to infect a person with smallpox; literature infected with immorality.

Infected be the air whereon they ride.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 1.

Till I [Sin] in man residing, through the race,
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect.
Milton, P. L., x. 608.

But vice and misery now demand the song,
And turn our view from dwellings simply neat
To this infected row we term our street.
Crabbe, Works, I. 42.

3. In law, to taint or contaminate with illegality, or expose to penalty, seizure, or forfeiture. =Syn. To poison, pollute, defile.

infect† (in-fekt'), a. [< ME. infect, enfecte, < OF. infect, < L. infectus, pp.: see the verb.] 1. Infected; tainted; affected unfavorably.

A grete laboure is to correcte
A molde in this maner that is enfecte.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 11.

Beware of subtle craft and guyle, therewith be not infect.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

And in the imitation of these twain . . . many are infect. Shak., T. and C., i. 3.

2. Contaminated with illegality; having a flaw in the title.

Al was fee symple to him in effecte,
His purchasyng mighte nought ben enfecte [var. suspect].
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 320.

3. Marred; discolored; darkened.

The hornes of the fulle moene waxen pale and infect by the boundes of the derke nyght.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. meter 5.

infectedness (in-fek'ted-nes), n. The fact or state of being infected.

The infectedness of the patient is first made known to the observer by . . . general pyrexia. Quain, Med. Dict.

infecter (in-fek'tèr), n. One who or that which infects.

infectible (in-fek'ti-bl), a. [< infect + -ible.] Capable of being infected.

Such was the purity and perfection of this thy glorious guest [Christ] that it was not possibly infectible, nor any way obnoxious to the danger of others' sin.
Bp. Hall, Contemplations.

★ infection (in-fek'shon), n. [= F. infection = Pr. infectio, infeccio = Sp. infección = Pg. infecção = It. infezione, < LL. infectio(n-), a dyeing (infection), < L. inficere, pp. infectus, dye, mix, infect: see infect.] 1. The act of infecting. (a) Communication of some quality, property, or state, whether good or bad, by contact, diffusive or emanative influence, example, etc.; more especially, the communication of some taint, or noxious or pernicious quality or element, etc.; contamination; taint.

There, while her tears deplor'd the godlike man
Through all her train the soft infection ran;
The pious maids their mingled sorrows shed,
And mourn the living Hector, as the dead.
Pope, Iliad, vi. 645.

(b) The communication of disease or of disease germs, whether by contact with a diseased person or with morbid or noxious matter, contaminated clothing, etc., by inoculation, either direct or through the medium of infected mosquitos or other insects, by inhalation, by ingestion of contaminated food or water, or in other ways. Cf. contagion, 1.

There was a strict order against coming to those pits, and that was only to prevent infection. De Foe.

(c) Contamination by illegality, as in possessing contraband goods, etc.

In 1744, under Louis XV., a regulation freed neutral ships from the infection of the hostile cargo, but the same enactment ordained that neutral goods, the growth or fabric of enemies, should be confiscated.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 174.

2. That which infects, or by which some quality or state is communicated. (a) That which taints, poisons, or corrupts by communication from one to another; contaminating influence: as, the infection of error, or of an evil example.

It was her [Queen Margaret's] chance to light
Amidst the gross infection of those times.
Daniel, Civil Wars, v.

(b) That by which disease is or may be communicated; an infecting agency; morbific emanation or influence; virus.

Thou hast eyes
Like flames of sulphur, which, methinks, do dart Infection on me.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, iii. 3.

If he bring with him his bill of health, and that he is now cleare of infection and of no danger to the other sheep, then with incredible expressions of joy all his brethren receive him. Milton, Church-Government, ii. 3.

Finding that the sickness had been ceased at Christophers three months before they came forth, so as there could be no danger of infection in their persons, they gave them liberty to continue on shore.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 381.

3. In gram., a modification of a vowel-sound by another following, whereby the first takes on the sound of the second: applied to such modification in Celtic speech. Windisch, Irish Gram. (trans.).

infectious (in-fek'shus), a. [= F. infectieux; as infecti(on) + -ous.] 1. Communicable by infection; easily diffused or spread from person to person or from place to place, as a disease, a moral influence, or a mental condition: specifically applied to diseases which are capable of being communicated from one to another, or which pervade certain places, attacking persons there, independently of any contact with those already sick. Infectious diseases include contagious and miasmatic diseases.

In a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign.
Shak., R. and J., v. 2.

Grief as well as joy is infectious. Kames.

Infectious horrour ran from face to face,
And pale despair.
Armstrong, Art of Preserving Health.

His gayety was so irresistible and so infectious that it carried everything before it.
Lady Holland, in Sydney Smith, iv.

2. Capable of communicating infection; that infects, taints, or corrupts; contaminating: as, infectious clothing; infectious air; an infectious vice.

Which haue made all the worlde druncken and mad with her poyson and infectious drincke.
J. Udall, On Rev. xviii.

Thy flatteries are infectious, and I'll flee thee
As I would do a leper.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 1.

It [the court] is necessary for the polishing of manners, . . . but it is infectious even to the best morals to live always in it. Dryden, Ded. of Virgil's Georgics.

Every sewage contamination which chemistry can trace ought, prima facie, to be held to include the possibility of infectious properties.
E. Frankland, Exper. in Chem., p. 611.

3. In law, capable of contaminating with illegality; exposing to seizure or forfeiture.

Contraband articles are said to be of an infectious nature. Kent.

=Syn. 1. Catching, communicable.—2. Contaminating, poisoning, defiling.

infectiously (in-fek'shus-li), adv. In an infectious manner; by infection.

The will dotes that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.
Shak., T. and C., ii. 2.

infectiousness (in-fek'shus-nes), n. The quality of being infectious: as, the infectiousness of a disease, of an evil example, or of mirth.

Sometimes the plague ceases, or at least very notably abates of its infectiousness and malignity.
Boyle, Works, V. 65.

infective (in-fek'tiv), a. [< ME. infectif, < OF. infectif = Sp. infectivo = It. infettivo, < L. infectivus, serving to dye (in neut. pl. as noun, dyestuffs), < infectus, pp. of inficere, dye, infect: see infect.] 1†. Of a nature to infect or affect injuriously; injurious.

Whenne it is uppe and hath fertilitee,
Turne it efte in, it doungeth best the vynes,
All other dounge is infectif of wynes.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 171.

2. Infectious; tending to communicate or spread, or capable of communicating, infection.

Yt is ordered that all such persons as have any notorious infective decease uppon him shall not be sente to the said house of correction to remayne there.
Harl. MS., quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 118.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power.
Sir P. Sidney.

All infective material . . . should be destroyed.
Science, IV. 441.

The morbid products are absorbed, and originate tuberculosis by an infective process. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 697.

infectiveness (in-fek'tiv-nes), n. Infective quality or power.

The conversion of ordinarily harmless microphytes into agents of deadly infectiveness. Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 715.

The essential feature of malignancy was due not to infectiveness, but to the indefinitely sustained activity of certain lowly organised cells. The Lancet, No. 3414, p. 222.

infectivity (in-fek-tiv'i-ti), n. [< infective + -ity.] Tendency or capacity to infect; infectiousness.

It is from the London Congress that another important advance dates its confirmation, namely the possibility of attenuating the different viruses, varying their infectivity, and preserving them by means of suitable cultures.
N. Y. Med. Jour., XL. 306.

infecund (in-fē-kund' or in-fek'und), a. [< ME. infecunde = F. infécond = Sp. Pg. infecundo = It. infecondo, < L. infecundus, unfruitful, < in- priv. + fecundus, fruitful: see fecund.] Not fecund; not bearing; unfruitful; barren.

Fesanntes up to bringe is thus to doo:
Take noon but of oon yere; for, infecunde
Are olde.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 25.

infecundity (in-fē-kun'di-ti), n. [= F. infécondité = Sp. infecundidad = Pg. infecundidade = It. infecondità, < L. infecundita(t-)s, unfruitfulness, < infecundus, unfruitful: see infecund.] The state of being infecund; absence of fecundity; unfruitfulness; barrenness.

Such a state of original promiscuity as that which McLennan and Morgan postulate tends nowadays to a pathological condition very unfavourable to fecundity; and infecundity, amid perpetually belligerent savages, implies weakness and ultimate destruction.
Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 205.

infecundous† (in-fē-kun'dus), a. [< L. infecundus, unfruitful: see infecund.] Unfruitful; infecund.

That the Aristotelian physiology cannot boast itself the proper author of any one invention, is prægnant evidence of its infecundous deficiency.
Glanville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, xix.

infeeble† (in-fē'bl), v. t. An obsolete form of enfeeble.

infeftment (in-feft'ment), n. [< infeft, pp. of infeff*, infeoff, + -ment.] In Scots law, the old process of giving symbolical possession of heritable property, the legal evidence of which is an instrument of sasine.

The Sacrament [the Lord's Supper] is one of the seals of the covenant of grace which God makes with believers in Christ; & by it He gives them seisine and infeftment of all the benefits of the covenant, and of the glorious inheritance purchased for them by Christ.
Rev. J. Willison, Practical Works.

Base infeftment, a disposition of lands by a vassal, to be held of himself.—Infeftment in security, a temporary infeftment to secure payment of some debt.—Infeftment of relief, a similar security to relieve a cautioner.

infelicific (in-fē-li-sif'ik), a. [< L. infelix (-ic-), unhappy (see infelicity), + -ficus, < facere, make.] Productive of unhappiness. [Rare.]

The breach of any moral rule is pro tanto infelicific, from its injurious effects on moral habits generally.
H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 423.

infelicitous (in-fē-lis'i-tus), a. [< in-[3] + felicitous.] 1. Not felicitous, happy, or fortunate; unhappy: as, an infelicitous marriage.—2. Unskilful; inapt; inappropriate; ill-timed: as, an infelicitous expression.

infelicity (in-fē-lis'i-ti), n.; pl. infelicities (-tiz). [= F. infélicité = Sp. infelicidad = Pg. infelicidade = It. infelicità, < L. infelicita(t-)s, misfortune, unhappiness, ill luck, < infelix, unfruitful, unfortunate, unhappy, < in- priv. + felix, happy: see felicity.] 1. Lack of felicity or good fortune; unhappiness; misfortune; misery.

To suppresse and hide a mans mirth, and not to haue therein a partaker, or at least wise a witnes, is no little griefe and infelicity.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 36.

One of the first comforts which one neighbour administers to another is a relation of the like infelicity, combined with circumstances of greater bitterness.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 52.

2. Unfavorableness; inappropriateness; inaptness: as, the infelicity of the occasion.

With characteristic infelicity he blundered into the room. Bret Harte, Shore and Sedge, p. 171.

3. An inapt, unskilful, or imperfect mode of expression, or the expression itself: as, infelicities of style.

Errors and infelicities are . . . thoroughly wrought into our minds, as parts of our habitual mode of expression.
Whitney, Lang. and Study of Lang., p. 16.

infelonious (in-fē-lō'ni-us), a. [< in-[3] + felonious.] Not felonious; not legally punishable.

The thought of that infelonious murder [of a canary-bird] had always made her wince.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, iii.

infelt (in'felt), a. [< in[1] + felt.] Felt within or deeply; heartfelt.

The gentle whispers of murmuring love, the half-smothered accents of in-felt passion.
Life of Quin (reprint 1887), p. 37.

infeodation†, n. Same as infeudation.

infeoff†, v. t. An obsolete form of enfeoff.

infeoffment†, infeofment†, n. Obsolete forms of enfeoffment.

infer (in-fėr'), v.; pret. and pp. inferred, ppr. inferring. [= F. inférer = Sp. Pg. inferir = It. inferire, < L. inferre, bring in or upon, bring against, infer, < in, in, on, + ferre = E. bear[1]. Cf. illation.] I. trans. 1†. To bring in, on, or about; lead forward or advance; adduce.

One day inferres that foile
Whereof so many yeares of yore were free.
Arthur, A Tragedy, F 4, b. (Nares.)

Without doing, inferring, or inflicting, or suffering to be done, inferred, or inflicted, to them or any of them, in body or goods, any disturbance or impeachment.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 212.

What need I infer more of their prodigal glisterings and their spangled damnations, when these are arguments sufficient to show the wealth of sin?
Middleton, Black Book.

When the King preferreth any to the dignitie of a Mandarine, or to a higher office, their custome is to put vp a libell of supplication, inferring their insufficiencie, with many modest refusals. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 440.

2. To form as an opinion or belief in consequence of something else observed or believed; derive as a fact or consequence, by reasoning of any kind; accept from evidence or premises; conclude.

The wit no sooner conceiueth that there is a God, but the will inferreth that he ought to be worshipped.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 31.

Judging from the past, we may safely infer that not one living species will transmit its unaltered likeness to a distant futurity. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 436.

From mere difference we can infer nothing.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 415.

3. To bear presumption or proof of; imply.

To stay with follies, or where faults may be,
Infers a crime, although the party free.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

Creation inferring providence (for what father forsaketh the child that he hath begotten), and providence presupposing creation. Raleigh, Hist. World, Pref., p. 44.

What he dared not do inferred some peril, I suppose.
R. Choate, Addresses, p. 292.

II. intrans. To conclude; reach a conclusion by reasoning.

I do not, brother,
Infer as if I thought my sister's state Secure. Milton, Comus, l. 408.

To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true.
Locke, Human Understanding, IV. xvii. 4.

inferable (in-fėr'a-bl), a. [< infer + -able. Cf. inferrible.] Capable of being inferred or deduced; that may be concluded from evidence or premises. Sometimes inferrible.

I have seen much of human prejudice, suffered much from human persecution, yet I see no reason hence inferable which should alter my wishes for their renovation.
Shelley, in Dowden, I. 218.

If excess of pressure arrests nerve-action, and if the normal amount of pressure allows the normal amount of nerve-action; then it is inferable that nerve-disturbances will pass with undue facility if the pressure is deficient.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 26.

infere†, adv. See in fere, under feer[1].

inference (in'fėr-ens), n. [= F. inférence = Sp. Pg. inferencia, < ML. inferentia, inference, < L. inferre, infer: see infer.] 1. The formation of a belief or opinion, not as directly observed, but as constrained by observations made of other matters or by beliefs already adopted; the system of propositions or judgments connected together by such an act in a syllogism—namely, the premises, or the judgment or judgments which act as causes, and the conclusion, or the judgment which results as an effect; also, the belief so produced. The act of inference consists psychologically in constructing in the imagination a sort of diagram or skeleton image of the essentials of the state of things represented in the premises, in which, by mental manipulation and contemplation, relations that had not been noticed in constructing it are discovered. In this respect inference is analogous to experiment, where, in place of a diagram, a simplified state of things is used, and where the manipulation is real instead of mental. Unconscious inference is the determination of a cognition by previous cognitions without consciousness or voluntary control. The lowest kind of conscious inference is where a proposition is recognized as inferred, but without distinct apprehension of the premises from which it has been inferred. The next lowest is the simple consequence, where a belief is recognized as caused by another belief, according to some rule or psychical force, but where the nature of this rule or leading principle is not recognized, and it is in truth some observed fact embodied in a habit of inference. Such, for example, is the celebrated inference of Descartes, Cogito, ergo sum ('I think, therefore I exist'). Higher forms of inference are the direct syllogism (see syllogism); apagogic inference, or the reductio ad absurdum, which involves the principle of contradiction; dilemmatic inference, which involves the principle of excluded middle; simple inferences turning upon relations; inferences of transposed quantity (see below); and the Fermatian inference (see Fermatian). Scientific inferences are either inductive or hypothetic. See induction, 5, and analogy, 3.

2. Reasoning from effect to cause; reasoning from signs; conjecture from premises or criteria; hypothesis.

An excellent discourse on . . . the inexpressible happiness and satisfaction of a holy life, with pertinent inferences to prepare us for death and a future state.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 21, 1703.

He has made not only illogical inferences, but false statements. Macaulay, Mitford's Hist. Greece.

Take, by contrast, the word inference, which I have been using: it may stand for the act of inferring, as I have used it; or for the connecting principle, or inferentia, between premises and conclusions; or for the conclusion itself.
J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 254.

Alternative inference. See alternative.—Ampliative inference. See explicative inference, below.—Analogical inference, the inference that a certain thing, which is known to possess a certain number of characters belonging to a limited number of objects or to one only, also possesses another character common to those objects. Such would be the inference that Mars is inhabited, owing to its general resemblance to the earth. Mill calls this inference from particulars to particulars, and makes it the basis of induction.—Apagogical inference, an inference reposing on the principle of contradiction, that A and not-A cannot be predicated of the same subject; the inference that a proposition is false because it leads to a false conclusion. Such is the example concerning mercury, under deductive inference, below.—Comparative inference. See comparative.—Complete inference, an inference whose leading principle involves no matter of fact over and above what is implied in the very conception of reasoning or inference: opposed to incomplete inference, or enthymeme. Thus, if a little girl says to herself, "It is naughty to do what mamma tells me not to do; but mamma tells me not to squint; therefore, it is naughty to squint," this is a complete inference; while if the first premise does not clearly and explicitly appear in her thought, although really operative in leading her to the conclusion, it ceases to be properly a premise, and the inference is incomplete.—Correct inference, an inference which conforms to the rules of logic, whether the premises are true or not.—Deductive inference, inference from a general principle, or the application of a precept or maxim to a particular case recognized as coming under it: a phrase loosely applied to all explicative inference. Example: Mercury is a metal, and mercury is liquid; hence, not all metals are solid. The general rule here is that all metals are solid, which is concluded to be false, because the necessary consequence that mercury would be solid is false.—Direct deductive inference, the simple inference from an antecedent to a consequent, in virtue of a belief in their connection as such. Example: All men die; Enoch and Elijah were men; therefore they must have died.—Disjunctive inference. Same as alternative inference.—Explicative inference, an inference which consists in the observation of new relations between the parts of a mental diagram (see above) constructed without addition to the facts contained in the premises. It infers no more than is strictly involved in the facts contained in the premises, which it thus unfolds or explicates. This is the opposite of ampliative inference, in which, in endeavoring to frame a representation, not merely of the facts contained in the premises, but also of the way in which they have come to present themselves, we are led to add to the facts directly observed. Thus, if I see the full moon partly risen above the horizon, it is absolutely out of my power not to imagine the entire disk as completed, and then partially hidden; and it will be an addition to and correction of this idea if I then stop to reflect that since the moon rose last the hidden part may have been torn away: the inference that the disk of the moon is complete is an irresistible ampliative inference. All the demonstrations of mathematics proceed by explicative inferences.—Fermatian inference. See Fermatian.—Hypothetic inference, the inference that a hypothesis, or supposition, is true because its consequences, so far as tried, have been found to be true; in a wider sense, the inference that a hypothesis resembles the truth as much as its consequences have been found to resemble the truth. Thus, Schliemann supposes the story of Troy to be historically true in some measure, on account of the agreement of Homer's narrative with the findings in his excavations, all of which would be natural results of the truth of the hypothesis.—Immediate inference. See immediate.—Incomplete inference. See complete inference, above.—Indirect inference, any inference reposing on the principle that the consequence of a consequence is itself a consequence. The same inference will be regarded as direct or indirect, according to the degree of importance attached to the part this principle plays in it. Example: All men die; but if Enoch and Elijah died, the Bible errs; hence, if Enoch and Elijah were men, the Bible errs.—Inductive inference. See induction, 5.—Inference of transposed quantity, any inference which reposes on the fact that a certain lot of things is finite in number, so that the inference would lose its cogency were this not the case. The following is an example: Every Hottentot kills a Hottentot; but nobody is killed by more than one person; consequently, every Hottentot is killed by a Hottentot. If the foolish first premise is supposed to hold good of the finite number of Hottentots who are living at any one time, the inference is conclusive. But if the infinite succession of generations is taken into account, then each Hottentot might kill a Hottentot of the succeeding generation, say one of his sons, and yet many might escape being killed.—Leading principle of inference, the formula of the mental habit governing an inference.—Necessary inference, an explicative inference in which it is logically impossible for the premises to be true without the truth of the conclusion.—Probable inference, a kind of inference embracing all ampliative and some explicative inference, in which the premises are recognized as possibly true without the truth of the conclusion, but in which it is felt that the reasoner is following a rule which may be trusted to lead him to the truth in the main and in the long run.—Ricardian inference, the mode of inference employed by Ricardo to establish his theory of rent. See Ricardian.—Statistical inference, an inference in regard to the magnitude of a quantity, where it is concluded that a certain value is the most probable, and that other possible values gradually fall off in probability as they depart from the most probable value. All the inferences of those sciences which are dominated by mathematics are of this character.=Syn. Analysis, Anticipation, Argument, Argumentation, Assay, Assent, Assumption, Conclusion, Conjecture, Conviction, Corollary, Criterion, Decision, Deduction, Demonstration, Dilemma, Discovery, Elench, Enthymeme, Examination, Experiment, Experimentation, Finding, Forecast, Generalization, Guess, Hypothesis, Illation, Induction, Inquiry, Investigation, Judgment, Lemma, Moral, Persuasion, Porism, Prediction, Prevision, Presumption, Probation, Prognostication, Proof, Ratiocination, Reasoning, Sifting, Surmise, Test, Theorem, Verdict. Of these words, illation is a strict synonym for inference in the first and principal meaning of the latter word, but is pedantic and little used. Reasoning has the same meaning, but is not used as a relative noun with of; thus, we speak of the inference of the conclusion from the premises, and of reasoning from the premises to the conclusion. A reasoning may consist of a series of acts of inference. Ratiocination is abstract and severe reasoning, involving only necessary inferences. Conclusion differs from inference mainly in being applied preferentially to the result of the act called inference; but conclusion would further usually imply a stronger degree of persuasion than inference. Conviction and persuasion denote the belief attained, or its attainment, from a psychological point of view, while inference, illation, reasoning, ratiocination, and conclusion direct attention to the logic of the procedure. Conviction is perhaps a stronger word than persuasion, and more confined to serious and moral inferences. Decision, judgment, finding, and verdict are inferences from which practical results will immediately follow. Discovery is the inferential or other attainment of a new truth. Analysis, assay, examination, experiment, experimentation, inquiry, investigation, and research are processes analogous to inference, and also involving acts of inference. Anticipation, assent, assumption, and presumption express the attainment of belief either without inference or considered independently of any inference. Presumption is used for a probable inference or for the ground of it. Argument, argumentation, demonstration, probation, and proof set forth the logic of inferences already drawn. Criterion and test are rules of inference. Elench is that relation between the premises which compels assent to the conclusion; it is translated "evidence" in Heb. xi. 1, where an intellectual perception is meant. Corollary, deduction, dilemma, enthymeme, forecast, generalization, induction, lemma, moral, porism, prediction, prevision, prognostication, sifting, and theorem are special kinds of inference. (See these words.) Conjecture, guess, hypothesis, and surmise are synonyms of inference in its secondary sense. Guess and surmise are weaker words.

inferential (in-fẹ-ren′shal), a. [< ML. inferentia, inference, + -al.] Of or pertaining to an inference; deduced or deducible by inference.

It is not an inferential, but a palpable fact, that England is crowded. H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 15.

The faith of Christ is not identical with the body of inferential theology which is the growth of later ages.
Contemporary Rev., L. 356.

inferentially (in-fẹ-ren′shal-i), adv. In an inferential manner; by way of inference.

It is shown inferentially that movements correspond to the action of the central nerve-mechanism.
F. Warner, Physical Expression, p. 50.

inferiæ (in-fē′ri-ē), n. pl. [L., < inferi, the inhabitants of the infernal regions, the dead: see inferior, infernal.] Among the ancient Romans, sacrifices offered to the souls of deceased members of their families.

inferior (in-fē′ri-ọr), a. and n. [= F. inférieur = Sp. Pg. inferior = It. inferiore, < L. inferior, lower, inferior, compar. of inferus, low, nether, underground, orig. a compar. Cf. Skt. adhara, lower, related with adhas, down, beneath.] I. a. 1. Lower in space; situated below or in a lower position; subjacent: as, the inferior maxillary bone; the inferior limb of the moon.

The right membrana tympani was entirely destroyed, with the exception of a narrow rim, the remains of the inferior and posterior portions of the membrane.
G. S. Hall, German Culture, p. 245.

The mouth, instead of opening in the inferior part of the head, as in common sharks, was at the extremity of the head, the jaws having the same bend.
Nature, XXX. 365.

2. Lower in grade or in any scale of reckoning; less important or valuable; of smaller consideration; subordinate: as, goods of inferior quality; a man of inferior rank.

Our nation is in nothing inferiour to the French or Italian for copie of language, subtiltie of deuice, good method and proportion in any forme of poeme.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 48.

The body, or, as some love to call it, our inferiour nature, is wiser in its own plain way, and attends its own business more directly than the mind, with all its boasted subtilty.
Burke, Vind. of Nat. Society.

Why be at the charge of providing logic of the best quality, when a very inferior article will be equally acceptable? Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

3. In bot., growing below some other organ. An inferior calyx is one that is inserted below the ovary, or free; an inferior ovary is one with adnate or superior calyx. Compare superior.

4. In astron.: (a) Situated or occurring between the earth and the sun: as, the inferior planets; an inferior conjunction of Mercury and Venus. (b) Lying below the horizon; as, the inferior part of a meridian.—5. In music, lower in pitch.—6. In entom., pertaining to the lower or ventral surface of an insect; below; nearer the ventral surface than other parts.—7. In printing, occupying the lower part of the shank of the type; standing below other type in the same line: as, the inferior figures used in chemical notation.—Inferior antennæ or eyes, antennæ or eyes situated on the lower surface of the head.—Inferior court. (a) A court not of general jurisdiction. (b) A court the proceedings or determinations of which are subject to the supervision or review of another court, of general jurisdiction, of the same state. Few phrases in law are more indeterminate than this. It is a well-settled maxim that jurisdiction is presumed in favor of the proceedings of superior, but not those of inferior, courts. The rule originated in England, where the courts of Chancery, Queen's (or King's) Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, all having an ancient common-law existence, and general, though not identical, jurisdiction, were known as the superior courts; and the distinction between them and inferior courts of special or limited jurisdiction was clear. In American law the term is variously used, without an exact meaning, except as afforded by the context.—Inferior margin of a wing, the margin lying beneath when the wing is folded against the body; the anterior margin: used principally in describing the tegmina of grasshoppers, etc.—Inferior surface of a wing, the surface lying beneath when the wing is spread.—Inferior valve, in zoöl., the valve of an adherent bivalve by which it is united to other substances.—Inferior wings, in entom., the posterior or hind wings: so called because they fold under the anterior pair.

II. n. A person who ranks below another; one who holds a lower place; a subordinate: as, an inferior in qualifications or experience; the inferiors in a great household.

It is fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.
Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 1.

A person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdaining him. South, Sermons.

The man who chooses to be with his inferiors is degraded. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 248.

inferiority (in-fē-ri-or′i-ti), n. [= F. infériorité = Sp. inferioridad = Pg. inferioridade = It. inferiorità, < ML. inferiorita(t-)s, < L. inferior, lower: see inferior.] 1. The state of being inferior, especially in degree or quality; a lower state or condition.

The genuine effect of a nearer or more attentive view of infinite excellency is a deep sense of our own great inferiority to it. Boyle, Works, V. 154.

I declare I always feel my inferiority almost too much when I am with people who can really talk—talk like that. C. F. Woolson, Jupiter Lights, xv.

2. In logic, the character of a sign, name, proposition, or inference which is applicable to only a part of the cases to which another is applicable.

inferiorly (in-fē′ri-ọr-li), adv. In an inferior manner, position, or relation; on or in the direction of the lower part or the inferior surface: as, an insect marked inferiorly with black, or having a band dilated inferiorly.

infernal (in-fėr′nal), a. and n. [< ME. infernal, < OF. enfernal, infernal, F. infernal = Pr. infernal, yfernal = Sp. Pg. infernal = It. infernale, < LL. infernalis, belonging to the lower regions, < L. infernus, lower, underground, belonging to the lower regions, < inferus, low: see inferior.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to the lower regions, or regions of the dead, the Tartarus of the ancients.

The flocking shadows pale Troop to the infernal jail;
Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave.
Milton, Nativity, l. 233.

As deep beneath th' infernal centre hurl'd
As from that centre to th' ethereal world.
Pope, Iliad, viii. 19.

O thou, whose worth thy wond'rous works proclaim;
The flames, thy piety; the world, thy fame;
Though great be thy request, yet shalt thou see
Th' Elysian fields, th' infernal monarchy.
Garth, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xiv.

2. Pertaining to or resembling hell; inhabiting hell; suitable or appropriate to hell or its inhabitants; hellish; fiendish; diabolical: as, infernal cruelty. [Often used colloquially as an adjective of emphasis, equivalent to outrageous: as, an infernal shame; an infernal nuisance.]

A goat's rough body bore a lion's head;
Her pitchy nostrils flaky flames expire;
Her gaping throat emits infernal fire.
Pope, Iliad, vi. 224.

The instruments or abettors in such infernal dealings.
Addison, Spectator, No. 243.

To look at Him who form'd us and redeem'd, . . .
To recollect that, in a form like ours,
He bruis'd beneath his feet th' infernal powers.
Cowper, Charity, l. 584.

Well, it is the most unaccountable affair! 'sdeath! there is certainly some infernal mystery in it I can't comprehend! Sheridan, The Duenna, iii. 1.

Infernal fig, Argemone Mexicana, the prickly poppy or Mexican poppy: probably so called on account of the very prickly pod. Also called devil's-fig.—Infernal machine, a machine or apparatus, usually disguised as some familiar and harmless object, contrived to produce explosion, for the purpose of assassination or other mischief.—Infernal stone (lapis infernalis), a name formerly given to lunar caustic, as also to caustic potash.=Syn. 1. Tartarean, Stygian.—2. Devilish, satanic, fiendlike, nefarious.

II. n. 1. An inhabitant of hell or of the lower regions.

That instrument ne'er heard,
Struck by the skilful bard,
It strongly to awake;
But it th' infernals scar'd,
And made Olympus quake.
Drayton, To Himself and the Harp.

2. A person or thing of an infernal character in any sense, or of supposed infernal appearance: specifically applied to a fire-ship, torpedo, infernal machine, or the like.

This [part of the line] the commodore ordered to be instantly cut away, for fear of hauling up another of the infernals, as he termed it.
Men and Manners in America, p. 189.

infernality (in-fėr-nal'i-ti), n. [=Sp. infernalidad = Pg. infernalidade = It. infernalità; as infernal + -ity.] The character or condition of being infernal; hellishness.

The appalling union of the infallibility of Heaven with the infernality of Hell. Lowe, Bismarck, II. 261.

infernally (in-fėr'nal-i), adv. In an infernal or devilish manner; diabolically; outrageously.

All this I perceive is infernally false. Bp. Hacket.

inferno (in-fėr'nō), n. [< It. inferno, hell (the title and subject of one part of Dante's "Divina Commedia"), < L. infernus, of the lower regions, inferna, the lower regions: see infernal.] Hell; the infernal regions.

The lights of the town dotted and flecked a heaving inferno of black sea with their starlike specks, beyond which tumbled the upward avalanches of the breakers.
W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 19.

infero-. [Mod. combining form of L. inferus, low, or inferior, lower.] An element in some recent scientific compounds, meaning 'low' or 'lower,' and implying that something is below, on the lower side, or inferior in position or relation.=Syn. Infero-, Infra-. In zoölogy these prefixes refer to position or relation of parts, not to quantity, quality, or degree. Infero- generally means low or down with reference to the thing itself; infra- means below or under something else; but this distinction is not always observed. Thus, *infero*branchiate means having the gills low down; *infra*branchial would mean being below the gills.

infero-anterior (in″fę-rō-an-tē'ri-ọr), a. [< L. inferus, low, that is below, + anterior, that is in front: see anterior.] Situated below and in front.

inferobranch (in'fę-rō-brangk), n. One of the Inferobranchiata. S. P. Woodward. Also inferobranchian.

Inferobranchia (in″fę-rō-brang'ki-ą), n. pl. [NL., < L. inferus, low, that is below, + branchiæ, gills.] Same as Inferobranchiata, 2. Latreille, 1825.

inferobranchian (in″fę-rō-brang'ki-ąn), a. and n. I. a. Same as inferobranchiate.

II. n. Same as inferobranch.

Inferobranchiata (in″fę-rō-brang-ki-ā'tą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of inferobranchiatus: see inferobranchiate.] 1. In the old systems of De Blainville and Cuvier, an order of nudibranchiate gastropods having lamellar gills under an expanded mantle, as the families Phyllidiidæ and Diphyllidiidæ. In De Blainville's classification (1825) they were the fourth order of his second section of Paracephalophora monoica, composed of the two genera Phyllidia and Linguella.

2. In later systems, a suborder of nudibranchiates extended to include forms without branchiæ, but otherwise resembling the typical forms. Thus extended, the order embraces the families Phyllidiidæ, Hypobranchæidæ, Pleurophyllidiidæ, and Dermatobranchiidæ.

Also called Inferobranchia, Hypobranchia, Hypobranchiata, Dipleurobranchia.

inferobranchiate (in″fę-rō-brang'ki-āt), a. and n. [< NL. inferobranchiatus, < L. inferus, low, that is below, + branchiæ, gills.] I. a. Having the gills inferior in position; specifically, of or pertaining to the Inferobranchiata. Also inferobranchian.

II. n. A member of the Inferobranchiata.

inferolateral (in″fę-rō-lat'ę-ral), a. [< L. inferus, low, that is below, + latus (later-), side: see lateral.] Situated below and to one side; inferior and lateral. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 322.

inferomedian (in″fę-rō-mē'di-ąn), a. [< L. inferus, low, that is below, + medianus, that is in the middle, < medius, middle: see median.] Situated in the middle of the under side.

inferoposterior (in″fę-rō-pos-tē'ri-ọr), a. [< L. inferus, low, that is below, + posterior, compar. of posterus, coming after: see posterior.] Situated below and behind.

inferrible (in-fėr'i-bl), a. [< infer(r) + -ible.] See inferable.

From this experiment made in two receivers, it seems to be inferrible that air produced from cherries doth promote the alteration both of colour and also of firmness in apricocks. Boyle, Works, IV. 534.

infertile (in-fėr'til), a. [= F. infertile = Pg. infertil = It. infertile, < LL. infertilis, not fertile, < L. in- priv. + fertilis, fertile: see fertile.] Not fertile; not fruitful or productive; barren; sterile: as, an infertile soil; infertile ideas.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Government of the Tongue.

If we say "Man is man," the proposition is infertile, because the identity is simply affirmed.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, I. ii. § 79.

The offspring are usually entirely infertile.
E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 129.

infertility (in-fėr-til'i-ti), n. [= F. infertilité = Pg. infertilidade, < LL. infertilita(t-)s, < infertilis, not fertile: see infertile.] The condition of being infertile; unproductiveness; barrenness: as, the infertility of land.

Commonly the same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague occasioned also the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesom.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 214.

infest† (in-fest'), a. [< L. infestus, disturbed, molested, unsafe, attacking, hostile, troublesome, < in, in, on, + festus*, for fedtus*, < fendere, strike: see fend[1].] Hostile; hurtful; mischievous; harassing; troublesome.

But with fierce fury and with force infest,
Upon him ran. Spenser, F. Q., VI. iv. 5.

For well she knew the wayes to win good will
Of every wight, that were not too infest.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. vi. 41.

Toward others he was so infest and cruell.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus (1609).

infest (in-fest'), v. [< OF. (also F.) infester = Sp. Pg. infestar = It. infestare, < L. infestare, attack, molest, < infestus, hostile: see infest, a.] I. trans. To attack; molest; harass; haunt or prowl around mischievously or hurtfully; attack parasitically.

The part of the desert towards the convent was very much infested with a large yellow hornet, call'd Dembeh, that stings the beasts as well as men.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 158.

The cares that infest the day
Shall fold their tents, like the Arabs,
And as silently steal away.
Longfellow, The Day is Done.

This cow was soon after stolen by a notorious thief named Drac, who infested the neighbourhood.
O'Curry, Anc. Irish, II. xx.

The county of Suffolk was especially agitated, and the famous witch-finder, Matthew Hopkins, pronounced it to be infested with witches. Lecky, Rationalism, I. 125.

=Syn. To annoy, harass, torment, plague, vex, molest, overrun.

II.† intrans. To become confirmed in evil; become habitually vicious.

Their vitious living shamefully increaseth and augmenteth, and by a cursed custome so grown and infested that a great multitude of the religious persons in such small houses do rather choose to rove abroad in apostasie than to conform themselves to the observation of good religion.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., vi. 310.

infestation (in-fes-tā'shọn), n. [= F. infestation = Sp. infestación = Pg. infestação = It. infestazione, < LL. infestatio(n-), a molesting, troubling, < L. infestare, molest: see infest, v.] 1. The act of infesting or harassing; harassment; molestation.

Touching the infestation of pirates, he hath been careful. Bacon, Speech in the Star-Chamber, 1617.

Infranchiz'd with full liberty equal to their conquerors, whom the just revenge of ancient pyracies, cruel captivities, and the causeless infestation of our coast had warrantably call'd over, and the long prescription of many hundred years. Milton, Articles of Peace with the Irish.

2. A harassing inroad; a malignant or mischievous invasion.

The experiences of remorse and horror I was undergoing were diabolic infestations, rather than any legitimate operation of the Divine spirit within me.
H. James, Subs. and Shad., p. 123.

infester (in-fes'tėr), n. One who or that which infests.

infestered† (in-fes'tėrd), a. [< in-[2] + fester[1] + -ed[2].] Rankling; inveterate.

infestive[1]† (in-fes'tiv), a. [< infest + -ive.] Troublesome; annoying.

For I will all their ships inflame, with whose infestive smoke, Fear-shrunk, and hidden near their keels, the conquer'd Greeks shall choke. Chapman, Iliad, viii. 151.

infestive[2] (in-fes'tiv), a. [= Pg. infestivo, < L. infestivus, not festive, not agreeable, < in- priv. + festivus, festive: see festive.] Not festive; cheerless; joyless. Cockeram. [Rare.]

infestivity (in-fes-tiv'i-ti), n. [< infestive + -ity.] Lack of festivity; lack of cheerfulness or mirth. Johnson. [Rare.]

infestuous† (in-fes'tū-us), a. [As infest, a., + -uous.] Mischievous; harmful; noxious. Also infestious.

The natural pravity and clownish malignity of the vulgar sort are, unto princes, as infestuous as serpents.
Bacon.

Caus'd them from out his kingdom to withdraw,
With this infestious skill, some other-where.
Daniel, To Sir Thos. Egerton.

infeudation (in-fū-dā'shọn), n. [Formerly also infeodation; = F. inféodation = Sp. enfeudación = Pg. enfeudação = It. infeudazione, < ML. infeudatio(n-), < infeudare, infeodare, confer in fee, < in, in, + feudum, a feud, fee: see feud[2].] In Eng. law: (a) The act of conferring an estate in fee; the relation of lord and vassal established by the grant and acceptance of an estate in fee.

The relation of the lord to the vassals had originally been settled by express engagement, and a person wishing to engraft himself on the brotherhood by commendation or infeudation came to a distinct understanding as to the conditions on which he was to be admitted.
Maine, Ancient Law, p. 353.

(b) The granting of tithes to laymen.

A decree of the Council of Lateran, held A. D. 1179, only prohibited what was called the infeudation of tithes, or their being granted to mere laymen.
Blackstone, Com., II. iii.

(c) The deed so granting an estate or tithes.

infibulate (in-fib'ū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infibulated, ppr. infibulating. To clasp or confine with or as with a buckle or padlock.

infibulation (in-fib-ū-lā'shọn), n. [= F. infibulation = Pg. infibulação = It. infibulazione, < ML. infibulatio(n-)*, < L. infibulare, put a clasp or buckle on, < in, on, + fibula, a clasp: see fibula.] 1. The act of clasping or confining with or as with a buckle or padlock.—2. The attachment of a ring, clasp, buckle, or the like to the sexual organs in such manner as to prevent copulation. This operation was very generally practised in antiquity upon both young men and young women, but in later times chiefly upon the latter; and it is said to be still in use in some parts of the East.

infidel (in'fi-del), a. and n. [= F. infidèle = Sp. Pg. infiel = It. infedele, faithless, unfaithful, unbelieving, < L. infidelis, unfaithful, faithless (LL. unbelieving, ML. also as noun, an unbeliever), < in- priv. + fidelis, faithful: see fidelity, feal[1].] I. a. 1. Without faith; unbelieving; disbelieving; especially, rejecting the distinctive doctrines of a particular religion, while perhaps an adherent of some other religion.

The barbarous Turk is satisfied with spoil;
And shall I, being possess'd of what I came for,
Prove the more infidel?
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, v. 1.

Specifically—2. Rejecting the Christian religion while accepting no other; not believing in the Bible or any divine revelation: used especially of persons belonging to Christian communities.—3. Due to or manifesting unbelief.

Through profane and infidel contempt
Of holy writ. Cowper, Task, i. 740.

II. n. 1. An unbeliever; a disbeliever; one who denies the distinctive tenets of a particular religion.

And sore we war offeryd to be dryff in to Barbaria, where Dwellyth ower Mortall Enimys, as Turkes, Mamnoluks, Sarrazyns, and other infidelys.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 59.

Now, infidel [Shylock], I have thee on the hip.
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1.

On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore,
Which Jews might kiss, and infidels [Mohammedans] adore. Pope, R. of the L., ii. 7.

Mohammed . . . now began to threaten the infidels with the judgment of God for their contempt of His message and His messenger. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 549.

Specifically—2. A disbeliever in religion or divine revelation in general; especially, one who denies or refuses to believe in the Christian religion while accepting no other; one who rejects the inspiration of the Scriptures, or the divine origin and authority of Christianity as revealed in the Bible.

Have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, Infidels, and Heretics.
Book of Common Prayer, Collect for Good Friday.

3†. In feudal law, one who violated fealty. Rapalje and Lawrence. =Syn. Infidel, Unbeliever, Disbeliever, Deist, Atheist, Agnostic, Skeptic, Free-thinker. The word infidel is generally used in opprobrium. It may mean either a disbeliever in one's own religion as opposed to another (as a Christian in the view of a Mohammedan, or the contrary), or a deist, an atheist, or an agnostic. (See below.) In strict use, however, it is not applicable to one who has never heard of Christianity, nor to one who rejects some particular doctrine of the Christian church, while he accepts Christianity as a divinely revealed religion, nor to one who is in avowed doubt respecting the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, but willing to be taught and persuaded. The first is a heathen, the second a heretic, the third a skeptic. Unbeliever and disbeliever are negative in form, but disbeliever is positive in its implication that one actually refuses to believe; the unbeliever only fails to believe. (See disbelief.) Unbeliever is almost always general, applying to Christianity as a whole; disbeliever is specific, but has a wider range of possible application: as, a disbeliever in the divine right of kings. A deist believes in a God, but denies the fact or possibility of a revelation. An atheist denies the existence of a God. An agnostic denies (a) any possible or (b) any actual knowledge concerning God and a future life. A skeptic either doubts whether any truth or principle can be philosophically established, or, specifically, doubts the truth of all propositions in the field of religion. Free-thinker, though inoffensive by derivation, is opprobriously used, the freedom of thinking being held to be lawlessness or license. None of these words draws the line distinctly between honesty and dishonesty in the treatment of the evidences of Christianity.

The Saxons were Infidels, and brought in with them Diversity of Idols, after whose names they gave Appellations to the several Days of the Week. Baker, Chronicles, p. 2.

I love to consider an infidel, whether distinguished by the title of deist, atheist, or free-thinker, in three different lights: in his solitudes, his afflictions, and his last moments. Addison and Steele, Tatler, No. 111.

By night an atheist half believes a God.
Young, Night Thoughts, v. 172.

He on the thought-benighted skeptic beamed Manifest Godhead.
Coleridge, Religious Musings, l. 31.

infidelity (in-fi-del'i-ti), n.; pl. infidelities (-tiz). [< F. infidélité = Pr. infidelitat = Sp. infidelidad = Pg. infidelidade = It. infedelità, infedeltà, infidelità, unfaithfulness, unbelief, < L. infidelita(t-)s, unfaithfulness, < infidelis, unfaithful, unbelieving: see infidel.] 1. Lack of faith or belief; unbelief; disbelief: with reference to the essential tenets of any religion.

The promyses of God can not be disapointed by mannes infidelite, as S. Paule saith.
Bp. Gardiner, Explication, fol. 78.

That the fume of an Agath will avert a tempest, or the wearing of a Chrysoprase make one out of gold, as some have delivered, we are yet, I confesse, to believe, and in that infidelity are likely to end our days.
Sir T. Browne, Pseud. Epid. (1646), ii. 5.

Specifically—2. Disbelief in revealed religion; rejection of the doctrine of inspiration of the Scriptures or of the divine origin of Christianity; or, yet more broadly, disbelief in all forms of religious faith. Thus, infidelity includes atheism, or disbelief in God; deism, or belief in God accompanied with disbelief in Christianity; and agnosticism, or disbelief in the possibility of extramundane knowledge.

I hear with sorrow . . . that a very anti-christian article has crept in the last number of the Edinburgh Review. . . . You must be thoroughly aware that the rumour of infidelity decides not only the reputation, but the existence of the Review. Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, viii.

3. Breach of trust; unfaithfulness to a charge or an obligation; dishonesty; disloyalty; deceit: as, the infidelity of a friend or a servant.

I have had, in twenty years' experience, enough of the uncertainty of princes, the caprices of fortune, . . . and the infidelity of friends.
Sir W. Temple, Memoirs from the Peace in 1697.

The infidelities of the post-offices, both of England and France, are not unknown to you.
Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 325.

Specifically—4. Unfaithfulness to the marriage-vows; adultery.

Too much indulgence has been shown to the extravagance, dishonesty, and domestic infidelity of men of wit.
Lord John Russell, in Lady Holland's Sydney Smith, vi., [note.

infield† (in-fēld'), v. t. [< in-[1] + field.] To inclose, as a piece of land; make a field of.

infield (in'fēld), a. [< in[1] + field.] Under crop; noting arable land which is still kept under crop: distinguished from outfield. [Scotch.]

in-field (in'fēld), n. [< in[1] + field.] 1. That part of a farm or plantation nearest to the buildings and so more easily manured and cultivated.—2. In base-ball. See field, n., 3.

in fieri (in fī'e-rī). [L.: in, in; fieri, become (here as a noun, becoming), used as pass. of facere, make, do: see fiat.] In process; yet in the making: said of legal proceedings which, though actually pending, have not yet been completed, and therefore may yet be molded as accuracy and justice require.

infile† (in-fīl'), v. t. [< in-[2] + file[3]. Cf. enfile.] To place in a file; arrange in a file or rank. Holland.

infill (in'fil), v. t. [< in[1] + fill[1], v.] To fill in; fill.

The impressions have been produced by the infilled tracks and burrowings of marine animals.
Geol. Mag., N. S., IV. 89.

infilling (in'fil-ing), n. [Verbal n. of infill, v.] That which fills in, or has been made to occupy cavities or vacant places of any kind or dimensions: same as filling.

The skeleton is more or less extensively composed of phosphate of lime, with the chambers occupied, throughout or in part, by phosphatic infilling.
Amer. Geologist, I. 255.

infilm (in-film'), v. t. [< in-[1] + film.] To cover with a film, as in gilding.

infilter (in-fil'tėr), v. t. [= F. infiltrer = Sp. Pg. infiltrar = It. infiltrare; as in-[2] + filter[1].] To filter or sift in.

infiltrate (in-fil'trāt), v.; pret. and pp. infiltrated, ppr. infiltrating. [< in-[2] + filtrate. Cf. infilter.] I. intrans. To pass by filtration; percolate through pores or interstices.

The water infiltrates through the porous rock.
Addison, Travels in Italy.

II. trans. To pass into or through the pores or interstices of; filter into or through.

The quantity [of rain] which infiltrated the chalk district in the neighbourhood of King's Langley to replenish the springs and rivers of that neighbourhood was ascertained and recorded.
T. Bailey Denton, Sanitary Engineering, p. 25.

infiltrate (in-fil'trāt), n. [< infiltrate, v. Cf. filtrate, n.] That which infiltrates; specifically, in pathol., the substance which passes into the tissues to form a morbid accumulation, as the ★fat of fatty infiltration.

infiltration (in-fil-trā'shon), n. [= F. infiltration = Sp. infiltración = Pg. infiltração = It. infiltrazione; as infiltrate + -ion.] 1. The act or process of infiltrating.

The landslips are occasioned by infiltrations of water into ground which retains it in great quantity.
Trans. in J. C. Brown's Reboisement in France, p. 249.

2. In pathol., a morbid condition of any portion of tissue produced by the accumulation in it of substances introduced from without: distinguished from degeneration, where the substance abnormally present is produced from the tissue itself through faulty metabolism.—3. That which infiltrates; a fluid, or matter carried by a fluid, which enters the pores or cavities of a body.

Calcareous infiltrations filling the cavities of other stones. Kirwan.

Albuminous infiltration. Same as cloudy swelling (which see, under cloudy).—Amyloid infiltration. Same as lardaceous disease (which see, under lardaceous).—Fatty infiltration, the deposit in the cells of globules of fat, taken up by the cell from without, and not formed by the degeneration of the proteid substance of the cell.

infinitant (in-fin'i-tant), a. [< ML. infinitan(t-)s, ppr. of infinitare, infinitate: see infinitate.] In logic, applied to a sign of negation which is closely connected with a general term, as the non in non-existent.

infinitary (in-fin'i-tā-ri), a. [< infinite + -ary.] Pertaining to infinite quantity.—Infinitary property of a function, in math., a property belonging to the function when the variable becomes infinite.—Infinitary type of fx, a quantity having a finite ratio to $fx : f'x$ when x becomes infinite.

infinitate (in-fin'i-tāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infinitated, ppr. infinitating. [< ML. infinitare (Abelard), negate, mark as infinite, < L. infinitus, infinite: see infinite.] To render infinite; in logic, to negate by attaching a sign of negation to: said particularly of terms, as objects of the action, and also of propositions.

infinitation (in-fin-i-tā'shon), n. [< infinitate ★+ -ion.] The act or result of infinitating.

infinite (in'fi-nit), a. and n. [< ME. infinite, infynyte = F. infini = Pr. infinit, enfenit = Sp. Pg. It. infinito, < L. infinitus, boundless, unlimited, without end, endless, indefinite, < in- priv. + finitus, bounded, ended: see finite.] I. a. 1. Immeasurably or innumerably great; so great as to be absolutely incapable of being measured or counted. Space is the most familiar example of an object ordinarily conceived to be infinite. Anaximander and other early Greek philosophers appear to have called this ἄπειρον, unbounded, and the Latin infinitum is a translation of this Greek word. The two ideas, that of the immeasurable and that of the unbounded, were confused by the early Greeks, and also by some modern philosophers, as Hobbes and Hegel. Ordinary geometry regards space as both unbounded and immeasurable; but the hypothesis of modern geometers concerning the properties of space, called elliptic non-Euclidean geometry, makes space measurable (in that it supposes that a point proceeding along a straight line, after having traversed a vast but finite distance, would return from behind to its original starting-point), and this supposition, which is entirely self-consistent, leaves space unbounded just as the surface of a spherical body, such as a pea, or the circumference of a circle is unbounded. But it is no more the usage of ordinary language than of mathematics to call the surface of a pea infinite. On the other hand, geometers conceive that if from an unbounded and immeasurable (infinite) right line a small part be cut off, what remains, having two terminals, is bounded but immeasurable; and in ordinary as in mathematical language such a line would be called infinite. Thus, the usual and mathematical meaning of the word infinite departs from the suggestion of its etymology. Mathematicians speak of the ratios of infinite quantities; such an expression supposes that the arrangement of the units or elements remains essentially unchanged in the measurement. Thus, a line two inches long, comprising an infinity of points, may be said to have twice as many points as one which measures only one inch and also comprises an infinity of points; but this only means that the former multitude appears twice as great as the latter when the points are not completely disintegrated. So orders of infinity are spoken of. (See infinitesimal.) These expressions have led metaphysicians to suppose that the infinite quantity of the mathematicians is not the maximum, and consequently is not truly infinite. But the points of a line, however short, can be brought into a one-to-one correspondence with those of all space—that is, for every point in all space there is a distinct and separate point in the line, and that although the space considered have an infinite multitude of dimensions; so that the multitude of points in a line is the greatest possible quantity. Mathematicians distinguish, however, two kinds of infinity. The multitude of finite whole numbers may be said to be infinite, since the counting of them cannot be completed. But the multitude of points upon a line, which corresponds to the multitude of numbers expressible by an infinite series of decimals, is infinitely greater, in that it cannot be brought into a one-to-one correspondence with the former. If ∞ represents the former multitude, 10^{∞} will represent the latter, so that the former is analogous to a logarithmic infinite, or infinite of order zero. The former is said to be improperly or discretely infinite, the latter properly or continuously infinite.

In the extension of space-construction to the infinitely great, we must distinguish between unboundedness and infinite extent; the former belongs to the extent-relations, the latter to the measure-relations.
Riemann, Hypotheses at the Bases of Geometry (tr. by [W. K. Clifford), III. § 2.

2. All-embracing; lacking nothing; the greatest possible; perfect; absolute: applied only to Divinity.

But shining with such vast, such various Light,
As speaks the Hand that form'd them [stars] Infinite.
Prior, Solomon, i.

That which is conceived as absolute and infinite must be conceived as containing within itself the sum not only of all actual, but of all possible modes of being.
Mansell, Limits of Religious Thought.

3. Boundless; unbounded; endless; without limit; interminable. In this sense the surface of a pea is infinite, while a plane of immeasurable extent whose continuity is interrupted by one small hole is finite. [Rare, except by confusion with def. 1 (which see).]

The environment of any finite portion of space is and must be necessarily other portions of space. But if any limited space has space for its environment, it is not limited by it, but continued by it. Any possible limited or finite space is continued by an environment of space, and the whole of space is infinite. . . . Self-environment is the characteristic of the infinite.
W. T. Harris, Philos. in Outline, § 10.

4. By hyperbole, indefinitely extensive; beyond our powers of measuring or reckoning.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing.
Shak., M. of V., i. 1.

What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2.

Man differs from man; generation from generation; nation from nation. Education, station, sex, age, accidental associations, produce infinite shades of variety.
Macaulay, Mill on Government.

5. [Tr. Gr. ἀόριστος: see aorist.] In logic, modified, as a term, by a sign of negation.—Infinite being, a being in whose mode of existence there is no defect; specifically (the Infinite Being), God; the absolute Deity.—Infinite decimal, a decimal which is interminate, or which may be carried to infinity. Thus, if the diameter of a circle be 1, the circumference is 3.14159265, etc., carried to infinity.—Infinite distress, divisibility, group, hyperbola, etc. See the nouns.—Infinite ellipse. Same as elliptois.—Infinite series, a series the terms of which go on increasing or diminishing without coming to an end. See series.=Syn. Boundless, immeasurable, illimitable, interminable, limitless, unlimited, unbounded.

II. n. Anything which is infinite, in any sense. Specifically—(a) [cap. or l. c.] In philos., the Infinite Being; the absolute Deity.

The nothingness of the finite is due to an implicit consciousness of the Infinite that is rising within the spirit.
J. Caird, in Faiths of the World.

The finite is relative to something else; the infinite is self-related. F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 71.

The being of the Infinite may be a consciousness, but it is not our consciousness, nor is ours related to it as the part to the whole, or in any way necessary to it.
Veitch, Introd. to Descartes's Method, p. cxliii.

(b) In math., a fictitious or supposed quantity, too great to be capable of measurement. See infinitesimal.

It is already a doctrine of Aristotle's that an infinity can never be actu (i. e. actual and given), but only potentiâ. . . . He expounds the antinomies in his short way, and then says, "A mediator is required"; upon which he gives the solution that the infinite, both of the world in space, and in time and in division, is never before the regressus, or progressus, but in it. This truth then lies in the rightly apprehended conception of the infinite. Thus one misunderstands himself if he imagines that he can think the infinite, of whatever kind it may be, as something objectively present and complete, and independent of the regressus.

Schopenhauer, Will, tr. by Haldane and Kempe, ii. 115.

If Zero is the sign of a vanished quantity, the Infinite is the sign of that Continuity of Existence which has been ideally divided into discrete parts in the affixing of limits.

G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, II. vi. § 5.

(ct) A large number; a crowd.

Their gates are walled vp; and there are infinite of Frier-like companions passing to and fro in the Citie.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 428.

Gods defend me,
What multitudes they are, what infinites!

Fletcher, Bonduca, iii. 5.

Arithmetic of infinites, a name given by Dr. Wallis to a method invented by him for the summation of infinite series.

infinitely (in'fi-nit-li), adv. Innumerably; immeasurably; incomparably; in the highest conceivable degree: often used in hyperbole: as, to be infinitely obliged for favors.

I am a soldier, and a bachelor, lady;
And such a wife as you I could love infinitely.

Fletcher, Rule a Wife, i. 6.

We know that a good constitution is infinitely better than the best despot. Macaulay, Milton.

Matter is concluded not to be infinitely divisible.

A. Daniell, Prin. of Phys., p. 194.

infiniteness (in'fi-nit-nes), n. The state of being infinite; infinity; immensity.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Jer. Taylor.

If we consider the quality of the person appearing, that he was no other than the eternal Son of God, how ought we to be wrapt with wonder and astonishment at the infiniteness of the divine condescention!

Abp. Sharp, Works, I. xi.

infinitesimal (in″fi-ni-tes'i-mal), a. and n. [= F. infinitésimal = Sp. Pg. infinitesimal = It. infinitesimale, < NL. infinitesimalis, infinitesimal, < infinitesimus (fem. infinitesima (> It. infinitesima = Pg. infinitesima = F. infinitésime), sc. pars, an infinitesimal), a quasi-ordinal numeral, a term of an infinite convergent series which is preceded by an infinite number of terms, hence infinitely small, < infinitum, a quasi-cardinal, neut. of L. infinitus, infinite: see infinite. For the ordinal termination, cf. centesimal, millesimal, etc.] I. a. Infinitely or indefinitely small; less than any assignable quantity.

The distance between them may be either infinite or infinitesimal, according to the measure used.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol.

Its [homeopathy's] leaders have long ceased to insist upon infinitesimal dosage as an essential principle of treatment. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXII. 537.

Infinitesimal analysis, in math. See analysis, 3 (c).—Infinitesimal transformation. See transformation.

II. n. In math., a fictitious quantity so small that by successive additions to itself no sensible quantity, such as the unit of quantity, could ever be generated. If a is a finite quantity, and i an infinitesimal, we always assume $a + i = a$, a fundamental proposition of the infinitesimal calculus; but whether this is because the infinitesimal is a fictitious quantity strictly zero, or because equality is used in a generalized sense in which this is true, is a question of logic, concerning which mathematicians are not agreed. Most writers use the method of limits (which see, under limit), which avoids this and other difficulties. It is assumed that all the mathematical operations can be performed on these quantities. Every power of an infinitesimal is infinitely smaller than any inferior power of the same infinitesimal. (See infinite, 1.) Any infinitesimal may be assumed as a base or standard, by comparison with which the magnitudes of others are estimated. The base itself is said to be of the first order, its square of the second order, its cube of the third order, etc. Finite quantities are of the zero order of infinitesimals, and infinite quantities are generally of negative orders. The logarithm of any infinitesimal of a finite order is of order zero, although it is infinite. In like manner, in every order of infinitesimals there are quantities infinitely greater and quantities infinitely smaller than the power of the base of that order. The square, cube, etc., of an infinitesimal of the zero order remains of the zero order: yet there is nothing peculiar about these infinitesimals; any one of them might have been taken as the base, and then its square would have been reckoned as of the second order, while the infinitesimal in comparison with which it was of the zero order would now appear as of the infinite order.

Infinites are composed of finites in no other sense than as finites are composed of infinitesimals.

Dr. Clark, Fourth Reply to Leibnitz.

infinitesimally (in″fi-ni-tes'i-mal-i), adv. By infinitesimals; in infinitely small quantities; to an infinitesimal extent or in an infinitesimal degree.

Just as he himself forms an infinitesimally small part of the universe, so his personal knowledge is utterly incommensurate with the sum total of existence.

J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, II. 13.

infinition† (in-fi-nish'ọn), n. [= OF. infinicion, < L. infinitio(n-), boundlessness, infinity, < infinitus, boundless: see infinite.] Infinitation; negation.

For what joy is so great but the conceipt
Of falling to his Infinition
Of blacke Non-essence will confound it streight?

Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, p. 23.

infinitival (in-fin-i-tī'vạl or in-fin'i-ti-vạl), a. [< infinitive + -al.] In gram., of or belonging to the infinitive.

To all verbs, then, from the Anglo-Saxon, to all based on the uncorrupted infinitival stems of Latin verbs of the first conjugation, and to all substantives, whencesoever sprung, we annex -able only.

F. Hall, -Able and Reliable, p. 47.

★

infinitive (in-fin'i-tiv), a. and n. [= F. infinitif = Pr. infinitiu, enfenitiu = Sp. Pg. It. infinitivo = D. infinitivus = G. Dan. Sw. infinitiv, < LL. infinitivus, unlimited, indefinite (modus infinitivus or simply infinitivus, the infinitive mode), < L. infinitus, unlimited: see infinite.] I. a. In gram., unlimited; indefinite: noting a certain verb-form sometimes called the infinitive mode. See II.

II. n. 1. In gram., a certain verb-form expressing the general sense of the verb without restriction in regard to person or number, as English give, German geben, French donner, Latin dare, Greek διδόναι. In the grammar of Latin and of the most familiar modern languages, it is used as the representative form of the whole verb-system. It is by origin simply a verbal noun in an oblique case (oftenest dative); and hence its tendency to use with a stereotyped prefixed preposition, as to in English, zu (= English to) in German, at (= English at) in Scandinavian, de ('of') or à ('to') in French, and so on; but the preposition is no part of the infinitive. In the old grammars, and in many recent ones, it is called a mode; but the term is objectionable, and is going out of use. Abbreviated inf.

2†. An endless quantity or number; an infinity.

Fie, that the spyrit of a single man Should contradict innumerable wills;
Fie, that infinitiues of forces can Nor may effect what one conceit fulfills.

G. Markham, Sir R. Grinuile, p. 69.

Historical infinitive. See historical, 4.

infinitively (in-fin'i-tiv-li), adv. In gram., in the manner of an infinitive.

infinito (in-fi-nē'tō), a. [It., = E. infinite, q. v.] In music, perpetual, as a canon whose end leads back to the beginning.

infinitude (in-fin'i-tūd), n. [= F. infinitude, < ML. as if infinitudo*, < L. infinitus, infinite: see infinite.] 1. The state or quality of being the greatest possible, or inconceivably great: as, the infinitude of power or grace.

And thou the third subsistence of Divine Infinitude, illumining Spirit, the joy and solace of created things.

Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

Such wide and undetermined prospects are as pleasing to the fancy as speculations of eternity or infinitude are to the understanding. Spectator, No. 412.

2. Infinite extension; infinity; innumerable or immeasurable quantity: as, an infinitude of space or of stars.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions.

Addison, Spectator.

The infinitude of the universe, in which our system dwindles to a grain of sand.

Sumner, Speech, Cambridge, Aug. 27, 1846.

infinituple (in-fin'i-tū-pl), a. [< infinite + -uple, as in duple, quadruple, etc.] Multiplied ★an infinite number of times. Wollaston. [Rare.]

infinity (in-fin'i-ti), n. [= F. infinité = Pr. infinitat, enfenitat = Sp. infinidad = Pg. infinidade = It. infinità, < L. infinita(t-)s, boundlessness, endlessness, < infinitus, boundless, endless: see infinite.] 1. The condition of being infinite or the greatest possible; immeasurableness; innumerability; perfection: as, the infinity of God; infinity of duration.

One whose eternity passeth al time, and whose infinity passeth all nombre, that is almightye.

Sir T. More, Works, p. 636.

If we dare not trust God with the circumstance of the event, and stay his leisure, . . . we disrepute the infinity of his wisdom. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 35.

This endless addition or addibility . . . of numbers . . . is that . . . which gives us the clearest and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke, Human Understanding, II. xvi. 8.

2. Unlimited extension; figuratively, exhaustless quantity or number: as, inconceivable infinity; an infinity of details.

Here has been that infinity of strangers!

B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, v. 1.

Adorn'd with an infinity of statues, pictures, stately altars, and innumerable reliques.

Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 19, 1644.

In an infinity of things thus relative, a mind which sees not infinitely can see nothing fully.

Shaftesbury, Moralists, ii. § 4, quoted in Fowler, p. 111.

3. In geom., the part of space at an infinite distance from the part chiefly considered. Owing to the mechanical properties of the straight line, the most important mode of geometrical transformation is that which transforms every straight line into a straight line, its position only being changed. But this transforms the part of space at infinity into a plane, just as in a perspective view of an unbounded plane the infinitely distant parts are compressed into a line. Hence, mathematicians generally speak of the plane at infinity, or the line at infinity in a plane. In analytical geometry the plane at infinity is best considered as two coincident planes, fastened together at an imaginary nodal circle, and constituting a degenerate sphere, called the sphere at infinity. (See absolute, n., 2.) In the theory of functions, the most important mode of transformation of the plane is one which preserves the magnitudes of all angles, and this transforms the infinitely distant parts of the plane into a point; hence, in that branch of mathematics, the point at infinity is spoken of.—Infinity plug, in elect., a plug in a resistance-box which when removed from its seat opens the circuit (makes the resistance infinite).

infirm (in-fėrm'), a. [< ME. infirm, < OF. infirm, enferm, anferm, emfarm, F. infirme = Pr. eferm, enferm = Sp. Pg. enfermo = It. infermo, infirmo, < L. infirmus, not strong or firm, < in- priv. + firmus, strong: see firm.] 1. Not firm, stable, or strong; lacking stability or solidity; faltering; feeble: as, an infirm support; an infirm judgment.

The sonne . . . may . . . nat by the infirme lyht of his beemes brekyn or percen the inward entrailes of the erthe.

Chaucer, Boëthius, v. meter 2.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
Give me the daggers. Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2.

Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves.

Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xv. 307.

He who fixes on false principles treads on infirm ground.

South, Sermons.

Specifically—2. Not sound in health; impaired in health or vitality; enfeebled; weak: as, infirm in body or constitution.

Here I stand, your slave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man.

Shak., Lear, iii. 2.

The unhealthful east,
That breathes the spleen, and searches ev'ry bone
Of the infirm, is wholesome air to thee.

Cowper, Task, iv. 365.

3. Voidable; obnoxious to legal objection that may destroy apparent efficacy.—Syn. 1. Vacillating, wavering, shaky.—2. Enfeebled, debilitated, sickly, decrepit, shackly.

infirm† (in-fėrm'), v. t. [< F. infirmer = Pr. enfermar, enfirmar = Sp. Pg. enfermar, infirmar = It. infirmare, < L. infirmare, make infirm, weaken, ML. also be infirm or sick, < infirmus, infirm: see infirm, a.] 1. To weaken; enfeeble.

If they be strong, you do what you can to infirm their strength. J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 120.

2. To make less firm or certain; render doubtful, questionable, or dubious.

Some contrary spirits will object this as a sufficient reason to infirm all those points. Raleigh, Essays.

This is not infirmed because we read how God doth seem in some things to alter his will, before not determined, but dependant upon man's behaviour.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 130.

Socrates, . . . professing to affirm nothing, but to infirm that which was affirmed by another, hath exactly expressed all the forms of objection, fallacy, and redargution.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 224.

infirmarer† (in-fėr'ma-rėr), n. [< ML. infirmarius (see infirmarian) + E. -er[1].] Same as infirmarian. I. Campbell, St. Giles Lect., 1st ser., p. 78.

infirmarian (in-fėr-mā'ri-an), n. [< ML. infirmarius (as defined) (see infirmary) + -an.] An officer in a monastery who has charge of the quarters for the sick.

Antony de Madrid . . . had to nurse St. Stanislaus in his last illness, as infirmarian of Sant' Andrea.

Life of St. Kotka, p. 83.

The Community [Frères des Écoles Chrétiennes], which during the whole time of the war had sent five hundred infirmarians into the battle fields.

Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 354.

infirmary (in-fėr'ma-ri), n.; pl. infirmaries (-riz). [Formerly enfermerie, by apheresis fermary, fermery, fermory, firmary, etc. (see fermery); < OF. enfermerie (also fermerie), F. infirmerie = Pr. effermeria, efermaria = Sp. enfermería = Pg. enfermaria = It. infermeria, < ML. infirmarium, an infirmary or hospital (cf. infirmarius, m., one in charge of the sick), < L. infirmus, infirm: see infirm, a.] A place for the treatment of the infirm, or persons suffering from disease or injury.

Here, in the farthest Nook of the Meadow, is a little Banquetting House; there I sup sometimes in Summer, and I make Use of it, as an Infirmary, if any of my Family be taken ill with any infectious Disease.

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 200.

More particularly—(a) A general hospital for the inhabitants of a small town, or for the members of an institution, as a convent or school. (b) A bureau or office for gratuitous aid and advice to outdoor patients in general, or for the treatment of special infirmities or deformities, as of the eye, ear, throat, etc.

infirmative† (in-fêr′ma-tiv), a. [= F. infirmatif; as infirm + -ative.] Weakening; tending to make void. Cotgrave.

infirmatory† (in-fêr′ma-tō-ri), n. [Also infirmitory; < ML. infirmatorium, also infirmitorium, an infirmary, < L. infirmus, infirm: see infirm, a.] An infirmary.

The Infirmitory where the sick lay was paved with various colour'd marbles. Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 25, 1645.

infirmity (in-fêr′mi-ti), n.; pl. infirmities (-tiz). [< ME. infirmite, < OF. enfermete, enfermeteit, F. infirmité = Pr. enfermetat, infermetat = Sp. enfermedad = Pg. enfermidade = It. infermità, < L. infirmita(t-)s, infirmity, < infirmus, infirm: see infirm.] 1. The state of being infirm; weakness; especially, an unsound or unhealthy state of the body; a malady: as, the infirmities of age.

A certain man was there which had an infirmity thirty and eight years. John v. 5.

2. A weakness; failing; fault; foible.

We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Rom. xv. 1.

We cannot "be perfect, as our heavenly Father is," but shall have more of human infirmities to be ashamed of than can be excused by the accrescences and condition of our nature. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 89.

Natural infirmity, a natural incapacity of regulating one's actions according to a natural law.=Syn. Indisposition, Malady, etc. (see disease); Imbecility, etc. (see debility).

infirmly (in-fêrm′li), adv. In an infirm manner.

The chosen sceptre is a withered bough,
Infirmly grasped within a palsied hand.
Wordsworth, French Army in Russia.

infirmness (in-fêrm′nes), n. The state of being infirm; infirmity; weakness.

The infirmness and insufficiency of the common peripatetick doctrine (about colour). Boyle, Works, I. 695.

infistulated (in-fis′tū-lā-ted), a. [< ML. infistulatus, pp. of infistulare (> OF. infistuler), produce a fistula in, < L. in, in, on, + fistula, a fistula: see fistula.] Converted into a fistula; full of fistulas. Bailey.

infit (in′fit), v. t. [< in[1] + fit[1]. Cf. outfit.] To furnish with supplies for use on shore. [Local.]

The merchant is as anxious to "infit" as he was to "outfit" him, but the man must now bring an order from the agent or owner of the vessel. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 226.

infitter (in′fit-êr), n. One who furnishes men with such supplies and articles of clothing as they may need when their vessel returns from a fishing-cruise. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 226. [Local.]

infix (in-fiks′), v. t. [< OF. infixer, < L. infixus, pp. of infigere, fix in, thrust in, < in, in, + figere, fix: see fix.] 1. To fix or fasten in; insert forcibly; implant firmly: as, to infix a dart; to infix facts in the memory.

The poysnous sting which infamy Infixeth in the name of noble wight.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. vi. 1.

How vain those cares! when Meges in the rear
Full in his nape infix'd the fatal spear.
Pope, Iliad, v. 96.

2. To insert additionally or accessorily. See infix, n.

Of the infixing of a letter between the first and third radical there seems to be no sure proof.
Amer. Jour. Philol., IV. 347.

infix (in′fiks), n. [< infix, v.] Something infixed; in gram., an element having the value of a suffix or a prefix, but inserted in the body of a word, as practised in some languages.

Sometimes it [the derivative element] is intercalated in the body of the word, and is then called an infix; but that method of derivation is rare. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 103.

infixion (in-fik′shon), n. [< L. as if infixio(n-),* < infigere, pp. infixus, infix: see infix.] The act of infixing; insertion. See infix, n.

The infixion of a nasal in the formation of tense-stems.
Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 789.

★ inflame (in-flām′), v.; pret. and pp. inflamed, ppr. inflaming. [Formerly also enflame; < ME. enflammen, enflawmen,* < OF. enflammer, F. enflammer = Pr. enflamar = Sp. inflamar = Pg. inflammar = It. infiammare, < L. inflammare, set on fire, inflame, < in, in, on, + flamma, flame: see flame.] I. trans. 1. To set on fire; kindle; cause to burn with a flame.

Old wood inflam'd doth yield the bravest fire.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

A flash
Of enflamed powder, whose whole light doth lay it
Open to all discovery. B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 1.

The sunlight may then be shut off, and a photo made on the lower half of the plate of the spectrum of any substance inflamed in the electric light.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 17.

2. To raise to an unnatural or morbid heat; make hot or red as if from flame; excite inflammation in: as, wine inflames the blood; the skin is inflamed by an eruption.

For not the bread of man their life sustains,
Nor wine's inflaming juice supplies their veins.
Pope, Iliad, v. 426.

3. To excite to a high degree; stimulate to high or excessive action or emotion; exacerbate; make violent: as, to inflame the passions; to inflame the populace.

But nowe Pryde, Covetyse and Envye han so enflawmed the Hertes of Lordes of the World.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 3.

Such continued ill usage was enough to inflame the meekest spirit. Swift, Conduct of Allies.

The particular skill of this lady has ever been to inflame your wishes, and yet command respect.
Steele, Spectator, No. 113.

The meditations of a single closet, the pamphlet of a single writer, have inflamed or composed nations and armies. R. Choate, Addresses, p. 129.

4. To aggravate in amount; magnify; exaggerate. [Rare.]

I have often seen a good sideboard, or a marble chimneypiece, though not actually put in the bill, inflame the reckoning confoundedly.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, ii.

=Syn. 3. To fire, arouse, nettle, incense, enrage.

II. intrans. To take fire; burst into flame; glow with ardor of action or feeling.

Fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
Milton, P. L., ii. 581.

inflamed (in-flāmd′), p. a. In her., either burning, as a torch (see flamant), or decorated with separate flames along the edge, as a bend, fesse, ★or the like.

Bend inflamed.

inflamer (in-flā′mėr), n. One who or that which inflames.

Interest is . . . a great inflamer, and sets a man on persecution under the colour of zeal.
Addison, Spectator, No. 185.

inflammability (in-flam-a-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inflammabilité = Sp. inflamabilidad = Pg. inflammabilidade = It. infiammabilità; as inflammable + -ity: see -bility.] 1. The state or quality of being inflammable; susceptibility of taking fire: as, the inflammability of alcohol.—2. Liability to sudden excitement; excitability; fieriness.

He has one foible, an excessive inflammability of temper. Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 90.

inflammable (in-flam′a-bl), a. [= F. inflammable = Sp. inflamable = Pg. inflammavel = It. infiammabile, < L. as if inflammabilis,* < inflammare, set on fire: see inflame.] 1. Capable of being set on fire; susceptible of combustion; easily fired.

The term "naphtha" originally included all inflammable fluids produced during the destructive distillation of organic substances. Ure, Dict., III. 386.

2. Easily excited or inflamed; highly excitable.

In this inflammable state of public feeling, an incident occurred which led to a general explosion.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 6.

Mrs. Ducklow's inflammable fancy was so kindled by it that she could find no comfort in prolonging her visit.
J. T. Trowbridge, Coupon Bonds, p. 43.

Inflammable air†, hydrogen: formerly so called on account of its inflammability.—Inflammable cinnabar. Same as idrialite.

inflammableness (in-flam′a-bl-nes), n. The quality of being inflammable; inflammability.

I do not think the easy inflammableness of bodies to be always a sure proof of the actual sensible warmth of the minute parts it consists of. Boyle, Works, III. 336.

inflammably (in-flam′a-bli), adv. In an in-★flammable manner.

inflammation (in-fla-mā′shon), n. [= D. inflammatie = G. Dan. Sw. inflammation (in sense 3), < F. inflammation = Pr. enflamacio, inflammacio = Sp. inflamación = Pg. inflammação = It. infiammagione, infiammazione, < L. inflammatio(n-), a setting on fire, < inflammare, set on fire: see inflame.] 1. The act of inflaming; the act of setting on fire or of taking fire, actually or figuratively.

For prayer kindleth our desire to behold God by speculation; and the mind, delighted with that contemplative sight of God, taketh every where new inflammations to pray. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 34.

Inflammations of air from meteors may have a powerful effect upon men. Sir W. Temple.

The temperature at which inflammation occurs varies widely with different substances.
Roscoe and Schorlemmer, Chemistry, I. 182.

2. A fiery, heated, or inflamed condition, especially as resulting from passion, excessive stimulation, as by intoxicating liquors, etc. [Rare.]

They are generally fools and cowards: which some of us should be too, but for inflammation.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 3.

The inflammation of fat and viscous vapours doth presently vanish. Bp. Wilkins, Dædalus.

I like London better than ever I liked it before, and simply, I believe, from water-drinking. Without this, London is stupefaction and inflammation.
Sydney Smith, Letters, cvii.

3. In pathol., a morbid condition usually characterized by swelling, pain, heat, and redness. The inflamed tissue contains blood in excess, or is hyperemic, and the blood-vessels are so modified as to allow a large transit of plasma and blood-corpuscles through their walls; these extravasated materials accumulate in the surrounding tissues, which exhibit more or less profound derangement of nutrition.

This acrimonious soot produces another sad effect, by rendering the people obnoxious to inflammations.
Evelyn, Fumifugium, i.

Adhesive inflammation, croupous inflammation, etc. See the adjectives.—Parenchymatous inflammation. Same as cloudy swelling (which see, under cloudy).

inflammative (in-flam′a-tiv), a. [= OF. inflammatif; as inflammat(ion) + -ive.] Causing inflammation; having a tendency to inflame; inflammatory. Bailey. [Rare.]

inflammatory (in-flam′a-tō-ri), a. [= F. inflammatoire = Sp. inflamatorio = Pg. inflammatorio = It. infiammatorio, < ML. as if inflammatorius,* < L. inflammare, inflame: see inflame.] 1. Tending to inflame, or to excite or produce inflammation: as, inflammatory medicines.—2. Of the nature of, or accompanied or caused by, the morbid condition called inflammation: as, inflammatory rheumatism.—3. Of, pertaining to, or indicative of inflammation, or an inflamed condition: as, inflammatory symptoms.—4. Tending to excite passion, desire, etc.; of a nature to rouse anger, animosity, tumult, sedition, etc.: as, an inflammatory harangue.

Far from anything inflammatory, I never heard a more languid debate in this house. Burke, American Taxation.

Who, kindling a combustion of desire,
With some cold moral think to quench the fire, . . .
Howe'er disguised th' inflammatory tale.
Cowper, Prog. of Err., l. 327.

Inflammatory fever. See fever[1].

inflatable (in-flā′ta-bl), a. [< inflate + -able.] Capable of inflation; that may be inflated or distended.

An inflatable proboscis overhanging the mouth [of the hooded seal]. Science, IV. 340.

inflate (in-flāt′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inflated, ppr. inflating. [< L. inflatus, pp. of inflare (> It. enfiare = Sp. Pg. inflar = Pr. enflar, eflar = F. enfler), blow into, puff up, < in, in, + flare, blow: see flatus.] 1. To swell or distend by inhaling or injecting air or gas; distend in any manner: as, to inflate the lungs, a bladder, or a balloon.

When passion's tumults in the bosom rise,
Inflate the features, and enrage the eyes,
To nature's outline can we draw too true,
Or nature's colours give too full to view?
J. Scott, Essay on Painting.

Notwithstanding the enormous size of the balloon, M. Godard asserted that it could be inflated in half an hour.
Encyc. Brit., I. 193.

2. To swell or extend unduly; expand beyond proper or natural limits; raise above the just amount or value: as, to inflate the currency or prices; to inflate the market (that is, the price of marketable commodities, as stocks).—3. To puff out or up; make swollen or turgid.

Poems . . . so inflated with metaphor that they may be compared to the gaudy bubbles blown up from a solution of soap. Goldsmith, Metaphors.

4. To puff up; elate: as, to inflate one with pride or self-importance.

The crowd, . . . if they find
Some stain or blemish in a name of note, . . .
Inflate themselves with some insane delight.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

Are we to refrain from acts of benevolence, because we may inflate ourselves upon them with our insane pride?
Gladstone, Might of Right, p. 289.

inflate (in-flāt′), a. [< L. inflatus, pp.: see the verb.] Inflated. E. Phillips, 1706.

inflated (in-flā′ted), p. a. 1. Swollen or puffed out by air or gas; hence, in zoöl. and bot., distended or dilated in every direction, and hollowed out, as if by inflation: as, inflated petioles;

inflated bladderwort: applied in conchology to rotund shells of light, thin texture, in contradistinction from ventricose.—2. Turgid; bombastic; pompous: as, inflated oratory.—Inflated antenna or pedipalp, one having the terminal joint much larger than the rest and irregularly globular.—Inflated joint, a joint that is round and bladder-like.

inflater (in-flā'tėr), n. [< inflate + -er[1].] One who or that which inflates or distends; specifically, one who inflates prices. As applied to certain mechanical appliances, also spelled inflator.

The clamor of contending inflaters . . . at the stock exchange. The American, VIII. 84.

inflatile (in-flā'til), a. [= OF. inflatil, < LL. inflatilis, of or for blowing, < inflare, blow in: see inflate and flatile.] In music, sounded by means of air: as, inflatile instruments (that is, wind-instruments).

inflatingly (in-flā'ting-li), adv. In a manner tending to inflate.

inflation (in-flā'shọn), n. [= F. inflation = Pr. inflacio, enflazon = Sp. inflación = Pg. inflação = It. enfiagione, < L. inflatio(n-), a blowing into, blowing up, < inflare, blow into: see inflate.] 1. The act of inflating or distending with air or gas.

The improvements that have been made in the management and inflation of balloons in the last ninety years have only had reference to details. Encyc. Brit., I. 189.

2. The state of being inflated or distended; distention: as, the inflation of the lungs.—3. Undue expansion or elevation; increase beyond the proper or just amount or value: as, inflation of trade, currency, or prices; inflation of stocks (that is, of the price of stocks).—4. The state of being puffed up; turgidness; pretentiousness; conceit: as, inflation of style or manner.

If they should confidently praise their works,
In them it would appear inflation.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

inflationist (in-flā'shọn-ist), n. [< inflation + -ist.] One who inflates; one who causes or favors inflation; specifically, in the United States, one who favors increased issues of paper money: opposed to contractionist.

Mr. M. . . . will have double work to do trying to get the inflationists to be satisfied with the "Fathers' Dollar." The Nation, XXVII. 169.

The cry that we want "sufficient money for the demands of trade" is the cry of the inflationist, the demagogue, or the ignoramus. N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 100.

inflator, n. See inflater.

inflatus (in-flā'tus), n. [L., a blowing into, < inflare, blow into: see inflate.] A blowing or breathing into; hence, inspiration; afflatus: as, "ineffable inflatus," Mrs. Browning.

inflect (in-flekt'), v. [= F. infléchir = It. infiettere, < L. inflectere, bend, inflect, < in, in, + flectere, bend: see flex[1].] I. trans. 1. To bend; turn from a direct line or course.

Are they [rays of light] not reflected, refracted, and inflected by one and the same principle? Newton, Opticks.

The outer integument is inflected inwards, . . . and becoming of excessive tenuity, runs to near the bottom of the sack. Darwin, Cirripedia, p. 53.

2. In gram., to vary, as a noun or verb, by change of form, especially in regard to endings; decline, as a noun or adjective, or conjugate, as a verb; more specifically, to denote a change of office in (words), not by added elements only, but more or less by alteration of the stem or root itself.

The irreconcilability of the Norman and the Saxon modes of inflecting adjectives compelled the English to discard them both. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xxiv.

3. To modulate, as the voice.

II. intrans. To receive inflection; undergo grammatical changes of form.

The verb inflects with remarkable regularity. Science, III. 550.

★ inflected (in-flek'ted), p. a. 1. Bent or turned from a direct line or course: as, an inflected ray of light.—2. In zoöl., anat., and bot., bent or turned inward or downward: as, the inflected mandibular angle of marsupials; inflected leaves, stamens, or petals.—3. In gram., denoting change of office by variation of form: as, an inflected verb.—Inflected arch or curve, an ogee ★arch or curve.

inflection, inflexion (in-flek'shọn), n. [Prop. inflexion (cf. flection, flexion); = F. inflexion = Sp. inflexión = Pg. inflexão = It. inflessione, < L. inflexio(n-), a bending, < inflectere, pp. inflexus, bend: see inflect.] 1. The act of inflecting, or the state of being inflected; a bend or bending.

They affirm it [the elephant] hath no joynt, and yet concede it walks and moves about; whereby they conceive there may be a progression or advancement made in motion without inflexion of parts. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 1.

The first step is seen to be the subdivision of the endochrome, and the inflexion of the ectoplasm around it. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 252.

2. In optics, the peculiar modification or deviation which light undergoes in passing the edges of an opaque body, usually attended by the formation of colored fringes: more commonly called diffraction.

The course of Light-rays is altered not only by refraction when they pass from one transparent medium into another, and by reflexion when they fall on polished surfaces which they do not enter, but also by inflection at the edges of objects by which they pass. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 156.

3. In gram., the variation of nouns, etc., by declension, and of verbs by conjugation; more specifically, variation in part by internal change, and not by added elements alone.

Inflections are the changes made in the forms of words, to indicate either their grammatical relations to other words in the same period, or some accidental condition of the thing expressed by the inflected word. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xv.

We have . . . as corresponding present and preterit, I lead and I led, . . . I give and I gave. These two are the only tenses distinguished by real inflection in our verb. Whitney, Essentials of Eng. Grammar, p. 103.

4. Modulation of the voice in speaking, or any change in the pitch or tone of the voice in singing.

The airs [of the Spanish muleteer] are rude and simple, consisting of but few inflections. Irving, Alhambra, p. 13.

5. In geom., the place on a curve where a tangent moving along the curve by a rolling motion changes the direction of its turning, and begins to turn back; a stationary tangent. The point of tangency at an inflection is called a point of inflection or point of contrary flexure; but as it is now usual to consider a curve as being as much generated by the rolling tangent as by the moving point, geometricians speak of the inflection, meaning the tangent which becomes here for an instant stationary, and do not mention the point without special reason for doing so.—Plane inflection, a stationary osculating plane in the generation of a non-plane curve. Through three consecutive points of the curve let a plane be described; then, if the infinitely neighboring parts of the curve preceding and following these points lie on opposite sides of the plane, there is a plane inflection at that place; otherwise, not. Or, the tortuous curve may be considered as the envelop of a moving plane, and this plane as always turning about an instantaneous axis lying within itself; then, where the direction of rotation of the plane is reversed, there is a plane inflection.—Syn. 4. Inflection, Modulation, Accent. Inflection and modulation may be the same, but modulation is always musical and agreeable, while inflection may be harsh; modulation also may refer to more delicate changes of pitch in the voice than are expressed by inflection. Accent is used to express such habitual inflections or modulations as mark a person, district, race, rank, etc.: as, an Irish accent; the Parisian accent. See emphasis.

inflectional, inflexional (in-flek'shọn-al), a. [< inflection, inflexion, + -al.] 1. Pertaining to or having inflection.—2. In gram., exhibiting inflection; inflective; pertaining to inflection.

The radical nature of the vowel sounds, together with the delicate inflexional machinery of the Aryan languages, must be reckoned among the chief reasons why the final stages of alphabetic development should in so many cases have been effected by Aryan nations. Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, I. 49.

Inflectional languages. See under agglutinate.—Inflectional tangent of a plane curve, the tangent at inflection. See inflection, 5.—Inflectional tangents to a surface at any given point, in geom., two lines having each a three-point contact with the surface: they are the asymptotes of the indicatrix, and of course are only real in case the surface is saddle-shaped.

inflectionless, inflexionless (in-flek'shọn-les), a. [< inflection, inflexion, + -less.] Characterized by loss or absence of inflection.

The language [modern English] had at length reached the all but inflexionless state which it now presents. J. A. H. Murray, Encyc. Brit., VIII. 398.

inflective (in-flek'tiv), a. [< inflect + -ive. Cf. inflexive[1].] 1. Having the power of bending.

Although this inflective quality of the air be a great incumbrance and confusion of astronomical observations, yet is it not without some considerable benefit to navigation. R. Hooke, Posth. Works (ed. Derham), Navigation, p. 446.

2. In gram., exhibiting or characterized by inflection, or variation of the grammatical character of words in part by internal change: distinguished from agglutinative.

The Caucasian dialects present many exceptional and difficult features, and are in great part of so high a grade of structure as to have been allowed the epithet inflective by those who attach special importance to the distinction thus expressed. Whitney, Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 780.

infledged (in-flejd'), a. [< in-[3] + fledged.] Not feathered; unfledged. [Rare.]

He therein made nests for many birds which otherwise, being either infledged or maimed, must have been exposed to wind and weather. Fuller, Worthies, Berkshire.

inflesh (in-flesh'), v. t. [< in-[1] + flesh.] Same as enflesh.

Who th' Deity inflesht, and man's flesh deified.
P. Fletcher, Purple Island, vi.
Himself a fiend infleshed. Southey.

inflex (in-fleks'), v. t. [< L. inflexus, pp. of inflectere, bend: see inflect.] To inflect; bend; flex or curve inward.

David's right-heartedness became inflex'd and crooked. Feltham, On Luke xiv. 20.

inflexed (in-flekst'), p. a. Turned; bent. Specifically—(a) In bot., bent inward. An inflexed leaf is one that is curved upward and has the apex turned inward toward the stem. (b) In zoöl., inflected; bent or folded downward or inward: as, an inflexed margin.

The inflexed portions of the elytra, along the sides, are called epipleuræ. Leconte.

Inflexed head, in entom., a head so much bent that the superior surface forms an acute angle with the pronotum, as in a roach.

inflexibility (in-flek-si-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. inflexibilité = Sp. inflexibilidad = Pg. inflexibilidade = It. inflessibilità; as inflexible + -ity: see -bility.] The quality of being inflexible; incapability of being bent; unyielding stiffness; obstinacy of will or temper; firmness of purpose.

That grave inflexibility of soul
Which reason can't convince, nor fear control.
Churchill.

=Syn. Tenacity, resolution, perseverance; doggedness, stubbornness, obstinacy.

inflexible (in-flek'si-bl), a. [= F. inflexible = Sp. inflexible = Pg. inflexivel = It. inflessibile, < L. inflexibilis, that cannot be bent, < in- priv. + flexibilis, that can be bent: see flexible.] 1. Not flexible; incapable of bending or of being bent; rigid: as, an inflexible rod.

I had previously seen snakes in frosty mornings in my path with portions of their bodies still numb and inflexible, waiting for the sun to thaw them out. Thoreau, Walden, p. 46.

2. Unyielding in temper or purpose; that will not yield to prayers or arguments; firm in purpose; incapable of being turned; not to be prevailed on.

Let him look into the errors of Phocion, and he will beware how he be obstinate or inflexible. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 20.

Be not unlike all others, not austere
As thou art strong, inflexible as steel.
Milton, S. A., l. 816.

A man of an upright and inflexible temper, in the executions of his country's laws, can overcome all private fear. Addison.

3. Not to be changed or altered; unalterable; not permitting variation.

The nature of things is inflexible. Watts.

In religion the law is written and inflexible. Goldsmith, Vicar, xxi.

=Syn. 1. Rigid, stiff.—2. Inexorable, inflexible, resolute, steadfast, unbending, unyielding, immovable, unrelenting; obstinate, stubborn, dogged.

inflexibleness (in-flek'si-bl-nes), n. Inflexibility.

inflexibly (in-flek'si-bli), adv. In an inflexible manner; rigidly; inexorably.

All those who adhered inflexibly to the Jacobite interest opposed every step that was made with great vehemence. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1706.

inflexion, inflexional, etc. See inflection, etc.

inflexive[1] (in-flek'siv), a. [< inflex + -ive.] Inflective. [Rare.]

inflexive[2] (in-flek'siv), a. [< in-[3] + flexive.] Inflexible; inexorable. [Rare.]

And to beare safe the burthen undergone
Of foes inflexive, and inhuman hates,
Secure from violent and harmeful fates.
Chapman, tr. of Homer's Ode to Mars.

inflexure (in-flek'sūr), n. [< inflex + -ure. Cf. flexure.] An inflection; a bend or fold.

The contrivance of nature is singular in the opening and shutting of bindeweeds, performed by five inflexures. Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, iii.

inflict (in-flikt'), v. t. [< L. inflictus, pp. of infligere (> It. infliggere = Sp. Pg. Pr. infligir = F. infliger), strike on or against, < in, on, + figere, strike. Cf. afflict, conflict.] To lay on or impose as something that must be borne or suffered; cause to be suffered: as, to inflict punishment on offenders; to inflict a penalty on transgressors.

On him, amidst the flying numbers found,
Eurypylus inflicts a deadly wound.
Pope, Iliad, v. 104.

Death . . . was never inflicted except for murder. Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I. 251.

So ended the year 1744, during which a fearful sum of human misery had been inflicted on the world. Lecky, Eng. in 18th. Cent., iii.

inflicter (in-flik'tėr), n. One who inflicts.

But yet, with fortitude resign'd,
I'll thank th' inflicter of the blow.
Chatterton, The Resignation.

infliction (in-flik'shon), n. [= F. infliction = Sp. inflicción = Pg. inflicção = It. inflizione, < LL. inflictio(n-), < L. infligere, pp. inflictus, strike on or against, inflict: see inflict.] 1. The act of inflicting or imposing: as, the infliction of punishment.

Sin ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. South, Sermons.

2. That which is inflicted; suffering or punishment imposed.

Gods, let me ask ye what I am, ye lay
All your inflictions on me? hear me, hear me!
Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 2.

God doth receive glory as well from his inflictions and punishments as from his rewards.
Abp. Sharp, Works, III. xii.

inflictive (in-flik'tiv), a. [= F. inflictif = Sp. Pg. inflictivo; as inflict + -ive.] Tending or able to inflict.

Though Britain feels the blows around,
Ev'n from the steel's inflictive sting
New force she gains.
★ Whitehead, Ode, For his Majesty's Birthday, June 4, 1779.

inflorescence (in-flō-res'ens), n. [= F. inflorescence = Pg. inflorescencia, < LL. inflorescen(t-)s, ppr. of inflorescere, begin to blossom, < L. in, in, + florescere, begin to blossom: see florescence.] 1. A beginning to blossom; a flowering; the unfolding of blossoms.—2. In bot., the arrangement of flowers on the axis and in relation to each other. This term, meaning literally time of flower-bearing, was first proposed by Linnæus, and should be replaced by the more correct term anthotaxis, which is formed on the analogy of phyllotaxis. Inflorescence is really the subject of ramification or branching, but is also interested in part in foliation and phyllotaxy. Notwithstanding the seemingly many diverse kinds of inflorescence, they are all reducible to two fundamental types, the definite or cymose and the indefinite or botryose. The figures above illustrate some of the most important modifications of the two types.

Inflorescence.

1, spike of Plantago; 2, simple umbel of Asclepias; 3, corymb of Aronia arbutifolia; 4, raceme of Convallaria majalis; 5, spadix of Calla within the spathe; 6, head of Cephalanthus; 7, female catkin of Salix; 8, anthodium of Solidago; 9, compound umbel of Sium; 10, panicle of Caulophyllum; 11, cyme of Cerastium.

We may properly count those deviations of structure which constitute inflorescence as among the morphological differentiations produced by local innutrition.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 240.

Acropetal or centripetal inflorescence. See centripetal.—Centrifugal, definite, or determinate inflorescence. See centrifugal.—Conglobate, indefinite, etc., inflorescence. See the adjectives.—Indeterminate inflorescence. Same as indefinite inflorescence.

inflow (in'flō), n. [< in[1] + flow[1], n.] The act of flowing in or into; that which flows in; influx.

The sole communication . . . with the arctic basin is a strait so shallow as only to permit an inflow of warm surface water. J. Croll, Climate and Time, p. 137.

inflowed (in-flōd'), a. [< in-[1] + flow[1] + -ed[2].] That has flowed in. [Rare.]

Either of these [prescriptions], if timely applied, will not only resist the influx, but dry up the inflowed humour. Wiseman, Chirurgical Treatises, i. 3.

inflowering (in-flou'ėr-ing), n. [< in-[2] + flower + -ing[1].] In perfumery, the process of extracting the aroma of flowers by absorbing the essential oils in an inodorous fatty body, without recourse to heat; enfleurage.

Certain flowers, such as jasmine, tuberose, violet, cassia, either do not yield their attars by distillation at all, or do it so sparingly as not to admit of its collection for commercial purposes. . . . In these cases the odours are secured by the processes of inflowering (enfleurage), or by maceration. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 526.

influence (in'flö-ens), n. [< ME. influence, < OF. influance, influence, F. influence = Pr. Sp. Pg. influencia = It. influenza, < ML. influentia, a flowing in, < L. influen(t-)s, flowing in: see influent.] 1†. A flowing in; direct influx of energy: followed by into.

God hath his influence into the very essence of all things.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, V. 56.

Those various temperaments that have ingredience and influence into him [man].
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 158.

2. In astrol., the radiation of power from the stars in certain positions and collocations, affecting human actions and destinies; a supposed positive occult power exerted by the stars over human affairs.

Influence [F.], a flowing in, and particularly an influence, or influent course, of the planets; their vertue infused into, or their course working on, inferiour creatures.
Cotgrave.

The astrologers call the evill influences of the starrs, evil aspects. Bacon, Envy.

He is my star; in him all truth I find,
All influence, all fate.
J. Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune.

3. Outgoing energy or potency that produces effects (primarily internal), or affects, modifies, or sways by insensible or invisible means that to which it is directed or on which it operates: sometimes used for the effect produced: as, the influence of heat on vegetation; the influence of climate on character; the influence of the moon on the tides; the influence of example on the young.

Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault.
Milton, P. L., iii. 118.

It was not without the influence of a Divinity that his decessor Augustus, about the time of Christ's nativity, refused to be called Lord.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 43.

We do not yet know precisely how early the Bactrian kingdom extended to the Indus, but we feel its influence on the coinage, on the sculpture, and generally on the arts of India, from a very early date.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 48.

4. Capacity or power for producing effects by insensible or invisible means; authority; power; ascendancy over others; sway: as, a man of influence; a position of great influence.

This town [Bayreut] is under the influence of the Maronites and Druses, as many other places are under the Arabs.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 91.

She was wise, shrewd, and loving, and she gradually controlled her little charge more and more by simple influence. H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 299.

5. In elect. and magnetism, same as induction, 6.

When any magnetic body is placed in a magnetic field, it becomes itself a magnet. This is a magnetisation by influence, or induced magnetisation.
Atkinson, tr. of Mascart and Joubert, I. 289.

Physical influence, in metaph. See physical influx, under influx.=Syn. 4. Influence, Authority, Ascendancy, etc. See authority.

influence (in'flö-ens), v. t.; pret. and pp. influenced, ppr. influencing. [= F. influencer; from the noun.] 1. To exercise influence on; modify, affect, or sway, especially by intangible or invisible means; act on or affect by the transmission of some energy or potency: as, the sun influences the tides; to influence a person by the hope of reward or the fear of punishment.

These experiments succeed after the same manner in vacuo as in the open air, and therefore are not influenced by the weight or pressure of the atmosphere. Newton.

This standing revelation . . . is sufficient to influence their faith and practice if they attend. Bp. Atterbury.

Who will say that the esteem and fear of the world's judgment, and the expectation of worldly advantages, do not at present most powerfully influence the generality of men in their profession of Christianity?
J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 130.

The career of Charles the Great has influenced the history of the world ever since.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 222.

2. Electrostatic induction. See induction.

influence-machine (in'flö-ens-ma-shēn''), n. In elect., a machine for producing charges of electricity by electrostatic induction. See induction, 6, and electric.

influencer (in'flö-en-sėr), n. One who or that which influences.

influencive (in-flö-en'siv), a. [< influence + -ive.] Tending to influence; influential. [Rare.]

How influencive and inevitable the sympathy!
★ R. Choate, Addresses, p. 168.

influent (in'flö-ent), a. [< ME. influent, influential, < OF. influent, F. influent = Sp. Pg. It. influente, influential, < L. influen(t-)s, flowing in, ppr. of influere, flow in, < in, in, + fluere, flow: see fluent.] 1. Flowing in.

The chief intention of chirurgery, as well as medicine, is keeping a just æquilibrium between the influent fluids and vascular solids. Arbuthnot, Aliments, v. 3.

They . . . laid down the reported lake in its supposed position, showing the Nile both influent and effluent.
Sir S. W. Baker, Heart of Africa, p. 163.

2†. Exerting influence; influential.

I find no office by name assigned unto Dr. Cox, who was virtually influent upon all, and most active. Fuller.

And as it [humility] is healthful for their own minds, so it is more operative and influent upon others than any other vertue. W. Montague, Devoute Essays, II. ix. § 2.

influential (in-flö-en'shal), a. [< influence (ML. influentia) + -al.] Having or exerting power or influence; possessing or characterized by the possession of influence, or of power to influence: as, influential friends.

Thy influential vigour reinspires
This feeble flame. W. Thompson, Sickness, iii.

With a discontented people, the wrong-thinkers are certain to be most influential, and they may therefore come to have the making of our laws.
N. A. Rev., CXXXIX. 514.

influentially (in-flö-en'shal-i), adv. In such a manner as to exercise influence; so as to affect, sway, incline, or direct.

Of those who are to act influentially on their fellows we should expect always something large and public in their way of life, something more or less urbane and comprehensive in their sentiment for others.
★ R. L. Stevenson, John Knox.

influenza (in-flö-en'zä), n. [= F. influenza, < It. influenza, influenza, lit. influence: see influence.] 1. An epidemic catarrh of an aggravated kind, attended with serious febrile symptoms and rapid prostration. It attacks all ages and conditions of life, but is not frequently fatal except to the aged, or the very young, or to those suffering from other diseases. It occurs usually under one of three forms, called catarrhal or pulmonary, gastric, and cerebral, according as the disease affects the respiratory organs, mucous membranes, the digestive organs, or the brain. It is due to the action of a minute micro-organism, the Bacillus influenzæ. See the supplement.

The year [1837] began with the influenza. Everybody had it. The offices of the various departments of the Civil Service were deserted because all the clerks had influenza. Business of all kinds was stopped because merchants, clerks, bankers, and brokers all had influenza; at Woolwich fifty men . . . were taken into hospital daily, with influenza. W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 19.

2†. A prevailing influence; an epidemic.

The learned Michaelis has taken notice of this fatal attachment, and speaks of it as a strange illusion; he says that it is the reigning influenza, to which all are liable who make the Hebrew their principal study.
J. Bryant, New System (1774), I. 199.

influing†, n. [< L. influere, flow in: see influent.] Influence. Davies.

Canst thou restrain the pleasant influing
Of Pleiades (the Ushers of the Spring)?
Sylvester, Job Triumphant, iv. 451.

influx (in'fluks), n. [= F. influx = Sp. influjo = Pg. influxo = It. influsso, < L. influxus, a flowing in, < influere, pp. influxus, flow in: see influent.] 1. The act of flowing in; an inflow: as, an influx of light.

The influx of the knowledge of God, in relation to this everlasting life, is infinitely of moment. Sir M. Hale.

It is man's power to combine and direct the spiritual elements of his being, his power to free the intellect from prejudice and open it to the influx of Truth.
Channing, Perfect Life, p. 16.

2. Infusion; intromission.

Up to the present time philosophers have inferred the existence of a spiritual influx proceeding from the soul into the body.
Swedenborg, Christian Psychol. (tr. by Gorman), p. 101.

3†. Influence; power.

Your Lordship knows that there be divers Meridians and Climes in the Heavens, whence Influxes of differing Qualities fall upon the Inhabitants of the Earth.
Howell, Letters, ii. 60.

4. A flowing or coming in; continuous introgression: as, a great influx of goods into a country.

The influx of food into the Celtic region, however, was far from keeping pace with the influx of consumers.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xvii.

Henry II. avoided either ruling or controlling England by foreign ministers, and did very little to encourage an influx of foreign ecclesiastics.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 136.

5. The place or point at which one stream flows into another or into the sea: as, at the influx of the brook.—Physical influx or influence, in metaph., the process of producing effects of sensation upon the mind by a causal action through the brain. The doctrine is that matter can act immediately upon mind, and be acted upon by it, by direct causation.

influxion (in-fluk'shọn), n. [= F. influxion, < LL. influxio(n-), a flowing in, < L. influere, pp. influxus, flow in: see influx.] An influx or flowing in; inflow; infusion; intromission.

The retiring of the mind within itself is the state which is most susceptible of divine influxions.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 204.

Preserve the brain from those sudden influxions of blood to which it would . . . be . . . exposed.
Holden, Anat. (1885), p. 735.

influxionism (in-fluk'shọn-izm), n. [< influxion + -ism.] The doctrine of physical influx. See influx.

influxionist (in-fluk'shọn-ist), n. [< LL. influxionista; as influxion + -ist.] An adherent of the metaphysical theory of physical influx. See influx.

influxious† (in-fluk'shus), a. [< influx + -ious.] Influential.

Men will be men while there is a world, and as long as the moon hath an influxious power to make impressions upon their humours, they will be ever greedy and covetous of novelties and mutation. Howell, England's Tears.

influxive† (in-fluk'siv), a. [< influx + -ive.] 1. That flows or tends to flow in.—2. Influential; that has or exerts a modifying, directing, or swaying influence.

He is the influxive head, who both governs the whole body, and every member which is in any way serviceable to the body. Holdsworth, Inauguration Sermon (1642), p. 9.

influxively† (in-fluk'siv-li), adv. In an influxive manner; by influxion.

infold (in-fōld'), v. t. [Also enfold; < in-[1] + fold[1].] 1. To wrap up or inwrap; involve; inclose.

So were the weeds infolded with the water, not to be waded, nor by boat to be past thorow.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 73.

So that first intelligible world infoldeth the second: in this are nine Spheres, moued of the immoueable Empyrean. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 175.

Doth gouty Mammon's griping hand infold
This secret saint in sacred shrines of sov'reign gold?
Quarles, Emblems, iv. 13.

Infold his limbs in bands. Blackmore.

2. To clasp with the arms; embrace.

Let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 4.

infoldment (in-fōld'ment), n. [< infold + -ment.] The act of infolding, or the state of being infolded. [Rare.]

infoliate (in-fō'li-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infoliated, ppr. infoliating. [Also enfoliate; < in-[2] + foliate.] To cover or overspread with leaves. [Rare.]

Long may his fruitful vine infoliate and clasp about him with embracements. Howell.

inforce†, inforcement†. Obsolete forms of enforce, enforcement.

in fore (in fō'rē). [L. (NL.): in, in; fore, fut. inf. of esse (ind. sum), be: see ens and be[1].] In prospect; prospective; future: as, the governor in fore (the future governor). Compare in esse, in posse.

inforest† (in-for'est), v. t. Same as enforest.

All such [forests] as were found to haue been inforested since the first coronation of Henry the second to be disafforested. Daniel, Hist. Eng., p. 128.

inform[1] (in-fôrm'), v. [Early mod. E. also enform; < ME. informen, enformen, < OF. enformer, enfourmer, informer, F. informer = Sp. Pg. informar = It. informare (cf. D. informeren = G. informiren = Dan. informere = Sw. informera), < L. informare, give form to, delineate, sketch, inform, instruct, < in, in, on, + formare, form: see form, v.] I. trans. 1. To impart form or essence to, the object of the verb denoting some kind of matter, and the result being the production of a thing of some definite kind; determine the character or quality of; hence, to animate; actuate.

If the potter please t' inform the clay, . . .
That proves a vessel, which before was mire.
Quarles, Emblems, iv. 8.

If one soul were so perfect as to inform three distinct bodies, that were a petty trinity.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 12.

Her constant beauty doth inform Stillness with love, and day with light.
Tennyson, The Day-Dream, Sleeping Beauty.

2. To enlighten; teach; instruct; advise: as, to inform one how he should proceed.

Thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee. Deut. xvii. 10.

Princesse, my Muse thought not amys
To enforme your noble mynde of this.
Puttenham, Partheniades, xiii.

That you are poor and miserable men
My eyes inform me.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, iii. 1.

3. To communicate information to; acquaint with facts; apprise.

Tertullus . . . informed the governor against Paul.
Acts xxiv. 1.

4†. To make known; disclose; tell of or about.

He commanded, of his specyalle grace, to all his Subgettes, to lete me seen alle the places, and to enforme me pleynly alle the Mysteries of every place.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 82.

Haply thou mayst inform
Something to save thy life.
Shak., All's Well, iv. 1.

At the court it was informed that some of Salem had taken out a piece of the cross in their ensign.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 462.

My servant talk'd to a favourite janizary of the Aga's he had appointed to be with me, as if he was a spy, and had inform'd what presents I had made.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 119.

5†. To guide; direct.

If old respect,
As I suppose, towards your once gloried friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger feet, . . . say if he be here.
Milton, S. A., l. 335.

=Syn. 1. To inspire, quicken.—2 and 3. Of inform of: To apprise of, signify, communicate, disclose, reveal, acquaint with, advise of, notify or notify of, teach.

II. intrans. 1†. To take form or shape; become visible.

It is the bloody business which informs
Thus to mine eyes. Shak., Macbeth, ii. 1.

2. To give intelligence or information: generally with against or on.

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?
Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him.
Shak., Lear, iv. 2.

Informing form, in metaph. See form.

inform[2]† (in-fôrm'), a. [= OF. (and F.) informe = Sp. Pg. It. informe, < L. informis, that has no form, < in- priv. + forma, form, shape. Cf. deform[1], a.] Without regular form; shapeless; deformed.

An office that . . . joins in marriage as Cacus did his oxen, in rude, inform, and unhallowed yokes.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 261.

You . . . who are able to make even these informe blocks and stones daunce into order. Evelyn, To A. Cowley.

informal (in-fôr'mal), a. [= Sp. informal; as in-[3] + formal.] 1. Not formal; not in the regular or usual form or manner; not according to rule or custom; unceremonious; irregular: as, an informal writing; informal proceedings; an informal visit.

The proffered cession of Venetia was neither accepted nor refused, and there ensued a sort of informal suspension of hostilities, which was neither war nor peace.
E. Dicey, Victor Emmanuel, p. 292.

I saw everything up to Gravelotte in virtue of an informal scrap of permission General von Goeben had given me as I passed through Coblentz on my way to the front.
Arch. Forbes, Souvenirs of some Continents, p. 39.

2†. Distracted or deranged in mind.

These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member That sets them on. Shak., M. for M., v. 1.

informality (in-fôr-mal'i-ti), n.; pl. informalities (-tiz). [= Sp. informalidad: as informal + -ity.] The state of being informal; want of regular or customary form; an informal act or procedure: as, the informality of legal proceedings may render them void.

But they concluded that, whatever informalities or nullities were pretended to be in the bulls or breves, the Pope was the only competent judge of it.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1531.

informally (in-fôr'mal-i), adv. In an informal manner; irregularly; without the usual forms; unceremoniously.

informant (in-fôr'mant), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. It. informante, < L. informan(t-)s, ppr. of informare, inform: see inform[1].] I. a. Giving form; transmuting matter by communicating to it a form; informing.—Informant act, in metaph. See act.—Informant form, in metaph., a form which affects the specific essence of a thing, which penetrates the being of the matter, and is not merely extrinsically joined to it, as an assistant form, producing only motion.

II. n. One who informs or gives information; an informer.

It was the last evidence of the kind. The informant was hanged. Burke, Affairs of India.

"Ahmed," said the informant, "spurns at restraint, and scoffs at thy authority." Irving, Alhambra, p. 466.

=Syn. Informant, Informer. Informant is special, relating only to a given occasion: as, who was your informant? Informer may be special or general, relating to one occasion or, more commonly, to a practice or occupation, as implying a habit of informing, or a dishonorable betrayal of knowledge gained in confidence. It has acquired odious associations.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy, . . .
This carry-tale, dissentious Jealousy.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 655.

in forma pauperis (in fôr'mä pâ'pe-ris). [L.: in, in; formā, abl. of forma, form; pauperis, gen. of pauper, poor: see form and pauper.] In the character of a pauper. Courts of equity having discretionary power to award or refuse costs adopted the practice of granting leave to sue, without liability to costs in case of unsuccess, to suitors showing a good cause of action, and making oath to poverty, the privilege being confined to those not having above £5 or $20. The power to grant such leave is now generally extended by statute to common-law courts, and in some jurisdictions the limit has been increased.

information (in-fôr-mā'shọn), n. [< ME. informacion, enformacion (= D. informatie = G. Dan. Sw. information), < OF. information, F. information = Sp. información = Pg. informação = It. informazione, < L. informatio(n-), outline, sketch, idea, conception, representation, < informare, sketch, inform: see inform.] 1. Communication of form or element; infusion, as of an animating or actuating principle. [Rare.]

There does not seem any limit to these new informations of the same Spirit that made the elements at first.
Emerson, Works and Days.

2. Knowledge communicated or received; particular intelligence or report; news; notice: as, to get information of a shipwreck.

Also whan the Prelate of the Abbeye is ded, I have undirstonden, be informacioun that his Lampe quenchethe.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 60.

I went, in Suez, to the house of a Greek priest, and the next day met with a Turkish captain of a ship, a very obliging man, who gave me several informations in relation to the navigation of the Red sea.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 138.

H—— was at a loss in what manner to communicate his information to the officer in command at Bedford.
Cooper, The Spy, vi., note.

3. Knowledge inculcated or derived; known facts or principles, however communicated or acquired, as from reading, instruction, or observation: as, a man of various information; the information gathered from extended travel.

Sweet bashfulness! it claims at least this praise:
The dearth of information and good sense
That it foretells us always comes to pass.
Cowper, Task, iv. 71.

His information is various, and his learning catholic, as well as profound. N. A. Rev., CXLII. 595.

4. In law: (a) An official criminal charge presented, usually by the prosecuting officers of the state, without the interposition of a grand jury. Wharton. This is the sense in which it is more commonly used in American law. In American constitutional law, clauses securing trial by jury in prosecutions by indictment or information are construed as excluding complaints before local magistrates for minor offenses, such as have always been summarily tried. (b) A criminal charge made under oath, before a justice of the peace, of an offense punishable summarily.

Seeking tales and informations
Against this man. Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 3.

Informations were given in to the magistrates against him [Fust] as a magician, and searching his lodgings a great number of copies [of the Bible] were found.
I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., I. 133.

(c) A complaint, in a qui tam action in a court of common-law jurisdiction, to recover a penalty prescribed by statute or ordinance. (d) In Eng. law, a complaint in the name of the crown, in a civil action, to obtain satisfaction of some obligation to, or for some injury to the property or property rights of, the crown. (e) In Scots law, a written argument in court.—5. In metaph., the imparting of form to matter. In logic the information of a term is the aggregate of characters predicable of it over and above what are implied in the definition. [This meaning is found in Abelard.]

The sum of synthetical propositions in which the symbol is subject or predicate is the information concerning the symbol. C. S. Peirce.

Bill of information, an information; the document or pleading stating the ground of complaint.—Criminal information, in law. See criminal.—Ex officio informations, in Eng. law, the term by which purely public prosecutions by information were designated (usually had in the King's Bench), as distinguished from crown informations, by which prosecutions in the interest of private or property rights were designated (had in the Exchequer), and from qui tam informations, or informations qui tam, those prosecuted for a penalty which the informer is entitled to take or share.—Information of intrusion, a suit in the English Exchequer against a trespasser on crown lands, or the pleading by which such a suit was instituted.

informative (in-fôr'mạ-tiv), a. [= F. informatif = Sp. Pg. It. informativo; as inform + -ative.] 1. Having power to form or animate.

Many put out their force informative
In their ethereall corporeity.
Dr. H. More, Psychathanasia, I. ii. 24.

2. Didactic; instructive: as, a simply informative rather than dogmatic spirit.

Mr. ——'s editorial notes are, moreover, precisely what editorial notes should be—informative, elucidatory, sometimes speculative and suggestive.
The Academy, June 29, 1889, No. 895, p. 439.

informatory (in-fôr'mą-tō-ri), a. [< inform + -at-ory.] Full of information; affording knowledge; instructive.

The passage is informatory, but too long to quote fully.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 301.

informed[1] (in-fôrmd'), p. a. [< inform[1], v., + -ed[2].] Formed; animated; actuated.

Man is a soul, informed by divine ideas, and bodying forth their image. Alcott, Tablets, p. 166.

Informed breadth and depth, the logical breadth and depth of a term in a given state of positive knowledge or information.

informed[2] (in-fôrmd'), a. [< in-[3] + formed. Cf. inform[2].] Unformed; formless; shapeless.

So, after Nilus inundation,
Infinite shapes of creatures men doe fynd Informed in the mud on which the Sunne hath shynd.
Spenser, F. Q., III. vi. 8.

Conceptions, whether animate or inanimate, formed or informed. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, ii. 3.

Informed stars, in astron., stars not included within the figures of any of the ancient constellations. Ptolemy, in his star-catalogue, under each constellation begins with a list of stars each described as being situated in this or that part of the human or other figure supposed to be represented. After this follows another list, headed οἱ περὶ αὐτὸν ἀμόρφωτοι, stars lying without the figure, Latin stellæ informes, informed stars.

informer (in-fôr'mėr), n. 1. One who informs or animates.

Informer of the Planetary Train!
Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs
Were brute unlovely mass, inert and dead.
Thomson, Summer, l. 104.

2. One who imparts intelligence or gives information; an informant.—3. In law, one who communicates to a magistrate a knowledge of a violation of law; a person who lays an information against or prosecutes in the courts one who offends against the law or any penal statute. Such a person is generally called a common informer, if he makes it his business to lay informations for the purpose of obtaining a reward.

But these are call'd informers; men that live
By treason, as rat-catchers do by poison.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, v. 2.

Hence—4. One who makes a business of informing against others; a mischief-maker.

But woo to suche informers, who they be,
That maketh their malice the mater of the power.
Skelton, Euell Information.

=Syn. Informant, Informer. See informant.

informidable† (in-fôr'mi-dą-bl), a. [< in-[3] + formidable.] Not formidable; not to be feared or dreaded.

Of limb
Heroic built, though of terrestrial mould; Foe not informidable! Milton, P. L., ix. 486.

informity† (in-fôr'mi-ti), n. [= OF. informité = Sp. informidad = It. informità, < LL. informita(t-)s, unshapeliness, < L. informis, unshapely, shapeless: see inform[2].] Lack of form; shapelessness.

If we affirm a total informity, it cannot admit so forward a term as an abortment. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 6.

informous† (in-fôr'mus), a. [< L. informis, shapeless: see informity.] Of no regular form or figure; formless; shapeless.

That a bear brings forth her young informous and unshapen . . . is an opinion . . . delivered by ancient writers.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 6.

in foro conscientiæ (in fō'rō kon-si-en'shi-ē). [L.: in, in; foro, abl. of forum, a court; conscientiæ, gen. of conscientia, conscience: see forum and conscience.] In the court of the conscience; according to the verdict of the moral sense.

in foro domestico (in fō'rō dō-mes'ti-kō). [L.: in, in; foro, abl. of forum, a court; domestico, abl. neut. of domesticus, domestic: see forum and domestic.] In a domestic court; in a tribunal of the home jurisdiction, as distinguished from a foreign court.

in foro seculari (in fō'rō sek-ū-lā'rī). [L.: in, in; foro, abl. of forum, a court; seculari, abl. neut. of secularis, secular: see forum and secular.] In a secular court; according to the law of a civil tribunal, as distinguished from that of an ecclesiastical court.

infortunate† (in-fôr'tū-nāt), a. [ME. infortunate = Pr. infortunat = Sp. Pg. infortunado = It. infortunato, < L. infortunatus, unfortunate, < in- priv. + fortunatus, fortunate: see fortunate.] Unfortunate.

I was
Of alle lovers the most infortunate.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 53.

infortunately† (in-fôr'tū-nāt-li), adv. Unfortunately.

infortune† (in-fôr'tūn), n. [< ME. infortune, < OF. infortune, F. infortune = Sp. Pg. infortunio = It. infortunio, infortuno, < L. infortunium, mischance, misfortune, < in- priv. + fortuna, chance, fortune: see fortune.] 1. Ill fortune; misfortune.

Yf thei be merchauntes, dyvision of heritage is bettyr than commvnion, that the infortune of oone hurte not the other. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 33.

For of Fortunes sharp adversite
The worste kynde of infortune is this:
A man to han ben in prosperite,
And it remembren, when it passed is.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1626.

The infortune is threatened by the malignant and adverse aspect, through means of a youth, and, as I think, a rival. Scott, Kenilworth, xviii.

2. In astrol., the planet Saturn or Mars, or even Mercury when he is much afflicted. W. Lilly.

infortuned†, a. [ME., < infortune + -ed[2]. Cf. infortunate.] Unfortunate.

I, woful wrech and infortuned wight.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 744.

infortunity (in-fôr-tū'ni-ti), n. [= OF. infortunite, < L. infortunita(t-)s, misfortune, < in- priv. + fortuna, fortune. Cf. infortunate.] Misfortune.

Other there be that ascribe his infortunitie only to the stroke and punishment of God. Hall, Edward IV., an. 9.

They [the Romans] are well tamed with the infortunitie of this battell. Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 1152.

infossous (in-fos'us), a. [< L. infossus, pp. of infodere, dig into, < in, in, + fodere, dig: see foss[2].] In bot., sunk in, as veins in some leaves, leaving a channel.

infound† (in-found'), v. t. [< ME. infounden, < OF. infondre, infundre = Sp. Pg. infundir, < L. infundere, pp. infusus, pour in, < in, in, + fundere, pour: see found[3]. Cf. infund, infuse.] To pour into; infuse.

Wynedregges olde in water let infounde;
Yeve hem this drinke, anoon thai wol be sounde.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 211.

But I say God is hable in such wyse to inspire and infounde the faythe, if that him lyste.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 582.

infra. [L. infra, adv. and prep., on the under side, below, LL. ML. also 'within,' contr. of inferā, abl. fem. (sc. parte) of inferus, low, below: see inferior.] A Latin preposition meaning 'below, beneath,' occurring in some phrases occasionally used in English.

infra-. [L. infra, prep. and adv., used as a prefix: see infra.] A prefix of Latin origin, meaning 'below, beneath.'=Syn. Infero-, Infra-. See infero-.

infra actionem (in'frą ak-shi-ō'nem). [L.: infra, below, within; actionem, acc. of actio(n-), action (canon): see action.] In the canon of the Roman mass, a prayer: same as communicantes.

infra-axillary (in"frą-ak'si-lą-ri), a. [< L. infra, below, + axilla, axil: see axilla, axillary.] 1. In bot., situated beneath the axil, as a bud. —2. In zoöl. and anat., situated below the axilla or armpit.

infrabranchial (in-frą-brang'ki-ąl), a. [< L. infra, below, + branchiæ, gills: see branchial.] In conch., situated below the gills: applied especially to the inferior chamber of the pallial cavity.

infrabuccal (in-frą-buk'ąl), a. [< L. infra, below, + bucca, cheek (mouth): see buccal.] Situated beneath the buccal mass or organ of a mollusk: as, an infrabuccal nerve.

infraclavicular (in"frą-klą-vik'ū-lär), a. [< L. infra, below, + clavicula, clavicle: see clavicular.] Situated below or beneath the clavicle or collar-bone.—Infraclavicular fossa or triangle, a space below the clavicle bounded by that bone above, by the upper border of the great pectoral muscle below and on the inner side, and by the fore border of the deltoid muscle on the outer side. Deep pressure in this region compresses the axillary artery against the second rib.—Infraclavicular region, a region of the front of the chest bounded above by the clavicle and below (in ordinary usage) by the third rib.

infraconstrictor (in"frą-kon-strik'tor), n. [< L. infra, below, + NL. constrictor, q. v.] The inferior constrictor muscle of the pharynx.

infracortical (in-frą-kôr'ti-kąl), a. [< L. infra, below, + cortex (cortic-), bark (NL. cortex): see cortical.] Lying or occurring below the cerebral cortex.

infracostal (in-frą-kos'tąl), a. and n. [< NL. infracostalis, < L. infra, below, + costa, rib.]

I. a. In anat., situated below or beneath a rib; subcostal: as, an infracostal artery, nerve, or muscle.

II. n. An infracostal muscle.

infracostalis (in"frą-kos-tā'lis), n.; pl. infracostales (-lēz). [NL.: see infracostal.] An infracostal muscle. In man there are a series of infracostales, arising from the under side of a given rib, and inserted into the first, second, or third rib next below. In their oblique direction they resemble internal intercostal muscles. They occur most frequently on the lower ribs.

infract[1] (in-frakt'), v. t. [< L. infractus, pp. of infringere, break off, break, weaken: see infringe.] To break off; violate; interrupt. [Rare.]

Falling fast from gradual slope to slope,
With wild infracted course, and lessen'd roar,
It gains a safer bed, and steals at last Along the mazes of the quiet vale.
Thomson, Summer, l. 604.

infract[2]† (in-frakt'), a. [< L. infractus, unbroken, < in- priv. + fractus, broken: see fraction.] Unbroken; sound; whole.

Had I a brazen throat, a voice infract,
A thousand tongues, and rarest words refin'd.
Mir. for Mags., p. 785.

Their [martyrs'] faith infract with their owne bloods did seal,
And never did to any Tyrant stoop.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Triumph of Faith, iii. 23.

infracted (in-frak'ted), a. In zoöl., bent suddenly inward, as if partly broken; geniculate.

infractible (in-frak'ti-bl), a. [< infract[1] + -ible.] ★Capable of being infracted or broken. [Rare.]

infraction (in-frak'shon), n. [= F. infraction = Sp. infracción = Pg. infracção = It. infrazione, < L. infractio(n-), a breaking, < infringere, pp. infractus, break: see infract[1].] 1. The act of infracting or breaking; a breakage or fracture. [Rare.]

Very distinct in type from the infractions and extravagant distortions of the osteomalveic skeleton.
Quain, Med. Dict., p. 997.

2. Breach; violation; infringement: as, an infraction of a treaty, compact, or law.

An infraction of God's great law of Right and of Love.
Sumner, Cambridge, Aug. 27, 1846.

Whoso suggests or urges the infraction of another's rights must be held to have transgressed the law of equal freedom. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 167.

infractor (in-frak'tor), n. [= F. infracteur = Sp. Pg. infractor, < ML. infractor, one who breaks or violates, < L. infringere, pp. infractus, break: see infract[1].] One who infracts or infringes; a violator; a breaker.

Who shall be depositary of the oaths and leagues of princes, or fulminate against the perjur'd infractors of them? Lord Herbert, Hist. Hen. VIII., p. 363.

infractous (in-frak'tus), a. [< L. infractus, pp. of infringere, break: see infract[1], infringe.] In bot., bent abruptly inward. [Rare.]

infra dig. (in'frą dig). [An abbr. of L. infra dignitatem: infra, below; dignitatem, acc. of dignita(t-)s, dignity: see dignity.] Beneath one's dignity; unbecoming to one's character, position, or status in society. [Colloq.]

infra-esophageal (in"frą-ē-sō-faj'ē-ąl), a. [< L. infra, below, + œsophagus, esophagus: see esophageal.] Same as subesophageal.

The nervous system in the Amphipoda consists of supra-œsophageal or cerebral ganglia, united by commissures with an infra-œsophageal mass.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 316.

infraglottic (in-frą-glot'ik), a. [< L. infra, below, + NL. glottis, glottis: see glottis, glottic[2].] Situated below the glottis.

infragrant (in-frā'grant), a. [< in-[3] + fragrant.] Not fragrant; inodorous.

We shall both be a brown infragrant powder in thirty or forty years. Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, xii.

infragular (in-frą-gū'lär), a. [< L. infra, below, + gula, the throat: see gular.] Subesophageal, as a ganglion of certain mollusks.

The under part of the infragular ganglion is 6-lobed [in Helicidæ], whilst it is 4-lobed in Limacidæ.
Knight's Cyc. Nat. Hist. (1855), III. 65.

infrahuman (in-frą-hū'mąn), a. [< L. infra, below, + humanus, human: see human.] Having attributes or qualities lower than the human in the scale of being: the opposite of superhuman.

We must conceive of it [ultimate entity] as either intellectual or unintellectual, and if it is not human, then as superhuman or infrahuman.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 65.

infrahyoid (in-frą-hī'oid), a. [< L. infra, below, + NL. hyoides, hyoid: see hyoid.] Situated below the hyoid bone: specifically applied in human anatomy to a region of the front of the neck, and to a group of muscles in this region, as the sternohyoid, sternothyroid, thyrohyoid, and omohyoid, collectively known as depressors of the os hyoides: opposed to suprahyoid.

infralabialis (in-frā-lā-bi-ā'lis), n.; pl. infralabiales (-lēz). [NL., < L. infra, below, + labium, lip: see labial.] A muscle of the lower lip, commonly called the depressor labii inferioris. Coues and Shute.

infralapsarian (in-frā-lap-sā'ri-an), a. and n. [< L. infra, below (after), + lapsus, fall, lapse (see lapse, n.), + -arian.] I. a. Pertaining to infralapsarianism or to those who hold it.

II. n. [cap.] One who believes in infralapsarianism.

infralapsarianism (in″frā-lap-sā'ri-an-izm), n. [< infralapsarian + -ism.] In theol., the doctrine, held by Augustinians and by many Calvinists, that God planned the creation, permitted the fall, elected a chosen number, planned their redemption, and suffered the remainder to be eternally punished. The Sublapsarians believe that God did not permit but foresaw the fall, while the Supralapsarians hold that God not only permitted but decreed it.

Even the Canons of Dort, the Westminster Confession, and the Helvetic Consensus Formula, which are most pronounced on the doctrine of decrees, stop within the limits of infralapsarianism.
Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 162.

inframammary (in-frā-mam'a-ri), a. [< L. infra, below, + mamma, breast: see mammary.] Lying below the breasts.—Inframammary region, the region of the front of the chest bounded above by the sixth rib and below by the lower limit of the chest.

inframarginal (in-frā-mär'ji-nal), a. [< L. infra, below, + margo (-gin-), breast: see marginal.] In entom., below or posterior to the marginal cell in an insect's wing.—Inframarginal cell, an outer cell in the anterior wing of certain aphids, or plant-lice, behind the marginal cell, and limited posteriorly by the furcal vein.—Inframarginal convolution, the superior temporal convolution.

inframaxillary (in-frā-mak'si-lā-ri), a. and n. [< L. infra, below, + maxilla, jaw: see maxillary.] I. a. 1. Situated under the jaws; submaxillary: as, the inframaxillary nerves.—2. Of or pertaining to the inferior maxillary or lower jaw-bone in general; mandibular.—Inframaxillary nerve, the third or lower division of the fifth cranial or trifacial or trigeminus nerve, more commonly called the inferior maxillary division.

II. n.; pl. inframaxillaries (-riz). The mandible or lower jaw-bone of a vertebrate; the inferior maxillary bone. See intermaxillary.

inframe (in-frām'), v. t. Same as enframe.

This nature in which we are inframed answers to the subjective frame-work of our own mind.
Hoppin, Old England, p. 198.

inframedian (in-frā-mē'di-an), a. [< L. infra, below, + medius, middle: see median.] In zoögeog., below the median belt or zone: applied to one of five zones into which the sea-bottom has been divided with reference to its fauna. The inframedian is succeeded by the abyssal zone. See zone.

inframercurial (in″frā-mėr-kū'ri-al), a. [< L. infra, below, + Mercurius, Mercury: see mercurial.] Same as intramercurial.

inframundane (in-frā-mun'dān), a. [< L. infra, below, + mundus, the world: see mundane.] Lying or being beneath the world; belonging to the lower regions or infernal world.

infranatural (in-frā-nat'ū-ral), a. [< L. infra, below, + natura, nature: see natural.] Below nature; subnatural; hypophysical: the opposite of supernatural. See hypophysical.

If there is a craving in man for the preternatural generally, there seems to be a special tendency in the human mind, when left to itself, to hanker after the infra-natural forms of it. H. N. Oxenham, Short Studies, p. 421.

infranchise†, infranchisement†. Obsolete forms of enfranchise, enfranchisement.

infrangibility (in-fran-ji-bil'i-ti), n. [< infrangible: see -bility.] The state or quality of being infrangible; infrangibleness.

infrangible (in-fran'ji-bl), a. [< F. infrangible = Sp. infrangible = It. infrangibile; as in-[3] + frangible.] 1. Not capable of being broken or separated into parts.

The primitive atoms are supposed infrangible.
G. Cheyne.

The sword broke short, nor could the force withstand (No earthly temper of a mortal hand Could arms divine, infrangible sustain):
The brittle weapon shiver'd on the plain.
Hoole, tr. of Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, vii.

2. Not to be violated or infringed; inviolable: as, an infrangible oath.

infrangibleness (in-fran'ji-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being infrangible.

infra-obliquus (in″frā-ob-lī'kwus), n.; pl. infra-obliqui (-kwī). [NL., < L. infra, below, + obliquus, oblique: see obliquus.] The lower oblique muscle of the eyeball; the obliquus inferior.

infra-ocular (in″frā-ok'ū-lär), a. [< L. infra, below, + oculus, eye: see ocular.] In entom., below the compound eyes: said of antennæ when they are inserted beneath these eyes.

infra-orbital (in″frā-ôr'bi-tal), a. [< L. infra, below, + orbita, orbit: see orbital.] Situated on the floor of, or below, the orbit of the eye; suborbital: chiefly applied to a branch of the trifacial nerve, to the track of that nerve along the floor of the orbit, and to a foramen on the cheek just under the orbit, whence the nerve emerges.—Infra-orbital canal, foramen, etc. See the nouns.

infra-orbitar (in″frā-ôr'bi-tär), a. Same as infra-orbital.

infra-orbitary (in″frā-ôr'bi-tā-ri), a. Same as infra-orbital.

infrapatellar (in″frā-pā-tel'är), a. [< L. infra, below, + patella, the kneepan.] Below the patella.

infrapose (in-frā-pōz'), v. t.; pret. and pp. infraposed, ppr. infraposing. [< L. infra, below, + E. pose: see pose[2].] To place under or beneath.

I had further an opportunity of seeing . . . his own discovery of an instance of terrestrial surface infraposed to the drift-gravels at the east end of the Isle of Wight.
Austen, Proc. Geol. Soc., No. 42.

infraposition (in″frā-pō-zish'on), n. [< L. infra, below, + positio(n-), position: see position.] Position or situation beneath or under.

infraradular (in-frā-rad'ū-lär), a. [< L. infra, below, + NL. radula, q. v.] Situated under or below the radula or lingual ribbon of a mollusk.

On the top of the muscles of the infraradular sheet there are two ganglia united to each other and to their fellows on the opposite side.
R. J. H. Gibson, Trans. Roy. Soc. of Edin., XXXII. 627.

infrarectus (in-frā-rek'tus), n.; pl. infrarecti (-tī). [< L. infra, below, + rectus, right: see rectus.] The lower straight muscle of the eyeball; the rectus inferior. See cut under eyeball.

infra-red (in'frā-red), a. [< L. infra, below, + E. red[1].] Below the red. The infra-red rays of the spectrum are those invisible rays which have a greater wave-length and are less refrangible than the red rays at the lower end of the visible spectrum. (See spectrum.) Contrasted with ultra-violet.

infrascapular (in-frā-skap'ū-lär), a. [< L. infra, below, + scapula, shoulder-blade: see scapular.] Situated beneath the scapula—that is, on its under surface or venter; lying beneath the shoulder-blade; subscapular.

infrascapularis (in-frā-skap-ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. infrascapulares (-rēz). [NL.: see infrascapular.] The teres minor. See teres.

infraserratus (in″frā-se-rā'tus), n.; pl. infraserrati (-tī). [< L. infra, below, + serratus, serrate: see serrate.] The serratus posticus inferior.

infraspinal (in-frā-spī'nal), a. [< L. infra, below, + spina, spine: see spinal.] Same as infraspinous.

infraspinate (in-frā-spī'nāt), a. [< L. infra, below, + spina, spine: see spinate.] Same as infraspinous.

infraspinatus (in″frā-spī-nā'tus), n.; pl. infraspinati (-tī). [NL.: see infraspinate.] The muscle which occupies the infraspinous fossa, and is inserted into the middle facet of the greater tuberosity of the humerus.

infraspinous (in-frā-spī'nus), a. [< L. infra, below, + spina, spine: see spinous.] Situated below the spine of the scapula. Also infraspinal, infraspinate.—Infraspinous fascia, fossa, etc. See the nouns.

infrastapedial (in″frā-stā-pē'di-al), a. and n. [< L. infra, below, + stapes, stirrup, mod. stapes.] I. a. Situated below the axis or main part of the stapes or columella auris: specifically applied to an element or part of that bone in some animals, as birds, supposed by Flower to represent the stylohyal bone of a mammal.

The stylo-hyal of a mammal is not fairly developed in a bird, unless contained in or represented by another claw of the stapes (an infra-stapedial element).
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds (1884), p. 186.

II. n. An inferior element of the columella auris; an infrastapedial bone.

Infra-stapedial, which will unite with . . . the stylohyal. Coues, Key to N. A. Birds (1884), p. 154.

infrastigmatal (in-frā-stig'ma-tal), a. [< L. infra, below, + NL. stigma, q. v.] In entom., situated below the stigmata or breathing-pores: as, an infrastigmatal line on a larva.

infrastipular (in-frā-stip'ū-lär), a. [< L. infra, below, + NL. stipula, q. v.] In bot., situated below the stipules: applied to outgrowths, usually in the nature of spines, below the stipules, as in some roses.

infrathoracic (in″frā-thō-ras'ik), a. [< L. infra, below, + NL. thorax, q. v.] 1. Situated below the thorax.—2. Situated on the lower part of the thorax: specifically applied to the lower six pairs of thoracispinal nerves.

infratrochlear (in-frā-trok'lē-är), a. [< L. infra, below, + trochlea, pulley: see trochlea.] Situated below the trochlea or pulley of the superior oblique muscle of the eyeball, at the inner corner of the orbit of the eye: as, the infratrochlear nerve, a branch of the fifth cranial nerve, which issues from the orbit below the trochlea.

He had relieved the pain in a glaucoma absolutum by lacerating the infratrochlear nerve—Badal's operation.
Medical News, XLIX. 136.

in fraudem legis (in frâ'dem lē'jis). [L.: in, in; fraudem, acc. of fraus, fraud; legis, gen. of lex, law: see fraud and lex.] In fraud of the law: said of something devised so as to evade or circumvent the law or to pervert its proceeding, in such sense as to be void on that account.

infravaginal (in-frā-vaj'i-nal), a. [< L. infra, below, + LN. vagina, vagina: see vaginal.] Situated below the vaginal junction: as, the infravaginal cervix uteri.

infrequence (in-frē'kwens), n. [= F. infréquence = Sp. infrecuencia = Pg. infrequencia = It. infrequenza, < L. infrequentia, a small number, fewness, solitariness, < infrequen(t-)s, seldom, rare, infrequent: see infrequent.] Same as infrequency. [Rare.]

Is it solitude and infrequence of visitation? This may perhaps be troublesome to a man that knows not to entertain himself. Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 4.

infrequency (in-frē'kwen-si), n. [As infrequence: see -ency.] 1. The state of being infrequent or of rarely occurring; uncommonness; rareness.

Either through desuetude, or infrequency, or meer formality of devotion, he has suffered his mind to grow alienated from God. Young, Sermons (1678), p. 18.

2†. The state of being little frequented; seclusion; solitude.

It was the solitude and infrequency of the place that brought the dragon thither.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1078.

infrequent (in-frē'kwent), a. [= F. infréquent = Sp. infrecuente = Pg. It. infrequente, < L. infrequen(t-)s, infrequent, seldom, rare, < in- priv. + frequen(t-)s, crowded, frequent: see frequent.] 1. Not frequent or customary; rare; uncommon; unaccustomed.

The acte where of [frugality] is at this daye as infrequent or out of use amonge all sortes of men as the termes be Straunge vnto them which haue not bene well instructed in Latyn. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 21.

A sparing and infrequent worshipper of the Deity betrays an habitual disregard of him.
Wollaston, Religion of Nature, § 1.

2. In zoöl., being, as component parts, far removed from one another; distant; not numerous or close: as, infrequent spines, punctures, etc.

infrequently (in-frē'kwent-li), adv. Not frequently.

infriction (in-frik'shon), n. [< in-[2] + friction.] A rubbing in, as of a medicine.

The inflammation, he said, set in after the fourth infriction. Medical News, LIII. 101.

infrigidate† (in-frij'i-dāt), v. t. [< LL. infrigidatus, pp. of infrigidare, make cold, < L. in, in, to, + frigidare, make cold, < frigidus, cold: see frigid.] To chill; make cold; refrigerate.

Whose coldness as it seems did not infrigidate those upper parts of the glass to whose level the liquor itself did not reach. Boyle, Works, I. 393.

infrigidation† (in-frij-i-dā'shon), n. [= OF. infrigidation, < LL. infrigidatiō(n-), a cooling, < infrigidare, make cold: see infrigidate.] The act of infrigidating or making cold; refrigeration.

The infrigidation of that air by the snow.
Boyle, Works, II. 513.

Madame de Bourignon . . . used to boast that she had not only the spirit of continency in herself, but that she had also the power of communicating it to all who beheld her. This the scoffers of those days called the gift of infrigidation. Tatler, No. 126.

infringe (in-frinj'), v.; pret. and pp. infringed, ppr. infringing. [< L. infringere (> It. infringere = Sp. Pg. infringir = F. enfreindre), break off, break, bruise, weaken, destroy, < in, in, + frangere, break: see fraction, and cf. infract[1].] I. trans. 1. To commit a breach or infraction of; act contrary to, as a law, right, or obligation; transgress, either by action or by negligence; violate; break.

The King told them it never was in his Thought to infringe their Liberties. Baker, Chronicles, p. 130.

Why should we attempt to infringe the rights and properties of our neighbors?
Washington, quoted in Bancroft's Hist. Const., I. 456.

He could infringe the franchises of the fellows of a college and take away their livings.
D. Webster, Speech, March 10, 1818.

2†. To annul or hinder.

Homilies . . . do not infringe the efficacy, although but read. Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

All our power
To be infringed, our freedom and our being.
Milton, P. R., i. 62.

II. intrans. To encroach; trespass; intrude: followed by on or upon: as, to infringe upon one's rights.

The sides of the front are dilated, infringing on the eyes. Horn.

=Syn. Encroach upon, Trench upon, etc. See trespass, v. i.

infringement (in-frinj'ment), n. [< infringe + -ment.] A breach or infraction, as of a law, right, or obligation; violation; transgression.

We scarce ever had a prince who, by fraud or violence, had not made some infringement on the constitution.
Burke, Vind. of Nat. Society.

Where an attempt at infringement was made, the aggressor found himself matched against a wide and powerful union of powers instinctively actuated by the intention of right. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 213.

Infringement of copyright, patent, or trade-mark, such a copying, imitation, or reproduction as violates the exclusive right of the owner, and therefor will sustain an action. =Syn. Breach, non-fulfilment, invasion, intrusion, trespass, encroachment.

infringer (in-frin'jėr), n. One who infringes or violates; a violator.

To see the infringers of this commandment to be imprisoned, he gave charge to all justices, maiors, sheriffs, bailiffs, and constables.
Strype, Memorials, Edw. VI., an. 1548.

infringible† (in-frin'ji-bl), a. [< OF. infringible, infrangible, < L. in- priv. + frangere, break.] Unbreakable; indissoluble. [Rare.]

Hauing betwixt themselues sealed with their hands the infringible band of faith and troth in the heart, . . . hee tooke leaue of his faire lady.
Breton, An Olde Man's Lesson, p. 13.

infructuose (in-fruk'tū-ōs), a. Same as infructuous.

infructuous (in-fruk'tū-us), a. [= F. infructueux = Pr. infructuos = Sp. Pg. infructuoso = It. infruttuoso, < L. infructuosus, unfruitful, < in- priv. + fructuosus, fruitful: see fructuous.] Not fruitful; unproductive; unprofitable.

Lutheranism . . . bound itself hastily to definitions and formulæ which produced new divisions, and a scholasticism more bitter, controversial, and infructuous than the old. Contemporary Rev., LIV. 715.

infructuously (in-fruk'tū-us-li), adv. In an infructuous manner; uselessly; unprofitably.

He [the actor] soon found that his art was infructuously employed in obtaining applause; his reputation began to depend upon press notices.
Dion Boucicault, N. A. Rev., CXLV. 36.

infrugal (in-frö'gal), a. [< in-[3] + frugal.] Not frugal; extravagant; prodigal; wasteful.

What should betray them to such infrugal expences of time, I can give no account without making severe reflexions on their discretion.
J. Goodman, Winter Evening Conferences, p. 21.

infrugiferous† (in-frō-jif'ė-rus), a. [< in-[3] + frugiferous.] Not bearing fruit. Bailey, 1727.

infucate† (in'fū-kāt), v. t. [< LL. infucatus, painted, as if pp. of infucare*, paint, < in, in, on, + fucare, paint, < fucus, paint: see fucus.] To paint; stain; daub. Coles, 1717.

infucation† (in-fū-kā'shọn), n. [< infucate + -ion.] The act of painting or staining, especially the face. E. Phillips, 1706.

infula (in'fū-lä), n.; pl. infulæ (-lē). [L., a band, a woolen fillet.] 1. In Rom. antiq., a flock of white and red wool, drawn into the form of a wreath or fillet, worn on the head on solemn occasions, as by priests and vestals, and bound to the head of sacrificial victims. Brides also carried wool on a distaff, which they twisted into an infula and fixed upon the husband's door on entering his house.

2. Eccles.: (a) In the ancient church, a head-covering of Christian priests or bishops. (b) In medieval times, a chasuble. (c) One of the two lappets of a miter. Formerly called fanon.—3. In her.: (a) A cap or head-dress used as a bearing. Many different forms have been used. (b) One of the ribbons of a miter or of the electoral crown, generally represented as fringed.

Two short bands of some rich material, fringed at the ends, form the infulæ of a mitre, and depend from it, one on either side. Encyc. Brit., VI. 463.

infumate (in'fū-māt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infumated, ppr. infumating. [< L. infumatus, pp. of infumare, smoke: see infume.] To dry by smoking; smoke.

Infumated, smoked; dried in the smoke. Bailey, 1737.

infumate (in'fū-māt), a. [< L. infumatus, pp.: see the verb.] In entom., clouded slightly with brownish black; shaded as if with smoke.

infumated (in'fū-mā-ted), a. Same as infumate.

infumation (in-fū-mā'shọn), n. [< infumate + -ion.] The act of drying or curing in smoke; smoking. Bailey, 1731.

infume† (in-fūm'), v. t. Same as enfume.

infund (in-fund'), v. t. [< L. infundere, pour in: see infound, an older form. Cf. fuse[1].] To pour in. Davies.

They are . . . only the ministers of Him which infundeth and poureth into all men grace. Becon, Works, II. 562.

infundibula, n. Plural of infundibulum.

infundibular (in-fun-dib'ū-lär), a. [< infundibulum + -ar[3].] Same as infundibuliform.

Infundibulata (in-fun-dib-ū-lā'tä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of infundibulatus: see infundibulate.] Gervais's name for the marine polyzoans as an order of Polyzoa which have the cell-mouth circular and infundibulate. It corresponds to the modern order Gymnolæmata, and contains the Chilostomata, Cyclostomata, and Ctenostomata, as distinguished from the Phylactolæmata.

infundibulate (in-fun-dib'ū-lāt), a. [< NL. infundibulatus, < L. infundibulum, funnel: see infundibulum.] 1. Having a funnel or infundibulum; specifically, of or pertaining to the Infundibulata.—2. Same as infundibuliform.

infundibuliform (in-fun-dib'ū-li-fôrm), a. [< L. infundibulum, a funnel, + forma, shape.] Having the form of a funnel; funnel-shaped.

Infundibuliform Corolla of Datura Stramonium.

Where the sac of an inguinal hernia passes through the internal ring, the infundibuliform process of the transversalis fascia forms one of its coverings. H. Gray, Anat.

Specifically—(a) In bot., having the form of a tube enlarging gradually upward and spreading widely at the summit: said of a gamopetalous corolla, as that of a morning-glory. (b) In entom., applied to joints of the antennæ, etc., when the basal part is cylindrical or nearly so, and the apical part gradually increases in diameter: distinguished from crateriform. Also infundibular, infundibulate.

Certain ciliated infundibuliform organs . . . occur on the intestinal mesentery of Sipunculus. Encyc. Brit., II. 70.

Infundibuliform fascia. See fascia.

infundibulum (in-fun-dib'ū-lum), n.; pl. infundibula (-lä). [L., a funnel, lit. that which is poured into, < infundere, pour into, < in, into, + fundere, pour: see found[3], fuse[1]. Hence ult. funnel.] 1. In anat., a funnel-shaped organ or part.—2. In zöol.: (a) The funnel or siphon of a cephalopod, formed by the coalescence or apposition of the epipodia: supposed by Huxley to be formed by the union and folding into a tubular form of processes which correspond to the epipodia of pteropods and branchiogastropods. See cut under Dibranchiata. (b) One of the gastric cavities of the Ctenophora, into which the gastric sac leads; a chamber connecting the gastric cavity with the entire system of canals of the body, and also leading to the aboral pores. It corresponds to the common axial cavity of actinozoans. See cut under Ctenophora. (c) The dilated upper extremity of the oviduct of a bird, which receives the ovum from the ovarium, corresponding to the fimbriated extremity of the Fallopian tube of a mammal.—3. [cap.] A genus of mollusks.—Infundibula of the kidney. (a) The calyces. (b) The two or three main divisions of the pelvis of the kidney, formed by the confluence of the calyces.—Infundibula of the lungs, the elongated and funnel-shaped sacs set with air-cells which terminate the air-passages of the lungs.—Infundibulum of the brain, the funnel-shaped downward prolongation of the floor of the third ventricle, which it connects with the pituitary body.—Infundibulum of the cochlea, the thin plate of bone, shaped like one half of a funnel divided longitudinally, at the apex of the modiolus of the ear. It is the termination of the lamina of bone which divides the turns of the cochlea from one another.—Infundibulum of the ethmoid bone, the passage in the ethmoid bone which leads up from the middle meatus of the nose to the anterior ethmoid cells.—Infundibulum of the heart, the conical upper part of the right ventricle, from which the pulmonary artery arises. Also called conus arteriosus (arterial cone).

infuneral† (in-fū'nė-ral), v. t. [< in-[2] + funeral.] To bury with funeral rites.

As though her flesh did but infuneral
Her buried ghost. G. Fletcher, Christ's Victory.

infurcation (in-fėr-kā'shọn), n. [< in-[2] + furcation. Cf. ML. infurcare, suspend on a gibbet, < L. in, on, + furcare, fork, gibbet.] A forked expansion or divergence. Craig.

infuriate (in-fū'ri-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infuriated, ppr. infuriating. [< ML. infuriatus, pp. of infuriare, enrage, < L. in, in, + furiare, enrage, < furia, rage, fury: see fury.] To render furious or mad; enrage; make raging.

They tore the reputation of the clergy to pieces by their infuriated declamations and invectives, before they lacerated their bodies by their massacres.
Burke, A Regicide Peace, ii.

infuriate (in-fū'ri-āt), a. [< ML. infuriatus, pp.: see the verb.] Enraged; raging; mad: as, an infuriate lunatic.

A mine with deadly stores
Infuriate burst, and a whole squadron'd host Whirl'd through the riven air.
W. Thompson, Sickness, v.

infuscate (in-fus'kāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. infuscated, ppr. infuscating. [< L. infuscatus, pp. of infuscare, make dark or dusky, < in, in, + fuscare, make dark, < fuscus, dark, dusky: see fuscous. Cf. obfuscate.] To darken; make dusky; obscure. Bailey. [Rare.]

infuscate (in-fus'kāt), a. [< L. infuscatus, pp.: see the verb.] In entom., clouded with brown; darkened with a fuscous shade or cloud: as, apex of the wing infuscate.

infuscation (in-fus-kā'shọn), n. [< infuscate + -ion.] The act of darkening; obscuration; the state of being dusky or clouded. Bailey. [Rare.]

infuse (in-fūz'), v. t.; pret. and pp. infused, ppr. infusing. [< ME. enfusen = F. infuser, < L. infusus, pp. of infundere, pour in, spread over: see infund, infound.] 1. To pour in or into, as a liquid; introduce and pervade with, as an ingredient: as, to infuse a flavor into sauce.

'Tis born with all: the love of Nature's works
Is an ingredient in the compound man
Infus'd at the creation of the kind.
Cowper, Task, iv. 733.

2. To introduce as by pouring; cause to penetrate; insinuate; instil: with into: chiefly in figurative uses.

Many other axioms and advices there are touching those proprieties and effects which studies do infuse and instil into manners. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 299.

It is tropically observed by honest old Socrates that heaven infuses into some men at their birth a portion of intellectual gold. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 312.

It [Alexander's conquest] had the effect of uniting into one great interest the divided commonwealths of Greece, and infusing a new and more enlarged public spirit into the councils of their statesmen. Emerson, War.

3. To steep; extract the principles or qualities of, as a vegetable substance, by pouring a liquid upon it; make an infusion of.

Yet such [Rack] as they have they esteem as a great Cordial; especially when Snakes and Scorpions have been infused therein, as I have been informed.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 53.

One ounce of dried leaves is infused in ten ounces of warm water. Coxe.

4. To affect or modify by infusion; mingle; hence, to imbue; tinge: followed by with.

Drink infused with flesh will nourish faster and easier than drink and meat together. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Methinks a woman of this valiant spirit
Should, if a coward hear her speak these words,
Infuse his breast with magnanimity.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 4.

Besides, the Briton is so naturally infus'd
With true poetic rage that in their measures art
Doth rather seem precise than comely.
Drayton, Polyolbion, vi. 252.

5†. To pour, or pour out; shed; diffuse.

Yf ofte uppon the rootes as thai stonde
The boles galle enfused be.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 88.

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I bless'd with which you may see.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 2.

Infused cognition. See cognition. =Syn. 2. Instil, Inculcate, etc. See implant.

infuse† (in-fūz'), n. [< L. infusus, a pouring in, < infundere, pp. infusus, pour in: see infuse, v.] An infusion.

Vouchsafe to shed into my barren spright
Some little drop of thy celestiall dew,
That may my rymes with sweet infuse embrew.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Love, l. 47.

infuser (in-fū′zėr), n. One who or that which infuses.

It was a strange exaction of Nebuchadnezzar upon his magi to declare to him not onely the meaning, but the very dream, as if they had been the infusers of it.
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, I. xvi. § 6.

infusibility[1] (in-fū-zi-bil′i-ti), n. [< infusible[1] + -ity: see -bility.] Capability of being infused or poured in.

infusibility[2] (in-fū-zi-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. infusibilité = Sp. infusibilidad = Pg. infusibilidade = It. infusibilità; as infusible[2] + -ity: see -bility.] Incapability of being fused or melted.

infusible[1] (in-fū′zi-bl), a. [As infuse + -ible.] Capable of being infused. [Rare.]

From whom the doctrines being infusible into all, it will be more necessary to forewarn all of the danger of them. Hammond.

infusible[2] (in-fū′zi-bl), a. [= F. Sp. infusible = Pg. infusivel = It. infusibile; as in-[3] + fusible.] Not fusible; incapable of fusion or of being melted: as, an infusible crucible; infusible substances.

infusibleness (in-fū′zi-bl-nes), n. Infusibility.

infusion (in-fū′zhọn), n. [= F. infusion = Pr. ★infusio, enfuzio = Sp. infusión = Pg. infusão = It. infusione, < L. infusio(n-), a pouring in, a watering, < infundere, pp. infusus, pour in: see infound, infuse.] 1. The act of infusing, pouring in, imbuing, or instilling: as, the infusion of good principles.

Our language has received innumerable elegancies and improvements from that infusion of Hebraisms which are derived to it out of the poetical passages in Holy Writ.
Addison.

In Italy the question of rights had become so complicated that nothing but the infusion of an element of idea could have produced even a semblance of order out of the chaos. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 222.

2. That which is infused or diffused; something poured in or mingled.

With what infusion doth it [deceitfulness] so far intoxicate mankind to make them dote upon it, against the convictions of reason and dictates of Conscience.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

She could not conceive a game wanting the spritely infusion of chance. Lamb, Mrs. Battle's Opinions on Whist.

There is then an undoubted British infusion in the English people. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 149.

3. The process of steeping a substance, as a plant, in water, in order to extract its virtues. —4. A liquid extract or essence obtained by steeping a vegetable substance.

Infusions are generally prepared by pouring boiling water upon the vegetable substance, and macerating in a tightly closed vessel till the liquid cools.
U. S. Dispensatory, p. 788.

5. A pouring, or pouring out, as upon an object; affusion: formerly used of that method of baptism in which the water is poured upon the person.

The priests, when they baptize, shall not only pour water on the head of the children, but shall plunge them into the laver. This shows that baptism by infusion began to be introduced in cold climates. Jortin, On Eccles. Hist.

The infant is represented as seated naked in the font, while from a vessel the priest pours the water upon the head. Originally used only for sick or infirm persons, the method of baptism by infusion became gradually the established practice, and all doubts as to its validity were removed by appeal to papal and other high authority.
Encyc. Brit., IX. 361.

Method of infusion, in beer-manuf., a method of preparing the mash by treating the bruised malt with water at a temperature of 70° to 75°.

infusive (in-fū′siv), a. [< infuse + -ive.] Having the power of infusion; capable of infusing or imbuing.

Still let my song a nobler note assume,
And sing th' infusive force of Spring on Man.
Thomson, Spring, l. 866.

Infusoria (in-fū-sō′ri-ą), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. infusorium, q. v.] 1. A name given by Otho Fr. Müller to an indiscriminate assemblage of minute, and for the most part microscopic, animal and vegetable organisms frequently developed in infusions of decaying organic substances. The Infusoria in this sense comprehended various desmids, diatoms, and other low plants, with many protozoan animalcules, and also rotifers or wheel-animalcules. Some of these organisms were known to Linnæus, and thrown by him into a genus which he called Chaos, at the end of his class Vermes. Lamarck, Gmelin, and others followed Müller in his understanding of Infusoria. Cuvier made Infusoria the fifth class of Radiata, divided into two orders, Rotifera and Homogenea. See Microzoa, Polygastrica.

2. A class of minute, mostly microscopic, animalcules, provisionally regarded as the highest class of Protozoa. They are endoplastic, having a nucleus; there is a mouth and a rudimentary stomach or gastric cavity; there are vibratile cilia or flagella, but no proper pseudopodia. Most are aquatic and free-swimming, and some are internal parasites; but others form colonies by budding, and when adult are fixed to some solid object. The body consists of an outer transparent cuticle, a cortical layer of firm sarcode, and a central mass of soft or semiliquid sarcode, which acts as a stomach, and in which vacuoles may appear. Embedded in the sarcode is a nucleus (macro-nucleus), near which lies a nucleolus (micro-nucleus). Both of these bodies undergo complicated changes in the reproductive processes. Contractions of the body are effected by sarcode fibers. Reproduction takes place variously. The cilia or flagella are not only organs of locomotion, but form currents by which food is carried into the mouth. The Infusoria have been variously subdivided. A current classification is by division of the class into four orders, based on the character of their cilia or flagella, namely, Ciliata, Flagellata, Choanoflagellata, and Suctoria or Tentaculifera. By S. Kent the Infusoria are called a "legion" or superclass of Protozoa, and include the sponges; and they are divided into three classes, Flagellata or Mastigophora, Ciliata or Trichophora, and Tentaculifera.

Infusoria in a Drop of Water, highly magnified.

1, 1, Astasia hæmatodes; 2, 2, Phacus longicauda; 3, 3, Stentor polymorphus; 4, Codosiga botrytis; 5, Dinobryon sertularia; 6, Rhipidodendron splendidum; 7, Anthophyza vegetans; 8, Dendrosoma virgaria; 9, Acineta ferrum equinum; 10, Podophrya gemmipara; 11, Chilodon cucullus; 12a, Stylonychia mytilus; 12b, the same, conjugation of two individuals; 12c, the same, full of Sphærophrya (parasites); 13a, Vorticella microstoma, beginning of fission; 13b, the same, individuals separating; 14, Aspidisca lyncaster.

Excluding from the miscellaneous assemblage of heterogeneous forms which have passed under this name the Desmideæ, Diatomaceæ, Volvocineæ, and Vibrionidæ, which are true plants, on the one hand, and the comparatively highly organized Rotifera on the other, there remain three assemblages of minute organisms, which may be conveniently comprehended under the general title of Infusoria. These are — (a) The so-called "Monads," or Infusoria flagellata; (b) the Acinetæ, or Infusoria tentaculifera; and (c) the Infusoria ciliata.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 89.

infusorial (in-fū-sō′ri-ąl), a. [< infusorium + -al.] In zoöl.: (a) Developed in infusions, as animalcules. (b) Containing or consisting of infusorians: as, infusorial earth. (c) Having the characters of the Infusoria; pertaining in any way to the Infusoria.—Infusorial earth, a very fine white earth resembling magnesia, but composed largely of the microscopic silicious shells of the vegetable organisms called diatoms. Deposits are found in many parts of the world including certain parts of the United States, especially in Virginia, Maryland, Nevada, Oregon, and California, where there are masses of rock, hundreds of feet in thickness, largely made up of infusorial earth, occurring usually interstratified with volcanic materials, and often in connection with a fine-grained white ash, from which the infusorial beds are not easily distinguished by the eye. This earth is used for polishing articles of metal, and as an absorbent in making explosives with nitroglycerin. Also called infusorial silica, tripoli, tripoli powder, and fossil flour. See Diatomaceæ, dynamite, tripoli.

It [nitro-glycerin] has been found so dangerous that its use by itself has been given up; but on the other hand the mixture of nitro-glycerin and infusorial earth (Kieselguhr) called dynamite or giant powder is now one of the commonest explosives met with. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 445.

infusorian (in-fū-sō′ri-ąn), n. and a. [< infusorium + -an.] I. n. An infusorial animalcule; one of the Infusoria.

II. a. Same as infusorial.

infusoriform (in-fū-sō′ri-fôrm), a. [< infusorium + -form.] Infusorial in form; resembling an infusorian.

As Kölliker first pointed out, the Dicyemids produce two very distinct kinds of embryos, which he distinguished by the terms vermiform and infusoriform.
Stand. Nat. Hist., I. 197.

Infusoriform embryo, in Dicyemida, the embryo of a rhombogenous dicyema. It is bilaterally symmetrical, and consists of an urn, a ciliated body, and two refractive bodies. See cut under Dicyema.

infusorium (in-fū-sō′ri-um), n. [NL., neut. of infusorius* (cf. LL. infusorium, equiv. to suffusorium, a vessel for pouring, < infusor, one who pours), < L. infundere, pp. infusus, pour in: see infuse, infusion.] One of the Infusoria; an infusorial animalcule.

An infusorium swims randomly about.
H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, p. 10.

infusory (in′fū-sọ-ri), a. and n. [< NL. infusorius*: see infusorium.] I. a. Infusorial, as an animalcule, or as earth containing infusorial shells.

II. n.; pl. infusories (-riz). An infusorian.

in futuro (in fū-tū′rō). [L.: in, in; futuro, dat. of futurus, future: see future.] In the future; at a future time; for the future.

ing (ing), n. [< ME. ing, < AS. ing = Icel. eng, f., a meadow, engi, neut., meadow-land, = Dan. eng = Sw. äng, a meadow.] A meadow; especially, a low meadow near a river. The word is found in some local names, as Ingham, Ingthorpe, Dorking, Deeping, Wapping, etc. Coles; Bailey. [Prov. Eng.]

Bill for dividing and inclosing certain open common fields, ings, common pastures, and other commonable lands, within the manors or manor and township of Hemingby, in the county of Lincoln.
Journals of the House of Commons, 1773.

Those alluvial flats which are locally known as ings.
E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, III. 239.

In the lowest situation, as in the water-formed base of a rivered valley, or in swampy dips, shooting up among the arable lands, lay an extent of meadow grounds, or ings, to afford a supply of hay, for cows and working stock, in the winter and spring months.
Maine, Village Communities, p. 91.

-ing[1]. [< ME. -ing, -yng, -inge, -ynge, < AS. -ung, later also -ing (= OS. -ung = OFries. -ing = D. -ing = MLG. LG. -ung = OHG. -unga, MHG. -unge, -ung, G. -ung = Icel. -ung = Dan. -ing = Sw. -ing), a suffix forming nouns of action or being from verbs.] A suffix of Anglo-Saxon origin, usually forming nouns from verbs, expressing the action of the verb. Such nouns may be formed from any verb whatever, and are usually called verbal nouns, being in grammars and dictionaries usually accounted a part of the verb-inflection. It is often a mere chance whether, in a particular instance, the form in -ing is treated as a noun or as a verb. These verbal nouns are now identical in form with the present form of adjectives (present participles) in -ing[2]. In sentences like "he is building a house," the form in -ing[2], though originally a noun in -ing[1], is now regarded as a present participle in -ing[2], and treated, with the auxiliary is, as a finite transitive verb. Strictly, all verbal nouns in -ing[1], being independent words, and no part of the verb, should be entered and defined separately in the dictionaries; but their great number (limited only by the number of verbs) makes this impracticable, and their mixture with the verb, from which their meaning can always be inferred, makes it unnecessary. In this dictionary verbal nouns are entered when there is anything noteworthy in their use or history; others are, to save space, ignored, or if noticed, as in quotations, are included under the original verb. The suffix -ing as attached to verbs is equivalent in force to the Latin suffix -tio(n-), E. -tion (-ation, etc.). In some words, as evening, morning, no accompanying verb is in use.

-ing[2]. [< ME. -ing, -yng, -inge, -ynge, an alteration, through confusion with the verbal-noun suffix -ing[1], of orig. -end, -ende, -inde (-and, -ande), < AS. -ende (in derived nouns -end) = OS. -ende = OFries. -and = D. -end = MLG. -ende, LG. -end = OHG. -anti, -enti, -ende, MHG. G. -end = Icel. -andi = Dan. -ende = Sw. -ande = Goth. -ands (-jands, -ōnds, -jōnds) = L. -an(t-)s, -en(t-)s, -ien(t-)s = Gr. -ων (-οντ-), suffix of ppr. of verbs, all such present participles being also usable as simple adjectives, and such adjectives as nouns of agent: see -ant[1], -ent, which are thus ult. identical with -ing[2].] A suffix of Anglo-Saxon origin, the regular formative of the English present participle of verbs, as in coming, blowing, hearing, leading, etc., such participles being often used as ordinary adjectives, as in 'the coming man,' 'a leading citizen,' 'a charming woman,' etc. It corresponds to the Latin suffixes -ant, -ent (which see). By reason of the alteration and the mixture of idiomatic uses of the verbal noun (in -ing[1]) and the verbal adjective (present participle), great confusion has resulted, and in many constructions the form in -ing may be referred with equal propriety to either origin. See -ing[1].

-ing[3]. [< ME. -ing, < AS. -ing = OHG. -ing, -inc, MHG. -ing, -ung, G. -ung = Icel. -ungr, -ingr, orig. an adj. suffix.] A suffix of nouns, denoting origin, and hence a common patronymic, remaining in some English family or local names and having usually a derivative or patronymic force, 'son of . . .,' as in Anglo-Saxon Billing, son of Bill (literally, 'a sword'); Beorming, son of Beorm; Æthelwulfing, son of Ethelwulf; æthling, son of a noble, etc. Such patronymic names, extending to all the members of a particular family, or tribe, or community, gave rise to many local names formed of such patronymics, properly in genitive plural, with hām, home (village), as in Anglo-Saxon Beormingahām, 'the Beormings' town,' Birmingham; Wælsingahām, Walsingham; Snottingahām, Nottingham; etc. In some words, as farthing, herring, riding[2], whiting[2] (a fish), lording, gelding, the suffix is less definite. In penny and king the suffix is disguised.

-ing[4]. An apparent suffix in some local names, being ing, a meadow, in composition, as in Dorking, etc.

Inga (ing'gä), n. [NL., of S. Amer. origin.] A genus of plants belonging to the family Mimosaceæ, type of the tribe Ingeæ. They are large unarmed shrubs, or trees growing to a height of 60 feet or more, with spikes or heads of large red or white flowers, and abruptly pinnate leaves. The pods are flattened or roundish, with thickened edges, and the seeds are enveloped in a sweet, generally white, pulp. About 200 species are known, all natives of tropical or subtropical America. I. vulpina is a beautiful species sometimes cultivated in conservatories. I. vera, called inga-tree and coco-wood, has pods about 6 inches long, curved like a sickle, and leaves with winged stalks. I. spectabilis is a large showy tree of the Isthmus of Panama, and is cultivated for its edible pods, as is also I. Feuillei of Peru. It is an ancient form, five extinct species having been recognized in a fossil state in the Cretaceous and Tertiary formations of Europe.

Flowering Branch of Inga vulpina. a, flower; b, fruit.

ingage†, ingagement†. Obsolete forms of engage, engagement.

ingalley†, v. t. [< in-2 + galley.] To confine in the galleys.

It pleased the judge in favour of life to ingally them for seaven yeares. Copley, Wits, Fits, and Fancies (1614).

ingan, ingun (ing'gan, -gun), n. Dialectal corruptions of *inion*1, a variant of onion.

And if frae hame
My pouch produc'd an ingan head,
To please my wame.
Ramsay, A Miser's Last Speech.

ingang† (in'gang), n. [< ME. ingang, ingong, < AS. ingang (= OFries. ingong, ingung = D. ingang = MLG. ingank = OHG. ingang, inkang, incanc, MHG. inganc, G. eingang = Icel. inngangr = Dan. indgang = Sw. ingång), < in, in, + gang, a going: see gang.] An entrance or entranceway; specifically, the porch of a church.

ingannation† (in-ga-nā'shon), n. [= It. inganagione, < ingannare, cheat, dupe, < inganno, fraud: see inganno.] Cheat; fraud.

Whereunto whosoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves or inability to resist such trivial ingannations from others, . . . yet are they still within the line of vulgarity, and democratical enemies of truth. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 3.

inganno (in-gän'nō), n. [It., fraud, error, = OF. engan, engaing, engen, m., etc., engaigne, engane, etc., f., address, trick, ruse, dexterity, etc.; ult. < L. ingenium, ingenuity: see engine, etc.; also ingannation.] In music, an interrupted cadence (which see, under cadence); also, an unexpected or sudden resolution or modulation.

ingaol†, v. t. An obsolete form of enjail.

ingate (in'gāt), n. [< *in*1 + *gate*1.] 1†. Entrance; passage inward.

One noble person, who . . . stoppeth the ingate of all that evill that is looked for. Spenser, State of Ireland.

2. In founding, the aperture in a mold through which fused metal is poured: also called inset and tedge.—3. In coal-mining, an entrance to a mine from the shaft.

ingather (in-gaᴛʜ'ėr), v. [< *in*1 + gather.] I. trans. To gather in; bring together.

Two senatus consults . . . enabled the [beneficiary] . . . to treat directly with debtors and creditors of the testator's and himself ingather the corporeal items of the inheritance. Encyc. Brit., XX. 707.

II. intrans. To gather together.

Then the ingathering streams are to branch off like the Nile into as many channels to empty the river as had united to fill it. The Advance, March 24, 1887.

ingathering (in'gaᴛʜ'ėr-ing), n. [Verbal n. of ingather, v.] The act of gathering or collecting together; specifically, the gathering in or storing of a harvest.

I require you in God's behalf to consider the great need the prisoners of God are in the prisons at London, and make some ingatherings amongst your neighbours for the relief of them.
Bp. Ridley, in Bradford's Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 400.

Feast of Ingathering. Same as Feast of Tabernacles (which see, under tabernacle).

The feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field. Ex. xxiii. 16.

Ingeæ (in'jē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Inga + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the family Mimosaceæ, typified by the genus Inga, having regular flowers, a valvate calyx and corolla, many, often very numerous, stamens, and the pollen-grains aggregated.

ingelable (in-jel'a-bl), a. [< L. ingelabilis*, < in- priv. + gelabilis*, that may be frozen, < gelare, freeze: see *geal*1.] Incapable of being congealed.

ingeminate† (in-jem'i-nāt), v. t. [< L. ingeminatus, pp. of ingeminare, redouble, repeat, < in, in, + geminare, double: see geminate.] To redouble; repeat.

Euclia . . . appears in the heavens, singing an applausive Song or Pæan of the whole, which she takes occasion to ingeminate in the second chorus.
B. Jonson, Love's Triumph.

He would often ingeminate the word peace, peace!
Clarendon, Great Rebellion.

ingeminate† (in-jem'i-nāt), a. [< L. ingeminatus, pp.: see the verb.] Redoubled; repeated.

In this we are sufficiently concluded by that ingeminate expression used by St. Paul: "In Jesus Christ nothing can avail but a new creature."
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 185.

ingemination† (in-jem-i-nā'shon), n. [< ingeminate + -ion.] Repetition; reduplication; iteration.

The iteration and ingemination of a given effect, moving through subtile variations that sometimes disguise the theme. De Quincey, Style, i.

ingen†, n. A Middle English form of engine.

Agaynste jeauntis on-gentill haue we joined with ingendis. York Plays, p. 292.

ingender†, ingenderer†. Obsolete forms of engender, engenderer.

ingendrure†, n. See engendrure.

ingene†, n. [< L. ingenium, genius: see ingenious, engine, ingine.] Genius; wit; ingenuity.

ingener†, n. Same as enginer.

ingenerability1 (in-jen″ė-ra-bil'i-ti), n. [< *ingenerable*1: see -bility.] Capability of being ingenerated or produced within. [Rare.]

ingenerability2† (in-jen″ė-ra-bil'i-ti), n. [< *ingenerable*2: see -bility.] Incapability of being generated.

ingenerable1 (in-jen'ė-ra-bl), a. [< L. as if ingenerabilis*, that may be generated, < ingenerare, ingenerate, generate: see *ingenerate*1.] That may be ingenerated or produced within. [Rare.]

ingenerable2† (in-jen'ė-ra-bl), a. [= F. ingénérable = Sp. ingenerable = It. ingenerabile; as *in-*3 + generable.] Not generable; incapable of being engendered or produced.

Xenophanes holdeth the world to be eternall, ingenerable, uncreated, and incorruptible.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 670.

I must mind you that, if you will not disbelieve Helmont's relations, you must confess that the tria prima are neither ingenerable nor incorruptible substances.
Boyle, Works, I. 502.

ingenerably† (in-jen'ė-ra-bli), adv. Not by generation; so as not to be generable.

Endued with all those several forms and qualities of bodies ingenerably and incorruptibly.
Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 35.

ingenerate1 (in-jen'ė-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. ingenerated, ppr. ingenerating. [< L. ingeneratus, pp. of ingenerare (= It. ingenerare, etc.: see engender), generate within, generate, engender, < in, in, + generare, generate: see generate, and cf. engender, gender, v.] To generate or produce within. [Rare.]

Those noble habits are ingenerated in the soul.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The Spirit of God must . . . ingenerate in us a true humility, and a christian meekness of spirit.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 6.

ingenerate1 (in-jen'ė-rāt), a. [< L. ingeneratus, pp. of ingenerare, generate within: see ingenerate, v.] Generated within; inborn; innate.

Those virtues were rather feigned and affected things to serve his ambition than true qualities ingenerate in his judgement or nature. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII.

By your Allegiance and ingenerate worth, . . .
By everything, I you conjure to be True to yourselves. J. Beaumont, Psyche, iv. 204.

ingenerate2 (in-jen'ė-rāt), a. [< L. in- priv. + generatus, pp. of generare, generate: see generate.] Not generated; unbegotten; not brought into existence or not receiving being by generation. At the time of the Arian controversy the Arians used a corresponding word (ἀγέννητος) of God the Son in the sense 'not receiving being by generation,' while the orthodox understood it, as so applied, in the sense 'not brought into existence, increate,' and discriminated the word from ἀγέννητος, unbegotten.

ingeneration (in-jen-ė-rā'shon), n. [= It. ingenerazione, < L. as if ingeneratio*(n-), < ingenerare, produce, engender: see engender and generate.] The act of ingenerating or producing within. Bushnell.

in genere (in jen'ė-rē). [L.: in, in; genere, abl. of genus, kind: see genus.] In kind; in like or similar articles, as distinguished from in specie, or the very same article.

ingeniate† (in-jē'ni-āt), v. t. [< ML. ingeniatus, pp. of ingeniare, contrive: see engine, v.] To contrive; plan.

I must all I can ingeniate
To answer for the same.
Daniel, Funeral Poem.

ingenio (in-jē'ni-ō; Sp. pron. in-hā'ni-ō), n. [Sp., = Pg. ingenho, engenho: see engine.] Engine; mill; works; specifically, sugar-works; a sugar-plantation. [Cuba.]

The ingenios or sugar estates, with large buildings and mills for sugar-refining and distillation of rum, are the most important industrial establishments of the island [Cuba]. Encyc. Brit., VI. 681.

ingeniosity† (in-jē-ni-os'i-ti), n. [= F. ingéniosité = Sp. ingeniosidad, < ML. ingeniosita(t-)s, < L. ingeniosus, ingenious: see ingenious.] The quality of being ingenious; wit; ingenuity; contrivance; ingeniousness.

The like straine of wit was in Lucian and Julian, whose very images are to bee had in high repute for their ingeniosity, but to be spurned at for their grand impiety.
Optick Glasse of Humours (1639).

Whose cunning or ingeniosity no art or known specific can possibly reach to by imitation.
Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 68. (Latham.)

ingenious (in-jē'nius), a. [= F. ingénieux = Pr. enginhos = Sp. engeñoso, ingenioso = Pg. engenhoso, ingenioso = It. ingenioso, < L. ingeniosus, ingenuosus, endowed with good natural capacity, gifted with genius, < ingenium, innate or natural quality, nature, natural capacity, genius, a genius, an invention (> ult. E. engine, obs. ingine, ingen, and contr. *gin*4, q. v.), < in, in, + gignere, OL. genere, produce: see genus.] 1. Possessing inventive genius or faculty; apt in inventing, contriving, or constructing; skilful in the use of things or words: as, an ingenious mechanic; an ingenious author.

The Natives [of Guam] are very ingenious beyond any People in making Boats, or Proes, as they are called in the East-Indies, and therein they take great delight.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 298.

As chance is the operator assigned in a fortuitous concourse of atoms, we would know what this chance, this wise and ingenious artist, is. Brooke, Universal Beauty, ii., note.

2†. Mentally bright or clever; witty; conversable.

We had ye greate poet Mr. Waller in our companie, and some other ingenious persons. Evelyn, Diary, July 5, 1646.

3. Marked or characterized by inventive genius; displaying or proceeding from skill in contrivance or construction; witty or clever in form or spirit; well conceived; apt: as, an ingenious machine; an ingenious process or performance; ingenious criticism.—4†. Manifesting or requiring mental brightness or cleverness; intellectual; improving.

Here let us breathe, and haply institute
A course of learning, and ingenious studies.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1.

5†. Ingenuous. [Ingenious and ingenuous were formerly often used interchangeably, and sometimes it is difficult to determine which sense was really intended.]

Amintor, thou hast an ingenious look,
And shouldst be virtuous: it amazeth me
That thou canst make such base malicious lies.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iii. 1.

Such was the Operation of your most ingenious and affectionate Letter, and so sweet an Entertainment it gave me. Howell, Letters, I. i. 32.

The [early] printers did not discriminate between . . . ingenuous and ingenious.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xx.

= Syn. 1. Inventive, bright, acute, constructive. See genius.

ingeniously (in-jē'nius-li), adv. 1. In an ingenious manner; with ingenuity; with skill; wittily; cleverly.

It was ingeniously said of Vaucanson that he was as much an automaton as any which he made.
I. D'Israeli, Lit. Char., p. 137.

2†. Ingenuously; frankly.

For my part, I ingeniously acknowledge that hitherto . . . I never fawned upon any man's fortunes, whose person and merit I preferred not. Ford, Line of Life.

ingeniousness (in-jē'nius-nes), n. 1. The quality of being ingenious or prompt in invention; ingenuity.—2†. Cleverness; brightness; aptness.

He shewed as little ingenuity as ingeniousnesse who cavilled at the map of Grecia for imperfect because his father's house in Athens was not represented therein.
Fuller, General Worthies, xxv.

3†. Ingenuousness; candor.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness, as well as innocence, there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle, Works, II. 444.

ingenite† (in-jen'it), a. [= Sp. ingénito = Pg. It. ingenito, < L. ingenitus, inborn, pp. of ingignere (OL. ingenere), ingenerate, implant, < in, in, + gignere (OL. genere), produce, generate, pp. genitus, born: see genus. Cf. ingenuous.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

It is natural or ingenite, which comes by some defect of the organs and over-much brain. Burton.

So what you impart
Comes not from others principles, or art,
But is ingenite all, and still your owne.
Cartwright, Poems (1651).

Since their ingenite gravity remains,
What girder binds, what prop the frame sustains?
Sir R. Blackmore, Creation, iv.

ingenium (in-jē'ni-um), n. [L., ability, genius: see ingenious, engine.] Bent or turn of mind; innate talent. [Rare.]

It [a poem] will serve to show something of Jan's youthful ingenium. Geo. MacDonald, What's Mine's Mine, p. 96.

ingénue (aṅ-zhā-nü'), n. [F., fem. of ingénu, < L. ingenuus, ingenuous: see ingenuous.] An ingenuous, artless girl or young woman; a woman or girl who displays innocent candor or simplicity; specifically, such a character represented on the stage, or the actress who plays it.

Was this lady more or less of a woman of the world than he had imagined? Was there not after all something of the ingénue about her? To be sure, a widow cannot, as a general thing, be accurately described as an ingénue; but, practically, this widow might be so.
J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 67.

He must be entreated . . . to permit us more of beauty and of charm than is vouchsafed by the scanty utterances of the ingénue of the present play.
The Academy, April 6, 1889, p. 245.

ingenuity (in-jē-nū'i-ti), n. [= F. ingénuité = Sp. ingenuidad = Pg. ingenuidade = It. ingenuità, ingenuity, cleverness, < L. ingenuita(t-)s, the condition or character of a free-born man, frankness, < ingenuus, native, free-born: see ingenuous. The senses are in part (2, 3) dependent on the related adjective ingenious.] 1†. Ingenuousness; frankness; openness of heart.

He had found upon Oath such a Clearness of Ingenuity in the Duke of Buckingham that satisfied him of his Innocency. Howell, Letters, I. iii. 29.

See the ingenuity of Truth, who, when she gets a free and willing hand, opens herself faster than the pace of method and discours can overtake her.
Milton, Areopagitica, p. 22.

True faith is full of ingenuity and hearty simplicity, free from suspicion, wise and confident.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, iv. 1.

2. The quality of being ingenious; inventive capacity or faculty; aptness in contrivance or combination, as of things or ideas; skill; cleverness: as, ingenuity displayed in the construction of machines, or of arguments or plots.

I think their greatest ingenuity [that of the Achinese] is in building their Flying Proes; which are made very smooth, kept neat and clean, and will sail very well.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 127.

I do not know what can occur to one more monstrous than to see persons of ingenuity address their services and performances to men no way addicted to liberal arts.
Steele, Spectator, No. 188.

There is no limit to the ingenuity of a lover in framing excuses for the actions of the person beloved.
Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xli.

3. Ingenious contrivance; skilfulness of design, construction, or execution: as, the ingenuity of a machine; the ingenuity of a puzzle or a poem.=Syn. 2. Abilities, Cleverness, etc. (see genius); inventiveness, turn, knack, smartness.

ingenuous (in-jen'ū-us), a. [= F. ingénu = Sp. Pg. It. ingenuo, < L. ingenuus, native, free-born, noble, upright, frank, candid, < ingignere (OL. ingenere), ingenerate: see ingenite.] 1†. Free-born; of honorable extraction.

Rods and ferulas were not used by Ammonius, as being properly the punishment of slaves, and not the correction of ingenuous freeborn men. Dryden, Plutarch, II. 359.

2. Generous; noble: as, an ingenuous ardor or zeal.

Nothing depraves ingenuous Spirits, and corrupts clear Wits, more than Want and Indigence.
Howell, Letters, I. vi. 14.

3. Free from restraint or reserve; frank; open; candid: used of persons or things: as, an ingenuous mind; an ingenuous confession.

And in 's ingenuous countenance having read Pure characters of Worth, he doubted not All freest Trust in his fair Slave to put.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 140.

That finest color in nature, according to the ancient Greek, the blush of an ingenuous youth.
Sumner, Orations, I. 169.

Elaborate sculptures, full of ingenuous intention and of the reality of early faith, are in a remarkable state of preservation. H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 79.

4†. Same as ingenious.

Let us spend . . . all our desires and stratagems, all our witty and ingenuous faculties, . . . towards the arriving thither. Jer. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. § 4.

=Syn. 3. Frank, Naïve, etc. (see candid); unreserved, artless, guileless, straightforward, truthful.

ingenuously (in-jen'ū-us-li), adv. In an ingenuous manner; frankly; openly; candidly.

ingenuousness (in-jen'ū-us-nes), n. 1. The character of being ingenuous; openness of heart; frankness; candor.

In Petrarch's [sonnets] all ingenuousness is frittered away into ingenuity.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 369.

2†. Same as ingenuity, 2.

By his ingenuousness he [the good handicraftsman] leaves his art better than he found it. Fuller, Holy State, ii. 19.

ingeny†, n. [< L. ingenium, innate or natural quality, genius: see ingene, ingine, engine.] Wit; ingenuity; genius.

According to the nature, ingeny, and property of Satan, which is a liar, and the father of all lying.
Becon, Works, p. 277.

Sir, I receive your son, and will wind up his ingeny, fear it not. Shirley, Love Tricks, iii. 5.

ingere (in-jēr'), v. t.; pret. and pp. ingered, ppr. ingering. [Also ingire, injeer; < F. ingérer = Sp. Pg. ingerir = It. ingerire, thrust in, refl. thrust oneself in, meddle, < L. ingerere, carry or put in: see ingest.] To thrust in or introduce by indirect means; insinuate. [Scotch.]

To ingire hymself to Latyne King.
Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 315.

This is a shaft out of the heretic's quiver—a stratagem from first to last, to injeer into your confidence some espial of his own. Scott, Abbot, xvii.

ingerminate (in-jėr'mi-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. ingerminated, ppr. ingerminating. [< in-2 + germinate.] To cause to germinate or sprout. North British Rev.

ingest (in-jest'), v. t. [< L. ingestus, pp. of ingerere, carry, put, pour, or throw into or upon, < in, in, + gerere, carry: see *gest*2.] To put, bring, or throw in: used chiefly of the introduction of substances, as food, into the body.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend.
Blackmore.

It may be premised that the fate which befalls a given example of ingested food does not depend solely upon the theoretical power of the digestive juices to act upon it.
Encyc. Brit., XVII. 676.

ingesta (in-jes'tą), n. pl. [L., neut. pl. of ingestus, pp. of ingerere, carry or put in: see ingest.] Substances introduced into an organic body, especially through the alimentary passage; hence, any things put or taken in and incorporated, as into the mind: opposed to egesta.

Objects are taken up from without into the interior of the growing and moving plasmodium, one may say engulfed by it, . . . and they may be provisionally termed the solid ingesta. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 425.

For the time being, the bulk of the ingesta must be determined by the existing capacity.
H. Spencer, Education, p. 244.

ingestion (in-jes'chon), n. [= F. ingestion = Sp. ingestión = Pg. ingestão, ingestion, < LL. ingestio(n-), an uttering, < ingerere, pp. ingestus, carry or pour in: see ingest.] The act of throwing, putting, or taking in, as into the stomach: as, the ingestion of milk or other food: opposed to egestion.

ingestive (in-jes'tiv), a. [< ingest + -ive.] Of or pertaining to ingestion; having the function of ingestion.

The dermal pores take on the function of ingestive canals. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 113.

Inghamite (ing'am-īt), n. [< Ingham (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A member of an English denomination founded by Benjamin Ingham (1712–72), which combines elements of Methodism and Moravianism. The conversion of Ingham to Sandemanian views led to the disruption and nearly total extinction of the denomination.

ingine (in'jin or in-jīn'), n. [< ME. ingyne; a var. of engine, ult. < L. ingenium, ability, genius, ML. an ingenious contrivance, an engine: see engine, ingenious, ingeny, etc.] 1†. Mental endowment; natural ability; ingenuity: same as engine, 1.

A tyrant earst, but now his fell ingine
His graver age did somewhat mitigate.
Fairfax, Tasso, i. 83.

And this is there counted for a grete myracle, bycause it is done without mannes ingyne.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 54.

Sejanus labours to marry Livia, and worketh (with all his ingine) to remove Tiberius from the knowledge of public business. B. Jonson, Sejanus, Argument.

Thou may'st find . . . a strop whereon to sharpen thine acute ingine. Scott, Monastery, xv.

2†. An artful contrivance; a subtle artifice: same as engine, 2.

This boast of law, and law, is but a form,
A net of Vulcan's filing, a mere ingine.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1.

3 (in'jīn). A mechanical contrivance; a machine: same as engine, 4. [Now only a prov. Eng. and U. S. pronunciation of engine.]

inginer†, n. Same as enginer.

He is an architect, an inginer,
A soldier, a physician, a philosopher.
B. Jonson, Neptune's Triumph.

inginous†, a. Same as enginous.

ingire, v. t. See ingere.

ingirt† (in-gėrt'), v. t. Same as engirt.

ingle1 (ing'gl), n. [< Gael. aingeal, fire, light, sunshine, = Corn. engil, fire; prob. < L. ignis = Skt. agni, fire: see igneous.] 1†. Fire; flame; blaze. [Scotch.]

Sum vtheris brocht the fontanis wattir fare,
And sum the haly ingil with thame bare.
Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 410.

2. A household fire or fireplace. [Scotch.]

His wee bit ingle, blinkin' bonnily,
His clean hearth-stane, his thriftie wifie's smile, . . .
Does a' his weary kiaugh an' care beguile.
Burns, Cottar's Saturday Night.

ingle2† (ing'gl), n. [Also engle (irreg. enghle); in form exactly as if < ME. engle, engel, < AS. engel, angel (see angel); but the connection lacks confirmation. Also, with epithesis of n (from the art. an, or poss. mine), ningle. The history is obscure, the word being usually taken in a sinister sense.] 1. A favorite, particularly a male favorite, in a bad sense; a paramour.

What! shall I have my son a stager now? an enghle for players? B. Jonson, Poetaster, i. 1.

2. In a general sense, a person beloved; a friend.

Ingle, I prithee make recourse unto us; we are thy friends and familiars, sweet ingle.
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, ii. 4.

His quondam patrons, his dear ingles now.
Massinger, City Madam, iv. 1.

"Ha! my dear friend and ingle, Tony Foster!" he exclaimed, seizing upon the unwilling hand.
Scott, Kenilworth, iii.

ingle2† (ing'gl), v. t. [Also engle; < *ingle*2, n.] To wheedle; coax.

Do not ingle me; do not flatter me.
Middleton, Blurt, Master-Constable, ii. 2.

I'll presently go and enghle some broker for a poet's gown. B. Jonson, Poetaster, ii. 1.

ingle-cheek (ing'gl-chēk), n. The fireside. [Scotch.]

There, lanely, by the ingle-cheek,
I sat and ey'd the spewing reek.
Burns, The Vision.

ingle-nook (ing'gl-nůk), n. A corner by the fire. [Scotch.]

The ingle-nook supplies the simmer fields,
An' aft as mony gleefu' maments yields.
Fergusson, An Eclogue.

ingleside (ing'gl-sīd), n. A fireside. [Scotch.]

It's an auld story now, and everybody tells it, as we were doing, their ain way by the ingleside.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xii.

inglobate (in-glō'bāt), a. [< in-2 + globate.] Formed into a globe or sphere, as nebulous matter aggregated by the force of gravity.

inglobe (in-glōb'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inglobed, ppr. inglobing. [< in-2 + globe.] To make a globe of; fix within or as if within a globe.

So that Prelaty . . . must be fain to inglobe or incube herself among the Presbyters.
Milton, Church-Government, i. 6.

inglorious (in-glō'ri-us), a. [= F. inglorieux = Sp. Pg. It. inglorioso, < ML. ingloriosus*, inglorious, < L. in- priv. + gloriosus, glorious. Cf. L. inglorius, without glory, < in- priv. + gloria, glory.] 1. Not glorious; without fame or renown; obscure.

The inglorious arts of peace.
Marvell, Cromwell's Return from Ireland.

Some mute, inglorious Milton here may rest.
Gray, Elegy.

2. Dishonorable; disgraceful; ignominious.

Inglorious shelter in an alien land.
J. Philips, Blenheim.

Me would'st thou move to base inglorious flight?
Pope, Iliad, v. 311.

=Syn. 1. Undistinguished, unhonored.—2. Discreditable, disreputable.

ingloriously (in-glō′ri-us-li), adv. In an inglorious manner; without glory, fame, or honor.

ingloriousness (in-glō′ri-us-nes), n. The state or quality of being inglorious; want of fame or honor.

inglut†, v. t. Same as englut.

But alasse, Deuouring Time, that swalloweth his owne off-spring, was not content to haue inglutted his insatiable paunch with the flesh of those beasts and men.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 628.

ingluvial (in-glö′vi-al), a. [< ingluvies + -al.] Of or pertaining to the ingluvies.

ingluvies (in-glö′vi-ēz), n. [L., perhaps < in, in, + glutire, swallow: see glut.] In zoöl., a crop, craw, or some other dilatation of the digestive tube situated in advance of the true stomach or digestive cavity proper. Specifically—(a) In ornith., the crop or craw.

The œsophagus of many birds becomes modified into a special pouch—the crop or craw, ingluvies, where the food is detained to be macerated in a special secretion before passing on to the true stomach.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 212.

(b) In mammal., the paunch or rumen of a ruminant. (c) In entom., an expansion of the esophagus forming a kind of preliminary stomach or crop, before the proventriculus. In many haustellate insects it is transformed into an expansible sucking-stomach, and in some groups it is wanting. The ingluvies lies in the posterior part of the thorax or partly in the abdomen. See cut under Blattidæ.

ingluvin (in-glö′vin), n. [< L. ingluvies, the crop, maw, + *-in*2.] A preparation made from the gizzards of fowls, used as a substitute for pepsin and to allay vomiting.

ingoing (in′gō-ing), n. [< ME. ingoing; verbal n. of ingo*, v.] The act of entering; entrance.

Hit is ful hard, bi myn hed! eny of ow alle
To gete in-goynge at that ȝat bote grace beo the more.
Piers Plowman (A), vi. 117.

The ushers on his path would bend
At ingoing as at going out.
D. G. Rossetti, Dante at Verona.

ingoing (in′gō-ing), a. Going in; entering: opposed to outgoing: as, an ingoing tenant.

ingore†, v. t. Same as *engore*1.

ingorge†, v. See engorge.

ingot (ing′got), n. [< ME. ingot, a mold for molten metal, orig. that which is poured in (= MHG. înguz, G. einguss, a pouring in, an ingot), < AS. ingoten*, pp. of ingeótan* (not found) (= D. ingieten = G. eingiessen = Dan. indgyde = Sw. ingjuta), pour in, < in, in, + geótan (= D. gieten = G. giessen = Icel. gjōta = Dan. gyde = Sw. gjuta = Goth. giutan), pour: see gush, and cf. gut, from the same AS. verb geótan. The F. lingot, ingot, orig. l'ingot, i. e. le (def. art.) ingot, is from E.] 1†. A mold into which to pour metals; an ingot-mold.

And for I wot wel ingot have I noon,
Goth, walketh forth, and brynge us a chalk-stoon;
For I wol make oon of the same shap
That is an ingot, if I may han hap.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 195.

2. A mass of metal cast in a mold. Ingots of gold and silver are of various sizes and shapes. Those produced in the United States mint for coining are about 12 inches long and ⅛ inch thick, the width varying from 1 to 2½ inches, according to the size of the coin to be made.

Some others [heaps of gold] were new driven, and distent Into great Ingowes [read ingotes] and to wedges square.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 5.

Whoso . . . hath seen rich Ingots trade,
When forc'd by Fire their treasures they diuide (How fair and softly Gold to Gold doth pass, Siluer seeks Siluer, Brass consorts with Brass).
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 2.

Again I say to thee, aloud, Be rich.
This day thou shalt have ingots; and, to-morrow,
Give lords th' affront. B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

ingot-mold (ing′got-mōld), n. A flask in which metal is cast into blocks or ingots. Those for cast-steel are made of cast-iron, in two parts separating longitudinally, and secured by collar-clamps and wedges.
E. H. Knight.

ingowe†, n. An error for ingot, found in Spenser. It is a mere misprint, or else one of his sham archaisms. See quotation under ingot, 2.

ingracious†, a. Ungracious. Holland.

ingraff† (in-gräf′), v. t. [< in-2 + *graff*2.] To ingraft.

According to our humanitie and gracious ingraffed disposition, the requests of her Maiestie were accepted of vs.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 143.

His [King Richard's] greatest Trouble was with Philip King of France, in whom was . . . ingraffed a Spleen against K. Richard. Baker, Chronicles, p. 65.

ingraft, engraft (in-, en-gräft′), v. t. [Formerly also engraff; < in-2 + *graft*2.] 1. To insert, as a scion of one tree or plant into another, for propagation; propagate by insertion; hence, to fix as on or in a stock or support; embed; insert: as, to ingraft a peach on a plum.

Faith ingrafts us into Christ.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 23.

This fellow would ingraft a foreign name Upon our stock. Dryden.

2. To subject to the process of grafting, as a tree; furnish with a graft.—3. Figuratively, to set or fix deep and firm; infix; implant.

The ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar. Shak., J. C., ii. 1.

For a spur of diligence therefore we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 7.

The most frightful maxims were deliberately engrafted into the code of morals. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 7.

The dialogue [in the Greek drama] was ingrafted on the chorus, and naturally partook of its character.
Macaulay, Milton.

4†. To inoculate. Compare inoculate, 1.

The small-pox, so fatal and so general amongst us, is here entirely harmless, by the invention of ingrafting, which is the term they give it.
Lady M. W. Montagu, Letters, xxxi.

=Syn. 3. Inculcate, etc. See implant.

ingraft†, engraft† (in-, en-gräft′), p. a. Ingrafted. [Rare.]

Hatred is ingraft in the heart of them all.
Lord Buckhurst, quoted in Motley's United Netherlands, [II. 123.

ingraftation (in-gräf-tā′shon), n. [< ingraft + -ation.] Same as ingraftment. [Rare.]

ingrafter, engrafter (in-, en-gräf′tèr), n. One who ingrafts.

ingraftment, engraftment (in-, en-gräft′-ment), n. [Formerly also engraffment; < ingraft + -ment.] 1. The act of ingrafting.

In the planting and engraftment of Classical learning in England at that time, St. John's College, Cambridge—founded on 9th April 1511—had a most distinguished share. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 3.

2. That which is ingrafted.

ingrail, ingrailed, etc. Same as engrail, etc.

ingrain, engrain (in-, en-grān′), v. t. [< ME. engreynen; < in-2 + *grain*1, v.; with special ref. to the phrase in grain: see under *grain*1, n.] 1. To dye with grain or the scarlet dye produced by the kermes-insect; hence, from the permanence and excellence of this dye, to dye in any deep, permanent, or enduring color.

And round about he taught sweete flowres to growe:
The Rose engrained in pure scarlet die.
Spenser, Virgils Gnat.

Seest how fresh my flowers bene spredde,
Dyed in Lilly white and Cremsin redde,
With Leaves engrained in lusty greene?
Spenser, Shep. Cal., February.

2. To dye in the grain or raw material before manufacture. Hence—3. To work into the natural texture; imbue thoroughly; impregnate the whole substance or nature of, as the mind.

Our fields ingrain'd with blood, our rivers dy'd.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iii.

Mere sensuality, and even falsehood, would vanish away in a new state of existence; but cruelty and jealousy seem to be ingrained in a man who has these vices at all.
Helps.

It may be admitted that this taste for calling names is deeply ingrained in human nature.
H. N. Oxenham, Short Studies, p. 4.

The virtue of dogmas had been so ingrained in all religious thought, by the teaching of more than twelve centuries, that it required a long and painful discipline to weaken what is not yet destroyed.
Lecky, Rationalism, I. 80.

4†. To lay on, as color.

Thenne engreyne
A smaller coote [of whitewash] above on that, and thenne
A thridde on alle, as small as it may renne.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 16.

★=Syn. 3. Ingrained, Inbred, Inborn, etc. See inherent.

ingrain (in′grān), a. and n. [< ingrain, v., or the phrase in grain.] I. a. 1†. Dyed with grain or kermes. See *grain*1, 11.—2. Dyed in the yarn or thread before manufacture: said of a textile fabric.—3. Belonging to the fabric from the beginning; imparted to it in the thread or yarn: said of a color used in dyeing.—Ingrain carpet. See carpet.

II. n. 1. A yarn or fabric dyed with fast colors before manufacture.—2. A quarter of a chaldron of coals given in excess of the measure when the total exceeds 5 chaldrons.

ingrammaticism (in-gra-mat′i-sizm), n. [< in-3 + grammatic + -ism.] An ungrammatical form or construction. [Rare.]

She has discarded the present tense, but remains constant to her quotations and ingrammaticisms.
Athenæum, No. 3150, p. 304.

ingrapple† (in-grap′l), v. [< in-2 + grapple.] I. trans. To grapple; seize on.

Look how two lions fierce, both hungry, both pursue
One sweet and selfsame prey, at one another fly,
And with their armed paws ingrappled dreadfully.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xii. 292.

II. intrans. Same as engrapple.

Ingrassian (in-gras′i-an), a. [< Ingrassias (see def.) + -an.] Pertaining to the Italian anatomist Ingrassias (sixteenth century).—Ingrassian processes, the lesser wings of the sphenoid bone; the orbitosphenoids.

ingrate (in′grāt), a. and n. [< ME. ingrat, < OF. (and F.) ingrat = Sp. Pg. It. ingrato, < L. ingratus, unpleasant, disagreeable, unthankful, < in- priv. + gratus, pleasing, thankful: see *grate*3, grateful.] I. a. Unthankful; ungrateful.

Porchase al the pardoun of Paumpelon and of Rome,
And indulgences yknowe and be ingrat to thy kynde.
The holygost huyreth the nat ne helpeth the, be thow certayn. Piers Plowman (C), xx. 219.

Who, for so many benefits received,
Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false.
Milton, P. R., iii. 138.

II. n. An ungrateful person; one who rewards favors with enmity or treachery.

Ingrate, he had of me
All he could have. Milton, P. L., iii. 97.

ingrateful† (in-grāt′fûl), a. [< in-3 + grateful. Cf. ingrate.] Ungrateful.

Ingrateful to heaven's bounty.
Massinger, Emperor of the East, v. 3.

What he gives (Whose praise be ever sung) to man in part Spiritual, may of purest spirits be found No ingrateful food. Milton, P. L., v. 407.

ingratefully† (in-grāt′fûl-i), adv. Ungratefully.

ingratefulness† (in-grāt′fûl-nes), n. Ungratefulness.

ingrately†, adv. Ungratefully.

Nor may we smother or forget, ingrately,
The heaven of silver that was sent but lately
From Ferdinando.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, p. 135.

ingratiate (in-grā′shi-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. ingratiated, ppr. ingratiating. [< ML. as if ingratiatus*, pp. of ingratiare* (> It. ingraziare), bring into favor, < L. in, in, + gratia, favor, grace: see grace.] 1. To establish in the confidence, favor, or good graces of another; make agreeable or acceptable: used reflexively, and followed by with.

The Alcmaeonides, to ingratiate themselves with the oracle, . . . rebuilt it [the temple of Delphi] with Parian marble. J. Adams, Works, IV. 486.

I wanted, at first, only to ingratiate myself with Lady Teazle, that she might not be my enemy with Maria.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, ii. 2.

2. To introduce by exciting gratitude or good will; insinuate or recommend by acceptable conduct or sentiments: absolute or with into.

The old man . . . had already ingratiated himself into our favor. Cook.

In order to ingratiate myself, I stept in to his assistance. Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 5.

Perhaps the mention of the duke's name was designed to ingratiate him into their toleration.
I. D'Israeli, Curiosities of Lit., IV. 398.

3†. To recommend.

What difficulty would it [the love of Christ] not ingratiate to us? Hammond, Works, IV. 564.

4†. To bring into a state of grace.

God hath ingratiated us; He hath made us gracious in the Son of His love. T. Brooks, Works, V. 220.

ingratitude (in-grat′i-tūd), n. [= F. ingratitude = Pr. ingratitut = Sp. ingratitud = Pg. ingratitude = It. ingratitudine, < LL. ingratitudo (-din-), unthankfulness, < L. ingratus, unthankful: see ingrate. Cf. gratitude.] Lack of gratitude; indisposition to acknowledge or reciprocate favors; a state of unthankfulness for benefits conferred.

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7 (song).

You have a law, lords, that without remorse
Dooms such as are beleper'd with the curse
Of foul ingratitude unto death.
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, v. 1.

It is the ingratitude of mankind to their greatest benefactors, that they who teach us wisdom by the surest ways . . . should generally live poor and unregarded.
Dryden, Plutarch.

=Syn. See grateful.

ingratuity†, n. [Irreg. < L. ingratus, ungrateful; as if < in-3 + gratuity.] Ingratitude.

Did Curtius more for Rome than I for thee,
That willingly (to saue thee from annoy Of dire dislike for ingratuitee)
Do take vpon me to expresse thy joy?
Davies, Microcosmos, p. 19.

ingrave1† (in-grāv′), v. t. [< in-1 + *grave*1. Cf. *engrave*1.] An obsolete form of *engrave*1.

ingrave2† (in-grāv′), v. t. [< in-1 + *grave*2. Cf. *engrave*2.] Same as *engrave*2.

Or els so glorious tombe how could my youth have craved,
As in one self same vaulte with thee haply to be ingraved?
Romeus and Juliet, l. 338. (Nares.)

At last they came where all his watry store
The flood in one deep channel did ingrave.
Fairfax.

ingravescent (in-grā-ves′ent), a. [< L. ingravescen(t-)s, ppr. of ingravescere, grow heavier, < in, in, + gravescere, grow heavy, < gravis, heavy, grave.] In pathol., increasing in gravity; growing more severe: as, ingravescent apoplexy.

ingravidate† (in-grav′i-dāt), v. t. [< LL. ingravidatus, pp. of ingravidare, make heavy, make gravid, impregnate, < in, in, + gravidare, make gravid, < gravidus, gravid: see gravid.] To impregnate.

ingravidation† (in-grav-i-dā′shon), n. [< ingravidate + -ion.] The act of ingravidating or impregnating, or the state of being pregnant or impregnated.

ingreat† (in-grāt′), v. t. [< in-[1] + great.] To make great.

It appeareth that there is, in all things, a desire to dilate and to ingreat themselves.
Fotherby, Atheomastix (1622), p. 174.

ingredience† (in-grē′di-ens), n. [< ingredien(t) + -ce.] 1. A going or entering into as an ingredient.

Those various temperaments that have ingredience and influence into him [man].
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 158.

2. [Appar. orig. an erroneous spelling of ingredients.] An ingredient.

No poorer ingrediences than the liquor of coral [or] clear amber. Middleton, Mad World, iii. 2.

ingredienced (in-grē′di-enst), a. [< ingredience + -ed[2].] Having ingredients; compounded. [Rare.]

May the descending soot never taint thy well ingredienced soups. Lamb, Elia, p. 187.

ingrediency† (in-grē′di-en-si), n. [As ingredience: see -cy.] The state of being an ingredient; ingredience.

It should be upon the account of its ingrediency, and not of its use, that anything should be affirmed or denied to be an element. Boyle, Works, I. 516.

ingredient (in-grē′di-ent), a. and n. [< F. ingrédient = Sp. Pg. It. ingrediente, an ingredient (II., 2); < L. ingredien(t-)s, ppr. of ingredi, go into, enter, engage in, begin, < in, into, + gradi, go, walk: see grade[1], gradient.] I.† a. Entering as a component part; constituent.

He makes a bishop to be ingredient into the definition of a church. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 234.

II. n. 1†. A person entering; an incomer.

If sin open her shop of delicacies, Solomon shews the trap-door and the vault; . . . if she discovers the green and gay flowers of delice, he cries to the ingredients, Latet anguis in herbâ — The serpent lurks there.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 159.

2. That which enters into a compound, or is a component part of a compound or mixture; one of the elements of a combination or composition, as a dish, drink, or medicine.

This even-handed justice
Commends the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. Shak., Macbeth, i. 7.

There's one main ingredient
We have forgot, the artichoke.
B. Jonson, Neptune's Triumph.

She thought him . . . a very fine gentleman; and such as consider what powerful ingredients a good figure, fine clothes, and fortune are, in that character, will easily forgive her. Goldsmith, Vicar, vii.

ingress (in′gres), n. [< ME. ingress; = Sp. ingreso = Pg. It. ingresso, < L. ingressus, a going into, < ingredi, pp. ingressus, go into: see ingredient. Cf. congress, egress, etc.] 1. A going in; the act of entering or passing in; entrance.

Til Octob'r from the ingresse of this moone Ys Coriander (sette) is [in ?] fatty londe.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 114.

The phænomena seem very favourable to their hypothesis that suppose congelation to be effected by the ingress of frigorifick atoms into the water or other bodies to be congealed. Boyle, Works, II. 530.

For your ingress here
Upon the skirt and fringe of our fair land,
You did but come as goblins in the night.
Tennyson, Princess, v.

2. Provision for going in; a place of entrance: as, the ingress and egress are on opposite sides.

Lete honge it in thi yates or ingress
Of hous or towne.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 35.

3. In astron., the entrance of the sun into a sign of the zodiac, or of a planet upon the disk of the sun in a transit; in astrol., the transit of a planet over the point of the zodiac at which the sun, moon, medium cæli, or ascendant has arrived by direction. — 4. In canon law. See access, 7. — Ingress paper. See paper.

★ ingress (in-gres′), v. i. [< L. ingressus, pp. of ingredi, go into, enter: see ingredient.] To go in or enter. Dwight. [Rare.]

ingression (in-gresh′on), n. [= OF. ingression = Sp. ingresión, < L. ingressio(n-), an entering, < ingredi, pp. ingressus, enter: see ingress.] The act of entering, as into union or incorporation with something; a passing into or within.

Mercury . . . may happily have a more powerful ingression into gold than any other body.
Sir K. Digby, Of Bodies, c. 15.

Traces are manifest [among critics of the Iliad] of an inclination to suffer the ingression of antique forms.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VII. 371.

ingressive (in-gres′iv), a. [< ingress + -ive.] Entering; denoting entering on or beginning.

The sigmatic aorist is decidedly ingressive, and we do not want the ingressive action here, however desirable it may be in the final sentence proper.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VI. 71.

ingressu (in-gres′ū), n. [That is, a writ de ingressu, of entry: L. de, of; ingressu, abl. of ingressus, entry, ingress: see ingress, n.] In law, a former writ of entry into lands and tenements.

ingressus (in-gres′us), n. [L., ingress: see ingress.] In Eng. law, the relief which the heir at full age formerly paid to the head lord for being allowed to enter as owner of the fee, after lands had reverted by the tenant's death or by forfeiture.

Ingrian falcon. See falcon.

ingrieve† (in-grēv′), v. t. [< in-[2] + grieve[1].] To make more grievous.

Phalantus' disgrace was ingrieved, in lieu of comfort, of Artesia, who, telling him she never looked for other, bade him seek some other mistress. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

ingroove (in-gröv′), v. t.; pret. and pp. ingrooved, ppr. ingrooving. [< in-[1] + groove.] To groove in; join or fix as in a groove.

So let the change which comes be free
To ingroove itself with that which flies,
And work, a joint of state, that plies
Its office, moved with sympathy.
Tennyson, Love Thou thy Land.

ingross†, ingrosser†. Obsolete forms of engross, engrosser.

ingrowing (in′grō-ing), a. [< in[1] + growing.] Growing inward; in surg., growing into the flesh: as, an ingrowing nail.

ingrowth (in′grōth), n. [< in[1] + growth.] Growth inward; also, that which grows inward.

In embryonic development the [retina] . . . is an outgrowth from the brain, the [lens] . . . an ingrowth from the epidermis and cutaneous tissues.
Le Conte, Sight, p. 24.

The pouch is nothing but an ingrowth of part of the blastoderm. Huxley, Crayfish, p. 209.

ingrum†, a. A provincial corruption of ignorant.

Pray, take my fellow, Ralph; he has a psalm-book;
I am an ingrum man.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, v. 1.

inguen (ing′gwen), n. [L.] The groin. E. Phillips, 1706. [Rare.]

inguilty† (in-gil′ti), a. [< in-[3] + guilty.] Guiltless; innocent. Bp. Hall, Cont. Haman Hanged.

inguinal (ing′gwi-nal), a. [= F. inguinal = Sp. Pg. inguinal = It. inguinale, < L. inguinalis, < inguen (inguin-), the groin.] Of or pertaining to the groin: as, an inguinal tumor or hernia. — Inguinal arch. Same as crural arch (which see, under crural). — Inguinal canal. See canal[1]. — Inguinal glands. See gland. — Inguinal hernia. See hernia. — Inguinal rings, external and internal, the abdominal rings. See abdominal.

ingulf, v. t. See engulf.

ingulfment, n. See engulfment.

ingun, n. See ingan.

ingurgitate (in-gėr′ji-tāt), v.; pret. and pp. ingurgitated, ppr. ingurgitating. [< L. ingurgitatus, pp. of ingurgitare (> It. ingurgitare = Sp. ingurgitar = F. ingurgiter), plunge into, gorge, < in, in, + gurges (gurgit-), a gulf: see gorge.] I. trans. 1. To swallow greedily or in great quantity.

Ingurgitating sometimes whole half glasses.
Cleaveland, Poems, p. 112.

2. To plunge; engulf.

If a man do but once set his appetite upon it [pleasure], let him ingurgitate himself never so deep into it, yet shall he never be able to fill his desire with it.
Fotherby, Atheomastix (1622), p. 206.

II. intrans. To drink largely; swill.

Nothing pesters the body and mind sooner than to be still fed, to eat and ingurgitate beyond all measure.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 283.

ingurgitation (in-gėr-ji-tā′shon), n. [= F. ingurgitation = Sp. ingurgitación, < LL. ingurgitatio(n-), immoderate eating and drinking, < L. ingurgitare, plunge into, gorge: see ingurgitate.] 1. The act of swallowing greedily or in great quantity. — 2. That which is thus swallowed.

It is written of Epicurus that, after his disease was judged desperate, he drowned his stomach and senses with a large draught and ingurgitation of wine.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 197.

ingustable (in-gus′ta-bl), a. [< L. ingustabilis, that cannot be tasted, < in- priv. + gustabilis, that may be tasted: see gustable.] That cannot be tasted; tasteless; insipid. Also, less properly, ingustible.

The body of that element [air] is ingustable, void of all sapidity. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 21.

ingwort† (ing′wėrt), n. [< ing + wort.] The meadowwort or meadowsweet.

inhabile† (in-hab′il), a. [= F. inhabile = Sp. Pg. inhabil = It. inabile, < L. inhabilis, that cannot be managed, unfit, unable, < in- priv. + habilis, that can be managed, fit: see habile, hable, able[1]. Cf. inable.] 1. Not apt or fit; unfit; not convenient: as, inhabile matter. — 2. Unskilled; unready; unqualified: used of persons. Bailey, 1727. [Rare.]

inhability† (in-ha-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inhabilité, inhabileté = Sp. inhabilidad = Pg. inhabilidade = It. inabilità, < L. as if inhabilita(t-)s*, < inhabilis, inhabile: see inhabile. Cf. inability.] The quality of being inhabile; unfitness; inaptness; want of skill; inability.

Whatever evil blind ignorance, . . . inhability, unwieldiness, and confusion of thoughts beget, wisdom prevents. Barrow, Works, I. i.

inhabit (in-hab′it), v. [Formerly also enhabit; < ME. inhabiten, enhabiten, enabiten, < OF. inhabiter, enhabiter = It. inabitare, < L. inhabitare, dwell in, < in, in, + habitare, dwell: see habit, v.] I. trans. 1. To live or dwell in; occupy as a habitation or dwelling-place; have an abode or residence in.

Zif it hadde Ryveres and Welles, and the Lond also were as it is in other parties, it scholde ben als fulle of Peple and als fulle enhabyted with Folk as in other Places.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 43.

With Riches full Rife & myche Ranke godys,
The yle well enabit & onest with in,
And lyuet after law of the lell gentils.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2858.

Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity. Isa. lvii. 15.

To inhabit a mansion remote
From the clatter of street-pacing steeds.
Cowper, Catharina.

2†. To make at home; hence, figuratively, to be bound by the tie of residence.

She that I serve, ywis, what so thou seye,
To whom myn herte enhabit is by right,
Shal han me holly hires, til that I deye.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 443.

II. intrans. 1. To dwell; live; abide.

Nother man ne woman durste ther-ynne enhabite.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 666.

O thou that dost inhabit in my breast.
Shak., T. G. of V., v. 4.

2†. To rest or be kept fixedly.

Her eye inhabits on him. Fletcher, Mad Lover, iii. 4.

inhabitable[1] (in-hab′i-ta-bl), a. [Cf. AF. enhabitable, inhabitant; < LL. inhabitabilis, that can be inhabited, < L. inhabitare, inhabit: see inhabit.] Capable of being inhabited, or of affording habitation; suitable for habitation; habitable.

The fixed stars are all of them suns, with systems of inhabitable planets moving about them. Locke.

inhabitable[2]† (in-hab′i-ta-bl), a. [< ME. inhabitable, < OF. (also F.) inhabitable = Sp. inhabitable = Pg. inhabitavel = It. inabitabile, inabitevole, < L. inhabitabilis, that cannot be inhabited, < in- priv. + habitabilis, habitable: see habitable.] Not habitable; uninhabitable.

He caused it [the town] to be defaced and razed flat to the earth, and made it inhabitable.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 217.

In Ynde and abouten Ynde ben mo than 5000 iles gode and grete, that men duellen in, withouten tho that ben inhabitable. Mandeville, Travels, p. 161.

Some inhabitable place,
Where the hot sun and slime breeds nought but monsters.
B. Jonson, Catiline, v. 1.

inhabitance, inhabitancy (in-hab′i-tans, -tan-si), n. [< inhabit + -ance, -ancy.] 1. Residence; abode in a dwelling-place for the time being. It is distinguished from the temporary sojourn of a transient person; but, as often used, it does not necessarily imply the finality of intention respecting abode that is implied by domicile. Inhabitance refers rather to the actual abiding; domicile to the legal relation, which is not necessarily suspended by absence.

Persons able and fit for so great an employment ought to be preferred without regard to their inhabitancy.
Hallam.

He [Sterling] is come to look at some habitations with an eye to inhabitancy. Caroline Fox, Journal, p. 132.

2†. The state of being inhabited; inhabitation.

Here's nothing, sir, but poverty and hunger;
No promise of inhabitance; neither track
Of beast nor foot of man.
Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, iv. 1.

inhabitant (in-hab'i-tant), a. and n. [< AF. OF. inhabitant, < L. inhabitan(t-)s, ppr. of inhabitare, inhabit: see inhabit.] I. a. Inhabiting; resident. [Rare.]

The inhabitant householders resident in the borough. . . . It is highly probable the word burgess . . . meant literally the free inhabitant householder of a borough.
Hallam, Hist. Eng., III. 46.

The rates were levied by select vestries of the inhabitant householders. Macaulay, St. Denis and St. George.

II. n. A resident; one who dwells in a place, as distinguished from a transient or occasional lodger or visitor. In law the term inhabitant is used technically with varying meaning in respect of permanency of abode. In some of the New England States the word is used (in the plural) of the citizens of a town in their collective capacity as a body corporate.

To this [parish] meeting all those who had benefit of the things there transacted might come: that is to say, all householders, and all who manured land within the parish. Such were technically termed inhabitants, even though they dwelt in another town.
E. Channing, Town and County Gov't in Eng. Colonies [of North America.

The Jackal is not an importation from anywhere else into Curzola; he is an old inhabitant of Europe, who has kept his ground in Curzola after he has been driven out of other places. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 204.

Capital inhabitant, in English municipal corporation law, a chief inhabitant; an inhabitant or citizen chosen as a member of the common council of the city, from among the inhabitants and citizens at large, and corresponding to the common-councilmen or assistant aldermen of American municipalities.

inhabitate† (in-hab'i-tāt), v. t. [< L. inhabitatus, pp. of inhabitare, dwell in: see inhabit.] To inhabit; dwell in.

Of all the people which inhabitate Asia.
Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 992.

inhabitation (in-hab-i-tā'shon), n. [= AF. enhabitacion = It. inabitazione, < LL. inhabitatio(n-), a dwelling, < L. inhabitare, dwell in: see inhabit.] 1. The act of inhabiting, or the state of being inhabited.

Temporary hollow clay idols . . . which receive no veneration for themselves, and only become objects of worship when the officiating brahman has invited the deity to dwell in the image, performing the ceremony of the "adhivâsa" or inhabitation.
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 163.

2†. Population; the mass of inhabitants.

Noise call you it, or universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perish'd!
Milton, S. A., l. 1512.

inhabitative (in-hab'i-tā-tiv), a. [< inhabitate + -ive.] Of or pertaining to inhabitation.

inhabitativeness (in-hab'i-tā-tiv-nes), n. [< inhabit + -ative-ness.] Inhabitiveness.

inhabited[1] (in-hab'i-ted), p. a. [< inhabit + -ed[2].] 1. Dwelt in; having inhabitants: as, a thinly inhabited country.

How had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now,
Avoided pinching cold and scorching heat?
Milton, P. L., x. 690.

2†. Lodged.

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capricious poet, Ovid, was among the Goths.
Jaq. [Aside.] O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than Jove in a thatched house! Shak., As you Like it, iii. 3.

inhabited[2]† (in-hab'i-ted), a. [< in-[3] + habited. Cf. F. inhabité = Sp. Pg. inhabitado = It. inabitato, uninhabited.] Not habited; uninhabited.

Posterity henceforth lose the name of blessing,
And leave th' earth inhabited, to purchase heav'n.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iii. 1.

inhabitedness (in-hab'i-ted-nes), n. The state of being inhabited or occupied.

inhabiter†, inhabitor† (in-hab'i-tėr, -tọr), n. [< inhabit + -er[1], -or.] An inhabitant.

Woe to the inhabiters of the earth! Rev. viii. 13.

The length of this side is (according to the opinion of the Inhabiters) seuen hundred miles.
Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 247.

inhabitiveness (in-hab'i-tiv-nes), n. [< inhabit + -ive + -ness.] In phren., a propensity for remaining in an accustomed place of habitation; love of locality, country, and home: supposed to be indicated by a posterior cranial development called the organ of inhabitiveness. Combe gives the propensity a larger scope, as indicated by the same development, and calls it concentrativeness. See cut under phrenology.

Some persons think that inhabitiveness may give the delight to see foreign countries, and to travel, but it is quite the reverse; the former delight depends on Locality. Those who have Inhabitiveness large, and Locality small, do not like to leave home; those who have both organs large, like to travel, but to return home and settle at last.
Combe, System of Phrenol. (ed. 1843), I. 213.

inhabitor†, n. See inhabiter.

inhabitress† (in-hab'i-tres), n. [< inhabiter + -ess.] A female inhabitant.

The church here called the inhabitress of the gardens.
Bp. Richardson, Obs. on Old Test. (1655), p. 350.

inhable†, v. t. [< inhable, inable,* a.] To make unable; disable.

Sik fault as inhables the person of the giuer to be a distributer of the sacrament.
Acts James VI., 1597 (ed. 1814), p. 167.

in hac parte (in hak pär'tē). [L.: in, in; hac, abl. fem. of hic, this (see he[1]); parte, abl. of pars, a part: see part.] On this part or side; in this behalf.

inhalant (in-hā'lant), a. [= It. inalante, < L. inhalan(t-)s, ppr. of inhalare, breathe on (breathe in): see inhale.] That inhales; serving for inhalation: as, the inhalant end of a duct; the inhalant pores of sponges (that is, the pores through which streams of water enter). See cuts under Porifera and Spongilla. Also spelled inhalent.

These inhalent and exhalent currents go on, so long as the animal [the fresh-water mussel] is alive and the valves are open. Huxley, Biology, xi.

inhalation (in-hā-lā'shon), n. [= F. inhalation = Sp. inhalación = Pg. inhalação = It. inalazione, < L. as if inhalatio(n-),* < inhalare, inhale: see inhale.] 1. The act of inhaling; inspiration; an indrawing, as of air or medicinal vapors into the lungs.

The medicine of inhalation is still in its infancy.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 166.

2. In phar., a preparation intended to be inhaled in the form of vapor.

Stimulating moist inhalations can be prepared with various volatile oils. Quain, Med. Dict.

inhale (in-hāl'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inhaled, ppr. inhaling. [= F. inhaler = Pg. inhalar = It. inalare, < L. inhalare, breathe on (breathe in), < in, in, into, on, + halare, breathe. Cf. exhale[1].] To draw in, as air into the lungs; draw in by breathing, or by some analogous process.

That play of lungs, inhaling and again
Respiring freely the fresh air. Cowper, Task, i. 137.

inhalent (in-hā'lent), a. Same as inhalant.

inhaler (in-hā'lėr), n. 1. One who inhales.—2. In med., an apparatus for inhaling vapors and volatile substances, as steam of hot water, vapor of chloroform, iodine, etc.—3. An apparatus which enables a person to breathe without injury in a deleterious atmosphere, as that used by persons of delicate lungs to prevent damp or cold air from entering the lungs, or that used by cutlers and others who breathe an atmosphere charged with metallic particles; a respirator.

inhance†, inhancement. Obsolete forms of enhance, enhancement.

inharmonic (in-här-mon'ik), a. [= Pg. inharmonico; as in-[3] + harmonic.] Not harmonic; not according to the principles of harmony in music; inharmonious; discordant.—Inharmonic relation. Same as false relation (which see, under false).

inharmonical (in-här-mon'i-kal), a. [< inharmonic + -al.] Same as inharmonic.

inharmonious (in-här-mō'ni-us), a. [= F. inharmonieux = Sp. Pg. inharmonioso; as in-[3] + harmonious.] 1. Not harmonious in sound; destitute of musical harmony; discordant: as, inharmonious voices; inharmonious verse.

Sounds inharmonious in themselves and harsh.
Cowper, Task, i. 207.

2. Not harmonious in sentiment, action, or relation; disagreeing; conflicting: as, inharmonious proceedings; inharmonious colors.

inharmoniously (in-här-mō'ni-us-li), adv. In an inharmonious manner; without harmony; discordantly.

inharmoniousness (in-här-mō'ni-us-nes), n. The character or quality of being inharmonious; want of harmony; discord. A. Tucker, Light of Nature, I. i. 13.

inharmony (in-här'mọ-ni), n. [= F. inharmonie = Sp. inharmonía; as in-[3] + harmony.] Want of harmony; discord; disharmony. [Rare.]

inhauler (in'hâ-lėr), n. [< in[1] + hauler.] Naut., a rope employed to haul in the jib-boom.

inhaunt† (in-hänt' or -hânt'), v. t. [< in-[2] + haunt.] To frequent; haunt.

This creeke with runing passadge thee channel inhaunteth. Stanihurst, Æneid, i. 168.

inhaust (in-hâst'), v. t. [< L. in, in, + haustus, pp. of haurire, draw: see haust[2]. Cf. exhaust.] To draw or drink in. [A humorous coinage.]

He was inhausting his smoking tea, which went rolling and gurgling down his throat.
Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xxii.

inhearse (in-hėrs'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inhearsed, ppr. inhearsing. [Formerly also inherse; < in-[2] + hearse[1].] To put into a hearse.

See, where he lies, inhersed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7.

inheeld†, inhield†, v. t. [ME. inhilden, inhielden, inhelden; < in, in, + hilden, helden, pour, incline: see heeld.] To pour in.

Ye in my nakyd herte sentement
Inhilde [var. inhield.]
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 44.

inhell†, v. t. [< in-[1] + hell[1].] To consign to hell; put in hell.

She, for whose sake
A man could finde in his heart to in-hell him-selfe.
Marston, What you Will, iv. 1.

inhere (in-hēr'), v. i.; pret. and pp. inhered, ppr. inhering. [< L. inhærere (> It. inerire = Pg. inherir), stick in, stick, inhere, < in, in, + hærere, stick: see hesitate. Cf. adhere, cohere.] 1. To be in, as an accident is in a substance; be related as an accident to a substance, as the predicate of a proposition is related to its subject, or an adjective to its substantive.

An accident cannot inhere in another accident.
Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman, Monitio Logica, I. v. § 1.

2. To dwell or exist as an element; have place as a quality or attribute; belong intrinsically; be innate or characteristic.

So fares the soul which more that power reveres Man claims from God than what in God inheres.
Parnell, Donne's Third Satire versified.

The leading influence of Roman absolutism, a tendency that inhered in it from the start, aided essentially in producing a sense of equality among men.
G. P. Fisher, Begin. of Christianity, p. 52.

inherence (in-hēr'ens), n. [= F. inhérence = Sp. Pg. inherencia = It. inerenza, < ML. inhærentia, < L. inhæren(t-)s, inherent: see inherent.] 1. The state of being inherent or of inhering; intrinsic existence.—2. The relation to its subject of an accident, or that which cannot exist out of a substance as subject. Thus, the relation of mortality to man is inherence.

inherency (in-hēr'en-si), n. Same as inherence.

Borrowing his little and imaginary complacency from the delight that I have, not from any inherency of his own possession. Jer. Taylor, Works, II. xviii.

inherent (in-hēr'ent), a. [= F. inhérent = Sp. Pg. inherente = It. inerente, < L. inhæren(t-)s, ppr. of inhærere, stick in, inhere: see inhere.] 1. Inhering; infixed; sticking within; strongly lodged or incorporated. [Rare.]

I will not do 't:
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,
And, by my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shak., Cor., iii. 2.

Ful. I can forgo things nearer than my gold.
Piero. But not your love, Fulgoso.
Ful. No, she's inherent, and mine own past losing.
Ford, Lady's Trial, ii. 1.

2. Existing as an element, quality, or attribute; innately characteristic; intrinsic: as, inherent color; inherent beauty of character.

There was inherent in them [the bishops] a power of cognition of causes, and coercion of persons.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 206.

I consider an human soul without education like marble in a quarry, which shows none of its inherent beauties till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours.
Spectator, No. 215.

The forms . . . have an inherent power of adjustment to each other and to surrounding nature.
A. R. Wallace, Nat. Select., p. 268.

Condition inherent. See condition.—Inherent form, in metaph. See form.—Syn. 2. Inherent, Innate, Inborn, Inbred, Ingrained, native, natural. Inherent implies permanence and inseparableness: as, an inherent weakness or defect. Innate and inborn are literally the same, but innate is chiefly the word of philosophy, while inborn is the word of common life and literature: as, it is disputed whether there are innate ideas or an innate belief in a God, but few deny that there are inborn aptitudes for excellence in certain kinds of work; he has an inborn love of truth. Inbred applies to that which is worked into one by breeding or training, or, more figuratively, by habit: as, inbred laziness. Ingrained applies to that which has become thoroughly worked into the texture or fiber, literally or figuratively: as, ingrained baseness. See intrinsic, under inner.

inherently (in-hēr'ent-li), adv. By inherence; inseparably.

inherit (in-her'it), v. [< ME. inheriten, enheriten, < OF. enheriter, inheriter, < LL. inhereditare, appoint as heir, ML. also put in possession, inherit, < L. in, in, + heres (hered-), heir: see heir and heritage.] I. trans. 1. In law, to take by descent from an ancestor; get by succession, as the representative of the former possessor; receive as a right or title descendible by law from an ancestor at his decease: as, the eldest son of a nobleman inherits his father's title. In law it is used in contradistinction to acquiring by will; but in popular use this distinction is often disregarded.

When he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, . . . he may not make the son of the beloved firstborn before the son of the hated, which is indeed the firstborn. Deut. xxi. 16.

Though a man's body is not a property that can be inherited, yet his constitution may fitly be compared to an entailed estate. H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 71.

2. To receive from one's progenitors as part of one's physical or mental constitution; possess intrinsically through descent.

Habits are inherited, and have a decided influence: as in the period of the flowering of plants when transported from one climate to another. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 25.

Some peculiar mystic grace
Made her only the child of her mother,
And heap'd the whole inherited sin . . .
All, all upon the brother. Tennyson, Maud, xiii.

3. To receive by transmission in any way; have imparted to or conferred upon; acquire from any source.

Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? Mark x. 17.

An Generall Instructioun to Kyngis, how thay sal alsweill inhereit the Heuin as the erth.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), To the Redar.

4. To succeed by inheritance. [Rare.]

For surely now our household hearths are cold:
Our sons inherit us; our looks are strange.
Tennyson, Lotos Eaters, Choric Song.

5†. To put in possession; seize: with of.

It must be great, that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.
Shak., Rich. II., i. 1.

II. intrans. To be vested with a right to a thing (specifically to real property) by operation of law, as successor in interest on the death of the former owner; have succession as heir: sometimes with to.

Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house.
Judges xi. 2.

The king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here. Shak., Tempest, ii. 2.

The children of a deceased son inherited to the grandfather in preference to a son or jointly with him.
Brougham.

inheritability (in-her″i-ta-bil′i-ti), n. [< inheritable: see -bility.] The quality of being inheritable, or of being descendible to heirs.

inheritable (in-her′i-ta-bl), a. [< OF. (AF.) inheritable, enheritable, < inheriter, inherit: see inherit and -able.] 1. Capable of being inherited; transmissible or descendible from the ancestor to the heir by course of law; heritable: as, an inheritable estate or title.

While property continued only for life, testaments were useless and unknown; and, when it became inheritable, the inheritance was long indefeasible.
Blackstone, Com., II. i.

2. Capable of being transmitted by or received from progenitors: as, inheritable qualities or infirmities.

All organic beings are modifiable, [and] all modifications are inheritable. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 338.

3. Capable of inheriting; qualified to inherit.

By attainder . . . the blood of the person attainted is so corrupted as to be rendered no longer inheritable.
Blackstone.

inheritably (in-her′i-ta-bli), adv. By inheritance; by way of inheritance; so as to be capable of being inherited.

He resumed the grants at pleasure, nor ever gave them even for life, much less inheritably. Brougham.

inheritage† (in-her′i-tāj), n. [< ME. inheritage, enheritage; < inherit + -age. Cf. heritage.] Possession.

I graunte yow inheritage
Peaceably without strive.
Isle of Ladies, l. 1192.

Where standeth a little Chappell, . . . the inheritage of the Calargy, a family that for this thousand yeers have retained a prime repute in this Island.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 174.

★ inheritance (in-her′i-tans), n. [Formerly also enheritance; < OF. (ÄF.) enheritance, enheritaunce, inheriting, < enheriter, inherit: see inherit.] 1. The act of inheriting, in any sense of that word: as, the inheritance of property or of disease.

You shall understand that Darius came not to his empyre by inheritaunce, but got into ye seate of Cyrus by the benefite of Bagoas, hys eunuche.
J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, fol. 143.

In these laws of inheritance, as displayed under domestication, we see an ample provision for the production, through variability and natural selection, of new specific forms. Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 61.

Or how should England, dreaming of his sons, Hope more for these than some inheritance
Of such a life, a heart, a mind?
Tennyson, Idylls of the King, Ded.

We are led to the conclusion that the oldest customs of inheritance in England and Germany were in their remote beginnings connected with a domestic religion and based upon a worship of ancestral spirits, of which the hearthplace was essentially the shrine and altar.
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 216.

2. In law, the estate cast upon the heir by law immediately on the death of the ancestor (Broom and Hadley); a legal right to real property not limited by years or the owner's life, so that it will pass by descent; an estate inuring to a person and his heirs; real estate. See estate of inheritance, under estate.

The commons prayed that neither in parliament nor council should any one be put on trial for articles touching freehold and inheritance. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 371.

3. That which is or may be inherited; the immovable property passing in a family by descent; in a more general sense, any property passing by death to those entitled to succeed; a patrimony; a heritage.

And Rachel and Leah answered and said unto him, Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Gen. xxxi. 14.

In all his ancient inheritances, he hath houses built after their manner like arbours.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 142.

My father's blessing and this little coin
Is my inheritance.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 2.

4. A possession received by gift or without purchase; a permanent possession.

Meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Col. i. 12.

5†. Possession; ownership; acquisition.

You will rather show our general lowts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves. Shak., Cor., iii. 2.

Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king; which had return'd
To the inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he been vanquisher. Shak., Hamlet, i. 1.

Canons of inheritance. See canon[1].—Inheritance Act, an English statute of 1833 (3 and 4 Wm. IV., c. 106) recasting the law of descent.—Inheritance tax law, a statute imposing a tax on those acquiring property by inheritance or will: sometimes taxing only collateral relatives and strangers, and in such case commonly called a collateral-inheritance tax law.—Several inheritance, a several estate of inheritance: as, where a partition between two heirs allotted the land for half of the year to each in turn, their cotenancy was terminated and each was said to have a several inheritance; or where land was given to two persons (who could not possibly intermarry) and their issue, they had a joint inheritance for their joint lives, and their issue had several inheritance.—Words of inheritance, expressions in a conveyance or will manifesting an intent that the grantee or devisee should take more than a life estate, the usual words being "and to his heirs forever," added after the designation of the grantee; commonly also with the words "and assigns," to manifest intent that the estate is assignable. By statute in many of the United States words of inheritance are not required in order to pass an estate of inheritance.

inheritor (in-her′i-tor), n. [< ME. enheritour, < AF. enheritour*, an heir, < enheriter, inherit: see inherit.] An heir; one who inherits or may inherit.

Thierry was tho a full noble knyght;
Gaffray ther hym made hys enheritour
Off all the contre which he hild hym dyght.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 6120.

From that time forward the priests were not chosen out of the whole number of Levites, as our bishops, but were born inheritors of the dignity.
Milton, Church-Government, i. 4.

inheritress (in-her′i-tres), n. [< inheritor + -ess.] An heiress; a female who inherits or is entitled to inherit. Also inheritrix.

Joanna II., the inheritress of the name, the throne, the licentiousness, and the misfortunes of Joanna I.
Milman, Latin Christianity, xiii. 10.

inheritrix (in-her′i-triks), n. [< AF. inheritrix; fem. form of inheritor.] Same as inheritress.

Thou then whom partial heavens conspired in one to frame
The proof of beauty's worth, th' inheritrix of fame.
Sir P. Sidney (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 565).

inherset†, v. t. An obsolete form of inhearse.

inhesion (in-hē′zhon), n. [= It. inesione, < LL. inhæsio(n-), a hanging or adhering to, < L. inhærere, pp. inhæsus, inhere: see inhere.] The state of existing or being fixed in something; inherence.

Many have maintained that body is only a collection of qualities to which we give one name; and that the notion of a subject of inhesion, to which those qualities belong, is only a fiction of the mind.
Reid, Intellectual Powers, ii. 8.

in-hexagon (in′hek″sa-gon), n. [< in(scribed) + hexagon.] An inscribed hexagon.

inhiate†, v. i. [< L. inhiatus, pp. of inhiare, gape, stand open, < in, in, on, + hiare, gape: see hiatus.] To open the jaws; gape.

How like gaping wolves do many of them inhiate and gape after wicked mammon. Becon, Works (1843), I. 253.

inhiation† (in-hī-ā′shon), n. [< LL. inhiatio(n-), an opening of the mouth, < L. inhiare, open the mouth, gape: see inhiate.] An opening of the jaws; a gaping, as in eager desire.

A thirst and inhiation after the next life, and a frequency of prayer and meditation in this. Donne, Letters, xx.

inhibit (in-hib′it), v. t. [< L. inhibitus, pp. of inhibere (> It. inibire = Pr. Sp. Pg. inhibir = F. inhiber), hold back, restrain, forbid, < in, in, on, + habere, have, hold: see habit. Cf. exhibit, prohibit.] 1. To hold back; hinder by obstruction or restriction; check or repress.

Rather than they would be suspected of any lothsome infirmity, which might inhibit them from the Princes presence, or enterteinment of the ladies.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 252.

What shall be done to inhibit the multitudes that frequent those houses where drunk'nes is sold and harbour'd?
Milton, Areopagitica, p. 24.

2. To forbid; prohibit; interdict.

Inhibityng them upon a greate payn not once to approche ether to his speche or presence.
Hall, Union, etc., 1548, Hen. V., fol. 1. (Halliwell.)

Humaine weakenes, that pursueth still
What is inhibited. Marston, The Fawne, v.

It [the treaty-making power vested in the government of the United States] is . . . limited by all the provisions of the constitution which inhibit certain acts from being done by the government. Calhoun, Works, I. 203.

inhibiter, inhibitor (in-hib′i-tėr, -tor), n. 1. One who or that which inhibits.

They operated as inhibitors of digestion.
Medical News, LIII. 23.

2. Specifically, in Scots law, a person who takes ★out inhibition, as against a wife or a debtor.

inhibition (in-hi-bish′on), n. [= F. inhibition = Sp. inhibición = Pg. inhibição = It. inibizione, < L. inhibitio(n-), a restraining, < inhibere, restrain: see inhibit.] 1. The act of inhibiting, or the state of being inhibited; prohibition; restraint; embargo.

Mahomet . . . made a strict Inhibition to all his Sect from drinking of Wine, as a Thing profane.
Howell, Letters, ii. 54.

This is the Question heer, or the Miracle rather, why his onely not agreeing should lay a negative barr and inhibition upon that which is agreed to by a whole Parlament. Milton, Eikonoklastes, vi.

2. In Eng. law, a writ to forbid a judge from further proceedings in a cause depending before him, issuing usually from a higher ecclesiastical court to an inferior one, on appeal.—3. In physiol., the lowering of the action of a nervous mechanism by nervous impulses reaching it from a connected mechanism.

Now, however skilfully we may read older statements between the lines, no scientific—that is, no exact—knowledge of inhibition was possessed by any physiologist until Weber, by a direct experiment on a living animal, discovered the inhibitory influence of the pneumogastric nerve over the beating of the heart.
M. Foster, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 23.

It is evident, therefore, that reflex actions may be restrained or hindered in their development by the action of higher centres. This is termed the "inhibition of reflex action." Encyc. Brit., XIX. 28.

Inhibition against a debtor, in Scots law, a writ passing under the signet, whereby the debtor is prohibited from contracting any debt which may become a burden on his heritable property, or whereby his heritage may be attached or alienated to the prejudice of the inhibiter's demand.—Inhibition against a wife, at the instance of a husband, in Scots law, a writ passing the signet which prohibits all persons from dealing with the wife or giving her credit.

inhibitive (in-hib′i-tiv), a. [< inhibit + -ive.] Inhibitory.

inhibitor, n. See inhibiter.

inhibitory (in-hib′i-tō-ri), a. [= F. inhibitoire = Sp. Pg. inhibitorio = It. inibitorio, < ML. inhibitorius, inhibitory, < L. inhibere, inhibit: see inhibit.] Inhibiting or tending to inhibit; holding back; curbing, restraining, or repressing; checking or stopping.

Pain . . . has an inhibitory effect on all the reflex actions. H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, p. 101.

We referred a short time back to the phenomena of "inhibition." It is not too much to say that the discovery of the inhibitory function of certain nerves marks one of the most important steps in the progress of physiology during the past half-century.
M. Foster, Encyc. Brit., XIX. 23.

Inhibitory nerves, nerves which, when stimulated, diminish or repress action. Thus, the vagus contains fibers which on stimulation lower the pulse-rate.

inhield†, inhilde†, v. t. See inheeld.

inhive (in-hīv′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inhived, ppr. inhiving. [< in-[1] + hive.] To put into a hive; hive. [Rare.]

in hoc (in hok). [L.: in, in; hoc, abl. of hoc, neut. of hic, this: see hic jacet.] Herein; in this respect.

inhold (in-hōld′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inheld, ppr. inholding. [< in-[1] + hold[1].] To have inherent; contain within. [Rare.]

Light . . . which the sun inholdeth and casteth forth.
Raleigh.

inholder† (in-hōl′dėr), n. An indweller, or anything indwelling; an inhabitant or occupant; in the extract, the active forces of nature.

I [Dame Nature] do possesse the worlds most regiment;
As if ye please it into parts divide,
And every parts inholders to convent,
Shall to your eyes appeare incontinent.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 17.

inhoop† (in-höp′), v. t. [< in-[1] + hoop[1].] To confine or inclose as with a hoop or hoops; coop up.

His quails ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds.
Shak., A. and C., ii. 3.

inhospitable (in-hos′pi-tạ-bl), a. [< OF. inhospitable = Sp. inhospitable; as in-[3] + hospitable.] Not hospitable; indisposed to exercise hospitality; unfavorable or inimical to visitors; not affording accommodation or shelter: as, an inhospitable tribe; inhospitable wilds.

Since toss'd from shores to shores, from lands to lands, Inhospitable rocks, and barren sands. Dryden, Æneid.

Jael, who with inhospitable guile
Smote Sisera sleeping, through the temples nail'd.
Milton, S. A., l. 989.

Have you no touch of pity, that the poor
Stand starv'd at your inhospitable door?
Cowper, Prog. of Err., l. 250.

inhospitableness (in-hos′pi-tạ-bl-nes), n. The quality of being inhospitable.

inhospitably (in-hos′pi-tạ-bli), adv. In an inhospitable manner; unkindly.

inhospital†, a. [< OF. inhospital = Sp. inhospital; as in-[3] + hospital.] Inhospitable.

Lonely hermit's cage inhospitall.
Bp. Hall, Satires, iv. 5.

inhospitality (in-hos-pi-tal′i-ti), n. Inhospitableness. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead, x. § 2.

inhuman (in-hū′mạn), a. [= F. inhumain = Sp. Pg. inhumano = It. inumano, inhuman, < L. inhumanus, not suitable to the human condition, rude, savage, ill-bred, also LL. superhuman, < L. in- priv. + humanus, human: see human. Cf. inhumane.] 1. Not human; not governed by feelings proper to human nature; specifically, not humane; hard-hearted; unfeeling; cruel.

He did not only scorn to read your letter,
But, most inhuman as he is, he curs'd you,
Curs'd you most bitterly.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, i. 2.

Princes and peers, attend! while we impart
To you the thoughts of no inhuman heart.
Pope, Odyssey, vii. 246.

2. Not proper to human nature; destitute of human quality; specifically, showing want of humanity; marked by unfeelingness or cruelty.

Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,
Provokes this deluge most unnatural.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 2.

Thou most unjust, most odious in our eyes!
Inhuman discord is thy dire delight,
The waste of slaughter, and the rage of fight.
Pope, Iliad, v. 1098.

The place yielded to the Emperor, whose soldiers soon surrendered themselves to the inhuman excesses of war.
Sumner, Orations, I. 221.

=Syn. Pitiless, merciless, brutal, ruthless, remorseless.

inhumane (in-hū-mān′), a. [Formerly identical with inhuman, but in present form and accent like humane, directly from the L.; < L. inhumanus, savage, inhuman, < in- priv. + humanus, human, humane: see inhuman.] Not humane; inhuman; hard-hearted; cruel.

Bloud was so odious in each Ethnicke's sight,
That who did kill (as inhumane) none lov'd.
Stirling, Doomes-day, The Fifth Hour.

inhumanely† (in-hū-mān′li), adv. Inhumanly.

inhumanity (in-hū-man′i-ti), n. [= F. inhumanité = Sp. inhumanidad = Pg. inhumanidade = It. inumanità, < L. inhumanita(t-)s, inhuman conduct, barbarity, ill breeding, < inhumanus, inhuman: see inhuman.] The state or quality of being inhuman or inhumane; cruelty; barbarity.

Howsoeuer the bodies of these men before the Floud were composed, certain their mindes were disposed to all monstrous inhumanity, which hastened their destruction.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 38.

Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn!
Burns, Man was made to Mourn.

=Syn. Unkindness, brutality, ruthlessness.

inhumanly (in-hū′mạn-li), adv. In an inhuman manner; with cruelty; barbarously.

inhumate† (in′hū-māt), v. t. [< L. inhumatus, pp. of inhumare, bury: see inhume.] To inhume. Bailey, 1731.

inhumation (in-hū-mā′shọn), n. [= Sp. inhumación = It. inumazione, < L. as if inhumatio(n-)*, < inhumare, bury: see inhumate.] 1. The act of burying in the ground, especially as opposed to incremation; interment.

The soberest nations have rested in two ways, of simple inhumation and burning. Sir T. Browne, Urn-burial, i.

In the year 1810, a case of living inhumation happened in France, attended with circumstances which go far to warrant the assertion that truth is, indeed, stranger than fiction. Poe, Tales, I. 327.

2. In chem., a method, now obsolete, of digesting substances by burying the vessel containing them in warm earth or manure.

inhume (in-hūm′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inhumed, ppr. inhuming. [= F. inhumer = Sp. inhumar = It. inumare, < L. inhumare, bury in the ground, < in, in, + humus, ground: see humus. Cf. exhume.] 1. To deposit in the earth, as a dead body; bury; inter.

They had a neate Chapell, in which the heart of the Duke of Cleve, their founder, lies inhum'd under a plate of brasse. Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 17, 1641.

No hand his bones shall gather or inhume.
Pope, Iliad, xxi. 376.

2. In chem., to digest in a vessel surrounded with warm earth or manure.—3†. To serve as a tomb for.

We took notice of an old-conceited tomb, which inhumed a harmless shepherd.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 126.

-ini. [NL., L., masc. pl. of -inus: see -in[1], -ine[1].] A suffix forming New Latin names of some groups in zoölogy, as in Acanthurini, Salmonini, Stenini.

Inia[1] (in′i-ạ), n. [NL., from a S. Amer. name.] A genus of delphinoid odontocete cetaceans, type of the family Iniidæ. It contains the Amazonian dolphin, I. geoffrensis or I. boliviensis, about 8 feet long, with the dorsal fin a mere ridge, a long cylindrical snout, the jaws armed with from 104 to 132 teeth, the vertebræ about 40, the ribs 13, and the sternum consisting of a single piece. F. Cuvier, 1836.

inia[2], n. Plural of inion[2].

inial (in′i-ạl), a. [< inion[2] + -al.] In anat., of or pertaining to the inion.

iniid (in′i-id), n. A member of the family Iniidæ.

Iniidæ (i-nī′i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Inia (native name in Bolivia) + -idæ.] A family of dolphins, of the order Cete and suborder Denticete, typified by the genus Inia. They have the prolonged rostrum and other characters of the Delphinoidea, lacrymal bones coalesced with the jugals, the tubercular and capitular articulations of the ribs blending posteriorly, unossified costal cartilages, rudimentary maxillary crests, teeth mostly with complete cingulum, eyes of moderate size, and a transversely crescent-shaped blow-hole. Also Iniinæ, as a subfamily of Platanistidæ.

inimaginable† (in-i-maj′i-nạ-bl), a. [= F. inimaginable = Sp. inimaginable = It. inimaginabile; as in-[3] + imaginable.] Unimaginable; inconceivable. Bp. Pearson.

inimical (i-nim′i-kal), a. [< ML. inimicalis, unfriendly, hostile, < L. inimicus, unfriendly, an enemy: see inimicous, enemy[1].] 1. Having the disposition or temper of an enemy; unfriendly; hostile: chiefly applied to private enmity.

I am sorry the editors of the Review should so construe my article as to suppose it inimical to the free circulation of the Scriptures. Sydney Smith, To John Murray.

2. Adverse; hurtful; repugnant.

Associations in defence of the existing power of the sovereign are not, in their spirit, inimical to the constitution.
Brand, Political Associations (1796).

The reaction which ensued throughout the continent upon the collapse of the revolutionary outbreak was inimical to the political principles for which Sardinia had contended. E. Dicey, Victor Emmanuel, p. 109.

=Syn. Averse, Adverse, etc. (see hostile), unfriendly, antagonistic, opposed, hurtful.

inimicality (i-nim-i-kal′i-ti), n. [< inimical + -ity.] The state of being inimical; hostility; unfriendliness. Boucher.

inimically (i-nim′i-kal-i), adv. In an inimical, adverse, or unfriendly manner.

inimicitious†, a. [< L. as if inimicitiosus*, < inimicitia, hostility, < inimicus, hostile: see inimicous.] Inimical; unfriendly.

His majesty's subjects, with all the inimicitious passions which belong to them. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 23.

inimicous† (i-nim′i-kus), a. [< L. inimicus, unfriendly, hostile, < in- priv. + amicus, friendly, a friend, < amare, love: see amor. Cf. enemy[1], ult. < L. inimicus.] Inimical.

And indeed (besides that they [radishes] decay the teeth) experience tells us that . . . it is hard of digestion, inimicous to the stomach. Evelyn, Acetaria.

inimitability (in-im″i-tạ-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inimitabilité: see inimitable and -bility.] The quality of being inimitable.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding: or rather they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

inimitable (in-im′i-tạ-bl), a. [= F. inimitable = Sp. inimitable = Pg. inimitavel = It. inimitabile, < L. inimitabilis, that may not be imitated, < in- priv. + imitabilis, that may be imitated: see imitable.] Not imitable; incapable of being imitated or copied; surpassing imitation.

Thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal shone, inimitable on earth
By model or by shading pencil drawn.
Milton, P. L., iii. 508.

The original national genius may now come forward in perfectly new forms, without the sense of oppression from inimitable models. De Quincey, Style, iii.

=Syn. Matchless, peerless.

inimitableness (in-im′i-tạ-bl-nes), n. Inimitability.

inimitably (in-im′i-tạ-bli), adv. In an inimitable manner; to a degree beyond imitation.

Charms such as thine, inimitably great. Broome.

These two small but inimitably fine Poems ["L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso"] are as exquisite as can be conceived.
H. Blair, Rhetoric, xl.

in infinitum (in in-fi-nī′tum). [L.: in, in; infinitum, acc. neut. of infinitus, infinite: see infinite.] Without limit; indefinitely.

in initio (in i-nish′i-ō). [L.: in, in; initio, abl. of initium, a beginning: see initial.] In the beginning; at the outset.

in integrum (in in′tē-grum). [L.: in, in; integrum, acc. neut. of integer, entire: see integer, entire.] Entire.

in invitum (in in-vī′tum). [L.: in, in; invitum, acc. of invitus, unwilling, reluctant.] Against the unwilling; compulsory. A decree divesting an insolvent or bankrupt of his property by adverse proceedings is said to be in invitum, as contrasted with a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors.

iniome (in′i-ōm), n. Any member of the Iniomi.

Iniomi (in-i-ō′mī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἰνίον, the muscle at the back of the neck (see inion[2]), + ὠμος, shoulder: see humerus.] A suborder or an order of teleost fishes, having the shoulder-girdle disconnected from the side of the cranium and at most impinging upon the back of the cranium at the nape or nuchal region, and the coracoid bones and actinosts normally developed. It includes fishes of the families Synodontidæ, Scopelidæ, Chauliodontidæ, Plagyodontidæ, Sternoptychidæ, and a number of others.

iniomous (in-i-ō′mus), a. [< Iniomi + -ous.] Pertaining to the Iniomi, or having their characters.

The characteristics and families of iniomous fishes.
Science, VII. 374 a.

inion[1]† (in′yọn), n. [Also corruptly ingan, ingen, ingun; var. of onion: see onion.] An onion. This pronunciation is shown, without the changed spelling, in the second extract.

Your case in lawe is not worth an inion.
J. Heywood, Spider and Flie (1556).

And you that delight in trulls and minions,
Come buy my four ropes of hard St. Thomas's onions.
R. Taylor, Hog hath Lost his Pearl (Hazlett's Dodsley, [XI. 436).

inion[2] (in′i-on), n.; pl. inia (-ạ). [< Gr. ἰνίον, the muscle between the occiput and the back, the back of the head, the nape of the neck, < ἰς (ἰν-), a sinew, fiber, lit. strength, force, orig. Fiς* = L. vis (vir-), force: see vim.] In anat., a ridge of the occiput to which muscles of the nape are attached; now, specifically, the external occipital protuberance.

Iniophthalma† (in″i-of-thal′mạ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. ἰνίον, the muscle at the back of the neck, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] A tribe of prosobranchiate gastropods, having the eyes sessile behind the tentacles. The principal families are Actæonidæ, Pyramidellidæ, and Solariidæ.

iniquitable†, a. [Var. of inequitable, after iniquity.] Same as inequitable.

Who ever pretended to gainsay or resist an Act of Parliament, although . . . it may be as iniquitable as any action of a single person can be?
Roger North, Examen, p. 333.

iniquitous (i-nik′wi-tus), a. [< iniquity + -ous.] Characterized by iniquity; unjust; wicked: as, an iniquitous bargain.

In this city Athens there were parties, and avowed ones too, for the Persians, Spartans, and Macedonians, supported each of them by one or more demagogues pensioned and bribed to this iniquitous service.
Burke, Vind. of Nat. Society.

Las Casas lived to repent, . . . declaring afterwards that the captivity of black men is as iniquitous as that of Indians. Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I. 135.

=Syn. Illegal, Wicked, etc. (see criminal); unfair, inequitable, unrighteous, unprincipled, nefarious.

iniquitously (i-nik′wi-tus-li), adv. In an iniquitous manner; unjustly; wickedly.

His grants were from the aggregate and consolidated funds of judgments iniquitously legal. Burke, To a Noble Lord.

iniquity (i-nik′wi-ti), n.; pl. iniquities (-tiz). [< ME. iniquite, < OF. iniquiteit, iniquite, F. iniquité = Pr. iniquitat, inequitat = Sp. iniquidad = Pg. iniquidade = It. iniquità, < L. iniquita(t-)s, unequalness, injustice, < iniquus, unequal, unjust: see iniquous. Cf. equity, inequity.] 1. Lack of equity; gross injustice; unrighteousness; wickedness: as, the iniquity of the slave-trade.

Some contesting for privileges, customs, forms, and that old entanglement of iniquity, their gibberish laws, though the badge of their ancient slavery. Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

There is a greater or less probability of an happy issue to a tedious war, according to the righteousness or iniquity of the cause for which it was commenced. Bp. Smalridge.

2. A violation of right or duty; an unjust or wicked action; a wilful wrong or crime.

Your iniquities have separated between you and your God. Isa. lix. 2.

He himself dispatches post after post to demand justice, as upon a traitor; using a strange iniquity to require justice upon him whom he then waylayd and debarr'd from his appearance. Milton, Eikonoklastes, viii.

3†. In Scots law, inequity; a judicial act or decision contrary to law or equity.—4†. [cap.] A comic character or buffoon in the medieval English moralities or moral plays, often otherwise called the Vice, and sometimes by the name of the particular vice he represented. His chief business was to make sport by tormenting the impersonated Devil, and he was the prototype of the later clown or fool, Punch, and Harlequin.

Thus, like the formal Vice, Iniquity,
I moralise two meanings in one word.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 1.

That was the old way, gossip, when Iniquity came in, like Hokos Pokos, in a juggler's jerkin, with false skirts, like the knave of clubs. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Sin, Transgression, etc. See crime.

iniquous† (in-ī′kwus), a. [=F. inique = Pr. inic, enic = Pg. It. iniquo, < L. iniquus, unequal, uneven, unjust, < in- priv. + æquus, equal: see equal.] Unjust; wicked; iniquitous.

Whatsoever is done thro' any unequal affection is iniquous, wicked, and wrong. Shaftesbury, Inquiry concerning Virtue, I. ii. § 3.

inirritability (in-ir″i-ta-bil′i-ti), n. [< inirritable: see -bility.] The quality of being inirritable; good nature.

inirritable (in-ir′i-ta-bl), a. [< in-[3] + irritable.] Not irritable; good-natured; in physiol., not reacting to stimulation.

inirritative (in-ir′i-tā-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + irritative.] Not irritative; not producing or attended with irritation or excitement.

inisle (in-īl′), v. t. [< in-[2] + isle[1].] Same as enisle.

Into what sundry gyres her wonder'd self she throws,
And oft inisles the shore, as wantonly she flows.
Drayton, Polyolbion, viii. 448.

Gambia's wave inisles
An ouzy coast, and pestilential ills
Diffuses wide. Dyer, The Fleece, iv.

★ initial (i-nish′al), a. and n. [< F. initial = Sp. Pg. inicial = It. iniziale, < L. initialis, of the beginning, incipient, initial, < initium, beginning, < inire, go in, enter upon, begin, < in, in, + ire, go: see iter, iterate, etc.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the beginning; incipient: as, the initial step in a proceeding.

The highest form of the incredible is sometimes the initial form of the credible. De Quincey, Secret Societies, i.

In the case of voluntary attention the initial stimulus is some internal motive. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 94.

Even when the initial move has been made by the missionary, the trader, scenting the chance for gain, is not slow to follow. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 235.

2. Placed at the beginning; standing at the head: as, the initial letter of a word, or of a chapter in a book.

There, now, is an initial letter!
Saint Ulric himself never made a better!
Finished down to the leaf and the snail,
Down to the eyes on the peacock's tail!
Longfellow, Golden Legend, iv.

Initial cells, in bot., the cells from which the primordial layers or masses of nascent tissue arise.—Initial letter. See II., 1, 2.—Initial line. See polar coördinates in a plane, under coördinate.—Initial stress. See stress.—Initial tension, the stress developed in the consecutive elementary cylinders of a composite cylinder, or the body of a built-up gun, by the method of fabrication, or, in the case of a cast gun, by cooling from the interior. Initial tension is produced by shrinking over another a heated tube or hoop that will have a slightly smaller diameter when cooled, or by forcing it over by hydrostatic pressure. Each cylindrical layer compresses the one beneath it. In a properly constructed gun the greatest initial tension exists in the exterior cylindrical layer, and decreases progressively toward the bore, where the initial tension is negative, or becomes an initial compression. The initial tension should never exceed the elastic limit of the material.

II. n. 1. The initial or first letter of a word; an initial letter. A person's initials are the first letters in proper order of the words composing his name. To sign a paper with one's initials is to write only the first letter of each of one's names, including the surname. A person's surname being known or separately written, his initials are the first letters of his other names: as, what are Mr. Jones's initials?

2. The first letter of a book or writing, or of any division of it, distinguished from the body of the text by larger size or more ornamental character, or both. The initials of medieval manuscript books are often works of high art, elaborate in design and bright in color, generally red. Ornamented and colored initials were also used in many early printed books, sometimes separately executed by hand. In modern books initials, when used, are either plain or ornamental; and they are still sometimes printed in red.

No book or document was approved unless it had some ornamented and illuminated initials or capital letters. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 682.

3. In plain-song, a tone with which a melody may begin. In strict usage the initials for each mode are prescribed, and called absolute initials.

initial (i-nish′al), v. t.; pret. and pp. initialed or initialled, ppr. initialing or initialling. [< initial, n.] To put one's initial or initials to or on; sign or mark with initials: as, an initialed handkerchief; initialed paper.

Oval plaque, . . . initialed by the artist. Cat. Soulages Coll., p. 100.

initially (i-nish′al-i), adv. In an initial manner; at the beginning; at first.

The vibration of the ether is initially of the nature of a forced vibration. A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, p. 432.

initiate (i-nish′i-āt), v.; pret. and pp. initiated, ppr. initiating. [< LL. initiatus, pp. of initiare (> It. iniziare = Sp. Pg. iniciar = F. initier), begin, originate (in classical L. only the special sense 'initiate'), < L. initium, beginning: see initial.] I. trans. 1. To begin or enter upon; make a beginning of; introduce; set going or on foot.

Mutual dependence of parts is that which initiates and guides organization of every kind. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 331.

A few gentlemen met at a room, or office, in "the Kremlin," a building so called, in Buffalo, and then and there initiated the "Anti-Masonic party." N. Sargent, Public Men and Events, I. 140.

2. To introduce by preliminary instruction or forms; guide primarily; admit formally; induct: as, to initiate a person into an art, or into a society.

The first Element of his knowledge is to be shewne the Colledges, and initiated in a Tauerne by the way, which hereafter hee will learne of himselfe. Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A meere young Gentleman of the Vniuersitie.

You are not audacious enough; you must frequent ordinaries a month more, to initiate yourself. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 1.

I was not initiated into any rudiments till neere four yeares of age. Evelyn, Diary, p. 7.

The bookseller . . . initiated Leonard into many of the mysteries of the bibliographist. Bulwer, My Novel, vi. 16.

The initiated, those who have been formally instructed on any particular subject, or in the theories of any particular association, especially a secret one; specifically, in the early church, those who had been baptized and admitted to the full privileges of the church, and to a knowledge of the more exalted teachings of Christianity.

II.† intrans. To do the first act; perform the first rite; take the initiative.

The king himself initiates to the pow'r,
Scatters with quiv'ring hand the sacred flour.
Pope, Odyssey, iii. 564.

initiate (i-nish′i-āt), a. and n. [< L. initiatus, pp.: see the verb.] I. a. 1†. Pertaining or incident to the beginning or introduction; initial or initiatory.

Come, we'll to sleep: my strange and self abuse
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use.
Shak., Macbeth, iii. 4.

2. Initiated; commencing; introduced to knowledge; prepared for instruction.

To rise in science, as in bliss,
Initiate in the secrets of the skies!
Young, Night Thoughts, vi.

Initiate tenancy by the courtesy. See courtesy of England, under courtesy.

II. n. One who is initiated; specifically, one who has been admitted to a knowledge of or participation in secret doctrines, mystic rites, or the like.

initiation (i-nish-i-ā′shon), n. [< F. initiation = Sp. iniciación = Pg. iniciação = It. iniziazione, < L. initiatio(n-), an initiation (in mysteries or sacred rites), < initiare, begin, initiate: see initiate.] 1. The act of initiating or setting on foot; a beginning or starting: as, the initiation of a new enterprise.—2. Introduction by preliminary instruction or ceremony; initial guidance or admission, especially in some set or formal way, as into knowledge of or participation in anything, membership in an association, or the like.

Silence is the first thing that is taught us at our initiation into the sacred mysteries. W. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

John Ogilby was one who, from a late initiation into literature, made such a progress as might well style him the prodigy of his time. Winstanly, quoted in Pope's Dunciad, i. 141, notes.

In cases of children, and much more so in the case of strangers, a special initiation was required before any person could be admitted as a member of the Household. W. E. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 131.

★ initiative (i-nish′i-ā-tiv), a. and n. [< F. initiative, n., = Sp. iniciativo, a., = Pg. iniciativa, n., = It. iniziativo, a., < ML. initiativus*, serving to initiate, < LL. initiare, begin, L. initiate: see initiate.] I. a. Serving to initiate; initiatory.

II. n. 1. An introductory act or step; the first procedure in any enterprise; leading movement: as, to take the initiative.

When all reinforcements should have arrived, I expected to take the initiative by marching on Corinth, and had no expectation of needing fortifications. U. S. Grant, Personal Memoirs, I. 332.

She was the only one whose mind was disengaged and free to follow every new initiative. Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xlvi.

2. The power of commencing, originating, or setting on foot; the power of taking or the ability or disposition to take the lead: as, the popular branch of a legislature usually has the initiative in making appropriations.

And if private enterprise is more advantageous than joint-stock management, because it has more initiative and adaptability, so joint-stock management is for the same reason more advantageous than the official centralised management of all industry. J. Rae, Contemporary Socialism, p. 361.

The Emperor reserves the initiative concerning the rights of the Serbs on the basis of the wishes of their National Congress. Nineteenth Century, XIX. 457.

Nobody felt so deeply as Mr. Lincoln the terrible embarrassment of having a general in command of that magnificent army who was absolutely without initiative. The Century, XXXVI. 919.

initiator (i-nish′i-ā-tor), n. [= F. initiateur = It. iniziatore, inizzatore, < LL. initiator, a beginner, founder, < initiare, begin, L. initiate: see initiate.] One who or that which initiates.

An absolutely uniform species . . . would be deprived of that initiator of change which maintains its existence as a species. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 96.

Gaetano Cenni, in vol. i. of his "Dissertations," does not agree with Benedict XIV., but thinks Leo IX. was the initiator of the Golden Rose. N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 114.

Those sublime initiators without whom the Academy would be but a collection of fossils. Sci. Amer. Supp., p. 9085.

initiatory (i-nish′i-ā-tō-ri), a. and n. [< initiate + -ory.] I. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or suitable for a beginning or introduction; introductory: as, an initiatory step.

The initiatory movements of the States General were concerted by Lafayette and a small circle of friends. Everett, Orations, I. 487.

2. Initiating or serving to initiate; introducing by instruction, or by prescribed formalities.

It hath been euer the fashion of God to exercise his champions with some initiatory incounters. Bp. Hall, Samson's Marriage.

Two initiatory rites of the same general import cannot exist together. J. M. Mason.

II. n.; pl. initiatories (-riz). An introductory process or form.

Baptism is a constant initiatory of the proselyte. L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 67.

initiatrix (i-nish′i-ā-triks), n. [= It. iniziatrice, inizzatrice, < LL. initiatrix, fem. of initiator, a beginner, a founder: see initiator.] A female initiator.

inition† (i-nish′on), n. [< OF. inition, inicion, < ML. initio(n-)*, a beginning, < L. inire, pp. initus, begin: see initial.] A beginning.

Here I note the inition of my lord's friendship with Mountjoy. Sir R. Naunton, Fragmenta Reg., Lord Essex.

injealous† (in-jel'us), v. t. [< in-[2] + jealous.] To make jealous.

They liued together in that amitie as on[e] bed and boord is sayd to haue serued them both, which so inieal-osed the olde king as he called home his sonne.
Daniel, Hist. Eng., p. 93.

inject (in-jekt'), v. t. [< F. injecter = Sp. inyectar = Pg. injectar = It. injettare, < L. injectare, lay on, apply, freq. of injicere, inicere, pp. injectus, throw or put in, into, or upon, < in, in, on, + jacere, throw: see jet[1]. Cf. adject, conject, deject, eject, etc.] 1. To throw in; cause to pass in by impulsion or driving force, as a fluid into a passage or cavity: as, to inject medicine by means of a syringe; to inject cold water into a steam-condenser.

I observed three vertical dikes, so closely resembling in general appearance ordinary volcanic dikes that I did not doubt, until closely examining their composition, that they had been injected from below.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, ii. 439.

2. To treat by injection; charge with an impelled fluid.

Another method of anatomical preparation consists of injecting the vessels with some colored substance.
Amer. Cyc., I. 459.

Since almost any animal injected may afford some organ worth preserving, it seems better to employ permanent colors for tinging the mass.
C. O. Whitman, Microscopical Methods, p. 224.

When the whole brain is to be preserved, its vessels should be injected under slow pressure till the fluid comes out of the veins. Alien. and Neurol., VI. 561.

3. Figuratively, to introduce arbitrarily or inappropriately; insert out of place or unseasonably; lug in: as, to inject a polemical argument into a prayer.

Cæsar also, then hatching tyranny, injected the same scrupulous demurs to stop the sentence of death.
Milton, Eikonoklastes.

The District Attorney tried to inject an objection.
New York Evening Post, April 27, 1885.

4†. To cast or throw in general.

They . . . surround
The town with walls, and mound inject on mound.
Pope, Odyssey.

injecta (in-jek'tä), n. pl. [L., neut. pl. of injectus, thrown in: see inject.] Things thrown in; substances injected: opposed to ejecta.

injected (in-jek'ted), p. a. Filled as by injection; hyperemic; bloodshot.

After massage the eyes were still more injected, but on the day following were less so than before massage.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, IV. 660.

The whole eyeball was highly injected, and tender to the ★touch. The Lancet, No. 3421, p. 570.

injection (in-jek'shon), n. [= F. injection = Sp. inyección = Pg. injecção = It. injezione,< L. injectio(n-), a throwing in, < injicere, inicere, pp. injectus, throw in: see inject.] 1. The act of injecting or throwing in; the act of forcing in, as a fluid into a passage, cavity, or substance of loose texture: as, the injection of a drug by means of a syringe; the injection of cold water into a steam-condenser to produce a vacuum. —2. In anat., the act of injecting a body for dissection; the process of filling the vessels or other cavities of a body, or some part of a body, with a preservative, coloring, or other fluid.— 3. Specifically, in med., the giving of an enema; also, the enema given.— 4. That which is injected, as a fluid; specifically, any substance or preparation forced into an animal body to preserve it, display it, or otherwise fit it for dissection or other examination. There are many kinds of injections, all reducible to three categories: (1) Preservative injections, which retard or arrest decomposition, thus keeping a subject, or any part of one, fit for dissection. Arsenic is the usual basis of such injections. (2) Pigmentary injections, which contain coloring matters that tinge or stain certain parts of a different color from their surroundings, thus displaying them. Injections often combine the preservative and coloring properties. (3) Gaseous injections, as air, used to display a tissue or organ by distention or inflation. Quicksilver is also used as an injection to infiltrate and distend minute vessels.

5. The state of being hyperemic or bloodshot: as, the injection of the conjunctiva of an inflamed eye.

Massage is contra-indicated when it is found to cause excessive injection, and especially if there be photophobia and lachrymation; and it must not be employed in the presence of iritis.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, IV. 660.

6. Figuratively, a throwing in, as of a remark, hint, or suggestion; an injected saying or influence. [Rare.]

One thing he hath irrefragably proved, That there is no temptation which a man is subject to, but what might be suggested by our own corruption, without any injection of Satan. Fuller, Worthies, Gloucestershire.

Hard injection, an injection which is used in a fluid state, and afterward solidifies or sets, on cooling or drying. Plaster of Paris, white or colored, makes the usual hard injection.— Hypodermic injection. See hypodermic, 1.

injection-cock (in-jek'shon-kok), n. In a steam-engine, the valve which controls the entrance of cold water into a condenser.

injection-condenser (in-jek'shon-kon-den″sėr), n. A vessel in which steam is condensed by the direct contact of water.

injection-engine (in-jek'shon-en″jin), n. A steam-engine in which the steam is condensed by a jet of cold water thrown into the condenser.

injection-pipe (in-jek'shon-pīp), n. A pipe through which water is injected into the condenser of a steam-engine, to condense the steam.

injection-syringe (in-jek'shon-sir″inj), n. In anat., a syringe used in injecting.

injection-valve (in-jek'shon-valv), n. The valve controlling the entrance of water into the condenser of a steam-engine.

injection-water (in-jek'shon-wâ″tėr), n. The water which is injected into the condenser of a steam-engine in order to condense the steam.

injector (in-jek'tor), n. [= F. injecteur, < L. as if injector*, < injicere, pp. injectus, throw in: see inject.] One or that which injects; specifically, an apparatus for forcing water into a steam-boiler. It was first reduced to practical form by Giffard, hence often called Giffard's injector. It is essentially a jet-apparatus by which a jet of steam impinges on a stream of water by which it is condensed and of which it becomes a part. The resultant jet of warmed water receives from the steam a velocity and a living force due to its mass, sufficient to overcome a pressure equal to that of the original steam-jet or greater; the mechanical energy of the jet of water is due to the heat-energy which is transferred to it from the steam-jet. The essential parts of the Giffard injector are shown in the diagram, in which a is the steam-pipe with conical nozle c, b the water-supply pipe, d d a combining-tube, e a water-tube leading to the interior of the boiler, and f an overflow for water and steam. A check-valve prevents back-flow. Adjustability of the steam-nozle and various modifications which increase efficiency and render the injector more convenient in use have been added by other inventors. In operation steam flows through the pipe a, and, driving the air out of d, produces a partial vacuum in b. Water rising through b to fill the partial vacuum surrounds the steam-nozle and steam-jet, sudden condensation follows, and the energy of the water-jet so produced drives it and the water which has entered d past the central opening in d d and past the check-valve into the tube e, and thence into the boiler. The proportion of water to steam requires careful adjustment. In the Sellers injector the combining-tube is self-acting, and regulates the supply of water to the pressure of the steam. In other injectors a separate lever must be moved to adjust the apparatus to the pressure, to prevent waste of steam or water. In the diagram the excess of either water or steam escapes between the opposed nozles at f. Injectors are also used to obtain a vacuum in continuous railroad-brakes, but in this instance the apparatus seems to be more properly an ejector. See ejector.

Giffard's Injector.

injector-valve (in-jek'tor-valv), n. The valve between the boiler and the injector in the supply-pipe of a steam-boiler, which prevents the back-flow of the water.

injeer, v. t. See ingere.

injelly (in-jel'i), v. t.; pret. and pp. injellied, ppr. injellying. [< in-[2] + jelly.] To bury in jelly.

A pasty costly-made,
Where quail and pigeon, lark and leveret lay,
Like fossils of the rock, with golden yolks Imbedded and injellied. Tennyson, Audley Court.

injoint†, v. t. An obsolete form of enjoin.

joint[1] (in-joint'), v. t. [< in-[2] + joint.] To unite together as with joints; join. [Rare.]

The Ottomites, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injointed them with an after fleet.
Shak., Othello, i. 3.

injoint[2]†, v. t. [< in-[3] + joint.] To unjoint; disjoin.

Those miserable wretches had their ears cropt and their noses cut off, for that the foresaid bridge by a mighty tempest was injoynted and broken.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 126.

injoy†, v. An obsolete form of enjoy.

injucund† (in-jö'kund), a. [< L. injucundus, unpleasant, < in- priv. + jucundus, pleasant: see jocund.] Unpleasant. Bailey.

injucundity† (in-jö-kun'di-ti), n. [< L. injucundita(t-)s, unpleasantness, < injucundus, unpleasant: see injucund.] Unpleasantness; disagreeableness. Cockeram.

injudicable (in-jö'di-ka-bl), a. [< in-[3] + judicable.] Not cognizable by a judge. Bailey.

injudicial (in-jö-dish'al), a. [< in-[3] + judicial.] Not judicial; not according to the forms of law.

in judicio (in jö-dish'i-ō). [L.: in, in; judicio, abl. of judicium, judicial investigation, trial: see judicial, juise.] In court; in judicial proceedings.

injudicious (in-jö-dish'us), a. [= F. injudicieux; as in-[3] + judicious.] 1. Not judicious in thought, speech, or action; deficient in judgment; imprudent: as, an injudicious ally.

It is painful to be thus obliged to vindicate a man who, in his heart, towered above the petty arts of fraud and imposition, against an injudicious biographer, who undertook to be his editor, and the protector of his memory.
A. Murphy, On the Life and Genius of Dr. Johnson.

2. Not judicious in character or kind; ill-judged or ill-advised; contrary to sound judgment or discretion; unwise: as, an injudicious measure.

One of the victims of his [James II.'s] injudicious parsimony was the poet laureate. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

The most injudicious charity . . . has commonly a beneficial and softening influence upon the donor.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 80.

=Syn. Indiscreet, inconsiderate, imprudent, rash, hasty.

injudiciously (in-jö-dish'us-li), adv. In an injudicious manner; unwisely.

The artillery, also, was so injudiciously placed as to be almost entirely useless. Irving, Granada, p. 66.

injudiciousness (in-jö-dish'us-nes), n. The ★quality of being injudicious or unwise.

injunction (in-jungk'shon), n. [= F. injonction = Pr. injunction = Cat. injuncio, < LL. injunctio(n-), a command, < L. injungere, pp. injunctus, command, enjoin: see enjoin.] 1. The act of enjoining or directing; admonition as to action or duty; requirement.

The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunction. Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

2. That which is enjoined; a command, order, or admonition.

I shall most willingly conform to any other Injunctions of your Lordship's, and esteem them always as Favours.
Howell, Letters, ii. 17.

My wife always generously let them have a guinea each, to keep in their pockets, but with strict injunctions never to change it. Goldsmith, Vicar, x.

3†. An obligation; engagement; imposition.

Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things. . . .
Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 9.

His error was imperious, and would command all other men to renounce their own reason and understanding, till they perish'd under the injunction of his all-ruling error.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, vi.

4. In law, a judicial process or order requiring the person to whom it is directed to do or not to do a particular thing. An injunction is binding on all persons having knowledge of it.

She . . . once tried to procure an injunction to hinder me from felling timber upon it for repairs.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 35.

5†. Conjunction; union.

It can be but a sorry and ignoble society of life whose inseperable injunction depends meerly upon flesh and bones. Milton, Divorce, ii. 9.

Ad interim injunction, injunction pendente lite, interlocutory injunction, preliminary injunction, provisional injunction, temporary injunction, an injunction granted in an action, before the rights of the parties have been tried, as a provisional remedy, for the purpose of maintaining the subject of the action in statu quo meanwhile, as distinguished from a final injunction, which is awarded only by judgment. The terms are interchangeably used, except that preliminary injunction is more appropriate where the application is made at the commencement of the action than where it is delayed; temporary, ad interim, and preliminary are more appropriate to indicate an injunction for a transient period, as until further order, or until a hearing of the defendant in opposition, while pendente lite indicates that the injunction is intended to continue till judgment, and interlocutory is not often used of an ex parte injunction.— Common injunction, an injunction such as is ordinarily incident to actions of a class (such, for instance, as creditors' suits), and commonly granted in default of opposition, or even without notice, and which remains in force until answer and the further order of the court, as distinguished from a special injunction, which is ordinarily expressed to continue in force until answer or further order. — Mandatory injunction, an injunction which in effect commands the doing of an act, as, for instance, the removal of a wall, by forbidding the person to whom the injunction is addressed to permit the wall to remain.— Permanent injunction. (a) An injunction which is final or perpetual, as distinguished from one pending the action. (b) An injunction granted to continue pending the action, as distinguished from one merely temporary, or until opposition can be heard.— Special injunction, a prohibitory writ or interdict against some act of a party, such as waste, nuisance, piracy, etc.

injuret, n. A Middle English form of injury.

injure (in′jūr), v. t.; pret. and pp. injured, ppr. injuring. [Formerly also injury, q. v.; < OF. injurier, injurer, F. injurier = Pr. enjuriar = Sp. Pg. injuriar = It. ingiuriare, < L. injuriari, do an injury, injure, < injuria, an injury: see injury.] To do harm to; inflict damage or detriment upon; impair or deteriorate in any way; subject to any deleterious or noxious action or influence; hurt; harm: a word of very wide application: as, to injure property by misuse or neglect; to injure the health by overwork or dissipation; to injure another's reputation by slander; to injure the cause of morality by bad example.

When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?—
Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?
A plague upon you all! Shak., Rich. III., i. 3.

Ay me! can Pity injure Justice so
As to relieve me with a gracious glance?
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 148.

He [Bacon] thought he could serve Essex without injuring himself. Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

=Syn. To mar, disfigure, abuse, maltreat, wrong.

in jure (in jō′rē). [L.: in, in; jure, abl. of jus (jur-), right, law: see just[1].] In law; in jurisprudence.—Confession in jure, in Rom. law. See confession, 1 (e).

injured (in′jūrd), p. a. Manifesting a sense of injury; hurt; offended.

The keeper had fired four times at an Indian, but he said, with an injured air, that the Indian had skipped around so 's to spile everything. S. L. Clemens, Roughing It, iv.

injurer (in′jūr-ėr), n. One who or that which injures or harms.

Ill deeds are well turned back upon their authors;
And 'gainst an injurer the revenge is just.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iv. 4.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or sufferer.
Bp. Atterbury.

An injured man may be moved by an impulse of pity to spare his injurer, while a regard for justice and a desire of revenge combined impel him to inflict punishment.
H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 349.

injuria (in-jō′ri-ą), n. [L.: see injury.] In law, a violation of rights; a wrong of such nature that the law will take cognizance of it. Injury includes all kinds of hurt. Injuria does not include those that are done without any violation of right, as where one consents to undergo a surgical experiment, or where a child is punished by its parent, or where public authority changes the grade of a road which it has free right to change, impairing the use and value of the property of the abutting owner. In all these cases there may be injury, but no injuria. Such a case is damnum absque injuria.—Injuria absque damno [L.: injuria, injury (see injury); absque (< abs, off, from, with generalizing suffix -que), without; damno, abl. of damnum, harm: see damnum], a violation of one's rights without causing any harm, as where, to a stream which was already sufficiently polluted by others to complete the nuisance to an owner below, another wrong-doer adds other foul matter; or where one sets his foot on another's land against objection, but doing no harm. In such cases the law gives a remedy, but the absence of damage is considered in determining the measure of relief or redress.

injurious (in-jō′ri-us), a. [< F. injurieux = Pr. enjurios = Sp. Pg. injurioso = It. ingiurioso, < L. injuriosus, acting unjustly, wrongful, injurious, < injuria, wrong, injury: see injury.] 1. Tending to injure or impair; inflicting harm, wrong, or mischief; of a harmful nature or quality; deleterious; detrimental; hurtful: as, an injurious action or speech; conduct injurious to health or morality.

Tho' I have been content to let you debate the Matter of Succession, yet I advise you to beware, that you be not injurious to your Prince's Patience.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 335.

One part of carbonic acid in a thousand parts of respired air indicates the presence of an amount of organic matter which, according to Dr. Parkes, is perceptible to the senses and positively injurious to health.
Huxley and Youmans, Physiol., § 383.

2. Prone to injure; having disposition or capacity to inflict harm or suffering; hostile; dangerous.

Did injurious nature bind
My soul earth's 'prentice, with no clause to leave her?
Quarles, Emblems, v. 13.

The result is the death of his proud and injurious enemy. Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 130.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,
After offence returning, to regain Love once possess'd. Milton, S. A., l. 1003.

3. Abusive; insulting.

Injurious duke, that threat'st where is no cause.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 4.

Sharp was his voice, which, in the shrillest tone,
Thus with injurious taunts attack'd the throne.
Pope, Iliad, ii. 274.

=Syn. 1. Damaging, disadvantageous, prejudicial, mischievous, destructive.

injuriously (in-jō′ri-us-li), adv. In an injurious or hurtful manner; wrongfully; mischievously; abusively; maliciously.

I mean that defence of myself to which every honest man is bound when he is injuriously attacked in print.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, Pref.

The poison of the cobra acts far more injuriously on the protoplasm of the higher animals than on that of Drosera.
Darwin, Insectiv. Plants, p. 209.

injuriousness (in-jō′ri-us-nes), n. The quality of being injurious or harmful; hurtfulness.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression. Eikon Basilike.

injury (in′jū-ri), n.; pl. injuries (-riz). [< ME. injurie, also injure; < OF. (and F.) injure = Pr. injuria, enjuria = Sp. Pg. injuria = It. ingiuria, < L. injuria, wrong, violence, harm, injury, < injurius, acting unlawfully or wrongfully, injurious, < in- priv. + jus (jur-), law, right: see just[1].] 1. That which injures; harm inflicted or suffered; mischief; damage; hurt.

And put to all iniuryes yt myght be deuysed, and fynally condempned to deth.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 29.

She us'd few words,
But yet enough to make me understand
The baseness of the injury you did her.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, v. 4.

There is no such injury as revenge, and no such revenge as the contempt of an injury.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 7.

The former [private] wrongs are an infringement or privation of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals; and are thereupon frequently termed civil injuries. Blackstone, Com., III. i.

2†. Injurious speech; detraction; calumny.

He fell to bitter invectives against the French king, and spake all the injuries he could devise of Charles. Bacon.

Mess. "Tell him," quoth she, "my mourning weeds are done,
And I am ready to put armour on."
K. Edw. . . . But what said Warwick to these injuries?
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 1.

Civil injury, a violation of a right of a party, as distinguished from a criminal offense; a wrong in respect of which the law entitles the injured party to redress for his own benefit against the wrong-doer, as distinguished from the amenability of the wrong-doer to punishment by the state. The same act may be both a civil injury and a criminal offense, as an assault or a libel. Civil injury has been sometimes defined as the violation of the right of an individual as an individual; but by this is meant only the same distinction. The violation of a private right of a corporation, or even of the state, such as the breach of a contract with the government, is a civil injury as truly as if it affected only an individual.—Irreparable injury. See irreparable.=Syn. 1. Injury, Detriment, Damage, Hurt, Harm, Mischief, Injustice. These words represent evil inflicted with or without intention, except that in the last three instances it is presumably intentional. Each has considerable range of meaning. Injury is the general word, but usually expresses more than slight loss; damage is a diminution of value greater than detriment; harm is presumably less in degree and kind; by hurt we mean something more serious, especially something physical and attended with pain; mischief may be great, especially widespread, and is often the result of wantonness or love of evil. Injustice is the strongest in its expression of intention. Detriment is chosen when the smallest degree of harm is to be included; as, it is the duty of the dictator to see that the state suffers no detriment. See loss.

injury† (in′jū-ri), v. t. [< injury, n.] To injure; hurt; harm.

They are always in mutuall wars one with another, yet will not they iniury a stranger.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 624.

That accordingly iustice may equally be done vnto our marchants by you & your subiects, which marchants haue in like sort bene iniuried. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 159.

Pray, use me like a gentleman; take all, but injury not my body. Middleton, Your Five Gallants, iii. 2.

injust†, a. [< ME. injust, < OF. (and F.) injuste = Pr. injust = Sp. Pg. injusto = It. ingiusto, < L. injustus, not just, < in- priv. + justus, just: see just[1].] Unjust.

This is the descripcion of a wyked and iniust iudge.
Joye, Expos. of Daniel, iii.

injustice (in-jus′tis), n. [< F. injustice = Pr. Sp. injusticia = Pg. injustiça = It. ingiustizia, < L. injustitia, injustice, < injustus, not just: see injust.] Lack of justice or equity; unjust action; violation of another's rights; wrong inflicted.

Thrice is he arm'd that hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2.

It were great injustice . . . that honest creditors should be cousened and defrauded of the summe of thirty or forty thousand duckats. Coryat, Crudities, I. 167.

The idea to which the name injustice is given being the invasion or violation of that right [property].
Locke, Human Understanding, IV. iii. 18.

=Syn. Damage, Harm, etc. (see injury); unfairness, foul play, grievance.

injustifiable† (in-jus′ti-fī-ą-bl), a. [< in-[3] + justifiable.] Not justifiable; unjustifiable.

Or whether it was that they blindly resolved to follow that injustifiable precedent of passing over so necessary a rule to all courts, of giving the partys accused an hearing.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1540.

injustly†, adv. Unjustly.

The Burgonions beynge sore displeased assembled a greate army, bothe to reuenge their querrelles, and also to recouer againe the tounes from theim injustely taken.
Hall, Hen. V., an. 11.

★ink[1] (ingk), n. [Early mod. E. also inck; < ME. inke, ynke, inc, enk, enke, encke = D. inkt, < OF. enque, enche, F. encre = Pr. encre = It. inchiostro, ink, < LL. encaustum, < LGr. ἔγκαυστον, purple ink, later (MGr.) any ink, neut. of ἐγκαυστος (> L. encaustus), burnt in: see encaustic. Other words for 'ink' are Sp. Pg. tinta, G. tinte, dinte (see tint); Sw. bläk, Dan. blæk (see black); NGr. μελάνη (black), etc.] 1. A colored fluid of slight viscosity used for writing or drawing, or a more viscous colored substance used in printing: distinguished as writing-ink and printing-ink. Common black writing-ink is generally made of an infusion of galls, copperas, and gum arabic. The coloring matter is the gallotannate of iron, which is suspended in water by gum arabic; a little logwood is generally added to deepen and improve the color. Sulphate of copper is also sometimes used in making writing-ink, but is rather injurious than otherwise. Printing-ink is a mechanical mixture of boiled oil and a black or colored pigment. For most inks boiled linseed-oil is used, generally with some rosin; but rosin alone is used for the coarsest inks, and nut-oil or other fine oil for the finest. The pigment for black ink is lampblack or other carbonaceous matter. Soap is added to increase the facility of impression.

Y haue mo thingis to write to 30u, and I wolde not bi parchemyn and enke [var. ynke]. Wyclif, 2 John 12 (Purv.).

And where also he asked penne and ynke, and wrote of his sone. Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 39.

He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book. Jer. xxxvi. 18.

2. In zoöl., the inky fluid of a cephalopod, as the cuttlefish.—Blue writing-ink, an ink consisting of sulphate of indigo dissolved in water or of Chinese blue made soluble with oxalic acid.—Book-ink, a printing-ink prepared from refined gas-black and other ingredients mixed with a thicker and more carefully prepared oil than news-ink.—China ink. See India ink, under India.—Copying-ink, an ink composed partly of a soluble material, as gum arabic, sugar, or glycerin, to prevent it from drying too rapidly or thoroughly. When letters or manuscripts written with it are placed against a moistened sheet, a part of the ink is transferred, making a reversed copy. Translucent paper is used for taking the copy, which is turned over to bring the copied letters into their normal position, and read from the opposite side.—Diamond ink, a dilute solution of hydrofluoric acid, preserved in guttapercha bottles, and used for writing on glass.—Gold or silver ink, writing-fluid in which gold or silver, or some imitation of either metal, is suspended in a state of fine division in water by means of gum arabic or honey.—Indelible ink, a special ink so made as to make a mark that cannot easily be obliterated by washing or use: used especially for marking linen, etc. Such ink is usually made efficacious by the incorporation of a chemical agent, as nitrate of silver. Also called marking-ink.—India or Indian ink. See India, a.—Invisible ink. Same as sympathetic ink.—Lithographic ink, an ink used in lithography for writing on stone, or for transferring autographically from paper to stone. It is a composition of virgin wax, dry white soap, tallow or lard, shellac, mastic, and lampblack.—Marking-ink. (a) Same as indelible ink. (b) A mixture of lampblack and turpentine used with a brush or stencil for marking packing-cases and other packages.—News-ink, a printing-ink usually made of lampblack and linseed-oil slightly boiled.—Permanent ink. Same as indelible ink.—Red writing-ink, a solution of alum colored with brazil-wood or an ammoniacal solution of cochineal, much used for the specific parts of formal writings, as records, deeds, diplomas, etc.—Safety-ink. (a) A delicate printing-ink for checks, to prevent tampering. (b) A writing-ink which cannot be changed by chemicals.—Sympathetic ink, a writing-fluid which remains invisible on the paper until it is developed by some means, such as exposure to heat, strong light, or chemical reaction. Solutions of cobalt thus become blue or green, a very dilute sulphuric acid blackens, and lemon-juice turns brown. Also called invisible ink.—To sling ink, to write, especially to make a business of ★writing. [Slang, U. S.]

Alimentary Canal of Cuttlefish (Sepia officinalis).

a, anus; bi, ink-bag; mb, buccal mass; gb, buccal ganglion; s, posterior salivary glands; e, esophagus; h, liver; dh, hepatic duct; v, stomach; v', pyloric cæcum; gsp, splanchnic ganglion; i, intestine.

ink[1] (ingk), v. t. [< ink[1], n.] 1. To color with ink.—2. To spread ink over; daub with ink.—To ink fat†. See fat[1], a.

ink[2] (ingk), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. In falconry, the neck, or that part from the head to the body of the bird that a hawk preys upon. Halliwell.—2. The socket of a mill-spindle. Bailey.

ink-bag (ingk'bag), n. A bladder-shaped sac found in some dibranchiate cephalopods, containing a black and viscid fluid resembling ink, by ejecting which, in case of danger or pursuit, they can render the surrounding water opaque and thus conceal themselves. This fluid is used to some extent in the fine arts, under the name of sepia, from the genus which first supplied it for commerce. Also ink-gland, ink-sac. See cut on preceding page.

ink-ball (ingk'bâl), n. 1. Same as ball[1], 9.—2. A kind of round oak-gall, produced by some cynipid, and containing tannin enough to be used in making a poor quality of ink.

The juice of poke-berries, compounded with vinegar, or the distillation of a vegetable product known as "ink balls," usurped the place of ink. The Century, XXXVI. 765.

ink-bench (ingk'bench), n. The inking-table of a printing-press.

inkberry (ingk'ber″i), n.; pl. inkberries (-iz). 1. An elegant shrub, Ilex glabra, found on the Atlantic coast of North America. It grows from 2 to more than 4 feet high, has slender, flexible stems and leathery evergreen leaves, shining on the surface and of a lanceolate form, and produces small black berries. 2. The plant Randia aculeata, called the West Indian inkberry.—3. The plant Wilkiea macrophylla (Kibara macrophylla of authors), called the Australian or Queensland inkberry.

inkberry-weed (ingk'ber″i-wēd), n. The poke-weed, Phytolacca Americana.

ink-block (ingk'blok), n. In printing, a small square table, sometimes with a slightly raised rim, used with some hand-presses, on which printing-ink is spread out or distributed in a thin film, to be taken up by the inking-roller.

ink-bottle (ingk'bot″l), n. An inkstand; also, the receptacle for ink in an inkstand. [Eng.]

Take a little bit of glass, as a wine-glass, or the ink-bottle, and play it about a little on the side of your hand farthest from the window.
Ruskin, Elem. of Drawing, p. 54.

ink-brayer (ingk'brā″ėr), n. In printing, a short wooden cylinder fitted with a handle, used to spread ink on an ink-block.

ink-cup (ingk'kup), n. A dip-cup for ink, usually of glass or india-rubber.

ink-cylinder (ingk'sil″in-dėr), n. In a printing-machine, a revolving drum of iron, usually placed between the inking-trough and the inking-rollers to facilitate the even distribution of ★printing-ink.

ink-duct (ingk'dukt), n. A contrivance which conducts printing-ink from an ink-fountain to the distributing-table or rollers. It is usually an iron roller made to vibrate and revolve at stated intervals.

inker (ing'kėr), n. 1. A device on a recording instrument by which the dot or trace is made. Knight.—2. One of the large rollers on a printing-press which apply the ink to the type.

inket (ing'ket), n. [< ink[1] + -et.] An inkstand. [Eng.]

A small mahogany table furnished with a papier mâche inket and blotting-case.
Mrs. Riddell, Her Mother's Darling, iv.

inkfish (ingk'fish), n. Same as calamary, 1.

ink-fountain (ingk'foun″tān), n. An iron trough attached to a printing-press to contain ink and control its flow to the inking-rollers; an inking-trough.

ink-gland (ingk'gland), n. Same as ink-bag.

inkholder (ingk'hōl″dėr), n. A vessel for holding ink; the part of an inkstand that contains the ink.

inkhorn (ingk'hôrn), n. and a. [< ME. ynkhorn, enkhorn*; < ink[1] + horn.] I. n. 1. A portable case for ink and writing-instruments, made of a horn, or (usually) of wood or metal, formerly in common use in Europe, and still in some parts of the East. See kalamdan.

One man among them was clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side. Ezek. ix. 2.

Hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 2.

The notary had his small table, his ink-horn and quills, his books, papers, and assistant scrivener, in an angle of the lower hall. The Century, XXXVII. 87.

2. In her. See penner.

II.† a. Pertaining to an inkhorn, or to a writer or pedant; bookish; pedantic.

Hee that can catche an ynke horne terme by the taile, him they coumpt to be a fine Englishman and a good rhetorician. Sir T. Wilson, Art of Rhetoric, p. 165.

Strange and inkhorne tearmes.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 111.

Inkhorn mate, a fellow who carries an inkhorn; a bookish or pedantic man.

And ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1.

inkhornism† (ingk'hôrn-izm), n. [< inkhorn + -ism.] A bookish, pedantic, or bombastic expression.

Singing his love, the holy Spouse of Christ,
Like as she were some light-skirts of the rest,
In mightiest inkhornisms he can thither wrest.
Bp. Hall, Satires, II. viii. 12.

inkhornize† (ingk'hôrn-iz), v. i. [< inkhorn + -ize.] To use inkhorn terms. Cotgrave.

Escorcher le Latin [F.], to inkhornize it, or use inkhorn tearmes. Cotgrave.

inkhornizer† (ingk'hôrn-ī-zėr), n. One who inkhornizes. Cotgrave.

inkindle† (in-kin'dl), v. t. An obsolete form of enkindle.

inkiness (ing'ki-nes), n. The state or quality of being inky.

inking-ball (ing'king-bâl), n. Same as ball[1], 9.

inking-pad (ing'king-pad), n. An absorbent pad of felt or other porous material for holding and supplying ink to hand-stamps and other printing and recording devices.

inking-roller (ing'king-rō″lėr), n. In printing, an elastic cylinder made of a composition of glue and molasses, or of glue, glycerin, and sugar, cast in a mold around a spindle or stock, for applying ink to type by being rolled over it. Inking-rollers (first made of cloth covered with leather) did not entirely supersede inking-balls for ordinary use till the early part of the nineteenth century. The stock was originally of wood, but is now usually of wrought-iron. The diameter of inking-rollers for power-presses is about 3½ inches, but as formerly made for hand-presses it was considerably more. Inking-rollers are rotated on a table or in contact with other rollers to spread the ink evenly before they are rolled over the types or plates for the impression. On different kinds of presses they are used either singly or in gangs of two or more. Also ink-roller.

inking-table (ing'king-tā″bl), n. In printing, a table of wood, iron, or stone, used with some kinds of hand- and power-presses, on which printing-ink is evenly spread out in a thin film, to be taken up by the inking-roller or gang of rollers, which conveys it to the type.

inking-trough (ing'king-trôf), n. The reservoir from which an inking-roller is supplied with ink: called by American printers ink-fountain.

ink-knife (ingk'nīf), n. In printing, a long blade in the ink-duct regulated by means of screws so as to govern the amount of ink to be given at each impression.

inkle[1] (ing'kl), v. t.; pret. and pp. inkled, ppr. inkling. [< ME. inklen, inclen*, hint at; from inkling.] 1. To hint at; disclose. [Found only in the following passage, where the alliteration requires it.]

A brem brasen borde bringes hee soone,
Imped in iuory, too incle the truthe,
With goode siluer & golde gailich atired.
Alisaunder of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 615.

2. To have a hint or inkling of; divine. [Rare.]

"He has stolen a hundred thousand pounds." "John," cried my mother, "you are mad!" And yet she turned as pale as death, . . . and she inkled what it was.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lii.

inkle[2] (ing'kl), n. [Also incle, perh. from D. enkel (enckel, inckel), single, referring to a narrow or inferior tape.] 1. A kind of linen material formerly made in various widths and used in many ways, for example, as narrow tape to tie up papers, and as broad tape for girdles. It also was wide enough to "make amices." The name is now given to a broad linen tape.

He hath ribands of all the colours i' the rainbow: . . . inkles, caddisses, cambrics, lawns; why, he sings them over, as they were gods or goddesses; you would think a smock were a she-angel: he so chants to the sleeve-band, and the work about the square on't.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4.

My wife is learning now, sir, to weave inkle.
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, v. 3.

'I twitch'd his dangling Garter from his Knee;
He wist not when the hempen String I drew;
Now mine I quickly doff of Inkle Blue.
Gay, Shepherd's Week (1714), p. 37.

2. The linen thread or yarn before it is made into tape, etc.; it is now known as "unwrought inkle." It was formerly used for embroidering.

And with her needl composes
Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry;
That even her art sisters the natural roses;
Her inkle, silk, twin with the rubied cherry.
Shak., Pericles, v., Prol.

He can thread needles on horseback, or draw a yard of inkle through his nose.
B. Jonson, Gipsies Metamorphosed.

Spinel is bleached yarn for the manufacture of the tape, and is known as unwrought inkle. E. H. Knight.

inkling (ingk'ling), n. [< ME. inkling, ynkiling*; < OF. enclin, inclination.] 1. A hint; an intimation; an imperfect idea or notion.

He was thither come with all his hoste and power before the confederates hearde any inkelyng of his marchyng forward. Hall, Hen. IV., an. 6.

Whilst these Things were enacted, Cardinal Wolsey had an Inkling of the King's Affection to Anne Bullen, Daughter of the Viscount Rochford. Baker, Chronicles, p. 277.

Aug. I thought you, Julio, would not thus have stolen a marriage without acquainting your friends.
Jul. Why, I did give thee inklings.
Beau. and Fl., Captain, v. 5.

2†. Inclination; desire. Grose.

ink-mushroom (ingk'mush″röm), n. A name given to species of the genus Coprinus, which is closely allied to the genus Agaricus or common mushrooms, from which it differs by the habit of deliquescing into a blackish fluid resembling ink, whence the popular name.

in-kneed (in'nēd), a. Knock-kneed.

inknit (in-nit'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inknitted or inknit, ppr. inknitting. [< in[1] + knit.] To knit in. Southey.

inknot (in-not'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inknotted, ppr. inknotting. [< in[1] + knot[1].] To bind with or as if with knots.

John Stafford, archbishop of Canterbury, when the land was more replenished with silver, inknotteth that priest in the greater excommunication that should consecrate "poculum stanneum." Fuller, Holy War, p. 131.

ink-nut (ingk'nut), n. The astringent fruit of several species of Terminalia, as T. Chebula, T. Bellerica, etc., used by the natives of India in producing a permanent black. It is exported under the name of myrobalan.

ink-pad (ingk'pad), n. Same as inking-pad.

ink-pencil (ingk'pen″sil), n. A pencil filled with a coloring material of varied composition that makes an ink-like mark, which is indelible and can be reproduced in the copying-press.

ink-plant (ingk'plant), n. A low European shrub, Coriaria myrtifolia, used in dyeing black.

ink-pot† (ingk'pot), n. and a. I. n. An inkhorn; an inkholder.

II. a. Pedantic: same as inkhorn.

To use many metaphors, poetical phrases in prose, or incke-pot termes, smelleth of affectation.
Wright, Passions of the Mind (Cens. Lit., IX. 175).

ink-powder (ingk'pou″dėr), n. A powder from which ink can be readily made by steeping it in water. This is generally supposed to be a modern invention, but in 1718 James Austen introduced in London "Persian ink-powder."

ink-roller (ingk'rō″lėr), n. Same as inking-roller.

Turning the ink-roller on the left, which takes its supply from another roller. Ure, Dict., IV. 683.

ink-root (ingk'röt), n. The marsh-rosemary, Limonium Carolinianum.

ink-sac (ingk'sak), n. Same as ink-bag.

inkshed (ingk'shed), n. A shedding or spilling of ink: a facetious imitation of bloodshed.

What inkshed springs from altercation!
What loppings off of reputation!
Lloyd, A Familiar Epistle, To J. B., Esq.

ink-slinger (ingk'sling″ėr), n. A professional writer; one who makes a business of writing. ★[Slang, U. S.]

inkstand (ingk'stand), n. A small cup-like receptacle, with or without a cover, for holding the ink used in writing. Inkstands are of various materials, as glass, porcelain, metal, etc., or of combinations of materials (as a glass cup or ink-well in a wooden or metallic container), and of many forms, as the globular, the well, the fountain, the chambered, and the invertible inkstands.

ink-stone (ingk'stōn), n. 1. Native copperas or iron sulphate (also called iron vitriol and, in mineralogy, melanterite), or a stone containing this substance: used in making ink.—2. A slab of slate, sometimes of marble or other stone, used for rubbing down the Chinese and Japanese solid ink known in Europe as India ink, usually made with a gradual slope terminating in a well at one end. Occasionally it is carved around the edge, or has a border of sculpture. See writing-box.

ink-table (ingk'tā″bl), n. An inking-table.

ink-well (ingk'wel), n. A cup or reservoir for ink in use, fitted into the top of a desk, an inkstand, or other convenient receptacle; the containing part of an inkstand, as distinguished from the frame.

inkwood (ingk'wůd), n. A small tree, Exothea paniculata, a native of southern Florida and the West Indies.

ink-writer (ingk'rī″tėr), n. In teleg., a recording instrument using ink.

The form of instrument [telegraph recorder] almost universally used in Europe makes the record in ink, and hence is sometimes called the ink-writer.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 119.

inky (ing'ki), a. [< ink[1] + -y[1].] Consisting of ink; containing ink; smeared or stained with ink; resembling ink; black.

'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother, . . .
That can denote me truly. Shak., Hamlet, i. 2.

Seing these North-easterne Seas are so frozen and impassable, I will therefore in an inkie Sea finde an easier passage for the Reader. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 435.

Peter had a son, who . . . would needs exchange the torn and inky fustian sleeves for the blue jacket and white lapelle. Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. i.

Strew'd were the streets around with milk-white reams, Flow'd all the Canongate with inky streams.
Byron, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

inlace (in-lās'), v. t. Same as enlace.

inlagary† (in-lag'a-ri), n. [< ML. (AL.) inlagaria (E. as if inlawry*), < inlagus*, inlaw: see inlaw. Cf. utlagary.] The restitution of an outlaw to the protection and benefit of the law. Minsheu.

inlagation† (in-lā-gā'shon), n. [< ML. (AL.) inlagatio(n-), < inlagare, inlaw: see inlaw. Cf. utlagation.] Same as inlagary. Coles, 1717.

inland (in'land), n. and a. [< in[1] + land.] I. n. 1. The interior part of a country.

Besides, her little rills, her in-lands that do feed,
Which with their lavish streams do furnish every need.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 403.

The rest were all
Far to the inland retired, about the walls
Of Pandæmonium, city and proud seat.
Milton, P. L., x. 423.

2. In feudal law, land reserved by the lord of the manor to be cultivated by his serfs or used for the manor, as distinguished from the lands occupied or enjoyed by the tenants. See outland.

II. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the interior, as distinguished from the coast; away or retired from the sea or the main ocean: as, an inland town or lake.

In this wide Inland sea, that hight by name
The Idle lake, my wandring ship I row.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 10.

Where brief sojourners, in the cool, soft air,
Forgot their inland heats, hard toil, and year-long care.
Whittier, Tent on the Beach.

The Istrian hills, . . . and the higher mountains beyond them, tell us something of the character of the inland scenery. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 98.

In the act of July 2, 1864, § 7, that no property seized upon "any of the inland waters of the United States" by the naval forces shall be regarded as maritime prize, "inland" applies to all waters upon which a naval force could go, other than bays and harbors on the sea-coast.
Anderson, Law Dict.

2. Carried on within a country; domestic; not foreign: as, inland trade.—3. Confined to a country; drawn and payable in the same country: as, an inland bill of exchange (distinguished from a foreign bill, which is drawn in one country on a person living in another).—4†. Somewhat refined or polished; civilized: opposed to upland, the old expression for 'rustic.'

An old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man, one that knew courtship too well. Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2.

Inland ice. See ice-cap, 1.—Inland navigation, revenue, etc. See the nouns.—Inland sea, a large body of salt water only slightly or not at all connected with the ocean. The only true inland seas are the Black (with that of Azov), Caspian, and Aral, in Europe and Asia; but the name is sometimes applied to great lakes, as Lake Superior in North America. The Dead Sea and the Sea of Galilee are small lakes, the former of salt water. The so-called Inland Sea of Japan (the Suwonada) is a part of the Pacific ocean inclosed by three of the principal islands.

inland (in'land), adv. [< inland, a.] In or toward the interior of a land.

Yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7.

The greatest waves of population have rolled inland from the east. Sharon Turner, Hist. Anglo-Saxons, I. 1.

inlander (in'lan-dėr), n. One who lives in the interior of a country, or at a distance from the sea.

The inlanders . . . live of milke and flesh, and clad themselves in skins. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 29.

inlandish† (in-lan'dish), a. [< inland + -ish[1].] Inland; native: opposed to outlandish.

Thou art all for inlandish meat, and outlandish sawces.
Rede, God's Plea for Nineveh (1657). (Latham.)

inlapidate† (in-lap'i-dāt), v. t. [< L. in, in, + lapis (lapid-), stone: see lapidate.] To convert into a stony substance; petrify.

There are some natural spring waters that will inlapidate wood. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 85.

inlard† (in-lärd'), v. t. Same as enlard.

inlarge†, inlargement†. Obsolete forms of enlarge, enlargement.

inlate†, n. An obsolete form of inlet.

inlaw†, n. [ME. inlagh, inlage (ML. (AL.) inlagus*), < AS. in, in, + lagu, law. Cf. outlaw.] One being within or restored to the protection and benefit of the law.

inlaw (in-lâ'), v. t. [< ME. inlawen, inlagen* (> ML. (AL.) inlagare: see inlagary, inlagation), inlaw; < inlaw, n. Cf. outlaw.] To clear of outlawry or attainder; restore to the protection and benefit of the law.

It should be a great incongruitie to haue them to make lawes who themselves were not inlawed.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 12.

Swegen was inlawed—that is, his outlawry was reversed.
E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, II. 75.

The scandalous inlawing of such a criminal.
J. R. Green, Short Hist. Eng., p. 98.

★inlay (in-lā'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inlaid, ppr. inlaying. [Formerly also enlay; < in-[1] + lay[1].] 1†. To lay in, as a hiding-place; conceal.

From the world's common having sever'd thee,
Inlaid thee, neither to be seen nor see.
Donne, Elegy.

Of all the inlaid Isles her sovereign Severne keeps,
That bathe their amorous breasts within her secret deeps.
Drayton, Polyolbion, iv. 19.

2. To lay in; provide; store up. [Prov. Eng.] —3. To lay or insert in something; fix into or upon something, as for ornamentation.

When I every day see Greek, and Roman, and Italian, and Chinese, and Gothic architecture embroidered and inlaid upon one another. Walpole, Letters, II. 455.

4. To decorate with ornamental materials laid in a common groundwork; ornament with inserted work: as, to inlay a cabinet with ivory or ebony; an inlaid table.

A broad rich Baldrick there extendeth round,
In-laid with gold vpon an azure ground.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Magnificence.

But these are things related of Alexander and Caesar, and, I doubt, thence borrow'd by the Monks to inlay thir story. Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

A thousand tumbling rills inlay
With silver veins the vale.
T. Warton, The First of April.

Inlaid appliqué, appliqué embroidery in which the pieces of cloth are fitted close together, so as to make a sort of mosaic.

inlay (in'lā or in-lā'), n. [< inlay, v.] 1. That which is inserted or laid in something else, especially for the production of ornamental effect.

The sloping of the moon-lit sward
Was damask-work and deep inlay
Of braided blooms unmown, which crept
Adown to where the waters slept.
Tennyson, Arabian Nights.

In the Crimean tombs have been found many precious fragments, showing how ivory inlays, gilding, and colour were applied for the decoration of wood.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 398.

2. An ornamental design produced by inlaying one material in another, or by inserting several materials in combination, as in a mosaic.

This delicate and beautiful work belongs to the time of Aurangzib (the sixth Mogul Emperor, A. D. 1658–1707). . . . The inlay, much of which has unfortunately been destroyed, is remarkable for excessive minuteness and finish of execution. Birdwood, Indian Arts, II. 43.

inlayer (in'lā-ėr), n. 1. One who produces inlaid work for artistic decoration.

The swelling bunches which are now and then found on the old trees afford the inlayer pieces curiously chambletted. Evelyn, Sylva, xviii. § 5.

2. Something laid in; something forming an inner layer, sheathing, or coating.

The two ends joined by overlapping with a proper inlayer of paper. J. Thomson, Hats and Felting, p. 63.

Into each cone of wool or bat an inlayer is now placed to prevent the inside from matting. Encyc. Brit., XI. 519.

3. In zoöl., an entoderm: correlated with mid-★layer and outlayer.

inlaying (in-lā'ing), n. [Verbal n. of inlay, v.] The art of decorating articles, as arms, furniture, objects of art, etc., with pieces of wood, metal, marble, ivory, tortoise-shell, etc., disposed in patterns and let into the surface. See buhl, damascene work (under damascene), and marquetry.

When I was at Florence the celebrated masters were, for Pietra Commessa (a kind of mosaiq or inlaying of various coloured marble, and other more precious stones), Dominico Benetti and Mazzotti. Evelyn, Diary, May, 1645.

inleague† (in-lēg'), v. t. [< in-[2] + league[1].] An obsolete form of enleague.

With a willingness inleague our blood
With his, for purchase of full growth in friendship.
Ford.

inleaguer† (in-lē'gėr), v. i. [< in-[2] + leaguer[2].] To encamp with an army; lay siege.

Scylla did inleaguer before the City of Athens.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 161.

★inleak† (in'lēk), n. [Also inleck; < in[1] + leak.] A hole where water leaks in.

Graunt plancks from forrest too clowt oure battered inlecks. Stanihurst, Æneid, iii. 538.

inlet (in-let'), v. t.; pret. and pp. inlet, ppr. inletting. [< ME. inleten (= D. LG. inlaten); < in-[1] + let[1], v.] 1†. To let in; admit.

Upon the inletting of this external air, the water was not again impelled to the very top of the tube whence it began to fall, but was stopped in its ascent near an inch beneath the top. Boyle, Works, I. 48.

2. To insert; inlay.

All round the framing of the doors tablets of solid ivory, chased with arabesques, are inlet, and the topmost part of each panel is marked off for an even richer display of chased tablets and crosses.
Quoted in Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII. 39.

inlet (in'let), n. [< ME. inlate (= LG. inlat = G. einlass); < inlet, v. Cf. outlet.] 1. A passage or opening by which an inclosed place may be entered; place of ingress; entrance.

Doors and windows, inlets of men and of light, I couple together. Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.

He commanded us rather to "put our eyes out" than to suffer them to become an offence to us—that is, an inlet of sin. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 215.

An increase of our possessions is but an inlet to new disquietudes. Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, i.

Though barks or plaited willows make you hive,
A narrow inlet to their cells contrive.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. A waterway leading into a sea, lake, or lagoon and forming part of it; a strip of water running from a larger body into the land; a creek; a channel.

On the inmost shore of one of the lake-like inlets of the Hadriatic . . . lay his own Salona, now desolate, then one of the great cities of the Roman world.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 140.

Shallows on a distant shore,
In glaring sand and inlets bright.
Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

3. Inserted material. Simmonds.

inletter† (in-let'ėr), v. t. [< in-[2] + letter.] To engrave with or in letters; inscribe.

When he had razed the walls of Thebes, she offer'd to re-edify them, with condition this sentence might but on them be inletter'd: "Alexander pulled them down, but Phryne did rebuild them." Feltham, Resolves, i. 46.

inliche[1]†, adv. A Middle English form of inly.

inliche[2]†, adv. A Middle English form of alike.

inlier (in'lī-ėr), n. [< in[1] + lier.] In geol., a part of one formation completely surrounded by another that rests upon it: opposed to outlier.

inlight†, v. i. [ME. inligten, < AS. inlīhtan, inlȳhtan, inleóhtan, enlighten, < in on, + līhtan, light: see light[1], v.] To shine.

He hath inligted in oure hertis.
Wyclif, 2 Cor. iv. 6 (Oxf.).

inlighten† (in-lī'tn), v. t. [< ME. inligtnen; < in-[1] + lighten[1]. Cf. inlight and enlighten.] An obsolete form of enlighten.

in limine (in lim'i-nē). [L.: in, in; limine, abl. of limen, threshold: see eliminate.] On the threshold; at the outset. Technical objections to the regularity of legal proceedings are for the most part required to be taken in limine, and are waived by going on without objecting.

inlist†, inlistment†. Obsolete forms of enlist, enlistment.

inlive† (in-līv'), v. t. Same as enlive.

What she did here, by great example, well,
T' inlive posteritie, her fame may tell.
Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Anne Pawlet.

inlock† (in-lok'), v. t. [< in-[1] + lock[1].] Same ★as enlock. Cotgrave.

in loco (in lō'kō). [L.: in, in; loco, abl. of locus, place: see locus.] In place; in the particular place in question.

in loco parentis (in lō'kō pā-ren'tis). [L.: in, in; loco, abl. of locus, place; parentis, gen. of paren(t-)s, parent.] In place of a parent. One who has voluntarily assumed to stand in loco parentis cannot ordinarily claim to be reimbursed from the child's property for support.

inlook (in'lůk), n. [< in[1] + look.] Introspection.

A hearty sincere inlook tends . . . in no manner to self-glorification. Caroline Fox, Journal.

in-lot (in'lot), n. [< in[1] + lot.] In parts of the United States acquired from France, one of the lots in a village, large enough for houses, outhouses, and gardens, and so occupied. Such lots generally contain about half an arpent.

inlumine† (in-lū'min), v. t. Same as enlumine.

inly† (in'li), a. [< in[1] + -ly[1].] Internal; inward.

Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 7.

inly (in'li), adv. [< ME. inly, indly, inliche; < in[1] + -ly[2].] 1. Internally; inwardly; within; secretly.

So inly ful of drede. Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 31.

I will do . . . whatever inly rejoices me and the heart approves. Emerson, Self-reliance.

I inly curse the bore
Of hunting still the same old coon.
Lowell, Without and Within.

2†. Heartily; fully; hence, extremely.

Then vnto ther way went thay ful nere,
For the mone gan shine inly fair and clere.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 168.

Perdie, so farre am I from envie,
That their fondnesse inly I pitie.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., May.

inmantle† (in-man'tl), v. t. [< in-[2] + mantle.] To inwrap as in a mantle; enshroud.

The dewy night had with her frosty shade Inmantled all the world. G. Fletcher.

inmate (in'māt), n. and a. [< in[1] or inn + mate[1].] I. n. One who is a mate or associate in the occupancy of a place; hence, an indweller; an associated lodger or inhabitant: as, the inmates of a dwelling-house, factory, hospital, or prison.

Religion, which before had bin a priuate in-mate in Adams household, was now brought into publike exercise. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 34.

He is but a new fellow,
An inmate here in Rome, as Catiline calls him.
B. Jonson, Catiline, ii. 1.

Without acquaintance of more sweet companions
Than the old inmates to my love, my thoughts.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, i. 1.

So spake the enemy of mankind, enclosed
In serpent, inmate bad! Milton, P. L., ix. 495.

II.† a. Dwelling in the same place; residing jointly.

Now grown Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests Too numerous. Milton, P. L., xii. 166.

None but an inmate foe could force us out.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Unknowing that beneath thy rugged rind
Conceal'd an inmate spirit lay confin'd.
Hoole, tr. of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, vi.

inmatecy† (in'māt-si), n. [< inmate + -cy.] The state or condition of being an inmate. [Rare.]

As became a great mind, thither the Doctor repaired, like a good Christian, and found our laughing philosopher in the usual plight of such an inmatecy, poor and penyless. Jon Bee, Essay on Samuel Foote, p. clxvii., note.

inmeat (in'mēt), n. [< ME. inmete, inmette = Sw. inmäte, intestines; as in[1] + meat.] 1. pl. The entrails.

Ewyne into inmette the gyaunt he hyttez.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1122.

I shall try six inches of my knife
On thine own inmeats.
Sir H. Taylor, Ph. van Artevelde, II., iii. 1.

2. Part of the intestines of an animal used for food, as the sweetbread, kidneys, etc. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

The hide, head, feet, and in-meat were given for attendance. Maxwell's Select Transactions, p. 275.

in medias res (in mē'di-as rēz). [L.: in, in; medias, acc. fem. pl. of medius, that is in the middle; res, acc. pl. of res, a thing: see res.] Into the midst of things or matters.

inmellet, adv. and prep. A variant of imell.

in memoriam (in mē-mō'ri-am). [L.: in, in, to; memoriam, acc. of memoria, memory.] In memory (of); to the memory (of); as a memorial (to): a phrase often put at the beginning of epitaphs or obituary inscriptions or notices.

inmesh (in-mesh'), v. t. [< in-[2] + mesh. Cf. immesh.] Same as immesh.

inmew† (in-mū'), v. t. [< in-[2] + mew[4].] Same as emmew: in the extract, error for inewe.

I have seen him scale
As if a falcon had run up a traine,
Clashing his warlike pinions, his steel'd curasse,
And at his pitch inmew the town below him.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 1.

in-mid†, prep. [ME.: see amid.] Amid.

He fel wete
In-myd the see, and ther he dreynte.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 923.

in-middest, prep. [ME.: see amidst.] Amidst.

Ryght even in-myddes of the wey Betwexen hevene and erthe and see.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 714.

inmoevablete†, n. An obsolete form of immovability. Chaucer.

inmong†, prep. A Middle English form of among.

inmongest†, prep. A Middle English form of amongst.

inmore†, a. [< in[1] + -more. Cf. inmost.] Inner.

Of these Angles, some part having passed forward into the inmore quarters of Germanie, . . . went as farre as Italie. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 131.

inmortal†, a. An obsolete form of immortal.

in mortua manu (in môr'tū-ä mā'nū). [L.: in, in; mortua, abl. fem. of mortuus, dead; manu, abl. of manus, hand: see mortmain.] In a dead hand; in mortmain.

inmost (in'mōst), a. and n. [< ME. inmost, inmest, ynmast, inemast, innemest, < AS. innemest, with superl. suffix -est, < innema*, superl. of inne, in: see in[1] and -most.] I. a. superl. 1. Furthest within; remotest from the boundary, surface, or external part: as, the inmost recesses of a forest.

The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey.
Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Deepest; most interior or intimate; most real or vital.

From thy inmost soul
Speak what thou know'st, and speak without controul.
Pope, Iliad, i. 107.

O ye powers that search
The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,
If I have done amiss, impute it not!
Addison, Cato, v. 1.

To enthrone God in our inmost being is an immeasurably grander aim than to dispose of all outward realms.
Channing, Perfect Life, p. 16.

After a calm of fifteen years the spirit of the nation was again stirred to its inmost depths.
Macaulay, Horace Walpole.

II. n. The most interior part. [Rare.]

He shot through the shild & the shene maile,
To the ynmast of his armur, angardly fast.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6402.

Briefly partake a secret; but be sure
To lodge it in the inmost of thy bosom.
Ford, Fancies, ii. 2.

inn[1] (in), n. [Early mod. E. also in; < ME. inn, in, < AS. inn, in (= Icel. inni), an inn, a house, a chamber, < in, inn, in, within: see in[1], prep. and adv.] 1†. A house; a dwelling; a dwelling-place; an abode.

For who-so wolde senge a cattes skyn,
Than wolde the cat wel dwellen in his in;
And if the cattes skyn be slyk and gay,
She wol nat dwelle in house half a day.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 350.

Thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouse guest?
Shak., Rich. II., v. 1.

2†. Habitation; abode; residence.

Which good fellowes will sone take a man by the sleve, and cause him to take up his inne some with beggary, etc.
Ascham, Toxophilus, p. 47.

Therefore with me ye may take up your In
For this same night. Spenser, F. Q., I. i. 33.

3. A house for the lodging and entertainment of travelers; in law, a public house kept for the lodging and entertainment of such as may choose to visit it, and providing what is necessary for their subsistence, for compensation; a tavern; a public hotel. In consequence of thus holding out the house as a place of public entertainment, the keeper comes under obligation to serve all comers, and to answer, within restrictions provided by the law, for the safety of their property.

And she brought forth her firstborn son . . . and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn. Luke ii. 7.

When I leave this Life, I leave it as an Inn, and not as a Place of Abode. For Nature has given us our Bodies as an Inn to lodge in, and not to dwell in.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 183.

4†. A college or building in which students were lodged and taught: now retained only for the Inns of Court, in London. See below. [Eng.]—5†. The town residence of a person of quality; a private hotel: as, Leicester Inn. [Eng.]

Clifford's Inn was the residence of the Lords Clifford, Scrope's Inn of the family of the Scropes, and Mackworth's Inn may have been, and in all probability was, the town residence of the Mackworths.
N. and Q., 7th ser., II. 141.

Inns a court†. See inns of court.— Inns of chancery, colleges in London in which young students formerly began their law studies. These are now occupied chiefly by attorneys, solicitors, etc.— Inns of court. (a) Non-corporate legal societies in London, which have the exclusive privilege of calling candidates to the bar, and maintain instruction and examinations for that purpose.

Shal. He is at Oxford still, is he not?
Sil. Indeed, sir, to my cost.
Shal. He must, then, to the inns of court shortly. I was once of Clement's Inn. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2.

Much desired in England by ladies, inns a court gentlemen, and others. Wit's Interpreter (1655), p. 27.

(b) The precincts or premises occupied by these societies respectively. They are the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. The first two originally belonged to the Knights Templars, whence the name Temple.

The Queen [Dulness] confers her titles and degrees.
Her children first of more distinguished sort,
Who study Shakespear at the Inns of Court, . . .
Shine in the dignity of F. R. S. Pope, Dunciad, iv. 568.

=Syn. 3. Hotel, House, etc. See tavern.

inn[1]† (in), v. [< ME. innen, < AS. innian, put in, lodge, < in, inn, in: see in[1], v. Now taken as directly < inn[1], n.] I. trans. To furnish entertainment and lodging to; place in shelter.

He hadde brought hem into his cite,
And ynned hem. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1334.

Eche man al nigt inned him where he migt, & whan hit dawed deliuerli dede hem homward.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2479.

Cock. When came you?
Easy. I have but inn'd my horse since.
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, i. 1.

II. intrans. To take up lodging; lodge.

Art sure old Mayberry inns here to-night?
Dekker and Webster, North-ward Ho, i. 1.

Where do you intend to inn to-night?
Addison, Tory Foxhunter.

inn[2]†, adv. An obsolete form of in[1].

innascibility† (i-nas-i-bil'i-ti), n. [< innascible* (= Sp. inacible), < LL. innascibilis, that cannot be born, < L. in- priv. + nascibilis, that can be born, < nasci, be born: see nascent.] Incapability of being born; hence, self-existence.

Innascibility we must admitt
The Father. Davies, Mirum in Modum, p. 17.

innatable† (i-nā'ta-bl), a. [< L. in- priv. + natabilis, that can swim, < nare, pp. natus, swim. Cf. L. innabilis, that cannot be swum in, < in- priv. + nare, swim.] That cannot be ★swum in. Bailey.

innate (in'nāt or i-nāt'), a. [= F. inné = Sp. Pg. It. innato, < L. innatus, inborn, pp. of innasci, be born in, grow up in, < in, in, + nasci, be born: see natal, native. Cf. agnate, cognate.] 1. Inborn; natural; pertaining to the inherited constitution of body or mind; not derived or acquired from any external source; especially, native to the mind; instinctive: as, an innate tendency to virtue or vice; innate ideas.

There is a great deal of difference between an innate law and a law of nature; between something imprinted on our minds . . . and something that we, being ignorant of, may attain to the knowledge of by the use and due application of our natural faculties.
Locke, Human Understanding, I. iii. 13.

Now shine these Planets with substantial Rays?
Does innate Lustre gild their measur'd Days?
Prior, Solomon, i.

The greater height, weight, and fertility of the crossed plants may be attributed to their possessing greater innate constitutional vigour.
Darwin, Cross and Self Fertilisation, p. 285.

So far from the mathematical intuitions being innate, the majority of mankind pass to the grave without a suspicion of them. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, i. § 189.

Dryden knew Latin literature very well, but that innate scepticism of his mind which made him an admirable critic would not allow him to be subjugated by antiquity.
Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 154.

2. In bot.: (a) Borne on the apex of the supporting part: as, an innate anther, which is one that directly continues and corresponds to the apex of the filament. (b) Born within; originating within the matrix, or within the substance of the plant.— Innate idea, an idea which arises not from sensuous experience, but from the constitution of the mind; an idea which the mind possesses independently of sense-experience, though it may not be conscious of it except on the occasion of such experience. The question of the existence of such ideas is a much-disputed point in philosophy. Their existence is denied especially by the followers of Locke, who affirm that sense-experience is the source of all ideas; that without the senses the mind is an unwritten tablet—tabula rasa. None of their opponents, however, not even the Platonists, who have attributed some of our ideas to a reminiscence of a previous state of existence, have maintained that there are ideas innate in the sense that they are actually in the consciousness at birth, and do not require any occasion to call them forth. Nor has any one, on the other hand, carried the doctrine of the tabula rasa to such an extreme as to deny that the character of the feelings excited in us by given excitations depends to some extent upon the nature of the mind. Accordingly, there are strictly only differences of degree between the opinions of philosophers in regard to this matter. Modern scientific psychologists carry the belief in innate ideas further than did any of its older metaphysical advocates; but their attitude toward the question is a radically different one, being based not upon metaphysical presuppositions and natural judgments, but upon the principles and methods of modern science. =Syn. 1. Inborn, Inbred, etc. See inherent.

innate† (i-nāt'), v. t. [< innate, a.] To bring or call into existence; inform.

The First Innating Cause. Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

innated† (i-nā′ted), a. [< innate + *-ed*².] Innate; inborn.

Their countenances labouring to smother an innated sweetnes and chearefulnes.
Decker, Entertainment of James I. (1604), sig. E, 4.

In the true regard of those innated virtues, and fair parts, which so strive to express themselves in you, I am resolved to entertain you to the best of my unworthy power. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 3.

innately (in′nāt- or i-nāt′li), adv. In an innate manner; by birth.

innateness (in′nāt- or i-nāt′nes), n. The quality of being innate. Bailey.

innative (i-nā′tiv), a. [< *in-*² + native, after innate.] Native or natural. [Rare.]

All that love
Which by innative duty I did owe her Shall henceforth be converted into hate.
Marlowe, Lust's Dominion, iv. 2.

And some innative weakness there must be
In him who condescends to victory
Such as the Present gives, and cannot wait.
Lowell, Abraham Lincoln.

innaturally† (i-naṭ′ū-raḷ-i), adv. Unnaturally. Fabyan.

innavigable (i-nav′i-ga-bl), a. [= F. innavigable = Sp. innavegable = Pg. innavegavel = It. innavigabile, < L. innavigabilis, not navigable, < in- priv. + navigabilis, navigable: see navigable.] Not navigable; unnavigable.

If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass the innavigable lake.
Dryden, Æneid, vi. 204.

inne¹†, prep. and adv. An obsolete form of *in*¹.

inne²†, n. An obsolete form of *inn*¹.

innect†, v. t. [< L. innectere, fasten together, < in, in, to, + nectere, tie, fasten; cf. annect, connect.] To fasten together.

He . . . gave (in allusion of his two Bishopricks, which he successively enjoyed) two annulets innected in his paternal coat. Fuller, Worthies, Durham.

inner (in′ėr), a. and n. [< ME. inner, innere, inre, < AS. innera, innra, inra, adj. (innor, adv.) (= OFries. inre = OHG. innōr, innero (also innarōro, innerero), MHG. inner, G. inner = Dan. indre = Sw. inre), compar. of inne, in, in: see *in*¹.]

I. a. 1. Further inward; interior: as, an inner chamber; the inner court of a temple or palace: opposed to outer.

They cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely: who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison. Acts xvi. 24.

2. Inward; internal; not outward: as, to refresh the inner man, physically or spiritually.

This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part.
Milton, P. R., ii. 477.

Some o'erflowing rays,
Streamed from the inner glory, shall abide Upon thy spirit through the coming days.
Bryant, The Life that Is.

3. In zoöl. and anat., lying nearer the median line.—4. Coming from within; inward; not loud; smothered, as if coming from far within. [Rare.]

With an inner voice the river ran.
Tennyson, Dying Swan.

5. Not obvious; dark; esoteric: as, an inner meaning.—Inner apical nervures, in the anterior wings of certain Hymenoptera, two diagonal cross-veins, between the median and submedian veins, inclosing the apical cell. Also called the submarginal nervures.—Inner barrister. Same as bencher, 1.—Inner form, house, light, etc. See the nouns.—Inner marginal cell, an apical cell behind the first longitudinal vein, and limited posteriorly by the second longitudinal, found in the wings of certain Diptera.—Inner margin of the wing, in entom., the part of the posterior margin extending from the base to the posterior angle or to the anal angle, when either of these is present. In the Hymenoptera it includes the edge from the base to the inner angle, which is a notch in the posterior border of the wing, formed by the junction of the internal and submedian veins.—Inner part or voice, in music, a voice-part intermediate between the highest and the lowest, as, in ordinary four-part music, the alto or the tenor.—Inner pedal, in music, a pedal or organ-point in an inner voice-part. See organ-point.—Inner peridium. See peridium.—Inner sense. Same as internal sense (which see, under internal).—Inner tunic. See tunic.=Syn. 1 and 2. Inner, Inward, Internal, Interior, Intrinsic. Inner, internal, and interior are primarily physical, the others moral. Inner, as a comparative, is opposed to outer: as, the outer door was of oak, and the inner of baize. Within the inner may be an inmost or innermost. Inward is opposed to outward or visible. An example of the occasional use of inward in a physical sense is:

The sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parmaceti for an inward bruise.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 3.

Internal is opposed to external: as, the internal arrangements of a house; an internal injury; the internal fires of a volcano. Internal applies to all that is within the surface or boundary; interior generally applies to that which is at some distance within it: as, they pressed on into the interior districts. Intrinsic indicates that a quality is in or belongs to a person or thing by nature, as opposed to that which is extrinsic, or added in any way from without: the intrinsic worth of an honorary medal may be very small in proportion to the esteem in which it is held. See inherent.

The cloud filled the inner court. Ezek. x. 3.

How angerly I taught my brow to frown,
When inward joy enforc'd my heart to smile!
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 2.

For nearly two hundred years after the age of Tacitus very little is known of the internal history of the German tribes, and nothing new of their political institutions.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 20.

With Shakespeare the plot is an interior organism, in Jonson an external contrivance.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 198.

Among the many noted critics and essayists . . . there is none who has . . . justified his popularity by compositions of more intrinsic excellence than Thomas Babington Macaulay. Whipple, Ess. and Rev., I. 12.

II. n. 1. The division of a target next to and outside of the center. See target.—2. A shot which strikes the inner of a target.

innert, adv. [ME. innere (= MHG. innere); < inner, a.] Further within.

Wolde they . . . lete hem pleye in the porche, and presse non ynnere. Richard the Redeless, iii. 195.

innerest†, a. superl. [ME., also inrest (= OFries. inrost, inrest = OHG. innōrōst, innerost, MHG. innerest, innerst, G. innerest, innerst = Dan. inderst = Sw. innerst); < inner + *-est*¹.] Inmost.

Thilke cercle that is inneerest or most withinne.
Chaucer, Boëthius, iv. prose 6.

innerly (in′ėr-li), a. [= D. innerlijk = MHG. G. innerlich = Dan. inderlig = Sw. innerlig; as inner + *-ly*¹.] Inward; deep-seated. [Rare.]

So mature, so large, and so innerly was his [Dr. W. H. Scott's] knowledge, that after his death letters of sorrow came . . . indicating that he was considered twice his real age. Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 286.

innerly (in′ėr-li), adv. [< ME. innerly, inwardly (= D. innerlijk, intrinsically, = Dan. inderlig, excessively); < inner + *-ly*².] Within; inwardly. [Rare.]

The swerd of the Lord . . . innerly fattid [L. incrassatus est adipe, Vulgate] it is with tabz of blod of lombis and of get [goats]. Wyclif, Isa. xxxiv. 6 (Oxf.).

The white hardhack, a cream-like flower, innerly blushing. S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 1.

innermore†, adv. [ME., also innermare; < inner + -more.] Further within.

Wold come non innermare
For to kythe what be war.
Sir Perceval (Thornton Rom., ed. Halliwell), l. 1233.

innermost (in′ėr-mōst), a. superl. [< inner + -most.] Furthest inward; most remote from the outward part.

The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly. Prov. xviii. 8.

innermostly (in′ėr-mōst-li), adv. In the innermost part or place. [Rare.]

His ebon cross worn innermostly.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, v.

innervate (i-nėr′vāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. innervated, ppr. innervating. [< L. in, in, + nervus, nerve (see nerve), + *-ate*².] To give nervous influence to; stimulate through nerves; innerve: as, the facial nerve innervates the muscles of expression.

The olfactory ganglion in the lamellibranch would innervate the gills, adductor muscle, mantle, and rectum, parts which in gastropods are innervated from the visceral ganglia. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 106.

We not only dream of speaking and being spoken to, but we actually innervate the appropriate muscles and talk in our sleep. New Princeton Rev., V. 25.

The digestive organs are mainly innervated by the pneumogastrics. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIV. 643.

innervation¹ (in-ėr-vā′shọn), n. [< LL. innervis, nerveless (< in- priv. + nervus, nerve), + -ation.] A state of nervelessness. Ogilvie.

innervation² (in-ėr-vā′shọn), n. [= F. innervation; < innerve + -ation.] 1. The act of innervating or innerving; in physiol., supply of nervous influence or control; the sending of stimulation to some organ through its nerves.

Counting requires a series of innervations, if not of actual muscular contractions. Mind, XI. 59.

Unequal innervation of the two sides of the face is common. Mind, IX. 96.

Derangements of function precede abnormalities of structure, hence the innervation must be at fault before the organ fails. Alien. and Neurol., VI. 529.

2. In anat., the disposition of the nervous system in an animal body or any part of it.—Feeling or sensation of innervation, a feeling which was formerly supposed by many psychologists to accompany acts of innervation, and to account in the main for the sense of effort, which is now almost universally ascribed to ordinary sensations from muscle, tendon, etc.

The sensations of innervation constitute a uniform state of mind, though there are appreciable differences of degree at different stages of the movement.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 158.

innerve (i-nėrv′), v. t.; pret. and pp. innerved, ppr. innerving. [=It. innervare; as *in-*² + nerve.] To give nerve to; invigorate; strengthen.

inness (in′nes), n. [< *in*¹ + -ness.] The condition or state of being in or within; inwardness; interiority. [Rare.]

Gravitation knows nothing of inness and outness.
Argyll, Nineteenth Century, XXIII. 156.

It is the mersion only, the position of inness, which is called for. J. W. Dale, Classic Baptism, p. 100.

innest†, a. [ME., also ynnest; < *in*¹ + *-est*¹. Cf. innerest, inmost.] Inmost.

He hath cast awai hise ynneste thingis.
Wyclif, Ecclus. x. 9 (Purv.).

innholder (in′hōl″dėr), n. A person who keeps an inn or house for the entertainment of travelers; an innkeeper; a taverner.

You shall also inquire whether . . . butchers, inn-holders, and victuallers, do sell that which is wholesome and at reasonable prices. Bacon, The Judicial Charge, etc.

No innholder, vinter, alehouse-keeper, common victualler, common cook, or common table-keeper shall utter or put to sale upon any Friday . . . any kind of flesh victuals.
Privy Council (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 300).

The "Licensed Victuallers' Association," as the Guild or Trades society of inn-holders and keepers of public houses is termed, is a wealthy and powerful body.
★ R. J. Hinton, Eng. Radical Leaders, p. 215.

inning (in′ing), n. [< ME. inninge, < AS. innung, a putting in, verbal n. of innian, put in: see *in*¹, v., *inn*¹, v. The second sense is recent.] 1†. A bringing or taking in; an ingathering, as of grain; a harvesting. Tusser Redivivus.

2. The time during which a person or party is in, or in action, in a game or an operation; a turn: usually (in Great Britain always) in the plural form, whether with a singular or a plural sense. Specifically—(a) In cricket, base-ball, and similar games, as much of the game as is played (1) while one side is at the bat (in this case often called a half-innings with respect to the next use), or (2) while each side in turn is at the bat—that is, between the appearance of one side at the bat and its reappearance.

The Marylebone men played carelessly in their second innings, but they are working like horses now to save the match. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 8.

All-Muggleton had the first innings.
Dickens, Pickwick Papers, vii.

(b) The term of office of a person; the time during which a party is in power; more generally, any opportunity for activity or influence: as, it is your innings now.

3. The act of inclosing or reclaiming land; the land inclosed, especially marshland.

By the ill-judged gaining, or, as the old technical phrase is, inning, of two thousand acres of marsh out of the sea.
Campbell, Survey. (Latham.)

innis. See ennis.

innitency† (i-nī′tẹn-si), n. [< L. inniten(t-)s, ppr. of inniti, lean upon, rest upon, < in, on, + niti, lean.] A resting upon; pressure.

The innitency and stresse being made upon the hypomochlion or fulciment in the decussation.
Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, ii.

innixion† (i-nik′shọn), n. [< L. innixus, pp. of inniti, rest upon: see innitency.] Incumbency; a resting upon. Derham.

innkeeper (in′kē″pėr), n. The keeper of an inn; an innholder; a taverner; in law, one who holds himself out to the public as ready to accommodate all comers with the conveniences usually supplied to travelers on their journeys.

The shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host of Saint Alban's, or the red-nose innkeeper of Daventry.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 2.

innoble†, v. t. An obsolete form of ennoble.

innocence (in′ọ-sens), n. [< ME. innocence, < ★OF. (also F.) innocence = Pr. innocencia, ignocencia = Sp. inocencia = Pg. innocencia = It. innocenza, innocenzia, < L. innocentia, harmlessness, blamelessness, uprightness, < innocen(t-)s, harmless: see innocent.] 1. Harmlessness; innoxiousness: as, the innocence of a neutral article of diet in disease.—2. Freedom from moral wrong; untainted purity of heart and life; unimpaired integrity; sinlessness; artlessness: as, the innocence of childhood; angelic innocence.

Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty-footed time
For parting us—O, is it all forgot?
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence?
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2.

Receive him pleasantly, dress up your Face in Innocence and Smiles; and dissemble the very want of Dissimulation.
Congreve, Old Batchelor, iii. 1.

In Eden, ere yet innocence of heart
Had faded, poetry was not an art.
Cowper, Table-Talk, l. 585.

3. Freedom from legal or specific wrong; absence of particular guilt or taint; guiltlessness: as, the prisoner proved his innocence.

It was . . . [the king's] interest to sacrifice Bacon on the supposition of his guilt; but not on the supposition of his innocence. Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

4. Freedom from legal taint; absence of illegality: said of things, particularly of property that might be contraband of war: as, the innocence of a cargo or of merchandise.—5. Simplemindedness; mental imbecility; want of knowledge or of sense; ignorance or idiocy.

He was torn to pieces with a bear: this avouches the shepherd's son; who has not only his innocence (which seems much) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings, of his, that Paulina knows. Shak., W. T., v. 2.

6. The bluet, Houstonia cærulea. See Houstonia.

innocency (in'ō-sen-si), n.; pl. innocencies (-siz). The state or quality of being innocent; innocence; an innocent trait or act.

If euer the nature of man be giuen at any tyme more than other to receiue goodnes, it is in innocencie of yong yeares. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 45.

Ruthless stare turned in upon one's little innocencies of heart. T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, xvi.

innocent (in'ō-sent), a. and n. [< ME. innocent, innosent, < OF. (also F.) innocent = Pr. innocent, ignocen = Sp. inocente = Pg. inocente = It. innocente, < L. innocen(t-)s, harmless, blameless, upright, disinterested, < in- priv. + nocen(t-)s, ppr. of nocere, harm, hurt: see nocent.]

I. a. 1. Free from any quality that can cause physical or moral injury; harmless in effect; innoxious.

Down dropp'd the bow; the shaft with brazen head
Fell innocent, and on the dust lay dead.
Pope, Iliad, xv. 547.

I hope scarcely any man has known me but for his benefit, or cursorily but to his innocent entertainment.
Johnson, To Mrs. Thrale, July 9, 1783.

2. Free from any moral wrong; not tainted with sin; upright; pure: as, innocent children; an innocent action.

The aidless innocent Lady, his wish'd prey.
Milton, Comus, l. 574.

3. Free from legal or specific wrong; guiltless: as, to be innocent of crime.

Of all this werk the kyng was innocent,
And of ther falsed no thing perseyuyd,
The more pite he shuld be so disseyued.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 957.

I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it. Mat. xxvii. 24.

4. Free from illegality: as, innocent goods carried to a belligerent.—5. Artless; naïve.

Shall I tell you your real character? . . . You are an innocent fox! C. Reade, Love me Little, xiv.

Chaucer indeed made a very innocent use of the words tragedy and comedy when he applied them simply to poems ending happily or unhappily.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 7.

6. Simple; wanting knowledge or sense; imbecile; idiotic.

I can find out no rhyme to "lady" but "baby," an innocent rhyme. Shak., Much Ado, v. 2.

That same he is an innocent fool.
Dick o' the Cow (Child's Ballads, VI. 69).

7. Small, modest, and pretty: applied to children and flowers. [Colloq.]—Innocent conveyance. See conveyance.=Syn. Guiltless, spotless, immaculate, sinless, unblamable, blameless, faultless, clean, clear.

II. n. 1. An innocent person, especially a little child, as free from actual sin.

Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents. Jer. ii. 34.

Oh, wicked men!
An innocent may walk safe among beasts;
Nothing assaults me here.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, iv. 2.

2. An artless or simple person; a natural; a simpleton; an idiot.

The shrieve's fool, . . . a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay. Shak., All's Well, iv. 3.

Then she hits me a blow o' the ear, and calls me Innocent! B. Jonson, Epicœne, i. 1.

3. Same as innocence, 6. [U. S.]

Filling his hat with wild violets, sorrel, and the frail, azure Innocents.
Marion Harland, The Hidden Path, p. 410.

Innocents' day, a church festival celebrated in the Roman Catholic and Anglican churches on the 28th of December, in commemoration of the innocents murdered by Herod. Also called Holy Innocents and Childermas. —Massacre or slaughter of the innocents, the murder of the children of Bethlehem by Herod, as recorded in Mat. ii. 16.

innocently (in'ō-sent-li), adv. In an innocent manner; harmlessly; guilelessly.

Innocua (i-nok'ū-ą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. innocuus, innocuous: see innocuous.] The innocuous serpents; the colubriform or non-venomous serpents; in some systems, one of three suborders of Ophidia (the other two being Suspecta and Venenosa). The Innocua have no poison-fangs or venom-glands; they have solid hooked teeth in both jaws, the body scaled, and the head plated. The term is equivalent to Colubrina or Colubriformia, and most snakes belong to this group of ophidians.

innocuity (i-no-kū'i-ti), n. [= F. innocuité, < L. as if innocuita(t-)s*, < innocuus, harmless: see innocuous.] The quality of being innocuous; harmlessness. [Rare.]

innocuous (i-nok'ū-us), a. [= Sp. It. innocuo, < L. innocuus, harmless, < in- priv. + nocuus, harmful, < nocere, hurt: see nocent.] 1. Harmless; producing no ill effect; incapable of harm or mischief.

A generous lion will not hurt a beast that lies prostrate, nor an elephant an innocuous creature.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 348.

The doves and squirrels would partake
From his innocuous hand his bloodless food.
Shelley, Alastor.

Under the guidance of a forester armed with an innocuous gun. Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 117.

Specifically—2. In herpet., not venomous.

innocuously (i-nok'ū-us-li), adv. In an innocuous manner; harmlessly; without injurious effects.

Where the salt sea innocuously breaks.
Wordsworth, Excursion, iii.

innocuousness (i-nok'ū-us-nes), n. The state or quality of being innocuous; harmlessness.

Their [Dominicans'] innocuousness in Ireland is surprising, because one can trace in them ancestral traits of paganism which might have held on in Ireland as many others did. The Century, XXXVIII. 117.

innodate† (in'ō-dāt), v. t. [< L. innodatus, pp. of innodare (> Pg. innodar), fasten with a knot, < in, in, + nodare, < nodus = E. knot: see node.] To bind up in or as if in a knot; knot up.

Those which shall do the contrary we do innodate with the like sentence of anathema.
Fuller, Church Hist., IX. ii. 24.

innominable (i-nom'i-nạ-bl), a. and n. [< ME. innominable, < OF. innominable = It. innominabile, < LL. innominabilis, that cannot be named, < L. in- priv. + nominabilis*, that can be named, < nominare, name: see nominate.] I.† a. Not to be named; unnamable.

And then namely of foule thyngs innominable.
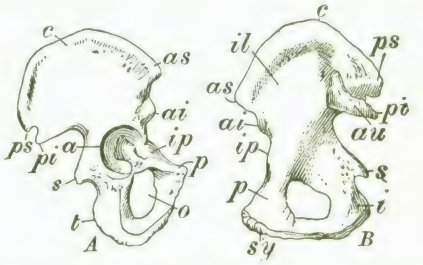
Testament of Love, i.

II. n. pl. "Inexpressibles"; trousers. [Humorous.]



The lower part of his dress represented innominables and hose in one. Southey, The Doctor, p. 688.

innominata[1] (i-nom-i-nā'tą), n.; pl. innominatæ (-tē). [NL., fem. sing. of LL. innominatus, nameless: see innominate.] In anat.: (a) The innominate or brachiocephalic artery; the anonyma; one of the great arteries arising from the arch of the aorta. In man there is but one innominata, the right, arising from the beginning of the transverse part of the arch of the aorta, ascending obliquely to the right for an inch and a half or two inches, and dividing opposite the sternoclavicular articulation into the right subclavian and right common carotid artery. It rests upon the trachea behind, has the left common carotid to its left and the right lung and pleura to its right, and is covered in front by the manubrium sterni, the right sternoclavicular articulation, the origins of the sternohyoid and sternothyroid muscles, the remains of the thymus gland, the left brachiocephalic vein, the right inferior thyroid vein, and the right inferior cervical cardiac branch of the pneumogastric nerve. See cut under lung. (b) An innominate or brachiocephalic vein; a vein which joins another to form a precava or superior caval vein. In man there are two innominatæ, right and left, each formed primarily by the union of the internal jugular with the subclavian vein, and usually receiving other veins, as vertebral, thyroid, thymic, mammary, pericardiac, and intercostal, especially on the left side. The right and the left vein differ much in length and direction: the former is nearly vertical, lying alongside the innominate artery, and about an inch and a half long; the latter crosses the root of the neck nearly horizontally, passing in front of the origins of the three great branches of the aortic arch, and is about three inches long. See cut under lung.

innominata[2], n. Plural of innominatum.

innominate (i-nom'i-nāt), a. [= F. innominé = Sp. Pg. innominado = It. innominato, < LL. innominatus, unnamed, nameless, < L. in- priv. + nominatus, named: see nominate.] Having no name; anonymous: in anat., specifically noting an artery, a vein, and a bone. See innominata[1], innominatum.—Innominate artery. Same as innominata[1] (a).—Innominate bone. Same as innominatum.—Innominate contract, cause of action, right. In Rom. law, an innominate contract was an unclassified contract. Some transactions more complex than the ordinary classes of contracts were thus termed, such as exchange, compromise, etc. In modern usage the term innominate cause of action, contract, or right is sometimes used to designate one which has not some recognized short name like bond or deed, foreclosure or partition, but requires description, such as a contract for support during life, or an action to determine conflicting claims to real property.—Innominate vein. Same as innominata[1] (b).

innominatum (i-nom-i-nā'tum), n.; pl. innominata (-tą). [NL., neut. of LL. innominatus, nameless: see innominate. The bone was prob. so called as being left nameless after the concrescence of the three named bones of which it is composed.] 1. In anat., the innominate bone, more expressly called os innominatum; the haunch-bone, flank-bone, hip-bone, or os coxæ. It is formed of three confluent bones, the ilium, ischium, and pubis; it forms, with its fellow of the opposite side and with the sacrum and coccyx, the bony basin called the pelvis; and it furnishes the socket for the femur or thigh-bone, thus making the hip-joint. The two innominata form the hip-girdle or pelvic arch. In man each innominatum is articulated behind with the sacrum by the sacro-iliac synchondrosis, and joined in front with its fellow by the pubic symphysis. The iliac part is flattened and expansive; the ischiac and pubic parts are narrower, and by their rami meet again to circumscribe the obturator a, acetabulum; ai, anterior inferior spinous process of ilium; as, anterior superior spinous process of ilium; au, auricular surface for articulation with sacrum; c, crest of ilium; i, ischium; il, iliac fossa; ip, iliopectineal eminence; n, cotyloid notch; o, obturator foramen; p, horizontal ramus of pubis; pi, posterior inferior spinous process of ilium; ps, posterior superior spinous process of ilium; s, spine of ischium; t, tuberosity of ischium; sy, symphysis pubis. Between s and t is the lesser sciatic notch; between s and pi is the greater sciatic notch.

Outer (A) and Inner (B) Surface of Right Human Innominate Bone.

foramen. The three parts of the compound bone come together at the acetabulum or cotyloid cavity. The main axis of the bone is in the direction of the iliopectineal line, which forms the brim of the true pelvis. The right and left innominate bones are together called ossa innominata. See also cut under pelvis.

2. Something whose use and name are unknown: a term used frequently in schedules and the like with respect to objects of antiquity.

in nomine (in nom'i-nē). [L.: in, in; nomine, abl. of nomen, name: see nomen.] 1. In the name (of a person mentioned).—2. In medieval music: (a) A certain kind of motet or antiphon: probably so called because once written for a text containing the words "in nomine." (b) Noting a fugue in which the answer does not exactly correspond to the subject; a free or "nominal" fugue.

innovate (in'ō-vāt), v.; pret. and pp. innovated, ppr. innovating. [< L. innovatus, pp. of innovare (> It. innovare = Sp. Pg. Pr. innovar = F. innover), renew, < in, in, + novare, make new, < novus = E. new: see novel. Cf. ennew.] I.† trans. 1. To change or alter by bringing in something new.

It is objected that to abrogate or innovate the Gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt it, were most heinous and cursed sacrilege.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 10.

Wherein Moses had innouated nothing, as some will haue him, neither in the letters, nor in the Language, but vsed them as they were long before his time.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 48.

2. To bring in as new; introduce or perform by way of innovation.

So that if any other do innouate and brynge vp a woorde to me afore not vsed or not hearde, I would not dispraise it. J. Udall, On Luke, Pref.

Every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act till then unknown.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xv. 277.

II. intrans. To bring in something new; make changes in anything established: with on and sometimes in before an object.

It were good . . . that men in their innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly. Bacon, Innovations (ed. 1887).

Though he [Horace] innovated little, he may justly be called a great refiner of the Roman tongue.
Dryden, Def. of Epil. to Conq. of Granada, ii.

The Bill, however, does indirectly innovate upon the British practice. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 702.

innovation (in-ō-vā'shọn), n. [= F. innovation = Pr. ennovacio = Sp. innovación = Pg. innovação = It. innovazione, < LL. innovatio(n-), < innovare, renew: see innovate.] 1. The act of innovating; the introduction of new things or methods.

Some of them desirous of innouation in the state, others aspiring to greater fortunes by her libertie and life.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 207.

Innovation is not necessarily improvement.
Story, Misc. Writings, p. 359.

2. A novel change in practice or method; something new introduced into established arrangements of any kind; an unwonted or experimental variation.

There can hardly be discovered any radical or fundamental alterations and innovations in nature.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 173.

Private property, though an innovation, may still be a wholesome innovation. But an innovation it certainly is; the property of the tribe is older than the property of the individual. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects, p. 284.

3. In Scots law, the exchange, with the creditor's consent, of one obligation for another, so as to make the second obligation come in the place of the first, and be the only subsisting obligation against the debtor, both the original obligants remaining the same. Also called novation.—4. In bot., a newly formed shoot or extension of the stem: used especially with reference to the mosses, in which the new shoot becomes independent by the dying off behind of the parent axis.

innovationist (in-ō-vā′shon-ist), n. [< innovation + -ist.] One who favors or practises innovation; a believer in or advocate of experimental change.

innovative (in′ō-vā-tiv), a. [< innovate + -ive.] Tending to bring in something new; introducing or tending to introduce innovations; characterized by innovations.

Some writers are, as to manner and diction, conservative, while others are innovative.
F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 27.

innovator (in′ō-vā-tor), n. [= F. innovateur = Sp. Pg. innovador = It. innovatore, < L. as if innovator*, < innovare, renew: see innovate.] One who innovates; an introducer of changes.

Myself
Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to the public weal. Shak., Cor., iii. 1.

innoxious (i-nok′shus), a. [= Pg. innoxio, < L. innoxius, harmless, < in- priv. + noxius, harmful: see noxious. Cf. innocuous.] Not noxious or harmful; doing no harm; innocuous: as, an innoxious drug.

Thrice happy race! that, innocent of blood,
From milk, innoxious, seek their simple food.
Pope, Iliad, xiii. 12.

innoxiously (i-nok′shus-li), adv. In an innoxious manner; harmlessly.

innoxiousness (i-nok′shus-nes), n. The state or quality of being innoxious; harmlessness.

innuate†, v. t. [Irreg. < L. innuere, nod to, intimate (see innuent), + -ate[2].] To intimate; signify; insinuate.

As if Agamemnon would innuate that, as this sow (being spayed) is free from Venus, so had he never attempted the dishonour of Briseis. Chapman, Iliad, xix., Comment.

innubilous (i-nū′bi-lus), a. [< L. innubilus, unclouded, < in- priv. + nubila, a cloud.] Free from clouds; clear. Blount. [Rare.]

in nuce (in nū′sē). [L.: in, in; nuce, abl. of nux, nut.] In a nutshell.

innuendo (in-ū-en′dō). [L., abl. ger. of innuere, give a nod or sign, intimate, hint: see innuent.] 1. [L.] Intimating; insinuating; signifying: a word used at the beginning of an explanatory parenthetical clause in Latin (Middle Latin), and still occasionally in English, pleadings, introducing the person or thing meant: as, he (innuendo the plaintiff) did so and so.—2. n.; pl. innuendos or innuendoes (-dōz). An oblique hint; an indirect intimation about a person or thing; an allusive or inferential suggestion: commonly used in a bad sense, but sometimes in an innocent one. Also, erroneously, inuendo.

Pursue your trade of scandal picking, . . .
Your innuendoes, when you tell us
That Stella loves to talk with fellows.
Swift, Stella's Birthday.

They so intoxicated me with their sly insinuations and delicate inuendos of compliment, that if it had not been for a lucky recollection . . . I had certainly looked upon myself as a person of no small consequence.
Burns, Letter to Mrs. Dunlop, Nov. 13, 1788.

What is the universal sense of want and ignorance, but the fine innuendo by which the soul makes its enormous claim? Emerson, The Over-Soul.

Solomon's Proverbs, I think, have omitted to say, that as the sore palate findeth grit, so an uneasy consciousness heareth innuendoes. George Eliot, Middlemarch, I. 327.

= Syn. See hint[1], v. t. (end of comparison).

Innuit (in′ū-it), n. [Eskimo, lit. the people.] The native name of the Eskimos.

The Eskimo do not speak of themselves by the name so commonly given them by foreigners, but simply and proudly as Innuit, that is 'the people,' as though they were the only people on the face of the earth.
Quarterly Rev.

innumerability (i-nū″mę-ra-bil′i-ti), n. [= Sp. innumerabilidad = Pg. innumerabilidade = It. innumerabilità: as innumerable + -ity.] The state of being innumerable.

innumerable (i-nū′mę-ra-bl), a. [< ME. innumerable, < OF. innumerable, also innombrable, F. innombrable = Sp. innumerable = Pg. innumeravel = It. innumerabile, < L. innumerabilis, that cannot be numbered, < in- priv. + numerabilis, that can be numbered: see numerable.] 1. That cannot be counted; incapable of being enumerated or numbered for multitude; countless; hence, indefinitely, very numerous.

Beholdyng them with countenaunce right stabill, Hym semyd they were pepill innumerable.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1988.

Ye cedars, with innumerable boughs
Hide me, where I may never see them more!
Milton, P. L., ix. 1089.

2. Not measurable by rhythmical numbers; unmusical; tuneless. [Rare.]

The grasshoppers spin into mine ear
A small innumerable sound.
A. Lampman, quoted in Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 822.

=Syn. 1. Unnumbered, numberless, myriad.

innumerably (i-nū′mę-ra-bli), adv. Without number; in numbers so great as to be beyond counting.

innumerous (i-nū′mę-rus), a. [= Sp. innúmero = Pg. It. innumero, < L. innumerus, numberless, countless, < in- priv. + numerus, number: see number. Cf. numerous.] Without number; numberless; innumerable. [Poetical.]

In this close dungeon of innumerous boughs.
Milton, Comus, l. 349.

As in a poplar grove when a light wind wakes
A lisping of the innumerous leaf and dies.
Tennyson, Princess, v.

innutrition (in-ū-trish′on), n. [< in-[3] + nutrition.] Lack of nutrition; failure of nourishment.

Innutrition will afterwards cause prostration or paralysis. H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 26.

innutritious (in-ū-trish′us), a. [< in-[3] + nutritious.] Not nutritious; deficient in nourishing qualities; supplying little or no nourishment.

The innutritious residuum is eventually cast out by the way it entered. Huxley and Martin, Elem. Biology, p. 96.

innutritive (in-nū′tri-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + nutritive.] Not nutritive or nourishing; supplying little or no nutriment.

Ino (ī′nō), n. [L., < Gr. Ἰνώ, a sea-goddess, daughter of Cadmus and Hermione, also called Leucothea.] 1. A genus of crustaceans. Oken, 1815.—2. A genus of lepidopterous insects, of the family Pyromorphidæ: synonymous with Procris. W. E. Leach, 1819.—3. A genus of coleopterous insects. Laporte, 1835.—4. A genus of mollusks. Hinds, 1843.

-ino. [Sp. Pg. It. -ino, m., < L. -inus, m., -inum, neut.: see -in[1], -ine[1].] The Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian form of the suffix -in[1], -ine[1], occurring in some nouns more or less current in English, as in albino, bambino, casino, merino, etc.

inobedience† (in-ō-bē′di-ęns), n. [< ME. inobedience, < OF. inobedience = Sp. Pg. inobediencia = It. inobbedienzia, < LL. inobœdientia, inobaudientia, < inobœdien(t-)s, not obedient: see inobedient.] Disobedience; neglect of obedience.

I hadde in custom to come to scole late; . . .
Wex obstynat by inobedience.
Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xliv.

Ther is inobedience, avauntynge, ypocrisie, despit, arrogance, impudence, etc. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

inobedient† (in-ō-bē′di-ęnt), a. [< ME. inobedient, < OF. inobedient = Sp. Pg. inobediente = It. inobediente, inobbediente, < LL. inobœdien(t-)s, not obedient, ppr. of inobœdire, not to obey, < L. in- priv. + obœdire, obey: see obedient.] Disobedient.

In-obedient to holy churche and to hem that ther seruen. Piers Plowman (C), vii. 19.

Inobedient is he that disobeyeth for despit to the comandementz of God and to hise sovereyns and to his goostly fader. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

inobediently† (in-ō-bē′di-ęnt-li), adv. In a disobedient manner; disobediently.

Whom I have obstinately and inobediently offended. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1536.

inobeisance†, n. [ME. inobeishaunce, < OF. inobeissance, disobedience; as in-[3] + obeisance.] Disobedience. Wyclif.

inobeisant†, a. [ME. inobeisant, < OF. inobeissant, disobedient; as in-[3] + obeisant.] Disobedient. Wyclif.

inobservable (in-ob-zėr′va-bl), a. [< in-[3] + observable.] Incapable of being directly observed even with the aid of instruments.

inobservance (in-ob-zėr′vans), n. [= F. inobservance = Sp. Pg. inobservancia, < L. inobservantia, inattention, < (LL.) inobservan(t-)s, inattentive: see inobservant.] Lack of observance; neglect of observing; nonobservance.

Breach and inobservance of certain wholesome and politic laws for government. Bacon, The Judicial Charge.

Infidelity doth commonly proceed from negligence, or drowsy inobservance and carelessness. Barrow, The Creed.

inobservancy (in-ob-zėr′van-si), n. The act or habit of nonobservance; inobservance.

This unpreparedness and inobservancy of mind.
Hodgson, quoted in Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 727, note.

inobservant (in-ob-zėr′vant), a. [= Sp. Pg. inobservante, < LL. inobservan(t-)s, inattentive, unobserving, < L. in- priv. + observan(t-)s, attentive: see observant.] Not taking notice; not quick or keen in observation; unobservant.

If they are petulant or unjust, he, perhaps, has been inobservant or imprudent. Bp. Hurd, Works, VI. xxiii.

inobservation (in-ob-zėr-vā′shon), n. [= F. inobservation; as in-[3] + observation.] Neglect or lack of observation. [Rare.]

These writers are in all this guilty of the most shameful inobservation. Shuckford, The Creation, p. 118.

inobtrusive (in-ob-trö′siv), a. [< in-[3] + obtrusive.] Unobtrusive.

inobtrusively (in-ob-trö′siv-li), adv. Unobtrusively.

inobtrusiveness (in-ob-trö′siv-nes), n. Unobtrusiveness.

Inocarpeæ (ī-nō-kär′pē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1841), < Inocarpus + -eæ.] A section of plants belonging to the family Fabaceæ, including the genus Inocarpus. This arrangement is no longer accepted, the genus Inocarpus being referred to the tribe Dalbergieæ.

inocarpin (ī-nō-kär′pin), n. [< NL. Inocarpus, < Gr. ἰς (ἰν-), a fiber, nerve, lit. strength, force (orig. Fίς* = L. vis (vir-), force: see vim), + καρπός, fruit.] A red coloring matter contained in the juice of Inocarpus edulis, a tree growing in islands of the Pacific.

Inocarpus (ī-nō-kär′pus), n. [NL. (Forster, 1776), < Gr. ἰς (ἰν-), a fiber (see inion[2]), + καρπός, a fruit, in allusion to the fibrous envelops.] A small genus of plants of the family Fabaceæ, tribe Dalbergieæ, type of the old section Inocarpeæ. They are large unarmed trees, with unifoliate coriaceous leaves and yellow flowers in axillary spikes. Only three species are known, natives of the Pacific islands and the Indian archipelago. I. edulis, the Fiji chestnut, which is a large tree, furnishes seeds that are much prized as food by the natives of the Indian archipelago. When roasted they taste not unlike chestnuts. The juice yields the red coloring matter inocarpin.

inoccupation (in-ok-ū-pā′shon), n. [= F. inoccupation; as in-[3] + occupation.] Lack of occupation. Sydney Smith.

Inoceramus (ī-nō-ser′a-mus), n. [< Gr. ἰς (ἰν-), a fiber, + κέραμος, a tile, shell: see ceramic.] A genus of fossil bivalve mollusks of the family Pernidæ, characteristic of the Cretaceous period. The genus was founded by Sowerby. The shell has a long straight hinge furnished with numerous ligamentary pits, and the form is oval or oblong with prominent umbones. The internal layer of the shell is nacreous and the external thick, prismatic, and fibrous. Numerous species are described.

Inoceramus sulcatus.

inoculability (in-ok″ū-la-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inoculabilité; as inoculable + -ity.] The character or state of being inoculable.

The inoculability of tubercle.
Austin Flint, Pract. of Medicine, p. 41.

inoculable (in-ok′ū-la-bl), a. [< inocul(ate) + -able.] Capable of being inoculated, as a person, or of being communicated by inoculation, as a disease.

inocular (in-ok′ū-lär), a. [< L. in, in, + oculus, eye: see ocular.] In entom., within the compound eyes: said of the antennæ of insects when they are inserted in notches in the inner margins of the eyes, which partly surround their bases, as in many Cerambycidæ.

inoculate (in-ok′ū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inoculated, ppr. inoculating. [< ME. inoculate, < L. inoculatus, pp. of inoculare, ingraft an eye or bud of one plant into (another), implant, < in, in, + oculus, an eye: see ocular. Cf. inocule and ineye.] 1. To graft by budding; insert a bud or germ in, as a tree or plant, for propagation.

In Aprill figtreen inoculate
May best be there as drie landes be.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 127.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock but we shall relish of it. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 1, 119.

Hence — 2. To introduce a foreign germ or element into; specifically, to impregnate with disease by the insertion of virus; treat by inoculation for the purpose of protecting from a more malignant form of the disease: as, to inoculate a person for the smallpox: often used figuratively. ★ inoculation (in-ok-ū-lā′shọn), n. [< ME. inoculacion = F. inoculation = Sp. inoculación = Pg. inoculação = It. inoculazione, < LL. inoculatio(n-), an inoculating, ingrafting, < L. inoculare, pp. inoculatus, ingraft, implant: see inoculate.] 1. The act or practice of grafting by budding.

Nowe have I made inoculacion
Of pere and appultree; the experience Hath preved wel.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 165.

Fruit comes slowly from the kernel, but soon by inoculation or incision. Bacon, Physical Fables, iv., Expl.

Hence — 2. The ingrafting of any minute germ in a soil where it will grow; especially, the act or practice of communicating disease by introducing through puncture infectious matter into the tissues; the introduction of a specific animal poison into the tissues by puncture or through contact with a wounded surface; specifically, in med., the direct insertion of the virus of smallpox in order, by the production of a mitigated form of it, to prevent a more severe attack of the disease in the natural way. The operation was introduced into Europe from the East by Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, and was first performed in London in 1721. It was superseded about 1800 by the milder and more successful practice of inoculating with vaccine virus. See vaccination. — Inoculation of grasslands, in agri., a process for securing a luxuriant growth of grass, consisting in preparing the soil as if it were to be seeded down with grass-seed, but covering it first with small fragments of turf taken from the best old pasture-land, after which grass-seed mixed with clover in the ordinary way is scattered over the surface, and the field is rolled to press down the pieces of sod and press in the seed.

inoculative (in-ok′ū-lā-tiv), a. [< inoculate + -ive.] Pertaining or relating to inoculation; inoculatory.

Cultivation of spores of molds, etc., is . . . found to cause a depreciation of their inoculative efficacy.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 425.

The few inoculative experiments that have been made upon monkeys have been unsuccessful. Science, XI. 140.

inoculator (in-ok′ū-lā-tọr), n. [= F. inoculateur = Sp. Pg. inoculador, < L. inoculator, an ingrafter, < inoculare, ingraft: see inoculate.] A person who or a thing which inoculates; one who or that which propagates by inoculation.

Holy relics . . . are inoculators of all manner of contagious diseases. Sir S. W. Baker, Heart of Africa, p. 52.

inocule†, v. t. [ME. inoculen, < OF. (and F.) inoculer = Sp. Pg. inocular = It. inocchiare, inoculare, < L. inoculare, ingraft: see inoculate.] Same as inoculate, 1. Palladius.

inodiate† (in-ō′di-āt), v. t. [< ML. inodiatus*, pp. of inodiare*, > It. inodiare, innodiare (rare), bring into hatred, make hateful, annoy, < L. in, in, + odium, hate: see odium. Cf. annoy, ult. < ML. inodiare*.] To make hateful.

God intends, in the calamities which he inflicts upon a pardoned person, partly to give the world fresh demonstrations of his hatred of sin, and partly to inodiate and imbitter sin to the chastised sinner. South, Works, VI. vi.

inodorate† (in-ō′dọ-rāt), a. [< in-[3] + odorate.] Inodorous.

Whites are more inodorate (for the most part) than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 507.

inodorous (in-ō′dọ-rus), a. [= F. inodore = Sp. inodoro = Pg. It. inodoro, < L. inodōrus, without smell, < in- priv. + odor, smell: see odor, odorous.] Destitute of odor; having no scent or smell.

The white of an egg is a viscous . . . inodorous liquor.
Arbuthnot, Aliments.

inodorousness (in-ō′dọ-rus-nes), n. The state or quality of being inodorous; absence of odor.

inoffensive (in-ọ-fen′siv), a. [= F. inoffensif = Sp. inofensivo = Pg. inoffensivo; as in-[3] + offensive.] Not offensive; giving no offense; doing no harm; not causing disturbance or uneasiness; free from anything of a displeasing or disturbing nature: as, an inoffensive animal; inoffensive remarks.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive must, and meaths
From many a berry. Milton, P. L., v. 345.

Tillotson, the most popular preacher of that age, and in manners the most inoffensive of men.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

inoffensively (in-ọ-fen′siv-li), adv. In an inoffensive manner; without giving offense; in a manner not to offend, disturb, or displease.

inoffensiveness (in-ọ-fen′siv-nes), n. The quality of being inoffensive; harmlessness.

inofficial (in-ọ-fish′al), a. [= F. inofficiel; as in-[3] + official.] Not official; destitute of official character or authority; unofficial: as, inofficial intelligence.

It raised him into a new moral power in the state; an inofficial dictator of principle. Everett, Orations, I. 515.

inofficially (in-ọ-fish′al-i), adv. In an inofficial manner; without official character or authority.

inofficious (in-ọ-fish′us), a. [= F. inofficieux = Sp. inoficioso = Pg. inoficioso = It. inofficioso, inoffizioso, < ML. inofficiosus, contrary to duty, harmful, < L. in- priv. + officiosus, dutiful, officious: see officious.] Regardless of the obligations incident to one's office or position; contrary or inattentive to duty. [Rare.]

Up, thou tame river, wake;
And from thy liquid limbs this slumber shake;
Thou drown'st thyself in inofficious sleep.
B. Jonson, K. James's Coronation Entertainment.

Let not a father hope to excuse an inofficious disposition of his fortune by alleging that "every man may do what he will with his own." Paley, Moral Philos., III. iii. 9.

Inofficious testament or will, a testament or will disposing of property contrary to the dictates of natural affection and to just expectations.

inogen (in′ọ-jen), n. [< Gr. ἰς (iv-), nerve, fiber, + -γενής, producing: see -gen.] A hypothetical complex substance which is assumed by certain physiologists to decompose in the muscular tissue during contraction, yielding carbonic acid and lactic acid and a nitrogenous body, and to be re-formed during repose.

inogenic (in-ọ-jen′ik), a. Of or pertaining to inogen.

inoilt, v. t. Same as enoil. Davies.

If it [the oil] be wanting, that king is yet a perfect monarch notwithstanding, and God's anointed, as well as if he was inoiled. Strype, Cranmer, ii. 1.

inomet. A Middle English past participle of nim.

Inomycetes (ī-nọ-mī-sē′tēz), n. pl. [NL. (Martius, 1817), < Gr. ἰς (iv-), a fiber, + μύκης, pl. μύκητες, a mushroom.] A former division including mostly hyphomycetous fungi.

inoperable (in-op′ẹ-ra-bl), a. [< in-[3] + operable.] That cannot be operated on. [Rare.]

The treatment of inoperable uterine cancer.
Medical News, XLVIII. 462.

inoperation† (in-op-ẹ-rā′shọn), n. [< LL. as if inoperatio(n-)*, < inoperari, effect, produce, < L. in, in, + operari, work, operate: see operate.] Agency; intimate influence; inworking.

A true temper of a quiet and peaceable estate of the soul upon good grounds can never be attained without the inoperation of that Holy Spirit from whom every good gift, and every perfect giving, proceedeth.
Bp. Hall, Remedy of Discontentment, § 25.

inoperative (in-op′ẹ-ra-tiv), a. [< in-[3] + operative.] Not operative or operating; destitute of activity or of effect; inert: as, laws rendered inoperative by neglect; inoperative remedies.

I do not want to issue a document that the whole world will see must necessarily be inoperative, like the Pope's bull against the comet! Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 213.

inopercular (in-ọ-pėr′kū-lạr), a. [< in-[3] + opercular.] Same as inoperculate. Sir R. Owen.

Inoperculata (in-ọ-pėr-kū-lā′tạ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of inoperculatus, without an operculum: see inoperculate.] A division of Pulmonifera containing those univalves the shell of which has no operculum, such as snails. Most of these mollusks are inoperculate, as the families Helicidæ or snails, Limacidæ or slugs, Limnæidæ or pond-snails, and others. In many species which hibernate, however, there is formed a temporary operculum called the epiphragm. See Operculata.

inoperculate (in-ọ-pėr′kū-lāt), a. [< NL. inoperculatus, < L. in- priv. + operculatus, covered: see operculate.] 1. Having no true operculum, as a snail; specifically, of or pertaining to the Inoperculata.

The rest [of the Pulmonifera] are inoperculate, and sometimes shell-less. S. P. Woodward, Mollusca (1875), p. 285.

2. In bot., not provided with an operculum or lid.

Also inopercular, inoperculated.

inoperculated (in-ọ-pėr′kū-lā-ted), a. Same as inoperculate.

inopinable† (in-ọ-pī′na-bl), a. [< OF. inopinable = Sp. inopinable = Pg. inopinavel = It. inopinabile, < L. inopinabilis, not to be supposed, < in- priv. + opinabilis, that is supposed, imaginary, < opinari, suppose: see opine.] Not to be expected. Latimer, Works, I. 476.

inopinate† (in-op′i-nāt), a. [= Sp. Pg. inopinado = It. inopinato, innopinato, < L. inopinatus, not expected, < in- priv. + opinatus, pp. of opinari, suppose, expect: see opine.] Unexpected.

Casuall and inopinate cases, as wounds, poysons, burnings, plagues, and other popular harmes.
Time's Storehouse, 760, 2. (Latham.) inopportune (in-op-ọr-tūn′), a. [= F. inopportun = Sp. inoportuno = Pg. It. inopportuno, < L. inopportunus, unsuitable, < in- priv. + opportunus, suitable: see opportune.] Not opportune; inconvenient; unseasonable; unsuitable; inappropriate; unfit.

God at first makes all alike; but an indisposed body, or an inopportune education, or evil customs superinduce variety and difference. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 302.

=Syn. Untimely, ill-timed, malapropos.

inopportunely (in-op-ọr-tūn′li), adv. In an inopportune manner; unseasonably; at an inconvenient time.

inopportuneness (in-op-ọr-tūn′nes), n. The character or quality of being inopportune.

The inopportuneness of the proposal at a time of foreign war, when the rebellion, too, in Ireland was not completely suppressed, was the main argument of Fox and his followers in opposition at Westminster.
Quarterly Rev., CXLV. 529.

inopportunity (in-op-ọr-tū′ni-ti), n. [= F. inopportunité = Sp. inoportunidad = It. inopportunità; as inopportune + -ity, after opportunity.] Lack of opportuneness; unseasonableness. [Rare.]

The light, . . . hidden under the bushel of misapprehension or inopportunity, flames forth at fitting moment.
Alcott, Tablets, p. 146.

inoppressive (in-ọ-pres′iv), a. [< in-[3] + oppressive.] Unoppressive; not burdensome.

inopulent (in-op′ū-lent), a. [< in-[3] + opulent.] Not opulent; not wealthy; not affluent or rich.

inorb (in-ôrb′), v. t. [< in-[2] + orb.] To form or constitute as an orb.

Sceptred genius, aye inorbed,
Culminating in her sphere.
Emerson, Hermione.

inorder†, v. t. [< in-[2] + order.] To order; arrange. Howell.

inordinacy (in-ôr′di-nā-si), n. [< inordina(te) + -cy.] The state of being inordinate; a going beyond prescribed order or proper bounds; disorderly excess; immoderateness: as, the inordinacy of desire or other passion.

'Tis, I say, great odds, but that we should be carried to inordinacy, and exceed the bounds the divine laws have set us. Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, ii.

inordinancy† (in-ôr′di-nan-si), n. Same as inordinacy. Davies.

inordinate (in-ôr′di-nāt), a. [= OF. inordoné = Sp. inordenado = It. inordinato, < L. inordinatus, not arranged, disordered, irregular, < in- priv. + ordinatus, pp. of ordinare, arrange, order: see ordinate, order, v.] Beyond prescribed order or proper bounds; not adequately limited or restrained; disorderly; excessive; immoderate: as, inordinate demands; inordinate vanity: rarely applied to persons.

Marcus Antonius . . . was indeed a voluptuous man, and inordinate. Bacon, Love (ed. 1887).

Sir, this is from your wonted course at home:
When did you there keep such inordinate hours?
Go to bed late, start thrice, and call on me?
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, ii. 1.

Much incapacity to govern was revealed in this inordinate passion to administer.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 513.

Inordinate proportion, a statement of equality of ratios in which the order of statement of the terms is irregular.

inordinately (in-ôr′di-nāt-li), adv. In an inordinate manner; excessively; immoderately.

The commons thought they had a right to the things that they inordinately sought to have.
Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

inordinateness (in-ôr′di-nāt-nes), n. Inordinacy; immoderateness; excess. Bp. Hall.

inordination† (in-ôr-di-nā′shọn), n. [= It. inordinazione, < LL. inordinatio(n-), disorder, irregularity, < L. inordinatus, disordered: see inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from rule or right; inordinateness.

Some things were made evil by a superinduced prohibition, as eating one kind of fruit; some things were evil by inordination. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 10, Pref.

inorganic (in-ôr-gan′ik), a. [= F. inorganique = Sp. inorgánico = Pg. It. inorganico; as in-[3] + organic.] 1. Not organic; not organized; specifically, not having that organization which characterizes living bodies. See organic and organism.

The horizontal lines of surface decoration break injuriously upon the vertical lines of the windows, and the forms of the highly ornamented gables are curiously inorganic.
C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 229.

Both [Comte and Spencer] saw that Evolution begins with inorganic matter and ends with human society.
L. F. Ward, Dynam. Sociol., I. 145.

2. Not produced by vital processes: as, an inorganic compound.—3. In philol., of unintended or accidental origin; not normally developed: as, the distinctions of lead and led, of man and men, of was and were, which are of phonetic origin; or the i of Fr. vient (L. venit), as compared with that of mais (L. magis). —Inorganic chemistry, the branch of chemistry which treats of those substances which do not contain carbon. Formerly organic chemistry treated of substances produced by animal or vegetable organisms or formed by metamorphoses of such organisms, which invariably contained carbon, and usually both hydrogen and oxygen, while nitrogen was present in very many of them. They were called organic compounds. Inorganic chemistry treated of all other substances. It was the prevalent opinion that organic substances could be produced only by a force peculiar to living organisms, called vital force. But since many so-called organic compounds have been made artificially from inorganic materials, the distinction has disappeared. Organic chemistry is now the chemistry of carbon and all its compounds, and inorganic chemistry is the chemistry of all other elements and compounds.

inorganical (in-ôr-gan'i-kal), a. [< in-[3] + organical.] Same as inorganic. Boyle.

inorganically (in-ôr-gan'i-kal-i), adv. Without organs or organization.

inorganisable, inorganisation, etc. See inorganizable, etc.

inorganity† (in-ôr-gan'i-ti), n. [Irreg. < inorgan(ic) + -ity.] The quality or state of being inorganic.

This is a sensible and no inconsiderable argument of the inorganity of the soul.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 36.

inorganizable (in-ôr'gạ-nī-zạ-bl), a. [< in-[3] + organizable.] Not organizable; incapable of being organized. Also spelled inorganisable.

It [the brain] is exposed to the effects of anæmia and hyperæmia, the latter being sometimes accompanied by organizable or inorganizable exudates.
E. C. Mann, Psychol. Med., p. 34.

inorganization (in-ôr″gạn-i-zā'shọn), n. [< in-[3] + organization.] The state of being unorganized; absence of organization. Also spelled inorganisation.

No other department of study will do so much [as that of chemical action] to take away the idea of grossness, of inorganization, which the untrained mind applies to the world of matter. Science, VI. 66.

inorganized (in-ôr'gạn-izd), a. [< in-[3] + organized.] Not having organic structure; unorganized. Also spelled inorganised.

inornate (in-ôr-nāt'), a. [< in-[3] + ornate.] Not ornate; plain.

His [Lord Stowell's] style is chaste, yet not inornate.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 580.

inorthography† (in-ôr-thog'rạ-fi), n. [< in-[3] + orthography.] Incorrect orthography; a misspelling. Feltham.

inosculate (in-os'kū-lāt), v.; pret. and pp. inosculated, ppr. inosculating. [< L. in, in, on, + osculum, dim. of os, mouth (> osculari, kiss): see osculate.] I. trans. To unite by openings, as two vessels in an animal body; anastomose.

It is an opinion . . . that the sap circulates in plants as the blood in animals; that it ascends through capillary arteries in the trunk, into which are inosculated other vessels of the bark answering to veins.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 34.

The latter [the Roman code] has been adopted, or, if I may say so, inosculated, into the juridical polity of all continental Europe, as a fundamental rule.
Story, Misc. Writings, p. 505.

II. intrans. 1. In anat., to unite by little openings; have intercommunication by running together, as the vessels of the body; anastomose: as, one vein or artery inosculates with another.

The underlying muscles and inosculating fibrous tissue.
Darwin, Cirripedia, p. 190.

Hence—2. To unite or be connected so as to have intercommunication or continuity; run together; blend by being connected terminally.

Drear, dark, inosculating leaves. Crabbe.

The several monthly divisions of the journal may inosculate, but not the several volumes. De Quincey.

inosculation (in-os-kū-lā'shọn), n. [= F. inosculation = It. inosculazione; as inosculate + -ion.] 1. The union of two vessels of an animal body by openings into each other, so as to permit the passage of a fluid; anastomosis. Hence—2. Some analogous union or relation; a running together; junction: as, in botany, the inosculation of the veins of a leaf, or of a scion with the stock in grafting.

There has been a perpetual inosculation of the sciences and the arts. H. Spencer, Universal Progress, p. 188.

inosic (i-nos'ik), a. [Appar. < inose* (< Gr. ἰς (iv-), strength, force, nerve, fiber, + -ose) + -ic.] In chem., a word used only in the following phrase.—Inosic acid, a name given by Liebig to an acid found in the mother-liquor of the preparation of creatine from flesh-juice. Its existence as a definite compound is doubtful.

inosite (in'ō-sīt), n. [< inos-ic + -ite[2].] A saccharine substance ($C_6H_{12}O_6 + 2H_2O$) found in the muscular substance of the heart and in the lungs, kidneys, brain, etc. It has been found in the urine in some cases of glucosuria and of albuminuria, and it exists also in several plants. It is very sweet, and does not undergo alcoholic fermentation, but yields lactic acid when fermented.

inought†, a., n., and adv. An obsolete form of enough.

in-over (in-ō'vėr), adv. [< in[1] + over.] Nearer to or toward: in toward something, especially the fire. See inby. [Scotch.]

Syne she sets by the spinning-wheel,
Taks them in-o'er, and warms them weel.
W. Beattie, Tales, p. 32.

in-over (in'ō″vėr), a. Same as inby.

in ovo (in ō'vō). [L.: in, in; ovo, abl. of ovum, an egg: see ovum.] In the egg; in an inchoative state.

inower (in-ō'ėr), adv. Same as in-over.

inoxidizable (in-ok'si-dī-zạ-bl), a. [< in-[3] + oxidizable.] In chem., that cannot be oxidized or converted into an oxid.

inoxidized (in-ok'si-dīzd), a. [< in-[3] + oxidized.] Not oxidized.

The newly-formed pigment is separated from the inoxidized copper by washing on a sieve.
Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 411.

inp-. For words formerly so beginning, see imp-.

in-parabola (in'pạ-rab″ō-lạ), n. [< in(scribed) + parabola.] An inscribed parabola.

inpart†, n. [< in[2] + part.] An inward part.

O, my breast, break quickly;
And shew my friends my in-parts, lest they think I have betrayed them. B. Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1.

in partibus infidelium (in pär'ti-bus in-fi-dē'li-um). [L.: in, in; partibus, abl. pl. of par(t-)s, a part, portion, region; infidelium, gen. pl. of infidelis, unbelieving, infidel: see infidel.] In the regions of infidels; in countries inhabited by unbelievers: in the Rom. Cath. Ch., a phrase describing titular bishops (called briefly bishops in partibus) consecrated to a see which formerly existed but has been lost to the church.

inpath† (in'pȧth), n. [< in[1] + path.] An intricate way. Davies.

Italy is hence parted by long crosse dangerous inpaths.
Stanihurst, Æneid, iii. 396.

in-patient (in'pā″shẹnt), n. [< in[1] + patient.] A patient who is lodged and fed as well as treated in a hospital or infirmary. See out-patient.

in pectore (in pek'tō-rē). [L.: in, in; pectore, abl. of pectus, breast, bosom: see pectoral.] In or within the breast; in reserve: as, a cardinal in pectore (one whose appointment has not been promulgated).

in-pensioner (in'pen″shọn-ėr), n. [< in[1] + pensioner.] In the British army, a pensioned man who is lodged and maintained in a public institution: opposed to out-pensioner, who lives where he pleases.

in-pentahedron (in'pen-tạ-hē″drọn), n. [< in(scribed) + pentahedron.] An inscribed pentahedron.

inperfit†, a. A Middle English form of imperfect.

in perpetuum (in pėr-pet'ū-um). [L.: in, in, on, for; perpetuum, acc. of perpetuus, perpetual: see perpetual, perpetuity.] In perpetuity; for ever.

in persona (in pėr-sō'nạ). [L.: in, in; personā, abl. of persona, person: see person.] In person. See in propria persona.

in personam (in pėr-sō'nam). [L.: in, in, to, against; personam, acc. of persona, person: see person.] Against the person: used in law of a right resting in a purely personal obligation of another, and of proceedings to enforce a right by judgment binding only on the party proceeded against, such as a suit to recover a debt: in contradistinction to a right or a proceeding in rem, which binds all the world, such as a proceeding to condemn a ship or to dissolve a marriage. See action, 8 (b).

in petto (in pet'tō). [It.: in, in; petto, < L. pectus, breast. Cf. in pectore.] In or within the breast; in reserve; not disclosed.

in-polygon (in'pol″i-gon), n. [< in(scribed) + polygon.] An inscribed polygon.

in posse (in pos'ē). [NL.: L. in, in; posse, be able, can (used as a noun): see posse, possible.] In a potential state of being; not yet actually existing, but ready to come into existence when certain conditions are fulfilled.

in potentia (in pō-ten'shiạ). [L.: in, in; potentiā, abl. of potentia, power: see potent, power, etc.] Potentially; in possibility.

in potestate parentis (in pō-tes-tā'tē pā-ren'tis). [L.: in, in; potestate, abl. of potesta(t-)s, power; parentis, gen. of paren(t-)s, a parent: see potestat, parent.] Subject to the authority of a parent.

inpour (in'pōr), n. [< in[1] + pour.] Same as inpouring.

The perpetual inpour of a coin made full legal tender for its face. Report Sec. Treasury, 1886, I. xxxvii.

inpouring (in'pōr″ing), n. [< in[1] + pouring.] A pouring in; a great influx.

With this inpouring of labor came railroads, factories, and a thousand prolific industries.
N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 4.

May we describe Christianity as a vast extension and deepening of all the higher ranges of human consciousness, by means of which the inpouring of divine influence, in greatly increased volume, was made possible?
F. H. Johnson, Andover Rev., VII. 290.

in præsenti (in prē-zen'ti). [L.: in, in; præsenti, abl. of præsen(t-)s, present: see present.] Now; at the present time: in contradistinction to in futuro. The promise of marriage at the betrothal is a promise in futuro; that at the wedding is a promise in præsenti.

inpravable† (in-prā'vạ-bl), a. [< in-[3] + pravable.] Not capable of being corrupted.

He . . . set before his eyes alway the eye of the everlasting judge and the inpravable judging-place.
Becon, Works, I. 105.

in propria causa (in prō'pri-ạ̈ kâ'zạ̈). [L.: in, in; propriā, abl. fem. of proprius, own, proper; causā, abl. of causa, cause: see proper and cause.] In his or her own suit.

in propria persona (in prō'pri-ạ̈ pėr-sō'nạ̈). [L.: in, in; propriā, abl. fem. of proprius, own, proper; personā, abl. of persona, person.] In one's own person; by or through one's self and not another.

in puris naturalibus (in pū'ris nat-ū-ral'i-bus). [L.: in, in; puris, abl. neut. pl. of purus, pure, mere; naturalibus, abl. neut. pl. of naturalis, natural.] In mere natural guise; entirely unclothed; naked.

inpushing (in'pụsh″ing), n. [< in[1] + pushing.] A pushing in.

This is accomplished by inpushings of the epiblast at the extremities of the body. Stand. Nat. Hist., Int., p. xi.

input† (in-pụt'), v. t. [ME. inputten; < in[1] + ★put[1].] To put in; put on. Wyclif.

input (in'pụt), n. [< input, v.] Contribution, or share in a contribution. [Scotch.]

An ilka friend wad bear a share o' the burthen, something might be dune—ilka ane to be liable for their ane input. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xii.

in-quadric (in'kwod″rik), n. [< in(scribed) + quadric.] An inscribed quadric surface.

in-quadrilateral (in'kwod-ri-lat″ė-ral), n. [< in(scribed) + quadrilateral.] An inscribed quadrilateral.

inquartation (in-kwâr-tā'shọn), n. [< in-[2] + quartation.] In metal., same as quartation.

inquere†, v. See inquire.

inquest (in'kwest), n. [Early mod. E. also inquist; < ME. enquest, enqueste, < OF. enqueste, F. enquête = Pr. enquesta = It. inchiesta, inquiry, < L. inquisita, ML. inquista (sc. res), a thing inquired into, an inquiry, prop. fem. of inquisitus, inquistus, pp. of inquirere, inquire into: see inquire. Cf. quest.] 1. Inquiry; search; quest.

For-thy, syr, this enquest I require yow here,
That ȝe me telle with trawthe, if euer ȝe tale herde
Of the grene chapel.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1056.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South, Works, I. vi.

2. In law: (a) A judicial inquiry, especially an inquiry held before a jury; specifically, a proceeding before a jury to determine the amount to be recovered in an action, when there is no trial in the ordinary sense, because the right to recover has been admitted; in common use, a coroner's inquest.

Also that the Baillies from this tyme take [not] eny enquest for the kynge, but by xij trewe just and lawfulle men.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 400.

(b) The jury itself.

The next day the governour charged an inquest, and sent them aboard with two of the magistrates.
Winthrop, Hist. New Eng., I. 271.

Coroner's inquest. See coroner.—Great inquest†, a grand jury.

And that the price of ale be sessed at euery lawday by the gret enquest, or by the moste party of them.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 382.

Halifax inquest. See Halifax law, under law[1].—Inquest of office, an inquiry made by the sheriff, coroner, or escheator, or by commissioners specially appointed, acting with the aid of a jury, concerning any matter that entitles the state or sovereign to the possession of real or personal property, as to determine the right to lands claimed to be held by aliens. The term is also loosely used of an inquiry into a person's right to the possession of an office held by the government to be forfeited.

The proceeding [impeachment of Judge Pickering] was a mere inquest of office under a judicial form.
H. Adams, John Randolph, p. 133.

inquiet† (in-kwī'et), v. t. [< F. inquiéter = Pr. Sp. Pg. inquietar = It. inquietire, inquietare, < L. inquietare, make unquiet, disturb, < inquietus, unquiet: see inquiet, a.] To disturb; disquiet.

That no person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, &c., be troubled, impeached, sued, inquieted, or molested, for or by reason of any offence.
Milton, Articles of Peace with Irish.

inquiet† (in-kwī'et), a. [< F. inquiet = Sp. Pg. It. inquieto, < L. inquietus, restless, unquiet, < in- priv. + quietus, quiet: see quiet, a.] Unquiet.

inquietation† (in-kwī-e-tā'shon), n. [= F. inquiétation = Sp. inquietación = Pg. inquietação = It. inquietazione, < L. inquietatio(n-), disturbance, < inquietare, disturb: see inquiet, v.] The act of disquieting; disturbance.

To the high displeasure of God, the inquyetacon & damage of the Kyngis People, & to the marvaylous disturbance of the Comon Weale of this Realme.
Laws of Hen. VIII. (1530), quoted in Ribton-Turner's [Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 73.

How many semely personagis, by outrage in riote, gaminge, and excesse of apparaill, be induced to theft and robry, and somtime to murder, to the inquietation of good men? Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 7.

inquietness†, n. Inquietude; disturbance.

It will gender sedicions and vprores and miche inquietenes in thy realme. Joye, Expos. of Daniel, vi.

inquietude (in-kwī'e-tūd), n. [< F. inquiétude = Pr. inquietut = Sp. inquietud = It. inquietudine, < LL. inquietudo, restlessness, < L. inquietus, restless, unquiet: see inquiet, a.] 1. Lack of quietude or tranquillity; restlessness of manner or feeling; unrest.—2. Disturbance of mind or body; a feeling of uneasiness or apprehension; disquietude.

There mighty Love
Has fix'd his hopes, inquietudes, and fears.
Johnson, Irene, iii. 1.

Inquilinæ (in-kwi-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of L. inquilinus, a sojourner, tenant, lodger: see inquiline.] A group of hymenopterous insects, the guest gall-flies, a division of Cynipidæ, containing those cynipids which are unable to produce galls themselves, and consequently lay their eggs in galls made by other insects.

inquiline (in'kwi-lin), n. and a. [= Sp. Pg. It. inquilino, < L. inquilinus, an inhabitant of a place which is not his own, for incolinus*, < incola, an inhabitant, < in, in, + colere, inhabit: see culture.] I. n. In zoöl., an animal that lives in an abode properly belonging to another, either at its expense, as certain insects that live in galls made by the true gall-insects, or merely as a cotenant, as a pea-crab which lives in an oyster-shell, or a sea-anemone growing on a crab's back; a commensal. See cut under cancrisocial.

There are several genera of gall-flies which, although they live in galls, do not produce them. These are known as guest gall-flies or inquilines. Stand. Nat. Hist., II. 510.

II. a. Having the character of an inquiline; commensal.—Inquiline gall-fly. Same as guest-fly.

inquilinous (in-kwi-lī'nus), a. [< inquiline + -ous.] Same as inquiline. Encyc. Brit., X. 46.

inquinate† (in'kwi-nāt), v. t. [< L. inquinatus, pp. of inquinare (> It. inquinare = Sp. Pg. inquinar), defile, befoul, < in, in, on, + OL. cunire, void excrement.] To pollute; contaminate.

For an opinion it was of that nation [the Ægyptian] that Ibis feeding upon serpents, that venemous food so inquinated their ovall conceptions, or eggs within their bodies, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 7.

inquination† (in-kwi-nā'shon), n. [= Pg. inquinação, < LL. inquinatio(n-), < inquinare, defile: see inquinate.] The act of defiling, or the state of being defiled; pollution; corruption.

And the middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called (by some of the ancients) inquination or incoction. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 837.

inquirable (in-kwīr'a-bl), a. [< inquire + -able.] Capable of being inquired into; subject to inquisition or inquest.

Taking in hand to shewe the articles inquirable before the Iustice. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 17.

inquirance†, enquirance†, n. [ME. enquirance, enqueraunce; as inquire + -ance.] Inquiry.

Of Goddes mystery and his werking
Make never, my childe, to ferre enqueraunce.
MS. Cantab Ff. i. 6, f. 156. (Halliwell.)

inquiration (in-kwi-rā'shon), n. [Irreg. < inquire + -ation.] Inquiry. [Rare.]

A decent woman as spoke to her about . . . making secret inquiration concerning of me.
Dickens, David Copperfield, li.

inquire (in-kwīr'), v.; pret. and pp. inquired, ppr. inquiring. [Also enquire; < ME. inqueren, enqueren, < OF. enquerre, enquerir, F. enquérir = Pr. enquerer, enquerir, enquerre, inquerer = Sp. Pg. inquirir = It. inquerire, inquirere, inchierere, < L. inquirere, seek after, search for, inquire into, < in, into, + quærere, seek: see query, quest. Cf. acquire, exquire, require, conquer.] I. trans. 1†. To search for; seek out; make investigation concerning.

She pulled off her gowne of greene,
And put on ragged attire,
And to faire London she would go,
Her true love to enquire.
The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington (Child's Ballads, IV. 159).

2. To ask about (a thing or person); seek knowledge of by asking.

Of euery man he enqueryd the certente, Whiche of his men were ded and which were take.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2565.

Into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy. Mat. x. 11.

There mighty nations shall inquire their doom.
Pope, Windsor Forest, l. 381.

3†. To call; name.

Now Cantium, which Kent we comenly inquyre.
Spenser, F. Q., II. x. 12.

4†. To ask of; question.

She asked and enquered hym of many thinges, and he her taught all her askynge for the grete love that he hadde to hir. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 418.

To inquire out, to find or find out by question; gain knowledge of by inquiry or investigation: as, to inquire out the plans of an enemy.

Enquire her out, do'st hear, Fellow? And tell her her Nephew, Sir Wilfull Witwoud, is in the House.
Congreve, Way of the World, iii. 14.

=Syn. Ask, Inquire, Question, etc. See ask[1].

II. intrans. 1. To seek for knowledge or information; make inquisition or investigation; use means for discovering or learning something.

That is the path of righteousness,
Though after it but few enquires.
Thomas the Rhymer (Child's Ballads, I. 111).

The most Antichristian Councel, and the most tyrannous Inquisition that ever inquir'd.
Milton, Areopagitica, p. 12.

He who inquires has not found; he is in doubt where the truth lies. J. H. Newman, Gram. of Assent, p. 181.

2. To ask for information; seek knowledge of something by asking a question or questions: as, I will inquire about it.

Sir, it seems your nature is more constant than to inquire after state-news. Beau. and Fl., Philaster, i. 1.

[The principal prepositions used after inquire are of before the person or subject questioned; for, and sometimes after, before a thing the discovery or possession of which is desired; about, concerning, or after, and sometimes of, before a thing about which information is sought; and into before a subject for detailed investigation or examination. At is used before the place where or source whence information is sought, and by (in the Bible) before the person through whose agency inquiry is made.]

inquire†, n. [< inquire, v.] Inquiry; search; investigation.

At last from Tyre,
Fame answering the most strange inquire, . . .
Are letters brought. Shak., Pericles, iii., Prol., l. 22.

inquirendo (in-kwi-ren'dō), n. [< L. (de) inquirendo, (of) inquiring, abl. ger. of inquirere, inquire: see inquire.] In law, an authority given in general to some person or persons to inquire into something for the advantage of the crown or state.

inquirent† (in-kwīr'ent), a. [< L. inquiren(t-)s, ppr. of inquirere, inquire: see inquire.] Making inquiry; inquiring; seeking to know.

Delia's eye,
As in a garden, roves, of hues alone
Inquirent, curious. Shenstone, Economy, ii.

inquirer (in-kwīr'ėr), n. One who inquires, searches, or examines; a seeker; an investigator. Also enquirer.

Expert inquirers after truth;
Whose only care, might truth presume to speak,
Is not to find what they profess to seek.
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 192.

inquiring (in-kwīr'ing), p. a. Given to inquiry or investigation; searching; inquisitive: as, an inquiring mind or look. Also enquiring.

inquiringly (in-kwīr'ing-li), adv. In an inquiring manner; by way of inquiry. Also enquiringly.

inquirist† (in-kwīr'ist), n. [< inquire + -ist.] An inquirer.

But the inquirist keeping himself on the reserve as to employers, the girl refused to tell the day or to give him other particulars. Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, IV. 321.

inquiry (in-kwīr'i), n.; pl. inquiries (-iz). [Also enquiry; an extended form of inquire, enquire, n., perhaps suggested by query.] 1. Search for truth, information, or knowledge; examination into facts or principles: as, an inquiry into the truth of a report.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries. Locke.

Learning stimulated inquiry; inquiry created doubt.
Story, Misc. Writings, p. 431.

2. The act of inquiring; a seeking for information by asking questions; interrogation; inquisition.

He could no path nor tract of foot descry,
Ne by inquirie learne, nor ghesse by ayme.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. iv. 24.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate.
Acts x. 17.

3. A question; an interrogation; a query.

It is an inquiry of great wisdom, what kinds of wits and natures are most apt and proper for what sciences.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 257.

Inquiries none they made; the dreadful day
No pause of words admits, no dull delay.
Pope, Iliad, v. 631.

Court of inquiry. See court.—Writ of inquiry, a writ directing an inquest; more specifically, a process addressed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue in the action is laid, stating the former proceedings in the action, and commanding the sheriff that by the oath of twelve honest and lawful men of his county he diligently inquire what damages the plaintiff has sustained, and return the inquisition into court. This writ is necessary after an interlocutory judgment, the defendant having let the proceedings go by default, to ascertain the question of damages.=Syn. 1. Investigation, Scrutiny, etc. (see examination and inference), study.—3. Query, Interrogation. See question.

inquisible† (in-kwiz'i-bl), a. [Irreg. < L. inquirere, pp. inquisitus, inquire into (see inquire), + -ible.] Admitting of judicial inquiry. Sir M. Hale.

inquisite†, v. i. [< L. inquisitus, pp. of inquirere, inquire into: see inquire, v.] To make inquisition; inquire. Davies.

He inquisited with justice and decorum, and determined with as much lenity towards his enemies as ever prince did. Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 40.

inquisition (in-kwi-zish'on), n. [= F. inquisition = Pr. inquisicio = Sp. inquisición = Pg. inquisição = It. inquisizione, < L. inquisitio(n-), a seeking or searching for, a seeking for grounds of accusation, < inquirere, pp. inquisitus, seek for, inquire into: see inquire.] 1. The act of inquiring; close search or examination; investigation; inquiry.

The two principal senses of inquisition [are] the eye and the ear. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 8.

But what concerns it thee, when I begin
My everlasting kingdom? Why art thou Solicitous? What moves thy inquisition?
Milton, P. R., iii. 200.

But it is dangerous to institute an inquisition into the motives of individuals. Everett, Orations, I. 289.

2. In law: (a) Inquiry by a jury impaneled by the sheriff, a coroner, or a board of commissioners, to ascertain facts necessary for judicial or legal purposes other than the trial of an action. The term is used of a proceeding, or the verdict on a proceeding, taken by a magistrate or administrative officer and a jury to inquire into a matter of fact concerning any special case, as distinguished from the trial by jury in court of a contested issue between parties. (b) The document embodying the result of such inquiry.—3. [cap.] In the Rom. Cath. Ch., an ecclesiastical court, officially styled the Holy Office, for the suppression of heresy by the detection and punishment of heretics and by other means. Punishment of heretics, even by death, was practised from the fourth century onward, but the Inquisition proper arose in the twelfth century. It was developed in the thirteenth century by Pope Innocent III. and the synod of Toulouse, and extended to France, Spain, Italy, Germany, and other countries. The original inquisitors were the bishops in their own dioceses, with special assistants. On the formal organization of the Inquisition, it was placed in charge of the Dominican order, under a central governing body at Rome called the Congregation of the Holy Office. The Spanish Inquisition was reorganized and put under the control of the state at the end of the fifteenth century, and became especially noted for its severity and the number of its victims, who (as elsewhere) were burned or otherwise punished, according to sentence, by the secular authority. (See auto de fe.) The proceedings of the court were conducted with the utmost secrecy; and the confidential officers employed by it were called familiars. It was at its height in the sixteenth century, and its methods were extended into Portugal, the Netherlands, and the Spanish and Portuguese colonies. The influence of the Inquisition diminished in the eighteenth century. It was suppressed in France in 1772, in Portugal under John VI. (died 1826), and in Spain finally in 1834. The Congregation of the Holy Office still exists as a branch of the papal system, but its chief concern is now with heretical literature.—Inquisition of the dead, inquisition post mortem, in law, an inquest had to determine the devolution of property by escheat on the death of one leaving no heirs.=Syn. 1. Investigation, Scrutiny, etc. See examination.

inquisition† (in-kwi-zish′ọn), v. t. [< inquisition, n.] To subject to inquisition or inquiry; investigate. Milton.

inquisitional (in-kwi-zish′ọn-ạl), a. [< inquisition + -al.] 1. Pertaining to or characterized by inquisition; especially, marked by strict or harsh inquiry; inquisitorial.

It is thought irony, addressed to some hot bigots then in power, to shew them what dismal effects that inquisitional spirit with which they were possessed would have on literature in general, at a time when public liberty looked with a very sickly face!
Warburton, Ded. to the Freethinkers, an. 1738.

2. Of or pertaining to the Inquisition.

inquisitionary (in-kwi-zish′ọn-ạ-ri), a. [< inquisition + -ary.] Inquisitional. [Rare.]

inquisitive (in-kwiz′i-tiv), a. [< ME. enquesitif, < OF. inquisitif, F. inquisitif = Sp. inquisitivo, < L. as if inquisitivus,* < inquirere, pp. inquisitus, inquire into: see inquire.] 1. Addicted to inquiry or research; disposed to seek information; given to prying into matters; eagerly curious.

Whan these four hundred of the castell come to these sex score, Ewein white honde, that was more enquesitif, asked of whens thei were. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 292.

Sir, I am not inquisitive
Of secrecies without an invitation.
Ford, Broken Heart, ii. 3.

Errors . . . are incident oftentimes even to the best and most inquisitive of men.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 418.

2. Marked by inquiry; questioning; curious; hence, searching out; bringing to view.

That our desires of serving Christ be quick-spirited, active, and effective, inquisitive for opportunities.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 181.

That holds
Inquisitive attention while I read.
Cowper, Task, iv. 52.

A girl in a white-figured gown at work, . . . white window-curtains about her, and the inquisitive light streaming around her. Mag. of Art, VII. 163.

=Syn. Prying, etc. (see curious), inquiring.

inquisitively (in-kwiz′i-tiv-li), adv. In an inquisitive manner; with curiosity to obtain information; with scrutiny.

inquisitiveness (in-kwiz′i-tiv-nes), n. The character of being inquisitive; the disposition to inquire, ask questions, or investigate; curiosity to learn: as, the inquisitiveness of the human mind.

inquisitor (in-kwiz′i-tọr), n. [= F. inquisiteur = Sp. Pg. inquisidor = It. inquisitore, < L. inquisitor, a seeker, searcher, < inquirere, pp. inquisitus, inquire into: see inquire.] 1. One who inquires or investigates; particularly, one whose official duty it is to inquire and examine: as, the inquisitors of the Holy Office or Inquisition.

Whereas God hath appointed them ministers of holy things, they make themselves inquisitors of men's persons a great deal farther than need is.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 64.

He dismissed the impertinent inquisitors.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 263.

Where they looked for proof, it was in a way more becoming inquisitors than judges.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1690.

2†. An inquisitive or curious person. Feltham.—Grand Inquisitor, a director of a court of inquisition in certain countries, particularly in Portugal and Spain.

inquisitor-general (in-kwiz′i-tọr-jen′ę-rạl), n. The head of the court of inquisition in several European countries, as Spain, the Netherlands, etc. The most noted in history were Torquemada (appointed in 1483) and his successors in the Spanish Inquisition.

inquisitorial (in-kwiz-i-tō′ri-ạl), a. [= F. inquisitorial = Sp. inquisitorial; as inquisitor + -ial.] Pertaining to inquisition; specifically, pertaining to the Inquisition, or resembling its practices; making strict or searching inquiry.

For a while the latter [Marsh] was unobservant of the inquisitorial survey with which he was regarded.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 138.

The bishops themselves could and did exercise stringent inquisitorial powers. Catholic Dict.

The council of five [at Carthage] had criminal jurisdiction and inquisitorial power. J. Adams, Works, IV. 471.

inquisitorially (in-kwiz-i-tō′ri-ạl-i), adv. In an inquisitorial manner.

inquisitorious† (in-kwiz-i-tō′ri-us), a. [< ML. inquisitorius,* < L. inquisitor, an inquisitor: see inquisitor.] Making strict inquiry; inquisitorial.

Under whose inquisitorious and tyrannical duncery no free and splendid wit can ever flourish.
Milton, Church-Government, ii.

inquisitress (in-kwiz′i-tres), n. [< inquisitor + -ess.] A female inquisitor; an inquisitive or curious woman.

Little Jesuit inquisitress as she was, she could see things in a true light. Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xxvi.

inquisiturient† (in-kwiz-i-tū′ri-ẹnt), a. [< L. as if inquisiturien(t-)s,* ppr. of inquisiturire,* desire to inquire, a desiderative verb, < inquirere, pp. inquisitus, inquire: see inquire.] Given to inquisition, or making strict inquiry; inquisitorial.

This was the rare morsell so officiously snatcht up and so ilfavourdly imitated by our inquisiturient Bishops.
Milton, Areopagitica, p. 13.

inraced (in-rāst′), a. [< in-[2] + race = rase.] In her., same as indented, 3.

inracinate (in-ras′i-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inracinated, ppr. inracinating. [< F. inraciner, enroot (< L. in, in, + racine, a root), + -ate[2]. Cf. deracinate.] To root; implant. Imp. Dict.

inragе†, v. t. An obsolete form of enrage.

inrail† (in-rāl′), v. t. [< in-[1] + rail[1].] Same as enrail.

It plainly appeareth that in things indifferent, what the whole Church doth think convenient for the whole, the same if any part do wilfully violate, it may be reformed and inrailed again by that general authority whereunto each particular is subject. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iv. 13.

inrapture†, v. t. An obsolete form of enrapture.

in re (in rē). [L.: in, in; re, abl. of res, a thing: see res.] In the matter of: used especially in legal phraseology.

inred†, a. [ME. inred, inread; < in-[1] (intensive) + red.] Very red.

He was nowthir whyit no blake,
And [an] inred man he was.
Seven Sages, l. 60.

inregister†, v. t. An obsolete form of enregister.

in rem (in rem). [L.: in, in, to; rem, acc. of res, a thing: see res.] In relation to a thing: as, an action in rem: opposed to in personam. See action, 8 (b).

in rerum natura (in rē′rum nā-tū′rạ). [L.: in, in; rerum, gen. pl. of res, a thing; naturā, abl. of natura, nature.] In the nature of things; from the very constitution of things.

I. N. R. I. An abbreviation of Latin Iesus Nazarenus, Rex Iudæorum (Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews): an ecclesiastical inscription in designation of Christ in the Christian church, taken from the writing placed by Pilate over Christ's cross (John xix. 19).

inricht, v. t. An obsolete form of enrich.

iringt, v. t. An obsolete form of enring.

inrise†, v. i. [ME. inrisen (tr. L. insurgere); < in-[1] + rise[1].] To rise up. Wyclif.

inriser†, n. [ME. inrisere (tr. L. insurgen(t-)s); < inrise + -er[1].] One who rises up. Wyclif.

inro (in′rō), n. [Jap., < Chin. yin, a seal or stamp, + lūng, a basket. Chin. l becomes Jap. r, and Chin. -ang, -ing, -ung, and -ūng usually become Jap. -ō.] A small ornamental nest of boxes of lacquer-ware, ivory, etc., carried by Japanese at the girdle, and used to hold the seal (hence the name), medicines, perfumes, or the like. The boxes fit upon one another in such a way as to form a single flattened cylinder with almost invisible lines of division, and are held together by a silk cord which passes through tubular holes at the sides, and to which is fastened the netsuke or "bob" by which the inro is suspended from the girdle.

inroad (in′rōd), n. [< in[1] + road.] 1. A predatory or hostile incursion; a raid by public enemies; a temporary or desultory invasion.

Neither wer there any more inrodes now by land as they were wont to be from Corinth side by the way of Megara along into their territories.
Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 785.

In the 1st century B. C. the great Scythian inroad expelled the Macedonians from Bactria.
Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, II. 326.

2. Forcible entrance; powerful or sudden influx or incursion; forcible or insidious encroachment.

The luminous inferior orbs, inclosed
From Chaos, and the inroad of Darkness old.
Milton, P. L., iii. 421.

A fierce banditti, . . .
That with a black, infernal train,
Make cruel inroads in my brain.
Cowper, To Robert Lloyd.

All Englishmen who valued liberty and law saw with uneasiness the deep inroad which the prerogative had made into the province of the legislature.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., ii.

inroad (in′rōd), v. [< inroad, n.] I.† trans. To make an inroad into; invade.

The Saracens . . . conquered Spain, inroaded Aquitain.
Fuller.

II. intrans. To make an inroad; encroach; depredate. [Rare.]

A growing liberalization is inroading upon the old doctrine of future everlasting punishment.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 269.

inroader (in′rō-dėr), n. [< inroad + -er[1].] An invader. [Rare.]

The Danes never acquired in this land a long and peaceable possession thereof, living here rather as inroaders than inhabitants. Fuller, Worthies, xxiv.

inrollt, inrolt, v. t. Obsolete forms of enroll.

inrolled (in′rōld), a. [< in[1] + rolled.] In bot., rolled in, as the apex or margin of a leaf.

Fertile specimens [of Hypnea musciformis] from the West Indies are more robust and do not so frequently have inrolled apices. Farlow, Marine Algæ, p. 157.

inrollert, inrolmentt. Obsolete forms of enroller, enrolment.

inruption (in-rup′shọn), n. [A 'restored' form of irruption.] A breaking in; irruption. [Rare.]

The true mouth [in the development of an aurelia] then forms by inruption at the opposite pole.
Encyc. Brit., XII. 557.

inrush (in′rush), n. [< in[1] + rush, n.] A rushing in; a sudden invasion or incursion; an irruption.

Mordecai was so possessed by the new inrush of belief that he had forgotten the absence of any other condition to the fulfilment of his hopes.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxxviii.

inrusht (in-rush′), v. i. [< in[1] + rush, v.] To rush in.

The sea . . . inrusheth upon a little region called Keimes. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 654.

in sæcula sæculorum (in sek′ū-lạ̈ sek-ū-lō′-rum). [L.: in, in, unto; sæcula, acc. pl., sæculorum, gen. pl., of sæculum, an age: see secular.] To ages of ages; to all eternity: a phrase occurring in a common Latin form of doxology.

insafety† (in-sāf′ti), n. [< in-[3] + safety.] Lack of safety. Naunton.

insalivate (in-sal′i-vāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. insalivated, ppr. insalivating. [< in-[2] + salivate.] To salivate, or mix with the saliva, as food.

Meal, if fed alone, especially to young calves, should be spread thinly on the bottom of troughs, so that it will be eaten slowly, and be insalivated. Science, IV. 576.

insalivation (in-sal-i-vā′shọn), n. [< in-[2] + salivation.] In physiol., the mixing of the saliva with the food in the act of eating.

insalubrious (in-sạ-lū′bri-us), a. [< in-[3] + salubrious.] Not salubrious; unfavorable to health; unwholesome: as, insalubrious air.

I was perswaded not to venture over land by reason of the insalubrious season, the dog-star then raging.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 234.

=Syn. See healthy.

insalubrity (in-sạ-lū′bri-ti), n. [< in-[3] + salubrity.] Lack of salubrity; unhealthfulness; unwholesomeness.

Where the soil was rich it was generally marshy, and its insalubrity repelled the cultivators whom its fertility attracted. Macaulay, Frederic the Great.

insalutary (in-sal′ū-tạ-ri), a. [= OF. insalutaire, < LL. insalutaris, not salutary, < L. in- priv. + salutaris, salutary: see salutary.] 1. Not salutary; not favorable to health or soundness; unwholesome.

So insalutary are the conditions of the environment of the poor in the cities that only by fitting themselves to unfavorable conditions is life worth living.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXV. 487.

2. Not safe; not tending to safety; productive of evil.

insalveable (in-sal′vạ-bl), a. [< in-[3] + salveable.] That cannot be salved or healed; irremediable. [Rare.]

A disgrace insalveable. Middleton, Family of Love, iv. 4.

in-samet, adv. [ME., < in[1] + same.] Together; in one place.

Women that be of yuell name,
Be ȝe not to-gedere in-same.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 48.

insanability (in-san-ạ-bil′ị-ti), n. [= Pg. insanabilidade; as insanable + -ity: see -bility.] The state of being insanable or incurable.

insanable (in-san′ạ-bl), a. [= OF. insanable = Sp. insanable = Pg. insanavel = It. insanabile, < L. insanabilis, incurable, < in- priv. + sanabilis, curable: see sanable.] Not sanable; incapable of being cured or healed; incurable. For the legal sense, see insanity.

insanableness (in-san′ạ-bl-nes), n. Insanability.

insanably (in-san′ạ-bli), adv. So as to be incurable.

insane (in-sān′), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. insano, < L. insanus, unsound in mind, insane, < in- priv. + sanus, sound, sane: see sane.] 1. Not sane; unsound or deranged in mind; crazy.

Soon after Dryden's death she [Lady Elizabeth] became insane, and was confined under the care of a female attendant. Malone, Dryden.

2. Characteristic of a person mentally deranged; hence, wild; insensate; senseless.

The crowd, that if they find
Some stain or blemish in a name of note, . . .
Inflate themselves with some insane delight.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

3. [Attrib. use of insane used as a noun in the pl.] Devoted to the use or care of the insane: as, an insane asylum.—4†. Making insane; causing insanity.

Or have we eaten on the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner?
Shak., Macbeth, i. 3.

=Syn. 1. Crazed, lunatic, demented, maniacal.

insanely (in-sān'li), adv. In an insane manner; madly; without reason.

insaneness (in-sān'nes), n. Insanity.

insaniate† (in-sā'ni-āt), v. t. [Irreg. < L. insanire, be insane, < insanus, insane: see insane.] To make unsound, distempered, or insane.

Does not the distemper of the body insaniate the soul? Feltham, Resolves, i. 64.

insanie† (in-sā'ni), n. [< OF. insanie = Sp. Pg. It. insania, < L. insania, unsoundness of mind, insanity, < insanus, insane: see insane.] Insanity; madness; insane folly.

He clepeth a calf, cauf; . . . This is abhominable (which he would call abominable); it insinuateth me of insanie. Shak., L. L. L., v. 1.

In the days of sixth Henry, Jack Cade made a brag,
With a multitude of people; but in the consequence,
After a little insanie they fled tag and rag,
For Alexander Iden he did his diligence.
Wilfred Holme, Fall and Evil Successe of Rebellion.

insanify (in-san'i-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. insanified, ppr. insanifying. [< insane + -i-fy.] To make insane; madden. [Rare.]

There may be at present some very respectable men at the head of these maniacs, who would insanify them with some degree of prudence, and keep them only half mad if they could. Sydney Smith.

insanitary (in-san'i-tā-ri), a. [< in-[3] + sanitary.] Not sanitary; not salubrious; violating sanitary rules or requirements.

Misery, insanitary dwellings, and want of food account for this high mortality. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 81.

Mr. Punch draws attention to the insanitary state of London slums. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XL. 64.

insanitation (in-san-i-tā'shon), n. An insanitary condition; lack of proper sanitary arrangements. [Rare.]

Insanitation, he said, did not cause the disease [cholera]. The American, IX. 25.

insanity (in-san'i-ti), n. [= F. insanité, < L. insanita(t-)s, unsoundness of mind, insanity, < insanus, insane: see insane.] A seriously impaired condition of the mental functions, involving the intellect, emotions, or will, or one or more of these faculties, exclusive of temporary states produced by and accompanying acute intoxications or acute febrile diseases. From the denotation of the word are also usually excluded mental defects resulting from arrested development and idiocy, and such conditions as simple trance, ecstasy, and catalepsy, and often senile dementia. The forms of mental disease are very varied, and no classification is universally accepted. The following is that of Krafft-Ebing (1888): A. Mental disease in the developed brain. (a) Functional psychoses, or mental diseases without recognizable anatomical lesion. (1) Psychoneuroses, mental diseases developed in brains not congenitally weak, nor impaired by early disease, such as meningitis and other cerebral diseases, including melancholia, mania, mania hallucinatoria, acute dementia. (2) Psychical degenerations, diseased states developing in brains weak from birth or from early disease, including reasoning mania, paranœa, periodical insanity, and insanities consequent on certain neurotic conditions, as neurasthenia, hypochondria, hysteria, or epilepsy. (b) Mental diseases with recognized anatomical lesions, including delirium acutum, dementia paralytica, senile dementia, cerebral syphilis. To these may be added, as constituting, however, a link between a and b, mental derangement forming part of chronic alcoholism and morphinism. B. Mental defect from arrested development, or idiocy. Insanity develops at all ages, but most frequently in women between twenty-five and thirty-five, and in men between thirty-five and fifty. The age of puberty, the menopause, and old age are times of peculiar liability to mental disease. Among the factors of insanity may be mentioned congenital predisposition; the nervous strain of modern life; lack of rest and amusement, and consequent indulgence in stimulants of various kinds; poor food; severe illness; failure of organs other than the brain, resulting in prolonged cerebral anemia and toxemia; poisons, such as alcohol, opium, ergot, chloral, absinthe, lead, and mercury; sexual excesses; child-bearing and lactation; injuries to the head; auto-intoxication; and severe and depressing emotions. Ordinarily several of these factors combine to produce the derangement. The percentage of cures varies in different hospitals from 20 to 60, depending largely on the classes of cases which predominate.

All power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity. Johnson, Rasselas, xliii.

The frenzy of the brain may be redress'd,
By med'cine well applied; but, without grace,
The heart's insanity admits no cure.
Cowper, Task, vi. 523.

Insanity is an expression only of functional and organic disorder; remove the disorder upon which the insanity depends, and the return to mental soundness is secured. Alien. and Neurol., VI. 543.

In its legal use, insanity consists in the lack of such mental soundness as renders a person criminally responsible, or capable of making a valid contract, conveyance, or will, or of managing his own affairs. There is great difference of opinion as to what extent of disease or imperfect development, and what, if any, aberrations of mind not traceable to disease or imperfection of the brain, should be regarded as constituting this degree of mental unsoundness. The tendency of legal opinion has long been to enlarge the scope of the word, and extend the rules as to insanity to derangements not recognized in earlier times, when insane was used as the equivalent of mad or lunatic, and insanity generally implied furor or mania, or, at least, obvious forms of total defect of responsible understanding. What constitutes legal insanity—that is, exonerative or incapacitating insanity—in doubtful cases is now universally regarded as depending upon the relation between the defect in the particular mind and the nature of the act in question. Thus, insanity, as a defense in criminal law, means, according to the rule in England and in many of the United States, incapacity to distinguish between right and wrong, in respect to the act in question, or incapacity to be conscious of acting contrary to law; while by some authorities inability to control the will (irresistible morbid impulse) also is recognized as insanity. Insanity in reference to the law of contracts is generally understood to mean such a defect as incapacitates from a rational assent, considering the nature of the contract, whether marriage, partnership, sale, etc. Insanity (or, as more commonly expressed, unsoundness of mind) in reference to the law of wills is generally understood to mean such a defect as incapacitates from knowing or collecting in mind the facts respecting the property to be disposed of and the persons naturally and justly to be considered in its disposal, or from making an intelligent and rational choice as to its disposal. It has often been defined too narrowly, as consisting only in delusion. It is a disputed question whether the existence of disease or defect in the brain itself is an essential fact. Some of those who hold that one or the other always characterizes insanity are understood to assert that the disease or defect may be inferred from the irrationality of conduct, without other independently adequate evidence.

That insane persons accused of crimes sometimes feign insanity has long been recognized, and the examiner must remember that the discovery of deceit on the part of a suspected feigner is not proof of sanity. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, IV. 88.

Affective insanity, moral insanity.—Circular insanity. See circular.—Communicated insanity, insane delusions communicated by an insane person to a person predisposed to insanity, who thereby becomes insane.—Emotional insanity, derangement of the emotional powers, or inability to control one's impulses.—Homicidal insanity, an irresistible desire to kill.—Impulsive insanity, instinctive monomania.—Insanity of action, moral insanity.—Insanity of adolescence, hebephrenia.—Insanity of doubt. See the extract.

The peculiar borderland of insanity known as the insanity of doubt. The patient has a morbid impulse to do things over and over again, for fear they are not done exactly right. Science, X. 53.

Insanity of grandeur, megalomania.—Insanity of persecution, insanity in which delusions of being persecuted are prominent features.—Insanity of puberty, hebephrenia.—Katatonic insanity, katatonia.—Manic-depressive insanity, circular insanity.—Moral insanity, irresistible inclination to perverse and illegal action.

What is most difficult to deal with in the way of legal responsibility is the state termed moral insanity, where the subject is not beyond being influenced by motives of prospective pain or pleasure, but has contracted such a furious impulse towards some one crime that the greatest array of motives that can be brought to bear is not sufficient. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 490.

Partial insanity, monomania.—Pellagrous insanity, insanity appearing as a feature of pellagra.—Periodical insanity, a form of mental degeneration in which similar periods of mania or melancholic condition recur at regular intervals. Between such attacks the nervous system shows more or less extensive departure from a normal condition. It includes circular insanity.—Primary delusional insanity, a primary derangement characterized by somewhat fixed, systematized, and limited delusions. There is little or no mental enfeeblement at first.—Primary insanity, paranœa.—Secondary delusional insanity, a form of insanity characterized by the presence of delusions with mental enfeeblement, and developed out of various other forms of derangement, such as mania or melancholia. It either constitutes the final term in the mental decline, or is succeeded by terminal dementia.—Suicidal insanity, a form of instinctive monomania characterized by an intense desire to commit suicide. =Syn. Insanity, Lunacy, Derangement, Craziness, Madness, Mania, Frenzy, Delirium. Insanity is the scientific and colorless word for marked disturbance of the mental functions as above described. Its various forms are enumerated in the classification given, and will be found defined under those names. Lunacy, aside from its derivation, suggests a condition of some permanence, and is in literary and legal use. Derangement is a softened form of expression for insanity. Craziness expresses the same thing as insanity, but with a suggestion of contempt and an implication of peculiar and absurd behavior. It seems to imply a certain amount of incoherence and dementia. Madness, as far as it goes beyond the generic meaning of insanity, suggests violence in act or expression; so too, and to a greater degree, do mania (especially in its popular use) and frenzy. Delirium indicates a lack of attention to surrounding things and the presence of accredited illusions and hallucinations, with more or less extensive delusions. It is applied especially to temporary states, as in fevers. Most or all of these words may be used by hyperbole to denote foolish or peculiar actions not indicative of insanity.

Blasting the long quiet of my breast
With animal heat and dire insanity?
Tennyson, Lucretius.

I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 49.

The wretch who neglects or maltreats the unfortunate subject of mental derangement intrusted to his care, if not himself insane and irresponsible, should be regarded with universal contempt.
Chambers, Library of Universal Knowledge, VIII. 41.

There is no crasinesse we feel, that is not a record of God's having been offended by our nature.
Bp. Mountagu, Devoute Essays, II. x. 2.

Madness in great ones must not unwatched go.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 1. 197.

It is perfectly certain that the brain of a man suffering from melancholia differs altogether from that of one in acute mania. Quain, Dict. of Med., p. 715.

Demoniac phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness. Milton, P. L., xi. 485.

Delirium this is call'd which is mere dotage,
Sprung from ambition first.
Ford, Lover's Melancholy, iii. 3.

insapory† (in-sap'ō-ri), a. [< L. in- priv. + sapor, taste (< sapere, taste, know), + -y[1].] Tasteless; wanting flavor; insipid.

However ingrate or insapory it seems at first, it becomes grate and delicious enough by custom.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa, p. 311.

insatiability (in-sā-shia-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. insatiabilité = Sp. insaciabilidad = Pg. insaciabilidade = It. insaziabilità, < LL. insatiabilita(t-)s, < L. insatiabilis, insatiable: see insatiable.] The state of being insatiable; unappeasable desire or craving; insatiableness.

He [Mr. Sverdrup] is believed to recognize the folly of Radical insatiability, and the mischief that would result were Norway to insist on measures which Sweden thinks it impossible to accept. Nineteenth Century, XXIII. 61.

insatiable (in-sā'shia-bl), a. [= F. insatiable = Sp. insaciable = Pg. insaciavel = It. insaziabile, < L. insatiabilis, that cannot be satisfied, < in- priv. + satiabilis*, that can be satisfied: see satiable.] Not satiable; incapable of being satisfied or appeased; inordinately greedy: as, insatiable desire; insatiable thirst.

She was a rhymer at the age of ten. . . . Apparently, too, she had a mind of that fine northern type which hungers after learning for its own sake, and to which the study of books or nature is an instinctive and insatiable desire.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 116.

The populace are instinctive, free-born, insatiable beggars. Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 57.

=Syn. Unappeasable, unquenchable, voracious.

insatiableness (in-sā'shia-bl-nes), n. Insatiability; unappeasable craving or greed.

As the eye in its owne nature is covetous, in that it is not satisfied with seeing (Eccl. i. 8), so the eye of the covetous hath a more particular insatiablenesse.
Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

insatiably (in-sā'shia-bli), adv. In an insatiable manner; so as to be insatiable.

We lounged about the gentle close, and gazed insatiably at that most soul-soothing sight, the waning, wasting afternoon light. H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 44.

insatiate (in-sā'shiāt), a. [< LL. insatiatus, unsatisfied, < L. in- priv. + satiatus, pp., satisfied: see satiate.] Not to be satisfied or sated; insatiable: as, insatiate greed.

The insaciate couetous men are neuer content, nor wyll open their affection, but locke vp theyr treasures.
Golden Book, xvii.

Hate
Bred in woman is insatiate.
Lust's Dominion, ii. 3.

Insatiate archer! could not one suffice?
Thy shaft flew thrice: and thrice my peace was slain.
Young, Night Thoughts, i. 212.

insatiately (in-sā'shiāt-li), adv. In an insatiate manner; so as not to be satisfied.

But youth had not us therewith to suffice;
For we on that insatiately did feed
Which our confusion afterwards did breed.
Drayton, Pierce Gaveston.

He [Mahomet] was so insatiately libidinous that he is not ashamed to countenance his incontinency by a law.
Sir T. Herbert, Travels in Africa, p. 321.

insatiateness (in-sā'shiāt-nes), n. The state or quality of being insatiate or insatiable.
Bailey, 1727.

insatiety† (in-sā-tī'e-ti), n. [= OF. insatiete, < L. insatieta(t-)s, < in- priv. + satieta(t-)s, satiety: see satiety.] Absence of satiety; unsatisfied desire or demand.

A confirmation of this insatiety, and consequently unprofitableness by a cause thereof: "when goods increase, they are increased that eat them."
Granger, On Ecclesiastes (1621), p. 123.

insatisfaction (in-sat-is-fak′shon), n. [< in-[3] + satisfaction.] Lack of satisfaction; dissatisfaction. [Rare.]

In all natures you breed a farther expectation than can hold out, and so an insatisfaction in the end.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 296.

Nor will it acquit the insatisfaction of those which quarrel with all things. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 5.

insaturable† (in-sat′ūr-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + saturable.] Incapable of being saturated or glutted; insatiable.

Enemies . . . whose hatred is insaturable. Tooker.

insciencet (in′siens), n. [= OF. insience = Pg. insciencia, < L. inscientia, ignorance, < inscien(t-)s, ignorant: see insciens[2].] Ignorance; want of knowledge or skill; nescience.

insciens[1] (in′sient), a. [< L. in, in, + scien(t-)s, ppr. of scire, know.] Endowed with insight or discernment. [Rare.]

Gaze on, with insciens vision, toward the sun.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, ix.

insciens[2]† (in′sient), a. [= OF. and F. insciens = Pg. It. inscient, < L. inscien(t-)s, not knowing, ignorant, < in- priv. + scien(t-)s, knowing, ppr. of scire, know: see science.] Not knowing; ignorant; unskilful. Coles, 1717.

insconcet, v. t. An obsolete form of ensconce.

inscribable (in-skrī′ba-bl), a. [< inscribe + -able.] Capable of being inscribed.

inscribableness (in-skrī′ba-bl-nes), n. The quality of being inscribable.

inscribe (in-skrīb′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inscribed, ppr. inscribing. [= F. inscrire = Pr. inscrire = Sp. inscribir = Pg. inscrever = It. inscrivere, iscrivere, < L. inscribere, write in or upon, < in, in, + scribere, write: see scribe.] 1. To write or engrave; mark, as letters or signs, by writing or engraving; specifically, to display in writing on something durable or conspicuous: as, to inscribe a name on a roll, tablet, or monument.

In all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, "Ego et Rex meus"
Was still inscrib'd. Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 2, 315.

And 'midst the stars inscribed Belinda's name.
Pope, R. of the L., v. 150.

2. To write or engrave the name of, as on a list or tablet; enroll in writing: as, to be inscribed among the councilors.

Am I inscribed his heir for certain?
B. Jonson, Volpone, i. 1.

3. To mark with characters or words.

Oh let thy once-loved friend inscribe thy stone,
And with a father's sorrows mix his own.
Pope, Epitaph on Harcourt.

The finest collections of inscribed Greek marbles are of course at Athens. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 124.

4. To dedicate or commend (a book or other writing) by a short address less formal than a dedication.

One ode, which pleased me in the reading, . . . is inscribed to the present Earl of Rochester. Dryden.

5. To imprint deeply; impress: as, to inscribe something on the memory.—6. In geom., to draw or delineate in or within, as chords or angles within a circle, or as a rectilinear figure within a curvilinear one. A figure having angular points or vertices (as a polygon or polyhedron) is said to be inscribed in a figure having lines, curves, or surfaces, when every vertex of the former is incident upon the latter; a curved figure is said to be inscribed in a polygon or polyhedron when every side (in the former case) or every face (in the latter) is tangent to it.—Inscribed hyperbola. See hyperbola.

inscribed (in-skrībd′), p. a. In entom., having conspicuous, more or less angulated, colored lines or marks, somewhat resembling written letters.

inscriber (in-skrī′bėr), n. One who inscribes.

Diagrams . . . which Kircher has passed by unnoticed, as though making no part of the inscriber's intention.
Pownall, Study of Antiquities, p. 48.

inscriptible (in-skrip′ti-bl), a. [= F. inscriptible = It. inscrittibile; < L. inscriptus, pp. of inscribere, inscribe, + -ible.] Capable of being inscribed or drawn in or within anything: specifically applied in geometry to certain plane figures and solids capable of being inscribed in other figures or solids.—Inscriptible quadrilateral, a quadrilateral four of whose vertices lie on the circumference of a circle. ★ inscription (in-skrip′shon), n. [= F. inscription = Pr. escriptio = Sp. inscripción = Pg. inscripção = It. inscrizione, iscrizione, < L. inscription(n-), a writing upon, inscription, title, < inscribere, pp. inscriptus, write upon: see inscribe.] 1. The act of inscribing, in any sense of that word.—2. Inscribed symbols, letters, or words; specifically, a descriptive, explanatory, or illustrative memorandum, as a name, title, motto, panegyric, etc., written, engraved, or stamped, as on a monument, a medal, etc.: as, an inscription on a tombstone, on a gem, a book, or a picture; the inscriptions on the obverse and reverse of a coin or a medal.

Upon the highest Mountain amongst the Alps She left this ostentous Inscription, upon a great Marble Pillar.
Howell, Letters, I. v. 29.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore.
Pope, Epistle to Addison, l. 36.

Monna Giovanna, his beloved bride, . . .
Enthroned once more in the old rustic chair,
High-perched upon the back of which there stood
The image of a falcon carved in wood,
And underneath the inscription, with a date,
"All things come round to him who will but wait."
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Student's Tale.

Specifically—3. In archæol., a historical, religious, or other record cut, impressed, painted, or written on stone, brick, metal, or other hard surface: as, the inscription on the Rosetta or the Moabite stone; the cuneiform inscriptions on rocks or brick cylinders; the inscriptions on the Egyptian temples or in the Roman catacombs; the inscriptions on Greek vases, votive tablets of terra-cotta, etc. It is to such inscriptions that our knowledge of Egyptian, Assyrian, and some other ancient languages and institutions is chiefly due; and study of the mass of such records left by the Greeks and Romans has corrected and completed an understanding of the history and civilization of these peoples, and contributed greatly to what we know of their language, their laws, their methods of thought, their traditions, and their public and private institutions and industries of all kinds.

Roman Inscriptions (by which general name are designated, in classical archæology, all non-literary remains of the Latin language, with the exception of coins, letters, and journals) fall into two distinct classes, viz. (1) those which were written upon other objects of various kinds, to denote their peculiar purpose, and in this way have been preserved along with them; and (2) those which themselves are the objects, written, to be durable, as a rule, on metal or stone. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 124.

4. A form of complimentary presentation or offering of a book or work of art, less elaborate than a dedication.—5. In early church music, a sign or motto, or both combined, placed at the beginning of a canon written in an enigmatical manner, to show how it was to be resolved. The inscription was often designedly more puzzling than the canon itself.—6. In the civil law, a consent by an accuser that, if the accusation be false, he will submit to the same punishment which would have been inflicted upon the accused had he been guilty.—7. Entry on the calendar, as of a cause in court.—Ancyrene inscription. See Ancyrene.

inscriptional (in-skrip′shon-al), a. [< inscription + -al.] Of or pertaining to an inscription; having the character of an inscription.

Inscriptional hexameters.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 510.

inscriptive (in-skrip′tiv), a. [< L. inscriptus, pp. of inscribere, inscribe, + -ive.] Of the character of an inscription; inscribed.

When the bells of Rylstone played Their Sabbath music — "God us ayde!"
That was the sound they seemed to speak;
Inscriptive legend which I ween
May on those holy bells be seen.
Wordsworth, White Doe of Rylstone, vii.

inscroll (in-skrōl′), v. t. [< in-[2] + scroll.] To write on a scroll. [Rare.]

Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscroll'd.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 7, 72.

inscrutability (in-skrö-ta-bil′i-ti), n. [< inscrutable: see -bility.] The character of being inscrutable or not subject to scrutiny.

So let all our speculations, when they are admitted to the most familiaritie with these mysteries, be still afraid to inquire directly what they are, remembering that they are God's own inscrutabilitie.
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, II. i. § 3.

inscrutable (in-skrö′ta-bl), a. [= F. inscrutable = Sp. inscrutable = Pg. inscrutavel = It. iscrutabile, inscrutabile, < LL. inscrutabilis, inscrutable, < L. in- priv. + scrutabilis*, scrutable: see scrutable.] Incapable of being searched into or scrutinized; impenetrable to inquiry or investigation; incognizable: as, the ways of Providence are often inscrutable.

The historian undertook to make us intimately acquainted with a man singularly dark and inscrutable.
Macaulay, History.

Every mind is thus inscrutable to every other mind.
Jevons, Pol. Econ., p. 15.

=Syn. Impenetrable, undiscoverable, incomprehensible, unsearchable, mysterious.

inscrutableness (in-skrö′ta-bl-nes), n. The character of being inscrutable; inscrutability.

inscrutably (in-skrö′ta-bli), adv. In an inscrutable manner; so as not to be discovered or explained; mysteriously.

But there are cases in which it is inscrutably revealed to persons that they have made a mistake in what is of the highest concern to them.
Hawthorne, Septimius Felton, p. 58.

insculp† (in-skulp′), v. t. [= OF. insculper = Sp. Pg. insculpir = It. insculpere, < L. insculpere, cut or carve in or upon, engrave, < in, in, + sculpere, cut, engrave: see sculp, sculpture.] To engrave; carve.

Engraven more lyvely in his minde than any forme may be insculped upon metall or marble.
Palace of Pleasure, II. 8 4. (Nares.)

And what's the crown of all, a glorious name
Insculp'd on pyramids to posterity.
Massinger, Bashful Lover, iv. 1.

insculpsit (in-skulp′sit). [L., 3d pers. perf. ind. of insculpere, carve in, engrave: see insculp.] He engraved (it): a word appended to an engraving, with the engraver's name or initials prefixed.

insculpt (in-skulpt′), a. [< L. insculptus, pp. of insculpere, cut or carve in: see insculp.] In bot., embedded in the rock: said of some saxicolous lichens.

insculption† (in-skulp′shon), n. [< LL. insculptio(n-), a cutting or carving, < L. insculpere, cut or carve in: see insculp.] The act of engraving, or that which is engraved; carved inscription.

What is it to have
A flattering, false insculption on a tomb,
And in men's hearts reproach?
Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy, i.

insculpture (in-skulp′tūr), n. [= OF. insculpture = Pg. insculptura; as insculp + -ture, after sculpture.] Sculpture; an engraved inscription.

My noble general, Timon is dead;
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea;
And on his grave-stone this insculpture.
Shak., T. of A., v. 4, 67.

insculpture (in-skulp′tūr), v. t. Same as ensculpture. Glover, Athenaid, viii.

in se (in sē). [L.: in, in; se, refl. pron., sing. and pl., abl., itself.] In itself; in themselves.

insea† (in-sē′), v. t. [< in-[1] + sea.] To engulf in the sea.

Horse and foot insea'd together there.
Chapman, Iliad, xi. 637.

inseal (in-sēl′), v. t. Same as enseal.

inseam†, v. t. See enseam[1].

insearch† (in-sėrch′), v. Same as ensearch.

insecable† (in-sek′a-bl), a. [= F. insécable = Sp. insecable = Pg. insecavel = It. insecabile, < L. insecabilis, that cannot be cut up, < in- priv. + (LL.) secabilis, that can be cut, < secare, cut: see section.] Incapable of being divided by a cutting instrument; indivisible. Bailey. ★ insect (in′sekt), n. and a. [= D. G. Dan. Sw. insekt = F. insecte = Sp. Pg. insecto = It. insetto, < L. insectum, an insect (cf. Gr. ἔντομον, insect, of same lit. sense), prop. neut. of insectus, pp. of insecare, < in, in, + secare, cut: see section. The name was orig. applied to those insects whose bodies seem to be cut in or almost divided in segments. See Entoma.] I. n. 1. A small, usually winged and many-legged, invertebrate creature whose body appears to consist of several segments: a term used in popular speech without exactitude, being applied not only to flies, fleas, dragon-flies, butterflies, moths, bees, wasps, crickets, grasshoppers, roaches, beetles, bugs, lice, and other familiar creatures properly called insects, but also, improperly, to other small creatures whose structure and relations are not popularly understood, as the so-called coral insect, which is an actinozoan.

So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun.
Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 27.

May insects prick
Each leaf into a gall. Tennyson, Talking Oak.

2. In zoöl., any member of the class or other division of animals called Insecta; an arthropod; a condylopod; an articulated animal with articulated legs, especially one with six such legs; a hexapod. See Insecta and Hexapoda, 1.—Compound eyes of insects. See eye[1].—Coral insect, deciduous insects, etc. See the adjectives.—To expand an insect. See expand.

II. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of an insect or insects: as, insect transformations; insect architecture.

The insect youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honied Spring.
Gray, Spring.

2. Like an insect in any respect; small; mean; contemptible.

INJURIOUS INSECTS

Insecta (in-sek'tă), n. pl. [L., pl. of insectum, insect: see insect.] A class or other large division of invertebrated animals, to which different limits have been assigned. (a) With Linnæus, a class divided into eight orders: Coleoptera, Hemiptera, Lepidoptera, Neuroptera, Hymenoptera, Diptera, and Aptera. But the last of these orders included crustaceans and arachnidans, so that in this sense Insecta corresponds to the Cuvierian Articulata, the Latreillean Condylopoda, or the modern Arthropoda, one of the main branches of the animal kingdom. (b) With Latreille, by exclusion of Crustacea and Arachnida (but with retention of Myriapoda), the third class of articulated animals with articulated legs, divided into twelve orders: Myriapoda, Thysanura, Parasita, Suctoria, Coleoptera, Orthoptera, Hemiptera, Neuroptera, Hymenoptera, Lepidoptera, Rhipiptera, and Diptera. (c) By exclusion of Myriapoda, the six-footed articulated animals; hexapod arthropods, or Hexapoda. In this, the current use of the word, the Insecta constitute the largest class of the Arthropoda. They have the head, thorax, and abdomen distinct or distinguishable from one another; 3 pairs of legs in the adult, all situated upon the thorax; a pair of antennæ; tracheal respiration; and distinct sexes. The somites or segments of the body number not more than 20, 11 being assumed as the typical number. The head, apparently a single segment, is presumed to consist of several coalesced somites: besides the antennæ, it bears a pair of eyes, simple or oftener compound, and the usually complicated mouth-parts. The thorax is composed of three definable segments, the prothorax, mesothorax, and metathorax, the last two of which usually bear each a pair of wings, either fitted for flight, or, in the case of the anterior pair, modified into wing-covers or elytra, which may or may not cover all the abdominal segments. The abdominal segments, in adult insects, have no wings or legs; but some of the terminal segments may be modified into external sexual organs (of either sex), as ovipositor, etc., or bear long filaments. The legs are always jointed, and normally consist of 5 principal divisions: coxa, trochanter, femur, tibia, and tarsus; the tarsal segment being composed of from 1 to 5 joints, and usually ending in a pair of claws. Insects are always produced from eggs, though in some the phenomenon of parthenogenesis occurs, as in plant-lice. Nearly all insects undergo metamorphosis, or more or less complete transformation from the embryo to the imago. Among the many classifications of Insecta which have been proposed, that which is primarily based upon the absence, incompleteness, or perfection of metamorphosis is now usually adopted, giving the three subclasses Ametabola, Hemimetabola, and Metabola (Holometabola). The Ametabola are wingless as well as not subject to metamorphosis. By some they are made to include four orders, Anoplura, Mallophaga, Collembola, and Thysanura; but the first two of these orders are often differently placed, and the last two merged in one. The Hemimetabola undergo incomplete metamorphosis, the larva differing from the imago chiefly in being smaller and wingless, and the pupa being generally active, or at least capable of movement. The orders Hemiptera (Homoptera and Heteroptera), Orthoptera, and Pseudoneuroptera are hemimetabolous. The Metabola (Holometabola) undergo complete transformation, the larva being worm-like, as a caterpillar, maggot, or grub, and the pupa quiescent. These have five leading orders: Neuroptera, Diptera, Lepidoptera, Coleoptera, and Hymenoptera, to which Aphaniptera and Strepsiptera are sometimes added. Sundry other orders of Insecta are adopted by some writers, as Thysanoptera, Euplexoptera. The class Insecta is by far the largest class of animals, outnumbering all the rest of the animal kingdom in genera, species, and individuals. There are known to be more than 200,000 species, and there are doubtless many thousands undescribed. They exist in all parts of the world, and play a most important part in the economy of animated nature, furnishing food to one another and to numberless other animals, and affecting vegetable life, both by assisting in the fertilization of plants and by devouring or otherwise destroying them.

Morphology of Parts of the Head of an Insect, giving nomenclature.

I., II., III., side, upper, and under views of head of cockroach (Blatta orientalis). I. and II.: a, epicranial suture on the epicranium, e, branching to b, the fenestræ; f, antennæ; g, eyes; lb, labrum; mn, mandibles; ca, cardo; st, stipes; ga, galea; pl, palpus of maxilla; p, palpus of labium, or labial palp, borne upon the palpiger; q, mentum and submentum of labium; k, the margins of the occipital foramen; ic, two inferior cervical sclerites; lc, lateral cervical sclerites; pn, pronotum of prothorax. III. Labium and right maxilla, from below: letters as before, except la, lacinia of maxilla; pg, paraglossa; li, ligula; m, mentum; sm, submentum.

insectarium (in-sek-tā'ri-um), n.; pl. insectariums, insectaria (-umz, -ă). [NL., < L. insectum, insect, + -arium.] A place in which a collection of living insects is kept; an entomological vivarium; also, the collection itself.

The insectarium at the Zoölogical Gardens.
W. A. Forbes.

insectary (in'sek-tā-ri), n.; pl. insectaries (-riz). [< NL. insectarium, q. v.] Same as insectarium.

We hope that the time is near when the need of an Insectary for entomological work will be as fully appreciated as is the necessity for a propagating house for the horticulturist or a conservatory for the botanist.
J. H. Comstock, Amer. Nat., Dec., 1888, p. 1129.

insectation† (in-sek-tā'shon), n. [< L. insectatio(n-), a pursuing, pursuit, < insectari, pursue, follow upon, freq. of insequi, follow upon: see insequent.] Persecution; calumniation; backbiting.

My soule stirred by mine owne conscience (without insectation, or reproche laieng to any other mans).
Sir T. More, Works, p. 1431.

insectator† (in'sek-tā-tor), n. [< L. insectator, a pursuer, < insectari, pursue: see insectation.] 1. A prosecutor or adversary at law.—2. A persecutor. Bailey.

insectean (in-sek'tē-an), a. [< insect + -e-an.] Of or pertaining to the Insecta; insectiform: as, an insectean form or organ.

insected† (in-sek'ted), a. [< L. insectus, pp. of insecare, cut in: see insect.] Incised; cut into segments like an insect.

We can hardly endure the sting of that small insected animal [the bee]. Howell, Letters, ii. 6.

insect-fungi (in'sekt-fun″jī), n. pl. Fungi parasitic upon insects, as the Entomophthoraceæ, of which the principal genera are Empusa and Entomophthora. They attack the house-fly and other insects. Botrytis Bassiana produces the disease known as muscardine in silkworms. See cut under Cordyceps.

insect-gun (in'sekt-gun), n. A small bellows for blowing insect-powder into crevices in walls and furniture, or for distributing it upon house-plants; a powder-blower.

insecticidal (in-sek-ti-sī'dal), a. Pertaining to the killing of insects, or having the property of killing them.

insecticide[1] (in-sek'ti-sīd), n. [< L. insectum, an insect, + -cīda, a killer, < cædere, kill.] One who or that which kills insects.

Its [the starling's] varied song, its sprightly gestures, its glossy plumage, and, above all, its character as an insecticide—which last makes it the friend of the agriculturist and the grazier—render it an almost universal favourite.
A. Newton, Encyc. Brit., XXII. 457.

When the value of Paris green as an insecticide was first discovered. Edinburgh Rev., CLXIV. 354.

insecticide[2] (in-sek'ti-sīd), n. [< L. insectum, an insect, + -cidium, a killing, < cædere, kill.] The act of killing insects.

insectiform (in-sek'ti-fôrm), a. [< L. insectum, an insect, + forma, form.] Having the form of an insect; insect-like; insectile.

Illustrated with the marvelous likenesses of two hundred figured or rather insectiform stones.
A. D. White, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXII. 440.

insectifuge (in-sek'ti-fūj), n. [< L. insectum, an insect, + fugare, cause to flee.] A substance which serves as a preventive or protective remedy against insects by expelling them, but not necessarily killing them.

insectile (in'sek-til), a. and n. [= Sp. insectil; as insect + -ile.] I. a. Insect-like; having the nature or character of an insect; insectiform: as, insectile animals.

Insectile animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs. Bacon.

II. n. An insect. [Rare.]

It is destruction of all the hopes and happiness of infants, a denying to them an exemption from the final condition of beasts and insectiles.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 388.

Insectivora (in-sek-tiv'ō-rą), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of insectivorus: see insectivorous.] 1. In mammal.: (a) An order of placental quadrupeds, comprising small mammals of the most varied forms, aspects, and habits, terrestrial and fossorial, arboreal, or natatorial, and mostly insectivorous, but in one group principally frugivorous. They have a relatively small, smooth cerebrum, the hemispheres of which are one-lobed and do not cover the cerebellum; the uterus bicornuate; the testes abdominal or inguinal; the penis pendent or suspended; the placenta discoidal deciduate; the dentition diphyodont and heterodont; the teeth enameled, and typically 3 incisors, 1 canine, 4 premolars, and 3 molars in each side of each jaw, but variable (always more than two lower incisors, and the molars tuberculate and rooted); limbs well developed, and ambulatorial or modified for climbing, swimming, or digging; clavicles present (except in Potamogalidæ); the carpal and metacarpal bones well developed and differentiated; the feet unguiculate and nearly always five-toed; and the body furry or spiny. The order is divisible into two suborders, Dermoptera or Pterophora, containing the Galeopithecidæ or flying-lemurs, and Insectivora vera or Bestiæ, including all the rest, which consist of ten families with many genera and numerous species, the most familiar of which are the shrews, moles, and hedgehogs. (b) A division of the order Chiroptera, including the insectivorous as distinguished from the frugivorous bats. The name being preoccupied by another order of animals, the term Animalivora has been proposed as a substitute for Insectivora in this sense.

2. In entom., a group of insectivorous hymenopterous insects. J. O. Westwood.

Insectivoræ (in-sek-tiv'ō-rē), n. pl. [NL.] In Temminck's classification (1815), an order of insectivorous birds, such as swallows. Also Insectivores. [Not in use.]

insectivore (in-sek'ti-vōr), n. An insectivorous animal; one of the Insectivora or Insectivoræ; especially, a member of the order Insectivora.

Insectivores (in-sek-tiv'ō-rēz), n. pl. [NL.: see Insectivora.] Same as Insectivoræ.

insectivorous (in-sek-tiv'ō-rus), a. [= F. insectivore = Sp. insectívoro = Pg. insectivoro = It. insettivoro, < NL. insectivorus, < L. insectum, insect, + vorare, devour.] 1. Feeding or subsisting on insects, as an animal or a plant. A number of insectivorous plants have in recent times been shown to exist, as the genera Dionæa and Drosera.

Drosera is properly an insectivorous plant.
Darwin, Insectiv. Plants, p. 134.

2. Of or pertaining to the Insectivora, in any use of that name, or having their characters.

insect-net (in'sekt-net), n. A light hand-net used for the capture of insects. A usual form consists of a hoop of wire attached by a ferrule to a wooden handle, and carrying a bag of mosquito-netting, thin muslin, or bobbin-net lace. The depth of the bag is a little more than twice its diameter.

insectologer† (in-sek-tol'ō-jėr), n. [As insectology + -er.] One who studies insects; an entomologist.

The insect itself is, according to modern insectologers, of the ichneumon-fly kind. Derham, Physico-Theology.

insectology† (in-sek-tol'ō-ji), n. [= F. insectologie = Pg. insectologia, < L. insectum, insect, + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of insects; entomology.

insect-powder (in'sekt-pou″dėr), n. A dry powder used to kill or expel insects; an insecticide or insectifuge. The principal kinds, used against museum and household pests, are the Persian, made from the dry flowers of Chrysanthemum roseum; the Dalmatian (also called Persian), from those of Chrysanthemum cinerariifolium; and the Californian, also made from the last-named plant, all of which are known as buhach.

insecure (in-sē-kūr'), a. [= Sp. inseguro; as in-[3] + secure.] 1. Not secure, firm, or safe; liable to give way; unsafe.

Am I going to build on precarious and insecure foundations? Bp. Hurd.

Four columns had shown such weakness that the vaulting arches and the walls that rested upon them had become insecure.
C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 171.

2. Not fully assured; not free from apprehension, fear, uncertainty, or doubt; uncertain.

He . . . is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself. Tillotson.

But is she truly what she seems?
He asks with insecure delight,
Asks of himself and doubts.
Wordsworth, White Doe of Rylstone, i.

insecure†, v. t. [< insecure, a.] To make insecure; imperil.

Every degree of recession from the state Christ first put us in, is a recession from our hopes, and an insecuring our condition.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), Great Exemplar, I. 187.

insecurely (in-sē-kūr'li), adv. In an insecure manner; without security or safety.

When I say secured, I mean in the sense in which the word should always be understood at courts, that is insecurely. Chesterfield.

insecureness (in-sē-kūr'nes), n. Insecurity.

insecurity (in-sē-kū'ri-ti), n. [= F. insécurité; as in-[3] + security. Cf. insecure.] 1. The state of being insecure or unsafe; liability to give way, be lost, or become unsafe or fraught with danger; want of secureness or stability; instability; liability to damage or loss: as, the insecurity of a staircase or of a foundation.

There is also a time of insecurity, when interests of all sorts become objects of speculation.
Burke, Appeal to Old Whigs.

In drawing, the picture is not faultless; there is a touch of insecurity in some of the outlines.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 176.

2. Lack of assurance or confidence, especially in regard to one's safety, or the security or stability of something; apprehensiveness of change, loss, or damage; doubt; uncertainty: as, a feeling of insecurity pervaded the community.

With what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects . . . unto arbitrary calculations. Sir T. Browne.

insecution† (in-sē-kū′shọn), n. [< LL. insecutio(n-), a pursuing, < L. insequi, pp. insecutus, pursue: see insectation.] A following after something; close pursuit.

Æacides, that wishly did intend (Standing asterne his tall neckt ship) how deepe the skirmish drew Amongst the Greeks, and with what ruth the insecution grew. Chapman, Iliad, xi.

inseminate (in-sem′i-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inseminated, ppr. inseminating. [< L. inseminatus, pp. of inseminare, sow or plant in, < in, in, + seminare, sow, plant, < semen, seed: see semen. Cf. disseminate.] To sow; inject seed into; impregnate.

insemination (in-sem-i-nā′shọn), n. [= F. insémination, < L. as if inseminatio(n-)*, < inseminare, sow or plant in: see inseminate.] The act of sowing or of injecting seed; impregnation.

insensate (in-sen′sāt), a. [< LL. insensatus, < in- priv. + sensatus, endowed with sense, < L. sensus, sensation, sense: see sense.] 1. Not endowed with sense; destitute of the power of feeling; naturally senseless; inanimate.

The silence and the calm
Of mute insensate things. Wordsworth.

2. Wanting or deprived of sense; destitute of natural sense or feeling; stupid.

As their own ruin on themselves to invite,
Insensate left, or to sense reprobate.
Milton, S. A., l. 1685.

We wonder that a man could possibly be so sottish; and yet we ourselves by temptation become no less insensate. Bp. Hall, Contemplations (ed. 1836), ii. 47.

3. Marked by want of sense or feeling; manifesting insensibility; irrational; maniacal.

Wisely they Despise the insensate barbarous trade of war.
Thomson, Winter, l. 844.

The vast, black, raging spaces, torn and wild,
With an insensate fury answer back
To the gale's challenge.
C. Thaxter, At the Breaker's Edge.

insensateness (in-sen′sāt-nes), n. The state of being insensate or senseless; want of sense or feeling; stupidity.

insense[1]†, v. t. An obsolete spelling of incense[1].

insense[2] (in-sens′), v. t.; pret. and pp. insensed, ppr. insensing. [Appar. < in-[2] + sense; but most instances cited are certainly to be referred to incense[1] (formerly often spelled insense), in a similar meaning. Prob. the more mod. instances (dial.) are understood as < in-[2] + sense.] To instruct; inform; make to understand. Grose.

insenseless† (in-sens′les), a. [< in-[3] (here cumulative) + senseless.] Senseless; without feeling; insensible. [Rare.]

In other men 'tis but a huff
To vapour with, instead of proof,
That, like a wen, looks big and swells,
Insenseless, and just nothing else.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. 394.

insensibility (in-sen-si-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. insensibilité = Sp. insensibilidad = Pg. insensibilidade = It. insensibilità; as insensible + -ity.] 1. Lack of physical sensibility; the state of being insensible to physical impressions; absence of feeling or sensation.

There holdeth me sometyme by Almighty God as it were euen a swone, and an insensibilitie for woonder.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 12.

Insensibility to suffering was no longer professed; indomitable strength was no longer idolised; and it was felt that weakness and sorrow have their own appropriate virtues. Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 256.

2. Lack of moral sensibility, or the power to be moved or affected; lack of tenderness or susceptibility of emotion.

Peace (if insensibility may claim
A right to the meek honours of her name).
Cowper, Hope, l. 235.

One great cause of our insensibility to the goodness of our Creator is the very extensiveness of his bounty. Paley.

Man only can be aware of the insensibility of man towards a new gown. Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, p. 54.

=Syn. Indifference, Insensibility, Impassibility, etc. See apathy.

insensible (in-sen′si-bl), a. and n. [= F. insensible = Sp. insensible = Pg. insensivel = It. insensibile, < LL. insensibilis, that cannot be felt, that cannot feel, < L. in- priv. + sensibilis, sensible: see sensible.] I. a. 1. Not perceptible by the senses; imperceptible; inappreciable.

The delicate graduation of curves that melt into each other by insensible transitions. J. Caird.

Already in the distance the white waves, the "skipper's daughters," had begun to flee before a breeze that was still insensible on Aros. R. L. Stevenson, Merry Men.

In inland seas, such as the Mediterranean, the tides are nearly insensible except at the ends of long bays.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 354.

2. Not sensible to the mind; not consciously apprehended or appreciated; unconscious.

How many persons do you meet, the insensible influence of whose manners and character is so decided as often to thwart their voluntary influence!
Bushnell, Sermons for New Life, p. 191.

There are insensible transitions between the humble salaams of the Hindoo, the profound bow which in Europe shows great respect, and the moderate bend of the head expressive of consideration.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 385.

3. Without the power of feeling or sensation; without corporeal sensibility.

How gladly would I meet Mortality my sentence, and be earth
Insensible! Milton, P. L., x. 777.

Anything which renders a human being totally insensible, sometimes for hours, to the sharpest pain, must be attended with considerable danger to life.
E. T. Tebbits, Med. Fashions, p. 21.

4. Not susceptible of emotion or passion; void of feeling or tenderness: as, to be insensible to the sufferings of others.

Art thou grown Insensible in ill, that thou goest on Without the least compunction?
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iv. 2.

Nothing disturbs the tranquillity of their souls, equally insensible to disasters and to prosperity.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 68.

Laura was . . . not insensible to the renown which his sonnets brought her.
C. D. Warner, Roundabout Journey, p. 9.

5†. Void of sense or meaning; meaningless.

If it make the indictment insensible or uncertain, it shall be quashed. Sir M. Hale, Hist. Pleas of the Crown, ii. 24.

Insensible calorie, an obsolete term for latent heat. See heat.=Syn. 1. Imperceivable.—4. Dull, torpid, senseless, unconscious, unfeeling, unsusceptible, indifferent, hard, callous.

II.† n. One who is lacking in sensibility; a thoroughly apathetic person.

His reason and the force of his resolutions enabled him on all occasions to contain himself, and to curb the very first risings of passion — and that in such a degree that he was taken almost for an insensible.
Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 53.

What an insensible must have been my cousin, had she not been proud of being Lady Grandison.
Richardson, Sir Charles Grandison, VI. 405.

insensibleness (in-sen′si-bl-nes), n. Insensibility.

And Panætius, one of the wisest of the Stoicks, is so far from making insensibleness of pain the property of a wise man that he makes it not the property of a man.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. vi.

insensiblist (in-sen′si-blist), n. [< insensible + -ist.] One who is insensible to emotion or passion; one who is apathetic or who affects apathy. [Rare.]

Mr. Meadows, . . . since he commenced insensiblist, has never once dared to be pleased.
Miss Burney, Cecilia, iv. 2.

insensibly (in-sen′si-bli), adv. In an insensible manner; so as not to be felt or perceived; imperceptibly.

His behaviour in an assembly [is] peculiarly graceful in a certain art of mixing insensibly with the rest, and becoming one of the company, instead of receiving the courtship of it. Steele, Spectator, No. 340.

The war of Granada had insensibly trained up a hardy militia. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 3.

insensitive (in-sen′si-tiv), a. [= Pg. It. insensitivo; as in-[3] + sensitive.] Not sensitive; having little or no sensibility.

In certain cases the hypnotic is insensitive.
Science, XIII. 50.

People have lived and died without the use of eyes, but nobody has ever grown up with an insensitive skin.
G. C. Robertson, Mind, XIII. 423.

insensitiveness (in-sen′si-tiv-nes), n. The quality of being insensitive.

The relation between depth of sleep and frequency of dreams seems explicable on the supposition that the insensitiveness to outside excitations present in deep sleep also induces insensitiveness to internal impressions.
Science, XIII. 88.

insensuous (in-sen′sụ-us), a. [< in-[3] + sensuous.] Not sensuous; not addressing itself to or affecting the senses.

That intermediate door
Betwixt the different planes of sensuous form And form insensuous. Mrs. Browning.

insentient (in-sen′shient), a. [< in-[3] + sentient.] Not sentient; not having perception, or the power of feeling.

The mind is the sentient being; and as the rose is insentient, there can be no sensation, nor any thing resembling sensation, in it. Reid, Intellectual Powers, ii. 16.

inseparability (in-sep″a-ra-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. inséparabilité = Sp. inseparabilidad = Pg. inseparabilidade, < LL. inseparabilita(t-)s, inseparableness, < L. inseparabilis, inseparable: see inseparable.] The condition or quality of being inseparable or incapable of disjunction.

The parts of pure space are immovable, which follows from their inseparability, motion being nothing but change of distance between any two things.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xiii. § 14.

inseparable (in-sep′a-ra-bl), a. [= F. inséparable = Sp. inseparable = Pg. inseparavel = It. inseparabile, < L. inseparabilis, that cannot be separated, < L. in- priv. + separabilis, separable.] Not separable; incapable of being separated or disjoined; not to be parted.

He fell into a sort of criticism upon magnanimity and courage, and argued that they were inseparable.
Steele, Spectator, No. 350.

Clouds, and intermingling mountain-tops,
In one inseparable glory clad.
Wordsworth, Prelude, x.

Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable. Webster, Second Speech on Foote's Resolution.

Inseparable accident, in logic, an accident which cannot be separated from its subject.—Inseparable adjunct, in logic, an adjunct which cannot really be separated from its subject, although the latter may be conceived without the adjunct.—Inseparable association. See association.—Inseparable prefix, in gram., a prefix not having also the character of an independent word, and so not separable or to be separated from the forms to which it is added: as be- (of begin, etc.) in English and German, re- and con- in Latin, etc.

inseparableness (in-sep′a-ra-bl-nes), n. Inseparability.

inseparably (in-sep′a-ra-bli), adv. In an inseparable manner; so as not to be capable of being separated.

Which shall I first bewail,
Thy bondage or lost sight?
Prison within prison
Inseparably dark? Milton, S. A., l. 154.

The wheat and the tares grow together inseparably, and must either be spared together or rooted up together.
Macaulay, Leigh Hunt.

inseparate (in-sep′a-rāt), a. [= It. inseparato, < LL. inseparatus, not separate, < L. in- priv. + separatus, separate: see separate.] Not separate; united.

Joy, which is inseparate from those eyes.
Sir P. Sidney (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 553).

inseparation (in-sep-a-rā′shọn), n. [< inseparate + -ion.] In bot., the congenital union of contiguous organs, as the petals of a sympetalous corolla: a term proposed by Masters as a substitute for the terms coalescence and adnation.

inseparized†, a. [Irreg. < insepar(ate) + -ize + -ed[2].] Inseparable.

Knew well the Cares from Crowns inseparized.
Sylvester, Memorials of Mortalitie, st. 43.

insequent (in′sē-kwent), a. [< L. insequen(t-)s, ppr. of insequi, follow upon, pursue, < in, on, + sequi, follow: see sequent.] Following on; subsequent.

The debt was not cancell'd to that rigid and hard servant, for if he had his Apocha or quietance, to speak after the manner of men, he were free from all insequent demands. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 25.

inserene† (in-sē-rēn′), a. [< L. inserenus, not serene, < in- priv. + serenus, serene: see serene.] Not serene; unserene.

inserene† (in-sē-rēn′), v. t. [< inserene, a.] To deprive of serenity; disturb.

Death stood by,
Whose gastly presence inserenes my face.
Davies, Holy Roode, p. 18.

insert (in-sėrt′), v. t. [< L. insertus, pp. of inserere (> It. inserire = Sp. Pg. Pr. inserir = F. insérer), put, bring, or introduce into, insert, < in, in, + serere, join: see series. Cf. exsert.] 1. To put in; place or cause to be placed in or among; introduce: as, to insert a key in a lock; to insert an advertisement in a newspaper.

I will not here insert any consolatory sentences.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 530.

Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,
And yields an offspring more than Nature gives.
Pope, Vertumnus and Pomona, l. 13.

Since I have communicated to the world a plan which has given offence to some gentlemen whom it would not be very safe to disoblige, I must insert the following remonstrance. Addison, The Tall Club.

2. In anat. and zoöl., to attach, as a muscle or ligament to a bone. See insertion, 3.—Inserted column. Same as engaged column (which see, under column).

insert (in′sėrt), n. [< insert, v.] Something inserted. Specifically—(a) An additional sentence or passage annexed to a proof to be inserted in the print; a rider. (b) In the postal service, a paper, circular, etc., placed within the folds of a newspaper or the leaves of a book, periodical, etc.

inserted (in-sėr′ted), p. a. Put or set in. Specifically—(a) In bot., attached to or growing out of some part: said especially of the parts of a flower: as, the calyx, corolla, and stamens of many flowers are inserted on the receptacle. (b) In entom.: (1) Having the base covered by the parts behind: opposed to free: as, an inserted head. (2) Situated in; springing from: as, antennæ inserted at the sides of the front. (c) In anat., having an insertion, as a muscle or ligament; attached, as the smaller or more movable end of a muscle: as, the muscle arises from the humerus and is inserted in the ulna.

insertion (in-sėr′shọn), n. [= F. insertion = Pr. insercio = Sp. inserción = Pg. inserção = It. inserzione, < LL. insertio(n-), a putting in, ingrafting, < L. inserere, pp. insertus, put in, insert: see insert.] 1. A putting in; the act of inserting, or placing, or setting something in or among other things: as, the insertion of a beam in a wall.

I would not be understood to speak in prejudice of Lucan, who has not only adorned his subject by this digression from it, but fully compensated for its unseasonable insertion.
W. L. Lewis, tr. of Statius's Thebaid, iv. 667, note.

2. That which is inserted. Specifically—(a) A passage or paragraph inserted in the text of a writing.

He softens the relation by such insertions, before he describes the event. Broome.

The redactional insertion displaced it [the prayer of Solomon in 1 Ki. viii.] in one recension and led to its mutilation in the other. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 84.

(b) A band of lace or other ornamental material inserted in a plain fabric for decorative purposes. Such bands are often made with both edges alike, and with a certain amount of plain stuff on either side, to allow them to be sewed on strongly.

3. Place or manner of attachment. (a) In bot., the place or the mode of attachment of an organ to its support. (b) In anat., the place or the mode of attachment of a muscle to the part to be moved: opposed to origin. There is no absolute distinction between the origin and the insertion of a muscle, these being convertible terms, as referring to the two ends of the muscle; but the more movable point of attachment is usually considered the insertion. (c) In zoöl., attachment of a part or organ, with special reference to the site or manner of such attachment.—Epigynous insertion, in bot., an insertion on the summit of the ovary. See cut under epigynous.—Hypogynous insertion, in bot., an insertion beneath the ovary.—Perigynous insertion, in bot., an insertion upon the calyx surrounding the ovary.

insertor†, insertour† (in-sėr′tọr), n. See the quotation.

Your first figure of tollerable disorder is [Parenthesis], or by an English name the [Insertour], and is when ye will seeme for larger information or some other purpose, to peece or graffe in the midst of your tale an vnnecessary parcell of speach. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 140.

inservet (in-sėrv′), v. t. [< L. inservire, be of service to, serve, be devoted to, < in, in, to, + servire, serve: see serve.] To conduce to; be of use to.

He had inserved to the Villany to please the Tyrant.
E. Phillips, World of Words (1706).

inservient† (in-sėr′vi-ẹnt), a. [< L. inservien(t-)s, ppr. of inservire, serve: see inserve.] Of use in the attainment of an end; assisting.

The other (by which tis conceived the drink doth pass) is the weazon, rough artery, or wind-pipe, a part inservient to voice and respiration.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 8.

By conducting the spirits into the nerves and muscles inservient to the motion of the limbs, [music] doth make the patient leap and dance. Boyle, Works, II. 181.

insession† (in-sesh′ọn), n. [< LL. insessio(n-), < L. insidere, pp. insessus, sit in or upon, < in, in, on, + sedere, sit: see session.] 1. The act of sitting in, on, or upon; especially, the act of sitting in a bath; a sitz-bath.

Also ointments, baths, insessions, foments, and other such like medicines made of things having restrictive vertue, do profit. Burrough's Method of Physick (1624).

2. That in, on, or upon which one sits.

Insessions be bathing-tubs half full, wherein the patient may sit. Holland.

Insessores (in-se-sō′rēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of LL. insessor, a besetter, waylayer, lit. 'one who sits upon,' < L. insidere, pp. insessus, sit in or upon: see insession.] In ornith.: (a) The perchers; in Vigors's system of classification, adopted by Swainson and many others, an extensive order of birds, of arboreal habits, having the feet fitted for perching, with 3 toes in front and 1 behind, and not raptorial. A majority of all birds were included in this order, of which the leading types were Conirostres, Dentirostres, Tenuirostres, and Fissirostres. The group thus constituted corresponds exactly to no modern order, but is nearly equivalent to Passeres together with those Picariæ which are not yoke-toed, thus including all the true passerine or passeriform birds, and many others. The term has been used with varying latitude of definition, and is now obsolete, the group of birds it designated being an artificial one. (b) In Bonaparte's dichotomous physiological classification of birds, one of two subclasses of Aves (the other being called Grallatores), including those (chiefly monogamous) birds which rear their young in the nest. As the term had been before employed in a very different sense, it was subsequently changed to Altrices. (c) In Coues's system of classification (1884), the perchers proper: same as Passeres.

insessorial (in-se-sō′ri-ạl), a. [As Insessor-es + -ial.] Of or pertaining to the Insessores; habitually perching, as a bird; suited for perching, as a bird's foot.

In the most accomplished insessorial foot, the front toes are cleft to the base, or only coherent to a slight extent; the hind toe is completely incumbent, and as long and flexible as the rest. Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 129.

★ inset (in-set′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inset, ppr. insetting. [< ME. insetten, < AS. insettan, ONorth. insetta, appoint, lit. set in (= D. inzetten = MLG. LG. insetten = G. einsetzen = Dan. indsætte = Sw. insätta), < in, in, + settan, set: see set[1].] To set in; infix or implant.

The sorwe that is inset greveth the thought.
Chaucer, Boëthius, ii. prose 3.

★ inset (in′set), n. [< inset, v.] 1. That which is set in; an insertion; specifically, in bookbinding, a leaf or leaves inserted in other leaves previously folded, usually in the center of the folding. The inset of a sheet of duodecimo consists of the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth pages of the sheet. A map or print specially inserted in a book is also an inset.

2. Influx, as of the tide.

The inset into the Bay of Biscay, which, when it exists, runs at the rate of a mile the hour.
T. G. Bowles, Flotsam and Jetsam, p. 244.

3. Same as ingate, 2.

inseverable (in-sev′ėr-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + severable.] Incapable of being severed.

We had suffered so much together, and the filaments connecting them with my heart were . . . so inseverable.
De Quincey, Autobiog. Sketches, i. 88.

inshadet, v. t. See enshade.

inshave (in′shāv), n. [< in[1] + shave.] A coopers' tool for dressing the inner sides of barrel-staves.

insheathe, ensheathe (in-, en-shēŦH′), v. t.; pret. and pp. insheathed, ensheathed, ppr. insheathing, ensheathing. [< in-[1], en-[1], + sheathe.] To sheathe; put into a sheath. [Rare.]

On high he hung the martial sword insheath'd.
J. Hughes, Triumph of Peace.

The outer lobe ensheathing the long, sharp-toothed inner lobe. Packard.

inshell (in-shel′), v. t. [< in-[1] + shell.] To hide in or as in a shell.

Thrusts forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome.
Shak., Cor., iv. 6, 45.

inship (in′ship), adv. [< in + ship.] On board ship.

inship (in-ship′), v. t.; pret. and pp. inshipped, ppr. inshipping. [< in-[1] + ship.] To place on board a ship; ship; embark.

See them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover, where inshipp'd,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 1, 49.

When she was thus inshipp'd, and woefully
Had cast her eyes about.
Daniel, Hymen's Triumph.

inshore (in′shōr′), prep. phr. as adv. [< in[1] + shore[1]; cf. ashore.] Near the shore; toward the shore; on the shore side: as, the ship lay, or was moving, inshore.

In-shore their passage tribes of sea-gulls urge.
Crabbe, Works, II. 12.

The Polaris was anchored just inshore of the largest iceberg seen since entering Kennedy channel.
C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, p. 110.

inshore (in′shōr), a. [< inshore, adv.] Situated near the shore; relatively near to the shore; specifically, as applied to fishing or fisheries, situated within about five miles of the shore: opposed to offshore: as, inshore fishing. In the mackerel-fishery, when a school is raised within the limit, it is still inshore fishing, no matter how far out the school may be followed.

With a high tide and an inshore wind, their homes and lives were always in danger of destruction.
C. Elton, Origins of Eng. Hist., p. 51.

In former days the inshore cod and halibut fisheries on the coast of New England were exceedingly valuable.
Science, XII. 220.

inshrinet, v. t. An obsolete form of enshrine.

inshroudt, v. t. An obsolete spelling of enshroud.

insiccation (in-si-kā′shọn), n. [< L. in, in, + siccare, pp. siccatus, dry: see siccate.] The act of drying in.

inside (in′sīd or in-sīd′), n. and a. [< in[1] + side, n.] I. n. 1. The inner side or part; the interior, as opposed to the outside or exterior: as, the inside of the hand; the inside of a house; the inside of a newspaper.

Show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand.
Shak., W. T., iv. 3, 833.

If I had an ostrich in my inside—I would drink till twelve every night, and eat broiled-bones till six every morning. Trollope, The Claverings, I. 277.

2. pl. Interior parts or appurtenances; things within. Specifically—(a) The entrails. (b) Internal thoughts or feelings, etc.

We count him a wise man that knows the minds and insides of men. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 100.

3. An inside passenger in a vehicle.

So down thy hill, romantic Ashbourn, glides
The Derby dilly, carrying three insides.
G. Canning, in Loves of the Triangles, l. 178.

The lord lieutenant . . . alone pretended to the magnificence of a wheel-carriage . . . bearing eight insides and six outsides. The insides were their Graces in person.
Scott, Old Mortality, ii.

Inside of a sheet, in printing, the side which is folded in; that side of a sheet which contains the second page; an inner form. See form, 6.—Inside of a sword-hilt, that part of a sword-hilt which corresponds to the inside or palm of the hand when the sword is held as on guard. Compare outside.—Patent inside. See patent.

II. a. Being on the inside; inner; interior; internal: as, an inside view; an inside seat in a coach.

Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? . . . is this nothing?
Shak., W. T., i. 2, 287.

Inside gear. See gear.—Inside gearing, teeth cut on the concave side of an arc.—Inside tin, in bookbinding, a sheet of thin metal placed between the cover and the fly-leaf, before the process of pasting down, with intent to keep the leaves smooth and prevent dampness.—To have the inside track, to have the inner side of a track or course in racing and running; hence, colloquially (as the inner side is shorter on the curves than the outer), to have the advantage; be in a position of superiority.

inside (in′sīd), adv. and prep. [< inside, n.] I. adv. 1. Of space: To, into, or in the interior; within.

A woman asked the coachman, "Are you full inside?" . . . Lamb put his head through the window and said, "I am quite full inside; that last piece of pudding at Mr. Gilman's did the business for me."
Leslie, Autobiographical Recollections.

2. Of time or space: Within the limit: followed by of. [U. S.]

Both animals had been killed inside of five minutes.
Hartford Courant, Jan. 13, 1887.

II. prep. In the interior of; within: as, inside the circle; inside the letter.

insider (in-sī′dėr), n. [< inside + -er[1].] 1. One who is inside; one who is within the limits of some place, structure, society, organization (as a church), etc.

Yet he was, or he meant to be, as pious as he was aggressive, and he cordially believed that his interest in the welfare of souls, outsiders and nominal insiders, was as good as the best. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 891.

Hence—2. One who has some special advantage, as in a business enterprise. [Colloq.]

insidiatet (in-sid′i-āt), v. t. [< L. insidiatus, pp. of insidiari (> It. insidiare = Sp. Pg. insidiar), lie in wait, lie in ambush, < insidiæ, an ambush: see insidious.] To lie in ambush for. Heywood.

insidiationt (in-sid-i-ā′shọn), n. [< OF. insidiation, < ML. insidiatio*(n-), < L. insidiari, lie in wait: see insidiate.] An insidious or treacherous act.

Though heaven be sure and secure from violent robbers, yet these by a wily insidiation enter into it, and rob God of His honour. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 131.

insidiator† (in-sid′i-ā-tọr), n. [= F. insidiateur = Sp. Pg. insidiador = It. insidiatore, < L. insidiator, one who lies in wait, < insidiari lie in wait: see insidiate.] One who insidiates or lies in ambush.

They [kings] are most exposed to dangers and disasters, . . . having usually . . . many both open enemies and close insidiatours. Barrow, Works, I. x.

insidious (in-sid′i-us), a. [= F. insidieux = Sp. Pg. It. insidioso, < L. insidiosus, cunning, artful, deceitful, < insidiæ, a lying in wait, an ambush, artifice, stratagem, < insidere, lit. sit in or upon: see insession.] 1. Lying in wait; hence, deceitful; sly; treacherous.

Till, worn by age, and mouldering to decay,
The insidious waters wash its base away. Canning.

I wished never to see the face again of that insidious, good-for-nothing, old grey impostor. Lamb, Roast Pig.

2. Designed or adapted to entrap; deceptive; insnaring: as, insidious arts.

Till, unemploy'd, she felt her spirits droop,
And took, insidious aid! th' inspiring cup.
Crabbe, Works, I. 125.

What cannot be denied is extenuated, or passed by without notice; concessions even are sometimes made: but this insidious candour only increases the effect of the vast mass of sophistry. Macaulay, History.

Insidious disease, disease progressing to a serious condition without exciting the notice or alarm of the patient or his friends. =Syn. Crafty, wily, cunning, artful, guileful, snaky, foxy.

insidiously (in-sid'i-us-li), adv. In an insidious manner; deceitfully; treacherously.

Pope was not the only man he [Addison] insidiously injured, though the only man of whom he could be afraid. Johnson, Addison.

insidiousness (in-sid'i-us-nes), n. The quality of being insidious; deceitfulness; treachery.

insight (in'sīt), n. [< ME. insiht, insigt, insight (= D. inzigt = G. einsicht = Dan. indsigt = Sw. insigt); < in[1] + sight.] 1†. Perception; observation.

So that to fore ne behynde
He seeth no thyng, but as the blynde,
Withoute insight of his courage,
He doth merualles in his rage.
Gower, Conf. Amant., vi.

2. Mental vision; intellectual discernment or penetration.

Man, y sente thee kindeli in-sigte
Of vndir-stondyng, skil, & witt,
To rewle thi silf bi resoun rigt.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 185.

Franklin had an immense reason, which gave him a great insight and power in all practical, philosophic, and speculative matters. Theodore Parker, Historic Americans, p. 38.

Could ever a man of prodigious mathematical genius convey to others any insight into his methods? Emerson, Spiritual Laws.

3. The immediate cognition of an object; intuition. [Rare.] =Syn. 2. See list under acumen.

insighted† (in'sī-ted), a. [< insight + -ed[2].] Possessed of insight.

Justus Lipsius, deepely insighted in understanding old authors. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 687.

insign (in'sīn), v. t. In her., same as ensign, 2.

insignia (in-sig'ni-ä), n. pl. [= F. insigne = Sp. Pg. insignia; < L. insignia, insignia, pl. of insigne, a badge of honor or of office, neut. of insignis, distinguished by a mark, remarkable, distinguished, < in, in, on, + signum, mark, sign: see sign. Cf. ensign.] 1. Badges or distinguishing marks of office or honor: as, the insignia of an order of knighthood. The insignia of an honorary order are the crosses, medallions, stars, ribbons, etc., which are worn by its members on occasions of ceremony. Military men wear these when in uniform, and civilians when in evening dress. The size of each badge is fixed by statute of the order; but there has been introduced a custom of wearing miniature crosses, medallions, etc., a number of which can be worn at once suspended from a gold chain round the neck and hanging on the shirt-bosom, or attached to the lapel of the coat. When the cross, medallion, etc., is not worn, it is customary to wear a small rosette or knot of ribbon in the buttonhole, the color being that of the ribbon of the order. The knot or rosette is worn by members of the lowest class, the ribbon by all others. See cordon, cross, star, collar, rosette, ribbon, and cut under garter.

2. Marks, signs, or visible tokens by which anything is known or distinguished.

Rags, which are the reproach of poverty, are the Beggar's robes, and graceful insignia of his profession. Lamb, Decay of Beggars.

insignificance (in-sig-nif'i-kans), n. [= F. insignifiance = Sp. Pg. insignificancia; as insignifican(t) + -ce.] The quality or condition of being insignificant; lack of significance or import; unimportance; triviality; meanness; want of force, influence, or consideration.

Higher motives and deeper thoughts, such as engross the passions and the souls of men, and sink into comparative insignificance the comforts of social life. Story, Misc. Writings, p. 410.

insignificancy (in-sig-nif'i-kan-si), n. Same as insignificance.

There is hardly a rich man in the world who has not such a led friend of small consideration, who is a darling for his insignificancy. Steele, Tatler, No. 208.

insignificant (in-sig-nif'i-kant), a. [= F. insignifiant = Sp. Pg. It. insignificante; as in-[3] + significant.] 1. Not significant; void of signification; without meaning.

Till you can weight and gravity explain,
Those words are insignificant and vain.
Sir R. Blackmore.

2. Answering no purpose; having no weight or effect; unimportant; trivial.

Laws must be insignificant without the sanction of rewards and punishments, whereby men may be induced to the observance of them. Bp. Wilkins, Natural Religion, i. 11.

He considers no anecdote, no peculiarity of manner, no familiar saying, as too insignificant to illustrate the operation of laws, of religion, and of education, and to mark the progress of the human mind. Macaulay, History.

3. Without weight of character; mean; contemptible: as, an insignificant fellow. =Syn. 2. Immaterial, inconsiderable, trifling, paltry, petty.

insignificantly (in-sig-nif'i-kant-li), adv. In an insignificant manner; without meaning; without importance or effect.

The vulgar may thus heap and huddle terms of respect, and nothing better be expected from them; but for people of rank to repeat appellatives insignificantly is a folly not to be endured. Steele, Tatler, No. 204.

insignificative (in-sig-nif'i-kā-tiv), a. [< LL. insignificativus, not significative (only as a noun (sc. modus), applied to the infinitive), < in- priv. + significativus, significative: see significative.] Not significative; signifying nothing; not expressive by means of external signs. [Rare.]

The ordinary sort of the unmeaning eyes are not indeed utterly insignificative: for they shew their owners to be persons without any habitual vices or virtues. Philosophical Letters upon Physiognomy (1751), p. 230.

insimulate† (in-sim'ū-lāt), v. t. [< L. insimulatus, pp. of insimulare, accuse, charge, < in, against, + simulare, represent, pretend: see simulate.] To accuse; charge.

That he [Christ] might give spiritual comfort to all sorts of women, first to those who should be unjustly suspected and insimulated of sin and incontinency, when indeed they were innocent, he was content to come of a mother who should be subject to that suspicion. Donne, Sermons, iii.

insincere (in-sin-sēr'), a. [< L. insincerus, not genuine, not candid, < in- priv. + sincerus, genuine, candid, sincere: see sincere.] 1†. Not genuine; unsound; imperfect.

But, ah! how insincere are all our joys!
Which, sent from heaven, like lightning make no stay.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

Oh, why, Penelope, this causeless fear,
To render sleep's soft blessing insincere?
Pope, Odyssey, iv. 1060.

2. Not sincere in character; making a false or hypocritical show of opinions or feelings.

We might call him [Horatio] insincere: not that he was in any sense a hypocrite, but only that he never was and never could be in earnest. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 217.

3. Not sincere in quality; simulated; deceptive; false.

Tell her again, the sneer upon her face,
And all her censures of the work of grace,
Are insincere, meant only to conceal
A dread she would not, yet is forc'd to feel.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 785.

=Syn. 2. Disingenuous, uncandid, double-faced, hollow.

insincerely (in-sin-sēr'li), adv. In an insincere manner; without sincerity; with duplicity.

insincerity (in-sin-ser'i-ti), n.; pl. insincerities (-tiz). [= F. insincérité = Pg. insinceridade, < L. as if insincerita(t-)s*, < insincerus, insincere: see insincere.] The quality of being insincere; want of sincerity or ingenuousness; dissimulation; hypocrisy; deceitfulness; duplicity.

What men call policy and knowledge of the world is commonly no other thing than dissimulation and insincerity. H. Blair, Works, V. xvii.

He raised his voice unceasingly in condemnation of the fashionable insincerities of his day. A. Dobson, Int. to Steele, p. xi.

insinew† (in-sin'ū), v. t. [< in-[1] + sinew.] To strengthen; give vigor to.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinew'd to this action,
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 1, 172.

insinking (in'sing"king), n. [< in[1] + sinking.] A sinking in; a depression.

An insinking of the surface of the body.
Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 400.

That the primary stigma formed by the insinking of the respiratory book is not the functional one of the adult. J. S. Kingsley, Micros. Science, N. S., XXV. 538.

insinuant† (in-sin'ū-ant), a. [= F. insinuant = Sp. Pg. It. insinuante, < L. insinuan(t-)s, ppr. of insinuare, insinuate: see insinuate.] Insinuating.

Commonly less inventive than judicious, howsoever proving very plausible, insinuant, and fortunate men. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 78.

insinuate (in-sin'ū-āt), v.; pret. and pp. insinuated, ppr. insinuating. [< L. insinuatus, pp. of insinuare (> It. insinuare = Sp. Pg. insinuar = Pr. insinuar, ensinuar = F. insinuer), bring in by windings or turnings, wind or creep in, steal in, < in, in, + sinus, a winding, bend, bay, fold, bosom: see sinus, sine.] I. trans. 1. To bring in tortuously or indirectly; introduce by devious means or by imperceptible degrees; worm in.

There is no particular evil which hath not some appearance of goodness whereby to insinuate itself. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 7.

He insinuated himself into the very good grace of the Duke of Buckingham. Clarendon, Great Rebellion.

2. To hint obliquely; suggest indirectly, or by remote allusion.

Wilt thou insinuate what I am, and praise me,
And say I am a noble fellow?
B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

Elohim; which word, as is sayd, is of the plural number, insinuating the Holy Trinity. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 6.

You would seem to insinuate, Madam, that I have particular reasons. Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, i.

=Syn. 2. Intimate, Suggest, etc. See hint[1], v. t.

II. intrans. 1. To move tortuously; wind. [Rare.]

Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
His braided train. Milton, P. L., iv. 348.

2. To creep or flow softly in; enter imperceptibly or stealthily. [Rare.]

Pestilential miasmas insinuate into the humours and consistent parts of the body. Harvey.

3†. To gain on the affections or confidence by cautious or artful means; ingratiate one's self.

He would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh. Shak., Rich. III., i. 4, 152.

I, . . . to insinuate with my young master, . . . have got me afore in this disguise. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 2.

4. To make hints or indirect suggestions.

insinuating (in-sin'ū-ā-ting), p. a. Tending to enter treacherously; insensibly winning favor or confidence.

His sly, polite, insinuating style
Could please at Court, and make Augustus smile.
Pope, Epil. to Satires, i. 19.

He warns us against it [hypocrisy] as leaven, as a subtle insinuating evil which will silently spread itself throughout the whole character. J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 134.

insinuatingly (in-sin'ū-ā-ting-li), adv. In an insinuating manner; by insinuation.

insinuation (in-sin-ū-ā'shon), n. [= F. insinuation = Pr. insinuation = Sp. insinuación = Pg. insinuação = It. insinuazione, < L. insinuatio(n-), < insinuare, insinuate: see insinuate.] 1. The act of insinuating; a creeping or winding in; a tortuous or stealthy passage, as into crevices, or (figuratively) into favor or affection.

Their defeat
Does by their own insinuation grow.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2, 59.

2. The art or power of pleasing and stealing into the affections.

He had a natural insinuation and address which made him acceptable in the best company. Clarendon, Great Rebellion.

3. That which is insinuated; a suggestion or intimation by indirect allusion; an oblique hint; an innuendo.

For he gaue them an insinuacion & signification therof, in that he said, And yt bred that I shall geue you is my fleshe. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1112.

As Fear moves mean Spirits, and love prompts Great ones to obey, the Insinuations of Malecontents are directed accordingly. Steele, Conscious Lovers, Ded.

4. In civil law, the lodging of an alleged will with the officer charged with the duty of registering wills, as a step toward procuring its probate, and establishing it as a part of the records.—5. In rhet., a kind of exordium, in which the favor of the judge or hearers is sought to be gained indirectly or by special considerations, in spite of a discreditable client, an unfavorable case, prejudice or weariness on the part of the judge, etc.: distinguished from the exordium or proem in the narrower sense, in which a favorable hearing is claimed or solicited directly and openly.

His insinuation being of blushing, and his division of sighs, his whole oration stood upon a short narration. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

=Syn. 3. Intimation, Suggestion, etc. See hint[1], v. t.

insinuative (in-sin'ū-ā-tiv), a. [= Sp. Pg. insinuativo; as insinuate + -ive.] 1. Making insinuations; hinting; insinuating.

Is a man conscionable? he is an hypocrite; . . . is he wisely insinuative? he is a flatterer. Bp. Hall, Great Impostor.

2. Stealing into the affections; ingratiating.

Any popular or insinuative carriage of himself. Bacon, Obs. on a Libel.

insinuator (in-sin'ū-ā-tor), n. [= Pg. insinuador, < LL. insinuator, an introducer, < L. insinu- are, bring in, insinuate: see insinuate.] One who or that which insinuates. Defoe.

insinuatory (in-sin′ū-ā-tō-ri), a. [< insinuate + -ory.] Insinuating; insinuative. Westminster Rev.

insipid (in-sip′id), a. [= F. insipide = Pr. insipid = Sp. insípido = Pg. It. insipido, < LL. insipidus, tasteless, < L. in- priv. + sapidus, having a taste, savory: see sapid.] 1. Without any taste; not exciting the sense of taste; without flavor or savor.

I could propose divers ways of bringing this to trial, there being several insipid bodies which I have found this way diversifiable. Boyle, Works, IV. 263.

2. Without a definite taste; having a taste which from its faintness and undecided character appears negative, insufficient, or slightly disagreeable; flat in taste.

A faint blossom and insipid fruit. Goldsmith, Taste.

Hence—3. Without power to excite interest or emotion; without attraction; uninteresting; dull; flat.

When liberty is gone,
Life grows insipid, and has lost its relish.
Addison, Cato, ii. 3.

A refined, insipid personage, however exalted in station, was his aversion. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, iv.

=Syn. 3. Lifeless, stale, tame, prosaic, stupid.

insipidity (in-si-pid′i-ti), n. [= F. insipidité = Pr. insipiditat, < LL. as if insipidita(t-)s*, < insipidus, tasteless: see insipid.] The quality of being insipid. (a) Tastelessness.

My friend led the way up the slopes of his olive-orchard, . . . and rewarded my curious palate with the insipidity of the olive which has not been salted.
The Century, XXX. 207.

(b) Dullness; lack of interest.

Dryden's lines shine strongly through the insipidity of Tate's. Pope.

insipidly (in-sip′id-li), adv. In an insipid manner; without spirit or life; without flavor.

insipidness (in-sip′id-nes), n. Insipidity. Boyle.

insipience (in-sip′i-ens), n. [< ME. insipience*, incypyens, < OF. insipience = Sp. Pg. insipiencia = It. insipienza, insipienzia, < L. insipientia, unwisdom, < insipien(t-)s, unwise: see insipient.] Lack of sapience or wisdom; folly; foolishness. [Rare.]

Whan in women be fownd no incypyens,
Than put hem in trust and confydens.
Songs and Carols (ed. Wright), p. 67.

Your accession is grateful, my most gentle lump of insipience. Shirley, Love Tricks, iii. 5.

insipient (in-sip′i-ent), a. and n. [= OF. insipient = Sp. Pg. It. insipiente, < L. insipien(t-)s, unwise, < in- priv. + sapien(t-)s, wise: see sapient.] I. a. Not sapient or wise; unwise; foolish. [Rare.]

There are very learned men who distinguished and put a great difference between the insipient man and the fool. Clarendon, Tracts. (Latham.)

II. n. An unwise person. [Rare.]

Verely, if he admitte the booke of Sapience to be true and autentike, I feare me it will go nye to proue hym an insipient for grauntyng that there is a purgatory.
Fryth, Works, p. 40.

insist (in-sist′), v. i. [< F. insister = Sp. Pg. insistir = It. insistere, < L. insistere, stand upon, follow, pursue, apply oneself to, persevere, persist, < in, in, on, + sistere, stand, < stare, stand: see state. Cf. assist, consist, desist, etc.] 1†. To stand or rest; find support: with on or upon.

The angles on one side insist upon the centres of the bottom of the cells [of a honeycomb] on the other side. Ray.

2. To rest, dwell, or dilate earnestly or repeatedly; urge: with on or upon: as, I must insist upon your coming.

We insist rather upon what was actual then what was profitable. Milton, Eikonoklastes, ix.

I shall not insist upon the clime nor soil of the country, its commodities, or discommodities.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 11.

3. To assert or argue emphatically; express a desire or a belief with urgency or persistence.

Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1, 245.

Now, as I have already insisted, the presence in our consciousness of the first principles of morality is an indubitable fact. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 73.

4†. To be urgent in action; proceed persistently; persevere.

Nor still insist
To afflict thyself in vain. Milton, S. A., l. 913.

He first trod this winepress, and we must insist in the same steps. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 70.

insistence (in-sis′tens), n. [= F. insistance = Sp. Pg. insistencia = It. insistenza, insistenzia; as insisten(t) + -ce.] 1. The act of insisting; urgent or persistent maintenance of an opinion, principle, right, or the like; perseverance in pressing or supporting anything.

He [Turgot] habitually corrected the headlong insistence of the revolutionary philosophers.
J. Morley, Burke, p. 173.

2. Persevering action; demonstrative persistence; pertinacity.

What tones were those that caught our own,
Filtered through light and distance,
And tossed them gayly to and fro
With such a sweet insistence?
H. P. Spofford, Poems, p. 14.

insistent (in-sis′tent), a. [= F. insistant = Pg. insistente, < L. insisten(t-)s, ppr. of insistere, insist: see insist.] 1†. Standing or resting on something.

That the breadth of the substruction be double to the insistent wall. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 19.

2. Urgent in dwelling upon anything; persistent in urging or maintaining.

The British shopkeeper has been insistent on a purchase.
The Century, XXI. 947.

I suspect that Virgil . . . was also an insistent questioner of every sagacious landholder.
D. G. Mitchell, Wet Days, Virgil.

Hence—3. Extorting attention or notice; coercively staring or prominent; vivid; intense.

A world of colonial and Queen Anne architecture, where conscious lines and insistent colors contributed to an effect of posing which she had never seen off the stage.
W. D. Howells, Annie Kilburn, x.

4. In ornith., standing on end: specifically said of the hind toe of a bird when its base is inserted so high on the shank that only its tip touches the ground: correlated with incumbent.

insistently (in-sis′tent-li), adv. In an insistent manner; pressingly.

"Then tell me what better I could do," said Gwendolen, insistently. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxxvi.

insisture† (in-sis′tūr), n. [< insist + -ure.] A dwelling or standing on something; fixedness.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order.
Shak., T. and C., i. 3, 87.

insitiency† (in-sish′i-en-si), n. [< L. in- priv. + sitien(t-)s, ppr. of sitire, thirst, < sitis, thirst.] Freedom from thirst.

The insitiency of a camel. Grew.

insition† (in-sish′on), n. [< L. insitio(n-), an ingrafting, < inserere, pp. insitus, sow or plant, implant, ingraft, < in, in, + serere, sow.] The insertion of a scion in a stock; ingraftment.

The flesh of one body transmuted by insition into another. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 3.

in situ (in sī′tū). [L.: in, in; situ, abl. of situs, site: see site.] In its site or position; in its original or proper location; in place; in the place which it occupied at the time it was formed or (in speaking of artificial constructions) built: in geological use applied to a mass of rock which is in its proper place, as a part of the formation to which it belongs, whether stratified or unstratified.

inskonse†, v. t. An obsolete form of ensconce.

insmite†, v. t. [ME. insmiten (awkwardly tr. L. incutere); < in-[1] + smite.] To strike in. Wyclif.

insnare, ensnare (in-, en-snãr′), v. t.; pret. and pp. insnared, ensnared, ppr. insnaring, ensnaring. [< in-[1], en-[1], + snare.] To take in a snare; allure; entrap.

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared. Job xxxiv. 30.

That bottled spider
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3, 243.

insnarer, ensnarer (in-, en-snãr′ėr), n. One that insnares.

insnaringly (in-snãr′ing-li), adv. So as to insnare.

insnarl† (in-snärl′), v. t. Same as ensnarl[2].

insobriety (in-sō-brī′e-ti), n. [= Pg. insobriedade; as in-[3] + sobriety.] Lack of sobriety; intemperateness; drunkenness.

No sooner had we parted than he had visibly lapsed again into hiccoughs, incoherency, and other ugly testimonials to insobriety.
Arch. Forbes, Souvenirs of some Continents, p. 121.

insociability† (in-sō-shia-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. insociabilité = Sp. insociabilidad = Pg. insociabilidade; as insociable + -ity: see -bility.] Unsociability. Warburton, Divine Legation, v. 4.

insociable† (in-sō′shia-bl), a. [= F. insociable = Sp. insociable = Pg. insociavel = It. insociabile, < L. insociabilis, that cannot be joined together, unsociable, < in- priv. + sociabilis, that can be joined together, sociable: see sociable.] 1. Unsociable; not inclined to society or conversation.

If this austere insociable life Change not your offer made in heat of blood.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2, 809.

2. Incapable of being associated or conjoined.

Lime and wood are insociable.
Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 19.

insociably† (in-sō′shia-bli), adv. Unsociably.

insociate† (in-sō′shi-āt), a. [< in-[3] + sociate.] Not associated; unsocial; solitary.

The most honoured state of man and wife
Doth far exceed the insociate virgin-life.
B. Jonson, The Barriers.

insolate (in′sō-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. insolated, ppr. insolating. [< L. insolatus, pp. of insolare (> Pg. Sp. insolar = F. insoler), place in the sun, expose to the sun, < in, in, + sol, sun: see sol, solar.] To expose to the rays of the sun; affect by exposure to the sun, as for drying, ripening, arousing or stimulating (as the vital forces of a patient), or the like.

Insolated paper retains the power of producing an impression for a very long period, if it is kept in an opaque tube hermetically closed.
★ W. R. Grove, Corr. of Forces, p. 125.

insolation (in-sō-lā′shon), n. [= F. insolation = Sp. insolación = Pg. insolação, < L. insolatio(n-), < insolare, place in the sun: see insolate.] 1. Exposure to the sun's rays; subjection to the influence of solar heat and light, as for drying, maturing, or the production of chemical action; in med., treatment by exposure to the sun, in order to stimulate the vital forces.

I am almost become confident that one of my thermometers, by such insolation as may be had in England from our stone walls, hath lost some inches of liquor.
Boyle, Works, VI. 394.

The insolation [of the ground in northern valleys] during the day interferes but slightly . . . with the equilibrium of air strata obtained during the night.
Science, III. 563.

2. A local injury of plants caused by exposure to too strong light, or to the rays of the sun concentrated as by inequalities in the glass of a greenhouse, producing excessively rapid evaporation which kills the part affected.—3. The state of being heated by the sun; the effect of exposure to the sun's rays; specifically, as applied to persons, sunstroke.

The comparative calmness of the atmosphere, the clearness of the sky, the dryness of the air, and the strong insolation which took place under these circumstances.
Encyc. Brit.

Disabled in the deserts by insolation produced by excessive heat. The Century, XXIX. 661.

in-sole (in′sōl), n. [< in[1] + sole[1].] 1. The inner sole of a boot or shoe: opposed to outsole. See cut under boot.—2. A thickness of some warm or water-proof material laid inside a shoe.

insolence (in′sō-lens), n. [< ME. insolence, < OF. (also F.) insolence = Sp. Pg. insolencia = It. insolenza, insolenzia, < L. insolentia, unaccustomedness, unusualness, excess, immoderation, arrogance, insolence, < insolen(t-)s, unaccustomed, unusual: see insolent.] 1†. The quality of being rare; unusualness. Spenser.—2. Overbearing or defiant behavior; scornful or presumptuous treatment of others; insulting speech or conduct.

Then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine.
Milton, P. L., i. 502.

O monster! mix'd of insolence and fear,
Thou dog in forehead, but in heart a deer!
Pope, Iliad, i. 297.

3. An insolent act; an instance of insolent treatment; an insult. [Rare.]

Loaded with fetters and insolences from the soldiers.
Fuller.

=Syn. 2. Pride, Presumption, etc. (see arrogance); rudeness, abusive language or conduct, sneering.

insolence† (in′sō-lens), v. t. [< insolence, n.] To treat with haughty contempt. [Rare.]

The bishops, who were first fouly insolenced and assaulted. Eikon Basilike.

insolency (in′sō-len-si), n. 1†. Same as insolence, 1. [Rare.]

Every evil example . . . is a scandal; because it invites others to do the like, leading them by the hand, taking off the strangeness and insolency of the act.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 277.

2. Insolent character or quality; manifestation of insolence. [Rare.]

No laws will serve to repress the pride and insolency of our days. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 476.

insolent (in′sō-lent), a. [< ME. insolent, < OF. (and F.) insolent = Sp. Pg. It. insolente, < L. insolen(t-)s, unaccustomed, unwonted, unusual, immoderate, excessive, arrogant, insolent, < in- priv. + solen(t-)s, ppr. of solere, be accustomed, be wont.] 1†. Unwonted; unusual; uncommon.

They admitted all men that desired it; . . . sometimes with some little restraint in great or insolent cases (as in the case of apostacy, in which the council of Arles denied absolution). Jer. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. 4.

2. Showing haughty disregard of others; overbearing; contemptuously impertinent.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!
Nest. How he describes himself!
Shak., T. and C., ii. 3, 218.

Does not the insolent soldier
Call my command his donative? and what can take More from our honour?
Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, v. 1.

3. Proceeding from insolence; insulting; supercilious: as, insolent words or behavior.

The rugged frowns and insolent rebuffs
Of knaves in office, partial in the work
Of distribution. Cowper, Task, iv. 411.

4. Producing the effect of insolence; excessive; unbearable. [Rare.]

I shall hate the insolent monotony of ocean all my days.
T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, viii.

5†. Unfrequented; lonely.

Where is lande unkept & insolent,
Take from the trunncke al clene until so hie
As beestes may by noon experiment
Attayne, and there let bowes multiplie.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 209.

=Syn. 2 and 3. Insolent, Insulting; abusive, impudent, contemptuous. Insolent is now chiefly used of language that is intentionally and grossly rude, defiant, or rebellious. Where it applies to conduct, the conduct includes language as the most offensive thing. Insulting is freely applicable to either words or deeds that are intended to lower a person's self-respect: as, an insulting gesture. Insolent generally implies pride, but insulting does not. A man may be insolent or insulting to his superior, his inferior, or his equal. See arrogance and affront, n.

insolently (in′sō-lent-li), adv. 1†. Unusually; strangely.

The interpreter of Hans Bloome names it [Tænia] the top of a pillar, but very insolently; it being indeed the small fascia part of the Doric architrave.
Evelyn, Architects and Architecture.

2. In an insolent manner; with contemptuous pride; haughtily; rudely; saucily.

insolible†, a. An obsolete form of insoluble.

insolid† (in-sol′id), a. [= OF. insolide; < L. insolidus, not solid, < in- priv. + solidus, solid: see solid.] Not solid; incoherent; flimsy.

The second defect in the eye is an insolid levity.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, II. 381.

insolidity (in-sō-lid′i-ti), n. [= OF. insolidité; as in-[3] + solidity.] Lack of solidity; weakness: as, the insolidity of a wall.

in solido (in sol′i-dō). [L.: in, in; solido, neut. abl. of solidus, solid: see solid.] Jointly. A number of persons are said to be liable in solido when they are liable severally to the same extent, each for the whole.

insolubility (in-sol-ū-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. insolubilité = Sp. insolubilidad = Pg. insolubilidade = It. insolubilità, < LL. insolubilita(t-)s, insolubility, < L. insolubilis, insoluble: see insoluble.] 1. Lack of solubility; incapability of being dissolved.

Cocaine itself is not employed for administration on account of its insolubility, but its salts dissolve in water readily and several are in use.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, II. 219.

2. Incapability of being solved, as a problem or a doubt; inexplicability.

insoluble (in-sol′ū-bl), a. and n. [< ME. insoluble*, insolible, < OF. (and F.) insoluble = Sp. insoluble = Pg. insoluvel = It. insolubile, < L. insolubilis, that cannot be loosed, < in- priv. + solubilis, that can be loosed: see soluble.] I. a. 1†. That cannot be loosed or undone.

Another prest, . . . the which is not maad vp the laws of fleischly maundement, but vp vertu of lyf insolible, or that may not be vndon. Wyclif, Heb. vii. 16.

2. Not soluble; incapable of being dissolved.

Absolutely insoluble bodies are, without exception, tasteless. G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 312.

3. Incapable of being solved or explained; not susceptible of solution or explanation.

Freres fele sithes to the folke that thei prechen
Meuen [move] motifs meny tymes insolibles and fallaces,
That bothe lered and lewed of here by-leyue douten.
Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 231.

For one great insoluble problem of astronomy or geology there are a thousand insoluble problems in the life, in the character, in the face of every man that meets you in the street. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 74.

II. n. A thing which is insoluble; a problem that cannot be solved.

This is an insolible;
If I strogel, slaundred shal I be;
To satisfye it is but impossible.
Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 43.

insolubleness (in-sol′ū-bl-nes), n. Insolubility. Boyle, Works, III. 624.

insolvable (in-sol′va-bl), a. [= F. insolvable; as in-[3] + solvable.] 1. Not solvable; incapable of being solved or explained: as, an insolvable problem or difficulty.—2. Incapable of being paid or discharged. Johnson.—3. Incapable of being loosed.

To guard with bands
Insolvable these gifts thy care demands:
Lest, in thy slumbers on the wat'ry main,
The hand of rapine make our bounty vain.
★ Pope, Odyssey, viii.

insolvency (in-sol′ven-si), n. [= OF. insolvence = Sp. Pg. insolvencia; as insolven(t) + -cy. Cf. solvency.] 1. The condition of being insolvent; want of means or of sufficiency for the discharge of all debts or obligations; bankruptcy; failure of resources: as, the insolvency of a person or of an estate. When used of traders or merchants, and in bankrupt and insolvent laws generally, insolvency signifies the inability of a person to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business. But the mere fact that a debtor having ample assets is unable in an emergency to pay every existing obligation as it becomes due, is not regarded as insolvency if he is able to avoid making any actual default by obtaining further credit, or if the exigency is a general panic suspending all business, and his suspension of payment is temporary and terminates with the restoration of a reasonable degree of general confidence.

2. A proceeding for the application of all the assets to the payment of debts by judicial authority: as, a petition in insolvency.—Assignee in insolvency. See assignee.—Discharge in insolvency. See discharge.= Syn. Bankruptcy, etc. See failure.

insolvent (in-sol′vent), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. insolvente; as in-[3] + solvent.] I. a. 1. Not solvent; unable or inadequate to satisfy all claims; bankrupt: as, an insolvent debtor or estate.

When a person is unable to pay his debts, he is understood to be insolvent. Thus an instrument executed by an indebted person, reciting that "he is indebted to divers persons in considerable sums of money, which he is at present unable to pay in full," admits his insolvency.
Cunningham v. Norton, 125 U. S., 77.

We see that most nations are insolvent, cannot satisfy their own wants, have an ambition out of all proportion to their practical force. Emerson, Self-reliance.

Of positive truth he was born insolvent.
J. T. Fields, Underbrush, p. 72.

2. Of or respecting insolvency or bankruptcy: as, insolvent laws.—Insolvent law, a law providing for the release of a debtor from imprisonment for debt, or from debt itself, on a surrender of his property. The term is often defined as extending only to laws which do this at the application of the debtor. In the United States the term has recently become extended to cover State laws which release the debtor at the application of either party, in contradistinction to the United States or national bankruptcy laws, which, wherever in force, suspend the State laws to a considerable extent. See bankruptcy laws, under bankruptcy.

II. n. A debtor who is not solvent. See insolvency.

insomnia (in-som′ni-ä), n. [= F. insomnie = Sp. insomnio = Pg. insomnia = It. insonnio, < L. insomnia, sleeplessness, < insomnis, sleepless, < in- priv. + somnus, sleep: see somnolent.] Sleeplessness; inability to sleep, especially when chronic.

Various cases are on record in which absolute insomnia has lasted not only for days but even for weeks, interrupted only by mere snatches of sleep. Quain, Med. Dict.

insomnious (in-som′ni-us), a. [< L. insomniosus, < insomnia, sleeplessness: see insomnia.] Affected with insomnia; sleepless, or restless in sleep: as, insomnious patients. Blount.

insomnolence (in-som′nō-lens), n. [= Pg. insomnolencia; as in-[3] + somnolence.] Sleeplessness; insomnia. [Rare.]

Twelve by the kitchen clock!—still restless!—One! O, Doctor, for one of thy comfortable draughts!—Two! here's a case of insomnolence! Southey, The Doctor, vi. A. 1.

insomuch (in′sō-much′), adv. [Orig. written separately, in so much. Cf. inasmuch.] To such a degree; in such wise; so: followed by that, and formerly sometimes by as.

There wee found a mightie riuer, insomuch that wee were constrained to imbarke our selues, and to saile ouer it. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 113.

And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly. Mat. xxvii. 14.

insouciance (in-sö′si-ans, F. aṅ-sö-syoṅs′), n. [< F. insouciance, < insouciant, careless, heedless: see insouciant.] The quality of being insouciant; heedless indifference or unconcern; carelessness of feeling or manner.

It was precisely this gay insouciance, this forgetfulness that the world existed for any but a single class in it, and this carelessness of the comfort of others, that made the catastrophe [the French Revolution] possible.
Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 164.

insouciant (in-sö′si-ant, F. aṅ-sö-syoṅ′), a. [< F. insouciant, careless, heedless, < in- priv. + souciant, ppr. of soucier, care, < souci, care.] Destitute of care or forethought; heedless of consequences or of the future; indifferent; unconcerned.

What race would not be indolent and insouciant when things are so arranged that they derive no advantage from forethought or exertion? J. S. Mill.

insoul (in-sōl′), v. t. [< in-[1] + soul.] 1. See ensoul. Jer. Taylor.—2. To place one's soul, or the affections of one's soul, in.

Modest she was, and so lovely; That whosoever look't but stedfastly upon her, could not, but insoul himself in her. Feltham, Resolves, i. 9.

inspan (in′span), v.; pret. and pp. inspanned, ppr. inspanning. [< D. inspannen (= G. einspannen), yoke, as draft-oxen, < in, in, + spannen, stretch, tie, join, = E. span: see in[1] and span.] I. trans. To yoke to a vehicle; make ready by yoking up: as, to inspan the oxen or the wagon. See outspan. [S. African Eng.]

The oxen and they [the Kafirs] reached us undrowned, however, and were inspanned to our cart.
Froude, Sketches, p. 221.

II. intrans. To yoke oxen, or other draft-animals, to a cart, especially in preparation for a journey. [S. African Eng.]

inspect (in-spekt′), v. [= F. inspecter, < L. inspectare, look at, observe, view, freq. of inspicere, pp. inspectus, look at, inspect, < in, in, on, at, + specere, look, view: see species, spectacle, etc. Cf. aspect, expect, etc.] I. trans. To view closely and critically; examine (a thing or place) in order to ascertain its quality or condition; especially, to examine officially in order to make a formal report.

The eye of the mistress was wont to make her pewter shine, and to inspect every part of her household furniture as much as her looking-glass.
Addison, Pretty Disaffection.

=Syn. To scrutinize, investigate, oversee.

II.† intrans. To look closely; examine: with into. Davies.

Their General . . . was a great Mandarin, and was the person appointed by the King to inspect into our English Traffick. Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 79.

He had not more vigilantly inspected into her sentiments than he had guarded his own from a similar scrutiny.
Miss Burney, Cecilia, i. 1.

inspect† (in′spekt), n. [< L. inspectus, a looking at, inspection, < inspicere, pp. inspectus, look at: see inspect, v.] Inspection.

Not so the Man of philosophic eye,
And inspect sage. Thomson, Autumn, l. 1134.

inspectingly (in-spek′ting-li), adv. In an examining manner. ★ inspection (in-spek′shon), n. [< ME. inspeccioun, < OF. (and F.) inspection = Pr. inspection = Sp. inspección = Pg. inspecção = It. ispezione, inspezione, < L. inspectio(n-), an examination, inspection, < inspicere, pp. inspectus, look at: see inspect.] The act of inspecting; critical examination; close or careful survey; specifically, a formal or official inquiry by actual observation into the state, efficiency, safety, quality, etc., of something of special moment, as troops, police, buildings, steam-vessels, drugs, etc.

Lat hym advert and have inspeccioun
What ther befyl in Awstynes tyme.
Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 137.

Conceal yoursel' as well 's ye can Frae critical dissection;
But keek through ev'ry other man
Wi' sharpen'd, sly inspection.
Burns, To a Young Friend.

=Syn. Investigation, Search, etc. See examination.

inspectional (in-spek′shon-al), a. [< inspection + -al.] Of or pertaining to inspection; giving results by direct inspection: applied to an instrument from which results are read directly or by inspection, no reduction or calculation being required.

inspection-car (in-spek′shon-kär), n. On railroads, a large hand-car provided with seats, or a platform car fitted with a hood and seats designed to be pushed before an engine, for use in inspecting the road.

inspective (in-spek′tiv), a. [< LL. inspectivus, contemplative, considering, < L. inspicere, pp. inspectus, look at: see inspect.] Pertaining to inspection; inspecting; that may be inspected.

These three draughts upon paper belong as much to the ordonance as the disposition, shewing and describing the measures and dimensions of the inspective parts, order, and position. Evelyn, Architects and Architecture.

inspector (in-spek′tor), n. [= F. inspecteur = Sp. Pg. inspector = It. ispettore, inspettore, < L. inspector, one who views or observes, < inspicere, pp. inspectus, view: see inspect.] 1. One who inspects or oversees; one whose duty it is to secure by supervision the proper performance of work of any kind, or to ascertain by examination the quality or condition of the work, or of any article offered for sale or transfer; a public officer charged with such duties: as, the inspectors of election or of police; an inspector of weights and measures. Specifically —2. An initiate in the mysteries of Eleusis; an epopt or seer.

These doctrines were conveyed under allegories and symbols, and . . . the completely initiated were called ★inspectors. R. P. Knight, Anc. Art and Myth. (1876), p. 5.

inspectorate (in-spek′tọr-āt), n. [< inspector + -ate[3].] 1. A district under the charge or supervision of an inspector; specifically, one of the two larger administrative districts into which western Greenland is divided.—2. A body of inspectors or overseers.

inspector-general (in-spek′tọr-jen′ē-ral), n. An officer charged with the oversight of some system of inspection, as that of an army, a class of public works or of machinery, etc.—Supervising inspector-general of steam-vessels, an officer of the Department of Commerce and Labor of the United States, who, with the aid of a board of inspectors, administers the steamboat-inspection laws.

inspectorial (in-spek-tō′ri-al), a. [< inspector + -ial.] Of or pertaining to an inspector; relating to inspectors.

We are then confronted by a question which was once proposed in an inspectorial report. The Times (London).

inspectorship (in-spek′tọr-ship), n. [< inspector + -ship.] The office of an inspector; the district embraced under the jurisdiction of an inspector.—Deed of inspectorship, an agreement between an embarrassed debtor and his creditors, providing for forbearance, and the carrying on of the business meanwhile by the debtor, under the inspection and control of a committee of the creditors, called inspectors, to whom power is usually given to extend the period fixed by the deed.

inspectress (in-spek′tres), n. [= F. inspectrice; as inspector + -ess.] A female inspector.

Inspectress General of the royal geer.
Wolcot, Peter Pindar, p. 36.

insperse† (in-spėrs′), v. t. [< L. inspersus, pp. of inspergere, scatter into or upon, < in, in, on, + spargere, scatter: see sparse. Cf. asperse, disperse.] To sprinkle upon. Bailey.

inspersion† (in-spėr′shọn), n. [< LL. inspersio(n-), a scattering or sprinkling upon, < L. inspergere, pp. inspersus, scatter upon: see insperse.] The act of sprinkling; a sprinkling. Chapman, Iliad, xi.

inspeximus† (in-spek′si-mus), n. [L., we have inspected (1st pers. pl. perf. ind. act. of inspicere, look into, inspect: see inspect): the first word in many old charters and letters patent.] An exemplification; a royal grant.

An inspeximus consists of a recital that a previous document has been inspected, and a confirmatory regrant thereof. N. and Q., 6th ser., XII. 411.

insphere, v. t. See ensphere.

in-sphere (in′sfēr), n. [< in(scribed) + sphere.] An inscribed sphere.

inspirable (in-spīr′a-bl), a. [= Sp. inspirable = Pg. inspiravel; as inspire + -able.] 1. Capable of being inspired or breathed; that may be drawn into the lungs; inhalable, as air or vapors.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fuliginous steams. Harvey.

2. That may become inspired or infused with something; capable of being affected by or as if by inspiration.

inspirant (in-spīr′ant), n. [< L. inspiran(t-)s, ppr. of inspirare, inspire: see inspire.] An inspirer; one who inspires or incites. [Rare.]

He presented and read the following lines which he [Hartley Coleridge] had written, . . . Aunt Charles being the inspirant. Caroline Fox, Journal, p. 8.

inspiration (in-spi-rā′shọn), n. [< ME. inspiracioun, < OF. (also F.) inspiration = Pr. inspiratio = Sp. inspiración = Pg. inspiração = It. ispirazione, inspirazione, < LL. inspiratio(n-), inspiration, < L. inspirare, inspire: see inspire.] 1. The act of inspiring or breathing in; a drawing into the lungs, as of air; inhalation; the first movement in the act of respiration, followed by expiration.—2. A breathing or infusion into the mind or soul; an awakening or creation of thought, purpose, or any mental condition, by some specific external influence; intellectual exaltation; an inexplicable cognition, as the knowledge of an axiom, according to a priori philosophers.

Thei hopen that thorghe inspiracioun of God and of him thei schulle have the better Conseille. Mandeville, Travels, p. 16.

The inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. Job xxxii. 8.

Childhood, that weeps at the story of suffering, that shudders at the picture of wrong, brings down its inspiration "from God, who is our home." O. W. Holmes, Essays, p. 92.

3. In theol., an influence directly and immediately exerted by the Spirit of God upon the soul of man: in Christian theology, used especially with reference to the Old and New Testaments, regarded as written under the direct influence of God exercised upon the thoughts and feelings of the writers. This doctrine of the inspiration of the Scriptures has been maintained in various forms, and with various definitions of the nature and extent of the divine influence, the principal being the following: (a) verbal inspiration, the immediate communication or dictation to the writers of every word written; (b) plenary inspiration, inspiration which is full, complete, entire: involving the doctrine that the Bible was inspired in all its parts and the writers in all their faculties, so that every statement of the inspired writers, whether moral and religious, or only chronological or scientific, is to be accepted as true and authoritative; (c) moral inspiration, inspiration only for a definite purpose, namely, the moral and spiritual redemption and development of the race, so that the Bible is to be accepted as authoritative only in matters of religious faith and practice; (d) dynamical inspiration, inspiration regarded as acting upon and through the natural faculties: in contrast to (e) mechanical inspiration, inspiration regarded as an influence which merely uses human organs as an instrument for expression. Thus, dynamical inspiration is nearly equivalent to moral inspiration, the one word indicating, however, rather the method employed, the other the themes to which inspiration is supposed to be limited; while mechanical inspiration is nearly synonymous with verbal inspiration.

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. [In Wyclif, "Al scripture of God ynspired is profitable," etc.; in the revised version, "Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable," etc.] 2 Tim. iii. 16.

Inspiration then, according to its manifestation in Scripture, is Dynamical and not Mechanical: the human powers of the divine messenger act according to their natural laws, even when these powers are supernaturally strengthened. Man is not converted into a mere machine, even in the hand of God. Westcott, Introd. to Study of Gospels, Int., p. 14.

4. The state or condition of being inspired; determination or purpose excited by a specific external influence; communicated bent of mind.

The knights . . .
On Emily with equal ardour look,
And from her eyes their inspiration took.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., ii. 433.

5. That which is impressed by an inspiring influence; a thought or an emotion borne in upon one by an occult prompting or impulse.

Holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shak., M. of V., i. 2, 31.

The age which we now live in is not an age of inspirations and impulses. Abp. Sharp, Works, IV. iv.

It is ever an inspiration, God only knows whence; a sudden, undated perception of eternal right coming into and correcting things that were wrong; a perception that passes through thousands as readily as through one. Emerson, Misc., p. 408.

inspirational (in-spi-rā′shọn-al), a. [< inspiration + -al.] Of or pertaining to inspiration; partaking of inspiration.

In their inspirational states they [the sacred writers] were sometimes dynamical, sometimes mechanical. N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 321.

inspirationist (in-spi-rā′shọn-ist), n. [< inspiration + -ist.] One who believes in the inspiration of the Scriptures, or in direct supernatural prompting of any kind.

inspirator (in′spi-rā-tọr), n. [= F. inspirateur = Sp. Pg. inspirador = It. ispiratore, inspiratore, < LL. inspirator, inspirer, < L. inspirare, breathe in, inspire: see inspire.] In a steam-generator, a double injector, or two combined injectors, the one raising the water from the pump-chambers or reservoirs and delivering it to the other, which forces it into the boiler. Instead of delivering the water to the boiler, the second injector might throw the water outboard, in which mode of operation it would be an ejector, and it is sometimes so called. See injector.

inspiratory (in-spīr′a-tọ-ri or in′spi-rā-tọ-ri), a. [< inspire + -atory.] Pertaining to inspiration or inhalation.

inspire (in-spīr′), v.; pret. and pp. inspired, ppr. inspiring. [< ME. inspiren, ynspyren, enspiren, < OF. inspirer, espirer, F. inspirer = Pr. Sp. Pg. inspirar = It. inspirare, ispirare, < L. inspirare, blow or breathe into or upon, animate, excite, inflame, < in, in, + spirare, breathe: see spirit. Cf. aspire, conspire, expire, etc.] I. trans. 1. To breathe in; draw into the lungs; inhale: as, to inspire pure air: opposed to expire.

By means of sulphurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty. Harvey.

It seems as if the intellect resembled that law of nature by which we now inspire, now expire the breath. Emerson, Intellect.

2. To breathe into; infuse by or as if by breathing.

Her harty wordes so deepe into the mynd
Of the yong Damzell sunke, that great desire
Of warlike armes in her forthwith they tynd,
And generous stout courage did inspyre.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iii. 57.

Still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. Bacon, Truth (ed. 1887).

The buildings have an aspect lugubrious,
That inspires a feeling of awe and terror
Into the heart of the beholder.
Longfellow, Golden Legend, vi.

Hence—3. To actuate or influence; animate; affect, rouse, or control by an infused, animating, or exalting influence.

Zephirus eek with his swete breethe
Enspired hath in every holte and heethe
The tendre croppes.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 7

What zeal, what fury, hath inspir'd thee now?
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 3, 229.

Descend, ye Nine, descend and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire.
Pope, St. Cecilia's Day, l. 2.

The expression, the sentiment, the thought, the soul, which inspires the work.
Sumner, Speech, Cambridge, Aug. 27, 1846.

Specifically—4. To guide or control by divine influence; instruct or infuse with spiritual or divine knowledge.

A prophet then, inspir'd by heav'n, arose,
And points the crime, and thence derives the woes.
Pope, Iliad, i. 498.

Any one is inspired, as we now speak, just as far as he is raised internally, in thought, feeling, perception, or action, by a Divine movement within.
Bushnell, Sermons for New Life, p. 30.

II. intrans. 1. To inhale air; draw air into the lungs: opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopped, it suddenly yields to nature.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 25.

2†. To blow; blow in.

Her yellow lockes, crisped like golden wyre,
About her shoulders weren loosely shed,
And, when the winde emongst them did inspyre,
They waved like a penon wyde dispred.
Spenser, F. Q., II. iii. 30.

inspired (in-spīrd′), p. a. 1. That is or has been inhaled; taken into the lungs: as, inspired air.—2. Actuated, guided, or controlled by divine influence; informed, instructed, or directed by the Holy Spirit: as, an inspired teacher.—3. Produced under the direction or influence of inspiration: as, the inspired writings (that is, the Scriptures).

inspirer (in-spīr′ėr), n. One who or that which inspires.

Inspirer and hearer of prayer,
Thou Shepherd and Guardian of thine.
Toplady, Hymn.

inspiring† (in-spīr′ing), n. [Verbal n. of inspire.] Inspiration.

Attributed to a secret instinct and inspiring . . . touching the happinesse thereby to ensue in time to come. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 207.

inspiringly (in-spīr′ing-li), adv. In an inspiring manner; in such a way as to inspire, as with courage, hope, etc.

inspirit (in-spir′it), v. t. [< in-[2] + spirit. Cf. inspire.] To infuse or excite spirit within; enliven; animate; give new life to; encourage; invigorate.

But a discreet use of proper and becoming ceremonies . . . inspirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xiii.

The life and literature of a people may be inspirited, stimulated, modified, but not habitually sustained and nourished, by exotic food or the dried fruits of remote ages. G. P. Marsh, Hist. Eng. Lang., i.

=Syn. To inspire, rouse, cheer, stimulate, fire.

inspissate (in-spis′āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. inspissated, ppr. inspissating. [< LL. inspissatus, pp. of inspissare*, thicken, < L. in, in, + spissare, thicken: see spissate.] To thicken, as a fluid, by evaporation; bring to greater consistence by evaporation or admixture with a solid.

Wine sugred inebriateth less than wine pure — the cause is, for that the sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easie to resolve into vapour. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 726.

inspissate (in-spis′āt), a. [< LL. inspissatus, thickened: see the verb.] Thick; inspissated.

inspissation (in-spi-sā′shọn), n. [< inspissate + -ion.] The act of inspissating, or the state of being inspissated; increased consistence, as of a fluid substance.

What more opposite to subtilization and rarefaction than inspissation and condensation?
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 881.

in-square (in′skwār), n. [< in(scribed) + square.] An inscribed square.

★inst. An abbreviation (a) of the adjective instant; (b) of instrumental.

instability (in-stā-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. instabilité = Sp. instabilidad = Pg. instabilidade = It. instabilità, < L. instabilita(t-)s, unsteadiness, < instabilis, unsteady: see instable.] The state of being unstable; want of stability or firmness, physical or moral; liability to fall, fail, give way, or suffer change.

The uncertainty, instability, and fluctuating state of human life, which is aptly represented by sailing the ocean. Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

instable† (in-stā′bl), a. [= F. instable = Sp. instable = Pg. instavel = It. instabile, < L. instabilis, unsteady, < in- priv. + stabilis, steady, stable: see stable[2].] Not stable; unstable.

instableness† (in-stā′bl-nes), n. Unstableness; instability. Howell.

install, instal (in-stâl′), v. t.; pret. and pp. installed, ppr. installing. [Formerly also enstall; < F. installer = Sp. instalar = Pg. installar = It. installare, < ML. installare, put in a place or seat, < in, in, + stallum, < OHG. stal, a place, = E. stall: see stall.] 1. To place in a seat; give a place to.

Mr. Weller, after duly installing Mr. Pickwick and Mr. Winkle inside, took his seat on the box by the driver. Dickens, Pickwick, xxxix.

2. To set, place, or instate in an office, rank, or order; invest with any charge, office, or rank with the customary ceremonies.

And, to be had in the more reputacion among the people, he [the cardinal] determined to be installed or inthronised at Yorke with all the pompe that might be. Hall, Hen. VIII., an. 22.

3. To place in position for service or use. [A Gallicism.]

This road has recently been installed by the . . . Electric Railway and Motor Company. Science, XIII. 116.

installation (in-stâ-lā′shọn), n. [< F. installation = Sp. instalación = Pg. installação = It. installazione, < ML. installatio(n-), < installare, install: see install.] 1. The act of installing; the formal induction of a person into a rank, an order, or an official position: as, the installation of a Knight of the Garter; the installation of a clergyman over a charge. In the Church of England the installation of a canon or prebendary of a cathedral consists in solemnly inducting him into his stall in the choir and his place in the chapter. The installation of an archbishop or a bishop is called enthronization. Installation differs from institution, which is the act by which a bishop commits the spiritual care of a parish to the clergyman nominated, and also from induction into a parish, which gives him temporal possession of the goods and income annexed to the cure of souls. In non-episcopal churches installation is a religious service placing the minister elect over his particular charge, and differs from ordination in that the latter inducts the clergyman into the pastoral office generally, while installation places him over the particular church or parish to which he is called: he is ordained but once; he is installed whenever he takes a new parish.

2. A placing in position for service or use; also, a complete mechanical apparatus or "plant" in position and ready for use: especially used of electrical apparatus. [A Gallicism.]

instalment, installment (in-stâl′mẹnt), n. [< install + -ment.] 1. The act of installing or giving possession of an office with the usual ceremonies or solemnities; installation.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal. Shak., Rich. III., iii. 1, 163.

2. The seat in which one is installed. [Rare.]

The several chairs of order look you scour
With juice of balm and every precious flower.
Each fair instalment, coat, and several crest,
With loyal blazon, evermore be bless'd!
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5, 67.

3. A partial payment on account of a debt due; one of several parts into which a debt is divided for payment at different times: as, to pay for a purchase by or in instalments; to sell goods on instalments (that is, on condition of taking pay by instalments, sometimes with a stipulation that in default of payment of an instalment the seller may retake the goods and keep by way of forfeiture what has been paid).—4. A part of anything produced or furnished in advance of the remainder; one of a number of parts produced at different times: as, to publish a novel or to deliver stores in or by instalments.

An acquisition of exclusive privilege may be an assertion of a right which, if the surrounding classes were already free, would look like usurpation, but which, when they are downtrodden, gives a glimpse and is itself an instalment of liberty. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 485.

Instalment plan, a system adopted by some traders in substantial articles, such as furniture, sewing-machines, pianos, etc., by which the seller retains the ownership until payment, and stipulates for the right to retake the article, without return of some or any part of what has already been paid, if the buyer makes default in any instalment.

instamp (in-stamp′), v. t. Same as enstamp.

instance (in′stạns), n. [< ME. instaunce, < OF. ★(and F.) instance = Pr. instanssa, instancia = Sp. Pg. instancia = It. istanza, instanza, istanzia, instanzia, < L. instantia, a being near, presence, also perseverance, earnestness, importunity, urgency, LL. also objection, instance, < instan(t-)s, urgent: see instant.] 1†. Presence; present time.

Thou ne shalt nat demen it as prescience of thinges to comen, but thou shalt demen it more rygtfully that it is science of presence or of instaunce that neuer ne fayleth. Chaucer, Boëthius, p. 174.

2. A happening or occurring; occurrence; occasion: as, it was correct in the first instance; a court of first instance (that is, of primary jurisdiction).—3. A case occurring; a case offered as an exemplification or a precedent; an example; originally, a case offered to disprove a universal assertion: as, this has happened in three instances.

It is almost without instance contradictory, that ever any government was disastrous that was in the hands of learned governors. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 17.

With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7, 156.

As to the puff oblique, or puff by implication, it is too various and extensive to be illustrated by an instance. Sheridan, The Critic, i. 2.

Hence—4†. Evidence; proof; token.

I have receiv'd
A certain instance that Glendower is dead.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1, 103.

For instance of thy safety,
I offer thee my hand. Ford, Perkin Warbeck, i. 3.

5†. An impelling motive; influence; cause.

But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 2, 119.

6†. The process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years. Ayliffe, Parergon.

7. In Scots law, that which may be insisted on at one diet or course of probation.—8. The act or state of being instant or urgent; insistence; solicitation; urgency. [Now only archaic or technical except in the phrase at the instance of.]

The puple criede to the Lord with gret instaunce. Wyclif, Judith iv. 8 (Oxf.).

It becomes vs Councellors better to vse instance for our friend then for the Iudges to sentence at instance. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 235.

But, Mr. Todd, surely there is no such instance in the business that ye could no' wait and look about you. Galt.

At the instance of, at the solicitation or suggestion of.

Edmund Earl of Arundel, John Daniel, and Thomas Micheldene, at the Instance of Mortimer, are all three beheaded. Baker, Chronicles, p. 112.

Causes of instance, causes which proceed at the solicitation of some party.—For instance, for example: introducing a case to illustrate a general statement.—Instance court, a branch of the former court of admiralty in England, distinct from the prize-court, and having jurisdiction in cases of maritime contracts and torts committed at sea, or intimately connected with maritime subjects. See admiralty court, under admiralty.—Instance side of the court, a district court of the United States sitting in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction in admiralty to determine questions of private right, etc., as distinguished from prize causes.=Syn. 3. Pattern, Model, etc. See example.

instance (in′stạns), v.; pret. and pp. instanced, ppr. instancing. [< instance, n.] I. trans. 1. To cite as an instance; adduce in illustration or confirmation; mention as an example.

I shall not instance an abstruse author. Milton, Eikonoklastes.

It is not a natural, but a religious sobriety, and may be instanced in fasting or abstinence from some kinds of meat. Jer. Taylor, Works, I., Pref.

He instances some lewd Practices at Feasts, and by the bye touches the Nobility. Congreve, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, xi., Arg.

2. To furnish an instance or example of; exemplify; manifest. [Rare.]

Never think yourself safe because you do your duty in ninety-nine points; it is the hundredth which is to be the ground of your self-denial, which must evidence, or rather instance and realize, your faith. J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 68.

II.† intrans. To take or receive example or examples; give or find illustration: followed by in.

This story doth not only instance in kingdoms, but in families too. Jer. Taylor.

A teacher . . . (I might instance in St. Patrick's dean) Too often rails to gratify his spleen.
Cowper, Charity, l. 499.

instancy (in′stạn-si), n. Instance; insistency.

Those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 10.

You will bear me out with what instancy I besought you to depart. R. L. Stevenson, The Dynamiter, p. 146.

instant (in′stạnt), a. and n. [< OF. (and F.) instant = Sp. Pg. It. instante, < L. instan(t-)s, standing by, being near, present, also urgent, importunate, ppr. of instare, stand upon, press upon, urge, pursue, insist, < in, on, upon, + stare, stand: see state.] I. a. 1. Present; current; now passing: as, on the 8th of June instant; the 10th instant (that is, the 10th day "in the present month," Latin instante mense). [Now rare or obsolete except as opposed to ultimo or proximo after the name of a month, or with the word month understood (then often abbreviated inst.).]

I never knew
The perfect treasure thou brought'st with thee more Than at this instant minute.
Middleton, Chaste Maid, ii. 1.

The bride-day, you say, is to be on the thirtieth of the instant month. Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, xxxvii.

2. Immediate; with no interval of time intervening; instantaneous.

The wreath he won drew down an instant curse.
Cowper, Charity, l. 61.

The victories of character are instant.
Emerson, Conduct of Life.

3†. Immediate in succession; very next.

Upon the instant morrow of her nuptials.
Marston, Insatiate Countesse, v.

4. Insistent; urgent; earnest; pressing. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season.
2 Tim. iv. 2.

We are too much wearied and disquieted with the importunate and instant complaints of our subiects.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 161.

Say our rites are instant. B. Jonson, Sejanus, v. 1.

II. n. 1. A particular point of time regarded as present.

I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber-window.
Shak., Much Ado, ii. 2, 16.

The great rule, methinks, should be, to manage the instant in which we stand with fortitude, equanimity, and moderation. Steele, Spectator, No. 374.

2. A point in duration; a moment; a very small period or interval of time: as, he will return in an instant.

This gracious all-commanding beauty fades in an instant. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 536.

An instant . . . is that which takes up the time of only one idea in our minds without the succession of another, wherein therefore we perceive no succession at all.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xiv. 10.

3†. Application; instance.

Upon her instant unto the Romanes for aide.
Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 687.

=Syn. 2. Minute, etc. See moment.

instant† (in′stạnt), adv. [< instant, a.] Instantly; very soon.

Here he will instant be; let's walk a turn.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, i. 2.

Instant he flew with hospitable haste.
Pope, Odyssey, i. 157.

instant† (in′stạnt), v. t. [< OF. instanter, press upon, < L. instan(t-)s, pp. of instare, press upon: see instant, a.] To importune; urge.

Pilate would shed no innocent blood, but laboured to mitigate the bishops' fury, and instanted them, as they were religious, to shew godly favour. Bp. Bale, Select Works, p. 242.

instantaneity (in″stạn-tā-nē′i-ti), n. [< instantane-ous + -ity.] The quality of being instantaneous; instantaneousness. Shenstone.

instantaneous (in-stạn-tā′nē-us), a. [< ML. instantaneus,* instantaneous, < L. instan(t-)s, instant: see instant and -aneous. Cf. momentaneous, contemporaneous, etc.] 1. Done or produced in an instant; occurring or acting without any perceptible lapse of time.

The work is done by instantaneous call;
Converts at once are made, or not at all.
Crabbe, Works, II. 65.

2. In mech., existing in or referring to an instant of time; momentary: as, instantaneous position, displacement, velocity, acceleration, etc. (that is, the position, etc., at any instant).—Instantaneous axis, instantaneous sliding axis. See axis[1].—Instantaneous center of rolling. See center[1].—Instantaneous photograph. See photography.

instantaneously (in-stạn-tā′nē-us-li), adv. In an instant; in a moment; in an indivisible point of duration.

instantaneousness (in-stạn-tā′nē-us-nes), n. The character of being instantaneous.

instantany†, a. [< ML. instantaneus:* see instantaneous.] Instantaneous.

An instantany and entire creation of the world.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 10.

instanter (in-stan′tẹr), adv. [< L. instanter, urgently, pressingly, ML. also presently, at once, 〈 instan(t-)s, present, urgent: see instant, a.] At the present time; immediately; without delay: as, the party was compelled to plead instanter. When used of legal proceedings, it is usually deemed to mean within twenty-four hours. In some jurisdictions, when said of an act to be done in open court, it is construed to mean before the rising of the court for the day; of any other act affecting the record, before the hour for closing the clerk's office for the day.

Ay, marry will I, and that instanter.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 84.

instantial (in-stan'shal), a. [〈 instance (L. instantia) + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of an instance or example; illustrating by instances. [Rare.]

At length all these are found to be instantial cases of this great law of attraction acting in various modes.
Theodore Parker, Sermons.

instantly (in'stant-li), adv. 1†. At the same time; simultaneously.

He . . . chid his truant youth with such a grace
As if he master'd there a double spirit
Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 2, 55.

2. Immediately after; without any intervening time: as, to be instantly killed.

Be not too hasty when ye face the enemy,
Nor too ambitious to get honour instantly.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

3†. With urgency; insistently; earnestly; assiduously.

And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this. Luke vii. 4.

instar (in-stär'), v. t.; pret. and pp. instarred, ppr. instarring. [〈 in-[1] + star.] 1. To set or adorn with stars or with brilliants; star.

Where pansies mixt with daisies shine,
And asphodels instarr'd with gold.
W. Harte, The Ascetic.

2. To make a star of; set as a star.

Our heart is high instarr'd in brighter spheres.
Ford, Love's Sacrifice, iv. 2.

instate (in-stāt'), v. t.; pret. and pp. instated, ppr. instating. [Formerly also enstate; 〈 in-[2] + state.] 1. To set or place; establish, as in a rank or condition.

Hard was the thing that he could not persuade,
In the king's favour he was so instated.
Drayton, Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Do what you please — only oust Roguery and instate Honesty. T. Winthrop, Cecil Dreeme, xvii.

2†. To invest.

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do instate and widow you withal.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1, 249.

He knew the place to which he was to go
Had larger titles, more triumphant wreathes To instate him with. Webster, Monumental Column.

instatement (in-stāt'ment), n. [〈 instate + -ment.] The act of instating; establishment.

We expect an instatement of the latter.
Hervey, Meditations, I. 83.

in statu pupillari (in stā'tū pū-pi-lā'rī). [L.: in, in; statu, abl. of status, condition, state; pupillari, abl. of pupillaris, pupilary: see pupilary.] In the English universities, in a state of pupilage; subject to collegiate laws, discipline, and officers.

in statu quo (in stā'tū kwō). [L.: in, in; statu, abl. of status, condition, state; quo, abl. of qui, who, which.] In the condition in which (it was before): a part of the phrase in statu quo ante fuit, or ante bellum, in the condition in which it was before, or before the war, used with reference to the restoration of any person or property to the situation existing at a previous time (in this case, sometimes, in statu quo ante), or to the maintenance of the present situation unchanged.

instaurate† (in-stâ'rāt), v. t. [〈 L. instauratus, pp. of instaurare (〉 It. instaurare = Sp. Pg. instaurar = F. instaurer, 〉 E. instaure, and ult. instore, enstore), set up, restore, repair, renew, repeat, 〈 in, in, + staurare*, set up, found also in restaurare, set up again, restore: see store, enstore, restore.] To restore; repair.

instauration (in-stâ-rā'shon), n. [= F. instauration = Sp. instauración = Pg. instauração = It. instaurazione, 〈 L. instauratio(n-), a renewal, repetition, restoration, 〈 instaurare, renew: see instaurate.] Restoration; renewal; repair.

I rather thought, and with religion think,
Had all the characters of Love been lost, . . .
That both his nature and his essence might Have found their mighty instauration here.
B. Jonson, New Inn, iii. 2.

instaurator† (in'stâ-rā-tor), n. [= F. instaurateur = Sp. Pg. instaurador = It. instauratore, 〈 L. instaurator, a restorer, renewer, 〈 instaurare, renew, restore: see instaurate.] A restorer.

They pretend to be the great instaurators of his empire. Dr. H. More, Mystery of Godliness, p. 203.

instaure† (in-stâr'), v. t. [〈 L. instaurare, restore, renew: see instaurate.] To renew or renovate.

All things that show or breathe
Are now instaur'd, saving my wretched brest.
Marston, What you Will, i. 1.

instead (in-sted'), prep. phr. [Prop., as orig. (ME. in stede), two words, in stead, and still so written when the article or a pron. is used (in the stead, in his stead, etc.): see in[1] and stead.] 1. In the stead; in place or room; hence, in equivalence or substitution: followed by of.

In that Valeye is a Feld where Men drawen out of the Erthe a thing that men clepen Cambylle; and thei ete it in stede of Spice, and thei bere it to selle.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 67.

Let thistles grow instead of wheat, and cockles instead of barley. Job xxi. 40.

Especially he [the orator] consults his power by making instead of taking his theme. Emerson, Eloquence.

2. In its stead; in place of it, or of the thing or act mentioned.

To rase
Quite out their native language, and instead
To sow a jangling noise of words unknown.
Milton, P. L., xii. 54.

insteadfast (in-sted'fast), a. [〈 in-[3] + steadfast.] Not steadfast or firm. Cooke, Theogony of Hesiod. [Rare.]

insteep (in-stēp'), v. t. [〈 in-[1] + steep[2].] To steep or soak; drench.

York, all haggled over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,
And takes him by the beard.
Shak., Hen. V., iv. 6, 12.

instellation (in-ste-lā'shon), n. [〈 L. in, in, + stellatus, starred: see stellate, and cf. constellation.] A putting among the stars. [Rare.]

Shakspere has been long enthroned in instellation.
★ J. Wilson, Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1832.

instep (in'step), n. [First recorded as insteppe, later sometimes instip, instup, instoppe; appar. 〈 in-[1] + step, but the formation is not clear.] 1. The arch of the foot; the highest part of the upper side of the human foot, near its junction with the leg; technically, the upper surface of the tarsus.

Low at leave-taking, with his brandish'd plume Brushing his instep, bow'd the all-amorous Earl.
Tennyson, Geraint.

Hence — 2. A corresponding part of the hind limb of some animals, as the front of the horse's hind leg from the hock to the pastern.

instigate (in'sti-gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. instigated, ppr. instigating. [〈 L. instigatus, pp. of instigare (〉 It. instigare, istigare = Sp. Pg. instigar = Pr. instigar, istiguar = F. instiguer), stimulate, set on, incite, urge, 〈 in, on, + stigare*, akin to stinguere, push, goad: see distinguish, stigma, stimulus.] 1. To stimulate to an action or course; incite to do something; set or goad on; urge: generally in a bad sense: as, to instigate one to commit a crime.

By . . . vaunts of his nobility [the duke]
Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess
By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1, 51.

If a servant instigates a stranger to kill his master, . . . the servant is accessory. Blackstone.

2. To stir up; foment; bring about by incitement or persuasion: as, to instigate crime or insurrection; to instigate a quarrel. = Syn. Impel, Induce, etc. (see actuate); tempt, prevail upon. See list under incite.

instigatingly (in'sti-gā-ting-li), adv. Incitingly; temptingly.

instigation (in-sti-gā'shon), n. [= F. instigation = Sp. instigación = Pg. instigação = It. istigazione, instigazione, 〈 L. instigatio(n-), 〈 instigare, instigate: see instigate.] The act of instigating; incitement, as to wrong-doing; temptation; prompting.

As if the lives that were taken away by his instigation were not to be charged upon his account.
Sir R. L'Estrange.

All the baseness and villainy that both the corruption of nature and the instigation of the devil could bring the sons of men to. South, Sermons.

What wonder, then, that the words of that prediction should have succeeded in setting and keeping at variance two families already predisposed to quarrel by every instigation of hereditary jealousy? Poe, Tales, I. 476.

instigator (in'sti-gā-tor), n. [= F. instigateur = Pr. istiguador = Sp. Pg. instigador = It. istigatore, instigatore, 〈 L. instigator, an instigator, 〈 instigare, instigate: see instigate.] One who or that which instigates; an inciter.

He aggravated the guilt of his perfidy, in the most atrocious degree, by being himself the first mover and instigator of that injustice.
Burke, Charge against Warren Hastings.

instil, instill (in-stil'), v. t.; pret. and pp. instilled, ppr. instilling. [〈 F. instiller = Sp. instilar = Pg. instillar = It. instillare, 〈 L. instillare, pour in by drops, 〈 in, in, on, + stillare, drop, 〈 stilla, a drop: see still[2]. Cf. distil.] 1. To pour in by drops.

The juice of it being boiled with oile, and so dropped or instilled into the head, is good for the paines thereof.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xx. 17.

The starlight dews
All silently their tears of love instil.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 87.

Hence — 2. To infuse slowly or by degrees into the mind or feelings; cause to be imbibed; insinuate; inject.

How hast thou instill'd
Thy malice into thousands!
Milton, P. L., vi. 269.

= Syn. Infuse, etc. See implant.

instillation (in-sti-lā'shon), n. [= F. instillation = Sp. instilación = Pg. instillação, 〈 L. instillatio(n-), 〈 instillare, pour in by drops: see instil.] 1. The act of instilling or of pouring in by drops or by small quantities; the act of infusing or insinuating into the mind.

Those petty qualities . . . are every moment exerting their influence upon us, and make the draught of life sweet or bitter by imperceptible instillations.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 72.

2. That which is instilled or infused.

instillator (in'sti-lā-tor), n. [〈 L. as if instillator*, 〈 instillare, pp. instillatus, instil: see instil.] One who instils or infuses; an instiller. Coleridge. [Rare.]

instillatory (in-stil'a-tō-ri), a. [〈 instil + -atory.] Relating to instillation. Imp. Dict.

instiller (in-stil'ėr), n. One who instils.

Never was there such a juggle as was played in my mind, nor so artful an instiller of loose principles as my tutor.
P. Skelton, Deism Revealed, viii.

instilment, instillment (in-stil'ment), n. [〈 instil + -ment.] The act of instilling; also, that which is instilled.

instimulate† (in-stim'ū-lāt), v. t. [〈 L. instimulatus, pp. of instimulare, push or urge on, 〈 in, on, + stimulare, prick, urge: see stimulate.] To stimulate; excite. Coles, 1717.

instimulation† (in-stim-ū-lā'shon), n. [〈 instimulate + -ion.] The act of stimulating, inciting, or urging. Bailey, 1731.

instinct (in-stingkt'), a. [〈 L. instinctus, pp. of instinguere, incite, instigate, 〈 in, in, on, + stinguere, prick: see sting, stimulus, etc. Cf. distinct, extinct.] Urged or animated from within; moved inwardly; infused or filled with some active principle: followed by with.

Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound
The chariot of paternal Deity, . . .
Itself instinct with spirit. Milton, P. L., vi. 752.

What betrays the inner essence of the man must be so grasped and rendered [by the painter] that all that meets the eye — look, attitude, action, expression — shall be instinct with meaning. J. Caird.

The close buds,
That lay along the boughs, instinct with life, . . .
Feared not the piercing spirit of the North.
Bryant, Winter Piece.

instinct† (in-stingkt'), v. t. [〈 L. instinctus, pp. of instinguere, impel, instigate: see instinct, a.] To impress as by an animating influence; communicate as an instinct.

Unextinguishable beauty, . . . impressed and instincted through the whole. Bentley.
★

instinct (in'stingkt), n. [= D. G. Dan. Sw. instinkt = F. instinct = Sp. instinto = Pg. instincto = It. instinto, istinto, 〈 L. instinctus, impulse, instigation, 〈 instinguere, pp. instinctus, impel: see instinct, a.] 1. A special propensity, in any organized being, but more especially in the lower animals, producing effects which appear to be those of reason and knowledge, but which transcend the general intelligence or experience of the creature; the sagacity of brutes. Instinct is said to be blind — that is, either the end is not consciously recognized by the animal, or the connection of the means with the end is not understood. Instinct is also, in general, somewhat deficient in instant adaptability to extraordinary circumstances. The question whether instincts are innate or induced is still a subject of controversy.

The lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4, 299.

It will be universally admitted that instincts are as important as corporeal structures for the welfare of each species under its present conditions of life. Under changed conditions of life it is at least possible that slight modifications of instinct might be profitable to a species; and if it can be shown that instincts do vary ever so little, then I can see no difficulty in natural selection preserving and continually accumulating variations of instinct to any extent that was profitable. It is thus, as I believe, that all the most complex and wonderful instincts have originated.

Darwin, Origin of Species (1869), p. 187.

Instinct is purposive action without consciousness of the purpose. . . . The end to which a definite kind of instinctive action is subservient is not conceived once for all by a mind standing outside the individual like a providence, and the necessity to act conformably thereto externally thrust upon the individual as something foreign to him; but the end of the instinct is in each single case unconsciously willed and imagined by the individual, and the choice of means suitable to each special case unconsciously made.
E. von Hartmann, Philosophy of the Unconscious, tr. by [Coupland, A. iii.

Every animal that has well-developed eyes presents an instance of the adaptation of means to purpose by unconscious formative intelligence, which is quite as definite as that shown in any motor instinct, and far more delicate and subtle. Murphy, Habit and Intelligence, xxvii.

All instincts probably arose in one or other of two ways. (1) By the effects of habit in successive generations, mental activities which were originally intelligent become, as it were, stereotyped into permanent instincts. . . . (2) The other mode of origin consists in natural selection, or survival of the fittest, continuously preserving actions which, although never intelligent, yet happen to have been of benefit. Romanes, Encyc. Brit., XIII. 157.

2. Natural intuitive power; innate power of perception or intuition.

They [poets] came by instinct diuine, and by deepe meditation, and much abstinence (the same assubtiling and refining their spirits), to be made apt to receaue visions.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 4.

Willingly would I now have gone and asked Mrs. Reed's pardon; but I knew, partly from experience and partly from instinct, that was the way to make her repulse me with double scorn. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, iv.

The truth was felt by instinct here—
Process which saves a world of trouble and time.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 182.

instinction† (in-stingk′shon), n. [< OF. instinctio(n-), < L. as if instinctio(n-)*, < instinguere, pp. instinctus, impel: see instinct.] 1. Instinct.—2. Instigation; inspiration.

Tulli in his Tusculane questions supposeth that a poete can not abundantly expresse verses sufficiente and complete, or that his eloquence may flowe without labour, wordes well sounyng and plentuouse, without celestial instinction. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 13.

instinctive (in-stingk′tiv), a. [< instinct + -ive.] Prompted by or of the nature of instinct.

Raised
By quick instinctive motion, up I sprung.
Milton, P. L., viii. 259.

An action which we ourselves should require experience to enable us to perform, when performed by an animal, more especially by a very young one, without any experience, and when performed by many individuals in the same way, without their knowing for what purpose it is performed, is usually said to be instinctive.
Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 201.

A sceptre once put in the hand, the grip is instinctive.
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 232.

Whether young children have an instinctive dread of the dark might of course be determined by a careful collection of testimony.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 13.

instinctively (in-stingk′tiv-li), adv. In an instinctive manner; by force of instinct.

They prepar'd
A rotten carcase of a boat, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats
Instinctively have quit it.
Shak., Tempest, i. 2, 148.

We instinctively demand that everything in God's plan shall stand in the strict unity of reason.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., p. 261.

instinctivity (in-stingk-tiv′i-ti), n. [< instinctive + -ity.] The character of being instinctive or prompted by instinct. [Rare.]

There is growth only in plants; but there is irritability, or—a better word—instinctivity, in insects. Coleridge.

instipulate (in-stip′ū-lāt), a. [< in-[3] + stipulate.] In bot., having no stipules: same as exstipulate.

institorial (in-sti-tō′ri-al), a. [< L. institorius, < institor, an agent, factor, broker, huckster, < insistere, pp. institus, stand upon, follow, pursue: see insist.] In law, pertaining to an agent or factor.—Institorial action, an action allowed in Roman law against the principal upon contracts of those whom he employed as managers or superintendents of a farm or any other particular branch of business.

institute (in′sti-tūt), v. t.; pret. and pp. instituted, ppr. instituting. [< L. institutus, pp. of instituere (> It. instituire, istituire = Sp. Pg. instituir = F. instituer), set up, place or set upon, purpose, begin, institute, < in, in, on, + statuere, set up, establish: see statute. Cf. constitute.] 1. To set up; establish; put into form and operation; set afoot: as, to institute laws, rules, or regulations; to institute a government or a court; to institute a suit or an investigation.

The last particular in the fable is the Games of the torch, instituted to Prometheus.
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

Here let us breathe, and haply institute
A course of learning. Shak., T. of the S., i. 1, 8.

The monastic and hermit's life was instituted here in the fourth century by St. Saba; they say, there have been ten thousand recluses here at one time.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 34.

2. To establish in an office; appoint; in ecclesiastical use, to assign to a spiritual charge; invest with the cure of souls: used absolutely, or followed by to or into.

When Timothy was instituted into that office [to preach the word of God], then was the credit and trust of this duty committed unto his faithful care.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 11.

Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 1, 162.

A Rev. Alexander Pope was instituted to the living of Thruxton, Hants, Jan. 5, 1630. N. and Q., 6th ser., IX. 374.

3†. To ground or establish in principles; educate; instruct.

A painfull School-master, that hath in hand
To institute the flowr of all a Land,
Giues longest Lessons vnto those where Heav'n
The ablest wits and aptest wills hath giv'n.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

They have but few laws. For to people to instruct and institute very few do suffice.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 9.

Instituted sign, in logic, a sign which is not natural, but established, either by human convention (as a clock-bell to strike the hours) or by divine ordinance, as a sacrament, which is a visible sign of an invisible grace, according to St. Augustine.=Syn. 1. To ordain, settle, fix, set in motion.

institute†, a. [ME. institut; < L. institutus, pp.: see the verb.] Instituted; established.

When this newe parsoun is institut in his churche,
He bithenketh him hu he may shrewedlichest worche.
Political Songs (ed. Wright), p. 326.

★ institute (in′sti-tūt), n. [= D. instituut = G. Dan. Sw. institut, < F. institut = Pr. istitut = Sp. Pg. instituto = It. instituto, istituto, < L. institutum, a purpose, design, regulation, ordinance, instruction, etc., prop. neut. of institutus, pp. of instituere, set up, institute: see institute, v.] 1. An established principle, rule, or law; a settled order.

Water sanctified by Christ's institute, [was] thought little enough to wash off the original spot.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

We profess ourselves servants of so meek a Master, and disciples of so charitable an institute.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 293.

Greek institutes require
The nearest kindred on the fun'ral stage
The dead to lay. Glover, Athenaid, xxvi.

2. pl. A collection of established laws, rules, or principles; a book of elements, especially in jurisprudence: as, the Institutes of Justinian; Erskine's "Institutes of the Law of Scotland"; Calvin's "Institutes of the Christian Religion." The word implies a systematic statement of the law or of the principles of the subject treated, in analytic form, in a single and complete work, as distinguished from a mere compilation or collection, and from a commentary; but it does not necessarily imply that it is established by any formal authority.

3. An established body of persons; an institution; a society or association organized for some specific work, especially of a literary or scientific character: as, a philosophic or educational institute; a mechanics' institute; the Institute of Civil Engineers; the National Institute of France, or specifically the Institute (see below).

The title of Member of the Institute is the highest distinction to which a Frenchman of culture can aspire; it is the crowning honor of his career.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 501.

4. In Scots law, the person to whom the estate is first given in a destination. Thus, where a person executing a settlement dispones his lands to A, whom failing, to B, whom failing, to C, etc., A is termed the institute, and all who follow him in the succession are heirs, or substitutes, as they are also termed.—Institute of France, an organization formed in 1795 to bring into one body the previously existing national academies, and called at first the National Institute. It was at first divided into three and afterward four classes. It underwent various modifications, and, as finally constituted in 1832, consists of the five great academies. See academy, 3.—Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, a Roman Catholic order of women, founded by Mary Ward in England in 1611. It is thought to be the only Roman Catholic order of English origin since the Reformation. Also called English Ladies and English Virgins.—Institutes of Justinian, an elementary work on Roman law composed in the reign of the Emperor Justinian (who reigned 527–65), and forming part of the Corpus Juris Civilis.—Institutes of medicine, a name for the more scientific parts of medical teaching.—Teachers' institute, in the system of common schools in the United States, an assembly of teachers of elementary or district schools, convened by a county superintendent or other school authority, to receive or give normal instruction. The work consists of a brief course of class exercises, lectures, and examinations.

instituter (in′sti-tū-tėr), n. [< institute, v., + -er[1]. Cf. institutor.] See institutor.

institution (in-sti-tū′shon), n. [< ME. institucion, < OF. (and F.) institution = Pr. institutio, istitutio = Sp. institución = Pg. instituição = It. instituzione, istituzione, < L. institutio(n-), < instituere, pp. institutus, set up: see institute, v.] 1. The act of instituting or setting up; establishment; effective ordination: as, the institution of laws or government; the institution of an inquiry.

There is no right in this partition,
Ne was it so by institution
Ordained first, ne by the law of Nature.
Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 144.

That the institution and restitution of the world might be both wrought with one hand. Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

2. Establishment in office; in ecclesiastical use, instatement in a spiritual charge; investment with the cure of souls. See installation.

For institucion & induccion he schal ȝeue moche of this god that is pore mennus.
Wyclif, Works Hitherto Unprinted, p. 248.

I, A. B., receive these keys of the House of God at your hands, as the pledges of my Institution.
Book of Common Prayer, Office of Institution.

3†. Establishment in learning; instruction.

His learning was not the effect of precept or institution.
Bentley.

4. Established rule or order; a principle of procedure in any relation; custom; more specifically, an established habit of action, or body of related facts, regulating human conduct in the attainment of a social end, and constituting an element in the social organization or civilization of a community: as, government, the family, a language, is an institution.

Never any Religion or Institution in the World made it so much its business to keep men from doing evil, and to perswade them to do good, as the Christian doth.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

Literary fosterage was an institution nearly connected with the existence of the Brehon law schools.
Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 242.

5. An established custom or usage, or a characteristic. [Chiefly colloq.]

The camels form an institution of India—possibly a part of the traditional policy—and they must be respected accordingly. Times (London), April, 1858.

The pillory was a flourishing and popular institution in those days. Authors stood in it in the body sometimes.
Thackeray, Eng. Humorists, p. 207.

6. An establishment for the promotion of some object; an organized society or body of persons, usually with a fixed place of assemblage and operation, devoted to a special pursuit or purpose: as, an educational institution; a charitable institution; the Smithsonian Institution at Washington.

This led in 1796 to the formation of a Trade-Society, the so-called Institution, among the Clothworkers at Halifax, to prevent people from carrying on the trade in violation of custom and law.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. clxxii.

Institution, in a statute exempting property of charitable institutions from taxation, signifies an organization which is permanent in its nature, as contradistinguished from an undertaking which is transient or temporary. It designates corporations or other organized bodies created to administer charities, and exempts the property which they own and use for their charitable purposes, and that only.
Humphries v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio Statutes, [201.

7†. A system of the elements or rules of any art or science; a treatise or text-book.

There is another manuscript of above three hundred years old, . . . being an institution of physic. Evelyn.

8. Eccles.: (a) (1) The origination of the eucharist, and enactment of its observance, by Christ. (2) The words used by Christ in instituting the eucharist, in the various forms as recorded in Scripture (Mat. xxvi. 26–28; Mark xiv. 22–24; Luke xxii. 19, 20; 1 Cor. xi. 23–25), or transmitted by tradition; in liturgics, the part of the prayer of consecration of the eucharistic elements in which these words are repeated. Also called more fully the commemoration, recital, or words of institution. In its fullest form, as exemplified in Oriental liturgies, in the Scotch communion office of 1764, and in the American Prayer-book, the prayer of consecration consists of three principal parts, the institution, oblation, and epiclesis or invocation. In nearly all the older liturgies (except the Roman) the institution seems principally conceived in the character of a recital of Christ's words and actions at the last supper, the great oblation and epiclesis consummating the observance commanded by him; while in the Western liturgies, including the Roman and that of the Church of England, but not the Mozarabic in its original form, nor the Scotch and American offices, the institution, with the manual acts, is regarded as the full and complete act of consecration, and there is no invocation.

The true Eastern doctrine seems to be that there must be co-operation of the words of institution and of the invocation of the Holy Ghost, before the bread and wine become the Body and Blood of Christ.
J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 485.

(b) The act by which a bishop commits the cure of souls under himself in a parish within his diocese to a priest as rector or vicar. In the Church of England the presentee must previously have made the declaration of assent, taken the oaths of allegiance and canonical obedience, and made the declaration against simony. Institution is given by the bishop or his commissary reading an instrument, the seal of which the clergyman being instituted holds, kneeling before him. When the bishop is patron of the benefice, the same act becomes collation instead of institution. After institution induction admits to temporal possession of the goods and income attached to the cure of souls. In the American Episcopal Church induction is not separate from institution, and there is a public office of institution, set forth in 1804 as the office of induction and revised in 1808 and 1886. The bishop, if satisfied that a clergyman is a qualified minister and duly elected, may act as institutor himself or appoint a presbyter to act in his stead. The office consists in reading the letter of institution, presentation by the senior warden or other vestryman of the keys of the church to the new incumbent, his reception within the altar-rails by the institutor, who presents him with the Bible, Prayer-book, and books of canons, and in the use of proper psalms, lessons, anthem, and prayers, after which the instituted minister offers special prayers, and, after a sermon, celebrates the holy communion.—Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, an English statute of 1854 (17 and 18 Vict., c. 112) which authorizes the gift or sale of land (not more than one acre) to institutions established for the promotion of science, literature, art, etc.

institutional (in-sti-tū′shon-al), a. [< institution + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to an institution or to institutions; of the nature of an institution; instituted; organized.

Some day patriotism may justify itself, but it cannot yet be expressed except in the form of devotion to some institutional fetish or to a particular flag.
Leslie Stephen, Eng. Thought, § 16.

Throughout many ages French and English history, both external and institutional, are bound together as closely as any two national histories can be.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 66.

2. Relating to elementary knowledge; elementary; institutionary.—3. Relating to the office of institution.

institutionalism (in-sti-tū′shon-al-izm), n. [< institutional + -ism.] The character of being institutional; in theol., the spirit which lays great emphasis on the institutions of religion.

institutionary (in-sti-tū′shon-ā-ri), a. [< institution + -ary.] 1. Of or relating to an institution or to institutions; institutional.

Events are by no means more important than the institutionary development which they cause or accompany.
H. H. Bancroft, Cent. America, Int.

2. Containing the first principles or doctrines; elementary; rudimentary.

That it was not out of fashion Aristotle declareth in his politicks, amongst the institutionary rules of youth.
Sir T. Browne.

3. Pertaining to appointment to an ecclesiastical office. Davies.

Dr. Grant had brought on apoplexy and death by three great institutionary dinners in one week.
Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xlvii.

institutist (in′sti-tū-tist), n. [< institute + -ist.] A writer of institutes or elementary rules and instructions. [Rare.]

Green gall the institutists would persuade us to be an effect of an over-hot stomach. Harvey, Consumptions.

institutive (in′sti-tū-tiv), a. [< institute + -ive.] 1. Tending or intended to institute or establish.

These words seem institutive, or collative of power.
Barrow, The Pope's Supremacy.

2. Established; depending on institution.

As for that in Leviticus of marrying the brother's wife, it was a penal statute rather than a dispense; and commands nothing injurious or in it self unclean, only prefers a special reason of charity before an institutive decency.
Milton, Divorce, ii. 5.

institutively (in′sti-tū-tiv-li), adv. In an institutive manner; by way of institution; in accordance with an institution. Harrington, Oceana (ed. 1771), p. 146.

institutor (in′sti-tū-tor), n. [= F. instituteur = Sp. Pg. instituidor = It. institutore, istitutore, < L. institutor, a founder, an erector, < instituere, pp. institutus, set up, begin, found: see institute.] 1. One who institutes, establishes, or founds; a founder, organizer, or originator.—2. In the Anglican Ch., one who institutes a clergyman as rector or vicar of a parish; the bishop instituting or a presbyter appointed by him to perform the office of institution.

Then shall the Priest who acts as the Institutor receive the Incumbent within the rails of the Altar.
Book of Common Prayer, Office of Institution.

3†. An instructor; one who educates.

Neither did he this for want of better instructions, having had the learnedest and wisest man reputed of all Britain the instituter of his youth. Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

The two great aims which every institutor of youth should mainly and intentionally drive at. Walker.

Also spelled instituter.

institutress (in′sti-tū-tres), n. [< institutor + -ess.] A female institutor; a foundress. Archæologia, XXI. 549.

instop† (in-stop′), v. t. [< in-[1] + stop.] To stop; close; make fast.

With boiling pitch another near at hand (From friendly Sweden brought) the seams instops.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

instore†, v. t. See enstore.

instr. An abbreviation of instrumental.

instreaming (in′strē″ming), n. [< in[1] + streaming.] A flowing in; influx.

There is first the instreaming of the external world through the senses, as impressions.
J. Le Conte, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXII. 312.

He put out his ungloved hand. Mordecai, clasping it eagerly, seemed to feel a new instreaming of confidence.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xl.

instrew†, v. t. [ME. instrewen*, instruen*, instrien; < in-[1] + strew.] To strew about; spread.

Sum lande is wont salt humoure up to throwe
That sleeth the corne. There douves dounge instrie,
And leves of cupresse eke on it sowe,
And eree it ynne.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 180.

instruct (in-strukt′), v. t. [< L. instructus, pp. of instruere (> It. instruire, istruire = Sp. Pg. instruir = Pr. estruyre = F. instruire), build, erect, construct, set in order, prepare, furnish, teach, instruct, < in, in, + struere, join together, pile up, build: see structure. Cf. construct, destruct.] 1†. To put in order; form; prepare; guide.

The Maids in comely Order next advance;
They bear the Timbrel, and instruct the Dance.
Prior, Solomon, iii.

They speak to the merits of a cause, after the proctor has prepared and instructed the same for a hearing before the judge. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To impart knowledge or information to; inform; teach; specifically, to train in knowledge or skill; teach or educate methodically.

Paul writeth unto Timothy, to instruct him, to teach him, to exhort, to courage him.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 19.

Sir, if I have made
A fault of ignorance, instruct my youth.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, ii. 1.

At present the most . . . instructed intellect has neither the knowledge nor the capacity required for symbolizing in thought the totality of things.
H. Spencer, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIV. 351.

3. To direct or command; furnish with orders or directions: as, to instruct an envoy or a body of delegates.

She, being before instructed of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger. Mat. xiv. 8.

4†. To notify; apprise.

I have partly instructed Sir F. Drake of the state of these countries.
Wilkes, quoted in Motley's Netherlands, II. 103.

5. In Scots law, to adduce evidence in support of; confirm; vouch; verify: as, to instruct a claim against a bankrupt estate.—Syn. 2. To indoctrinate, school, drill, train. See instruction.—3. To prescribe to.

instruct† (in-strukt′), a. [< L. instructus, pp. of instruere, build, furnish, instruct: see instruct, v.] 1. Furnished; equipped.

Ships instruct with oars. Chapman.

2. Instructed; taught.

Who ever by consulting at thy shrine
Return'd the wiser, or the more instruct,
To fly or follow what concern'd him most?
Milton, P. R., i. 439.

instructer† (in-struk′tėr), n. [< instruct + -er[1]. Cf. instructor.] A teacher; an instructor.

What need we magnifie the humane nature as the great instructer in this business, since we may with a little observation find very much the like in brutes as well as men?
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 32.

instructible (in-struk′ti-bl), a. [< instruct + -ible.] Capable of being instructed; teachable; docile.

A king of incomparable clemency, and whose heart is instructible for wisdom and goodness.
Bacon, Submission to the House of Lords.

instruction (in-struk′shon), n. [= F. instruction = Pr. instructio = Sp. instrucción = Pg. instrucção = It. istruzione, istruzione, < L. instructio(n-), building, erecting, constructing, arranging, LL. instruction, < instruere, pp. instructus, build, instruct: see instruct.] 1. The act of instructing or teaching; communication of knowledge; education; enlightenment.

My instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel.
Shak., All's Well, i. 1, 222.

Those discoveries and discourses they have left behind them for our instruction. Locke.

2. Knowledge imparted; edifying discourse or precepts; teaching.

And, also, geue ȝe do pretende
Haue heuinlie Ioye vnto ȝour ende,
Than follow this nyxt Instructioun, Maid for ȝour Eruditioun.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), l. 159.

Receive my instruction, and not silver. Prov. viii. 10.

3. Direction given; order; command; mandate: commonly in the plural.

The admiral had received instructions not to touch at Hispaniola on his outward voyage.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 8.

My instructions are that this boy is to move on.
Dickens, Bleak House, xix.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Training, Discipline, Nurture, Cultivation, Instruction, Teaching, Education; indoctrination, schooling, breeding, advice, counsel. Training is the development of the mind or character or both, or some faculty, at some length, by exercise, as a soldier is trained or drilled. Discipline is essentially the same as training, but more severe. Nurture, by its derivation, expresses a tender, continuous, and protracted training, beginning at an early age. Cultivation, in the active sense, is often used of the training, discipline, or development of some single department of the nature: as, the cultivation of the understanding, the taste, the conscience. (See culture.) Teaching is the general word for the imparting of knowledge: as, the profession of teaching. Instruction has the imparting of knowledge for its object, but emphasizes, more than teaching, the employment of orderly arrangement in the things taught. Tuition is the most external or formal of these words, representing the act. Education is the largest word of all the list, having for its object, like training and discipline, the development of the powers of the man, but generally also a symmetrical development of the whole man, the mind and the moral nature, by instruction, exercise, etc. Education is the word chosen to express the best ideas that men have of the process of teaching and discipline that shall make the wisest, noblest, and most effective kind of man.

instructional (in-struk′shon-al), a. [< instruction + -al.] Of or pertaining to instruction; promoting education; educational.

Of the instructional work it is hardly necessary to speak, further than to say that it follows the modern methods of teaching the physical sciences. Science, VIII. 574.

instructive (in-struk′tiv), a. [= F. instructif = Pr. instructiu = Sp. Pg. instructivo = It. instruttivo, istruttivo, < ML. as if instructivus*, < L. instruere, pp. instructus, instruct: see instruct.] Serving to instruct or inform; conveying knowledge.

Say Memory! thou from whose unerring tongue Instructive flows the animated song.
Falconer, The Shipwreck, iii.

In both cases the confusion is instructive, as pointing to the way in which Slavonic and Turanian nations were mixed up together, as allies and as enemies, in the history of these lands. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 160.

There was a lecture occasionally on an instructive subject, such as chemistry, or astronomy, or sculpture.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 87.

instructively (in-struk′tiv-li), adv. In an instructive manner; so as to afford instruction.

instructiveness (in-struk′tiv-nes), n. The quality of being instructive; power of instructing.

instructor (in-struk′tor), n. [= F. instructeur = Pr. istruidor = Sp. Pg. instructor = It. instruttore, < L. instructor, a preparer, ML. an instructor, < instruere, pp. instructus, prepare, instruct: see instruct.] 1. One who instructs; a teacher; a person who imparts knowledge to another by precept or information.

Wisdom was Adam's instructor in Paradise, wisdom endued the fathers who lived before the law with the knowledge of holy things. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, ii. 1.

Poets, the first instructors of mankind,
Brought all things to their proper native use.
Roscommon, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry.

2. Specifically, in American colleges, a teacher inferior in rank to a professor. The exact meaning of the term varies in different institutions. See tutor.

instructress (in-struk′tres), n. [< instructor + -ess. Cf. instructrice.] A female instructor; a preceptress.

instructrice† (in-struk′tris), n. [= It. instruttrice, < ML. as if instructrix*, fem. of instructor: see instructor.] Same as instructress.

Knowledge also, as a perfeyt instructrice and mastresse, . . . declareth by what meane the sayde preceptes of reason and societie may be well vnderstande.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 3.

★ instrument (in′strō-ment), n. [< ME. instrument, enstrement = D. G. Dan. Sw. instrument, < OF. instrument, estrument, F. instrument = Pr. instrument, instrumen, estrument, estrumen, esturmen = Sp. Pg. instrumento = It. instrumento, istrumento, strumento, < L. instrumentum, a tool, instrument, means, furtherance, dress, apparel, document, ⟨ instruere, construct, prepare, furnish: see instruct.] 1. Something that serves as a means to the effecting of an end; anything that contributes to the production of an effect or the accomplishment of a purpose; a means; an agency.

Then wash all the instruments of the sences, as the eies, the ears, the nostrils, the mouth, the tongue, the teeth, and all the face, with cold water.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 255

Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, but . . . as instruments of righteousness unto God. Rom. vi. 13.

The lowly classes, clouded by despair, were driven sometimes to admit the terrible thought that religion, which is the poor man's consolation and defence, might after all be but an instrument of government in the hands of their oppressors. Bancroft, Hist. Const., II. 366.

Intellect is not a power, but an instrument—not a thing which itself moves and works, but a thing which is moved and worked by forces behind it.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 382.

Specifically—2. Something used to produce a mechanical effect; a contrivance with which to perform mechanical work of any kind; a tool, implement, utensil, or machine.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 2, 98.

The agriculture appeared to me extremely good, the instruments very clumsy.
Sydney Smith, To Mrs. Sydney Smith.

Among their instruments [in the Hippocratic era] were forceps, probes, directors, syringes, rectal speculum, catheter, and various kinds of cautery. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 674.

Specifically—3. In music, a mechanical contrivance or apparatus for producing musical sounds—that is, for setting up, either in a solid body or in a confined body of air, vibrations sufficiently rapid, regular, and definite to produce tones systematically related to one another. An instrument involves a vibration-producing agency, a vibratile body, usually a resonator of some kind, and various appliances for regulating the pitch, the force, the duration, and often the quality of the tones produced. Instruments may be grouped by reference to any one of these characteristics. Thus, with respect to the vibration-producing agency, they are—(a) inflatile, blown by the breath, as a flute; by mechanically compressed air, as an organ or a concertina; or by the wind, as an æolian harp; (b) percussive or pulsatile, struck together, as cymbals; by a hammer, as a pianoforte, a bell, or a drum; or by the hand, as a tambourine; (c) plucked, pulled aside and then released, as the strings of a harp or guitar, or the teeth of a music-box; (d) fricative, rubbed by the finger, as musical glasses; by a bow (bow-instruments), as a violin and its many relatives; or by a wheel, as a hurdy-gurdy. Again, with respect to the vibratile body, instruments are—(a) pneumatic, as the foundation-stops in a pipe-organ; (b) stringed, as a harp, a violin, or a pianoforte; (c) tongued or reed, as an oboe, a clarinet, or a reed-organ (properly all the metal wind-instruments belong here); (d) tympanic, as a drum or a tambourine; (e) vibrating entire, as a bell or a tuning-fork. The resonators used are various, and difficult of classification. Again, with respect to the means of fixing the desired pitch of the tone, instruments are—(a) of fixed intonation, as the lyre, which has a separate string for each tone desired; the pianoforte and organ (keyed instruments), which are fitted with keys or levers to determine which of several vibratile bodies shall be used; the guitar, which is fitted with frets over which the strings can be shortened; the flute, which has finger-holes by stopping which the effective length of the vibrating column of air can be altered; the cornet-à-pistons, which has valves by which the air-column can be supplemented; or the trombone, the tube of which slides into itself, etc.; (b) harmonic, producing the tones of a harmonic scale according to the method of blowing, as the horn, trumpet, etc.; (c) of free intonation, as the violin and its relatives, on which (although the strings are first tuned to fixed pitches) the player may produce any conceivable gradation of pitch. Instruments may also be grouped as—(a) solo, melodic, producing usually but one tone at a time, as a violin, a flute, a horn, etc.; (b) concerted, harmonic, polyphonic, producing many tones at once, as a pianoforte, an organ, a harp, a lute, etc. Finally, they may be grouped as—(a) popular, used for comparatively crude music; or (b) orchestral, developed into great perfection of form, and applied to the performance of highly artistic music, especially in orchestral combination. Popular instruments everywhere belong to the classes represented by the pipe, the harp, the lute, the drum, and the cymbals. The modern orchestra is composed of the following classes: (a) Stringed, including violins, violas, violoncellos, bass viols, and harps; (b) wood wind, including flutes, oboes, English horns, clarinets, bassoons; (c) brass wind, including French horns, trumpets (cornets), trombones, ophicleides, etc.; (d) percussive, including tympani, long drums, triangles, etc. For an account of the human voice as a musical instrument, see voice.

In that place was had ful gret mynstracy;
Both hye and bas instrumentes sondry.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 945.

Tantrum Clangley,—a place long celebrated for the skill of its inhabitants as performers on instruments of percussion. T. Hardy, Under the Greenwood Tree, v. 2.

4. One who is used by another; a human tool.

The finest Device of all was, to have five of the Duke of Gloucester's Instruments manacled and pinioned like Traitors. Baker, Chronicles, p. 221.

The bold are but the instruments of the wise. Dryden.

When the Protector wished to put his own brother to death, without even the semblance of a trial, he found a ready instrument in Cranmer.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

5. In law, a writing given as the means of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right, or affording evidence, as a writing containing the terms of a contract, a deed of conveyance, a grant, a patent, an indenture, etc.

One of the first acts performed by the new solicitor general was to draw up an instrument which authorized Walker and his proselytes to hold their benefices, notwithstanding their apostasy. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

The curious instrument by which Manfred, in May, 1259, undertook the protection of the city still exists in the Sienese archives.
C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 107.

Absolute, active, chromatic instrument. See the adjectives.—Brass instrument. See wind-instrument.—Circular instruments. See circular.—Diatonic instruments. See diatonic.—Equatorial instrument. See equatorial, n.—Instruments of evidence. See evidence.—Negotiable, notarial, etc., instrument. See the adjectives.=Syn. 2. Implement, Utensil, etc. See tool.

instrument (in′strȯ-ment), v. t. [= OF. instrumenter, play on an instrument; from the noun.] 1. In music, to compose or arrange for instruments, especially for an orchestra; score.—2. In law, to draw up an instrument; also, to petition by means of one. N. E. D.

instrumental (in-strȯ-men′tal), a. and n. [= F. instrumental = Pr. instrumental, istrumental, = Sp. Pg. instrumental = It. instrumentale, istrumentale, strumentale, ⟨ ML. instrumentalis* (in adv. instrumentaliter), ⟨ L. instrumentum, instrument: see instrument.] I. a. 1. Of the nature of an instrument or tool; serving as an instrument or means; used or serving to promote or effect an object; helpful; serviceable: as, the press has been instrumental in enlarging the bounds of knowledge.

All second and instrumental causes, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtueless, and dead. Raleigh, Hist. World.

My chief inducement . . . was to be instrumental in forwarding your happiness.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, ii.

2. Pertaining to, made by, or prepared for instruments, especially musical instruments. Specifically, in music, noting a composition or a passage intended for instruments rather than for the voice, or in a style not germane to the voice: opposed to vocal.

Sweet voices, mixed with instrumental sounds, Ascend the vaulted roof.
Dryden, Cym. and Iph., l. 579.

The Nightingale . . . breathes such sweet loud music out of her little instrumental throat.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 26.

Among the earliest specimens of instrumental accompaniment that have descended to us may be mentioned the organ parts to some of the services and anthems by English composers of the middle of the 16th century.
Grove, Dict. Music, I. 20.

3. In gram., serving to indicate the instrument or means: applied to a case, as in Sanskrit, involving the notion of by or with. In Anglo-Saxon and other Teutonic tongues this case is merged, with a few exceptions, in the dative; in the Latin, with the ablative. Abbreviated inst. or instr.

Could we make out the Teutonic as it was a thousand years earlier, we might perhaps find a complete instrumental form, with an ablative and a locative, the perfect apparatus of Indo-European noun-inflection.
J. Hadley, Essays, p. 50.

Instrumental score. See score.

II. n. 1†. An instrument.

Unto the deep, fruitful, and operative study of many sciences . . . books be not the only instrumentals.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 112.

2. The instrumental case. Compare I., 3.

The other treats similarly the instrumental, considering the A. S. dative-instrumental as corresponding to an older instrumental, under the instrumental of accompaniment, of means, of cause, of manner.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VI. 3.

instrumentalist (in-strȯ-men′tal-ist), n. [⟨ instrumental + -ist.] In music, a performer upon an instrument: opposed to vocalist.

Our own early minstrels . . . [united] the now separate offices of poet, vocalist, and instrumentalist.
H. Spencer, Universal Progress, p. 26.

instrumentality (in″strȯ-men-tal′i-ti), n.; pl. instrumentalities (-tiz). [⟨ instrumental + -ity.] 1. The state or character of being instrumental; subordinate or auxiliary agency; agency of anything as means to an end.

This I set down, to let the world see that Cranmer was not at all concerned in those niceties which have been so much inquired into since that time, about the instrumentality of faith in justification.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1540.

2. An instrumental means or agency; something serving as an instrument: as, preaching is the great instrumentality in the spread of religion.

instrumentalize† (in-strȯ-men′tal-īz), v. t. [⟨ instrumental + -ize.] To form as an instrument; produce as an agent or agency.

In the making of the first man, God first instrumentalized a perfect body, and then infused a living soul.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, III. 147.

instrumentally (in-strȯ-men′tal-i), adv. 1. As an instrument, means, or tool; by way of an instrument; in the nature of an instrument; as means to an end.

From thence they will argue that, the end being essentially beneficial, the means become instrumentally so.
Burke, Popery Laws.

2. By means of an instrument, a tool, or a machine.

The 13th I took the height of it instrumentally, standing near the sea side, which I found to be 34 minutes, the sun being 28 degrees high. Boyle, Works, V. 709.

3. With instruments of music.

The earlier fathers of the church . . . condemned musical devotion when instrumentally accompanied.
W. Mason, Church Musick, p. 27.

instrumentalness (in-strȯ-men′tal-nes), n. Instrumentality; usefulness to an end or purpose.

The instrumentalness of riches to works of charity.
Hammond.

instrumentary (in-strȯ-men′ta-ri), a. [= OF. instrumentaire, ⟨ ML. instrumentarius* (in neut. instrumentarium, a chartulary), ⟨ L. instrumentum, an instrument: see instrument.] 1. Conducive to an end; instrumental. [Rare.]—2. In Scots law, of or pertaining to a legal instrument: as, instrumentary witnesses.

instrumentation (in″strȯ-men-tā′shon), n. [= F. instrumentation = Pg. instrumentação; as instrument + -ation.] 1. Use of instruments; work done by means of instruments, especially in surveying and the like.

Something more is needed than the Engineer, stiff with his instrumentation and his equations and his economies of line.
D. G. Mitchell, Bound Together (Highways and Parks).

2. Instrumental means or aid; facility furnished by instruments; intermediate agency. [Rare.]

Otherwise we have no sufficient instrumentation for our human use or handling of so great a fact and our personal appropriation of it, . . . no fit medium of thought respecting it. H. Bushnell.

3. In music, the process, act, or science of composing or arranging music for instruments, especially for an orchestra. It includes a knowledge of the technical manipulation, compass, tone-quality, and mutual adaptability of all recognized instruments. It is one of the most advanced branches of the general science of composition.

instrumentist (in′strȯ-men-tist), n. [= F. instrumentiste = Sp. Pg. instrumentista; as instrument + -ist.] A performer upon a musical instrument; an instrumentalist.

instup†, n. An obsolete form of instep.

instyle† (in-stīl′), v. t. [Also instile; ⟨ in-[2] + style[1].] Same as enstyle.

This Robbin (so much talked on)
Was once a man of fame,
Instiled earle of Huntington,
Lord Robert Hood by name.
True Tale of Robin Hood (Child's Ballads, V. 355).

Whereof, I avow, I account nought at all, knowing no age so justly to be instiled golden as this of our sovereign lady queen Anne. Gay, Shepherd's Week, Proem.

insuavity† (in-swav′i-ti), n. [= Pg. insuavidade = It. insuavità; as in-[3] + suavity.] Lack of suavity; unpleasantness.

All fears, griefs, suspicions, discontents, imbonities, insuavities, are swallowed up and drowned in this Euripus, this Irish Sea, this Ocean of Misery.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 215.

insubjection (in-sub-jek′shon), n. [⟨ in-[3] + subjection.] Lack of subjection; a state of disobedience to authority or control. Todd.

insubmergible (in-sub-mėr′ji-bl), a. [⟨ in-[3] + submergible.] Incapable of being submerged.

The latter, insubmergible—so designated, although actually overflowed by the torrent, and expected and intended to be so at times, and it may be frequently—belong to a class of embankments which have been long in use. Quoted in J. C. Brown's Reboisement in France, p. 80.

insubmission (in-sub-mish′on), n. [⟨ in-[3] + submission.] Want of submission; disobedience; insubordination. Wilhelm, Mil. Dict.

insubordinate (in-sub-ôr′di-nāt), a. [= F. insubordonné = Sp. Pg. insubordinado = It. insubordinato; as in-[3] + subordinate.] Not subordinate or submissive; not submitting to authority; refractory.=Syn. Disobedient, unruly, disorderly, turbulent, mutinous.

insubordination (in-sub-ôr-di-nā′shon), n. [= F. insubordination = Sp. insubordinación = Pg. insubordinação = It. insubordinazione.] The quality of being insubordinate; want of subordination; refractoriness; disobedience; resistance to lawful authority.

The insubordination of the demoralized army was beyond the influence of even the most popular of the generals. Arnold, Hist. Rome.

Military insubordination is so grave and, at the same time, so contagious a disease, that it requires the promptest and most decisive remedies to prevent it from leading to anarchy. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., iii.

insubstantial (in-sub-stan'shal), a. [= F. insubstentiel = Sp. insubstancial, < ML. insubstantialis, not substantial, < L. in- priv. + LL. substantialis, substantial: see substantial.] Unsubstantial.

The great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1, 155.

We elders . . . are apt to smile at the first sorrow of lad or lass, as though it were some insubstantial creature of the element, which has no touch of our afflictions.
E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 98.

insubstantiality (in-sub-stan-shi-al'i-ti), n. [< insubstantial + -ity.] The quality of being insubstantial; unsubstantiality.

insubstantiated (in-sub-stan'shi-ā-ted), a. [< in-[2] + substantiate + -ed[2].] Embodied in substance or matter; substantially manifested.

A mind or reason . . . insubstantiated or embodied.
Grote.

insuccation† (in-su-kā'shon), n. [< L. insucatus, pp. of insucare, improp. insuccare, soak in, < in, in, + sucus, improp. succus, juice: see succulent.] The act of soaking or moistening; maceration.

As concerning the medicating and insuccation of seeds, . . . I am no great favourer of it. Evelyn, Sylva, I. i. § 5.

insuccess (in-suk-ses'), n. Same as unsuccess.

insuccessfulness† (in-suk-ses'fûl-nes), n. Unsuccessfulness. Davenant, Gondibert, Pref.

insucken (in'suk-n), a. [< in[1] + sucken.] In Scots law, in the servitude of thirlage, pertaining to a district astricted to a certain mill: as, an insucken multure or toll. See multure, outsucken, sucken, and thirlage.

insudate†, v. [< L. insudatus, pp. of insudare, sweat in or at a thing, < in, in, + sudare, sweat: see sudation.] Accompanied with sweating. Nares.

And such great victories attain'd but seild,
Though with more labours, and insudate toyles.
Heywood, Troia Britannica (1609).

insue†, v. An obsolete form of ensue.

insuetude (in'swē-tūd), n. [= It. insuetudine, < L. insuetudo (-din-), < insuetus, unaccustomed, < in- priv. + suetus, accustomed, pp. of suescere, be accustomed; cf. consuetude, desuetude.] The state of being unaccustomed or unused; unusualness. [Rare.]

Absurdities are great or small in proportion to custom or insuetude. Landor.

insufferable (in-suf'ėr-a-bl), a. [< in-[3] + sufferable.] Not sufferable; not to be endured; intolerable; unbearable: as, insufferable cold or heat; insufferable wrongs.

Then turn'd to Thracia from the field of fight
Those eyes that shed insufferable light.
Pope, Iliad, xiii. 6.

Though I say nothing to your own conduct, that of your servants is insufferable.
Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, iv.

The fine sayings and exploits of their heroes remind us of the insufferable perfections of Sir Charles Grandison.
Macaulay, History.

insufferably (in-suf'ėr-a-bli), adv. In an insufferable manner; to an intolerable degree: as, insufferably bright; insufferably proud.

His [Persius's] figures are generally too bold and daring; and his tropes, particularly his metaphors, insufferably strained. Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Ded.

insufficience (in-su-fish'ens), n. [< ME. insufficiens (in older form insuffisance, q. v., < OF. (also F.) insuffisance); < OF. insufficience = Pr. Pg. insufficiencia = Sp. insuficiencia = It. insufficienza, < LL. insufficientia, insufficience, < insufficien(t-)s, insufficient: see insufficient.] Insufficiency. [Rare.]

And I confess my simple insufficiens:
Litil haf I sene, and reportit weil less,
Of this materis to haf experience.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 102.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficience, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shak., W. T., i. 1, 16.

★ insufficiency (in-su-fish'en-si), n. [As insufficience: see -cy.] Lack of sufficiency; deficiency in amount, force, or fitness; inadequateness; incompetency: as, insufficiency of supplies; insufficiency of motive.

If they shall perceiue any insufficiencie in you, they will not omitte any occasion to harm you.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 172.

At the time when our Lord came, the insufficiency of the Jewish religion, of natural religion, of antient tradition, and of philosophy, fully appeared.
Jortin, Christian Religion, iv.

Active insufficiency of a muscle, the inability of the muscle to act, owing to too close approximation of the points of origin and insertion, as in the case of the gastrocnemius when the knee is bent.

insufficient (in-su-fish'ent), a. [< ME. insufficient (also insuffisant, q. v., < OF. (also F.) insuffisant); < OF. insufficient = Sp. insuficiente = Pg. It. insufficiente, < LL. insufficien(t-)s, not sufficient, < L. in- priv. + sufficien(t-)s, sufficient: see sufficient.] Not sufficient; lacking in what is necessary or required; deficient in amount, force, or fitness; inadequate; incompetent: as, insufficient provision or protection; insufficient motives.

All other insufficiant [to play in the pageants] personnes, either in connyng, voice, or personne, to discharge, ammove, and avoide.
Quoted in York Plays, Int., p. xxxvii.

The bishop to whom they shall be presented may justly reject them as incapable and insufficient.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

It may come one day to be recognized that the number of legs, the villosity of the skin, or the termination of the os sacrum, are reasons insufficient for abandoning a sensitive being to the caprice of a tormentor.
F. P. Cobbe, Peak in Darien, p. 145.

insufficiently (in-su-fish'ent-li), adv. In an insufficient manner; inadequately; with lack of ability, skill, or fitness.

insuffisance†, n. [ME., < OF. insuffisance, insufficience: see insufficience.] Insufficiency. Halliwell.

Alle be it that I dide none my self for myne unable insuffisance, now I am comen hom.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 315.

insuffisant†, a. [ME., < OF. insuffisant, insufficient: see insufficient.] Insufficient.

What may ben ynow to that man, to whom alle the world is insuffisant? Mandeville, Travels, p. 293.

insufflate (in-suf'lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. insufflated, ppr. insufflating. [< LL. insufflatus, pp. of insufflare, blow or breathe into, < L. in, in, into, upon, + sufflare, blow from below, < sub, below, under, + flare = E. blow[1]: see flatus.] 1. To blow into; specifically, in med., to treat by insufflation. See insufflation, 3.—2. Eccles., to breathe upon, especially upon catechumens ★ or the water of baptism. See insuffation, 2.

insufflation (in-su-flā'shon), n. [= F. insufflation = Pg. insufflação = It. insufflazione, < LL. insufflatio(n-), a blowing into, < insufflare, pp. insufflatus, blow or breathe into: see insufflate.] 1. The act of blowing or breathing on or into.

The Journal of the Franklin Institute observes the method of insufflation and evaporation referred to is simply the blowing of streams of air, not necessarily heated, into a liquid warmed by some usual means to some desired temperature, which may or may not be the boiling point of the liquid. Ure, Dict., IV. 850.

2. Eccles., the act or ceremony of breathing upon (a person or thing), symbolizing the influence of the Holy Ghost and the expulsion of an evil spirit. This ceremony is used in some ancient and Oriental rites, in exorcism of the water of baptism, and in the Greek and Roman Catholic churches and elsewhere in exorcism of catechumens. See exsufflation.

Thus St. Basil, expressly comparing the divine insufflation upon Adam with that of Christ, John xx. 22, upon the apostles, tells us it was the same Son of God, "by whom God gave the insufflation, then indeed together with the soul, but now into the soul."
Bp. Bull, State of Man before the Fall.

They would speak less slightingly of the insufflation and extreme unction used in the Romish Church. Coleridge.

3. In med., the act of blowing air into the mouth of a new-born child to induce respiration, or of blowing a gas, vapor, or powder into some opening of the body.

insufflator (in'su-flā-tor), n. [NL., < LL. insufflatus, pp. of insufflare, blow into: see insufflate.] 1. A form of injector for impelling air into a furnace. It is practically an injector blower. By a slight change in the apparatus it becomes a hydrocarbon burner or blower, for delivering a stream of oil mingled with air and steam under pressure to a furnace.

2. A medical instrument for blowing air, or a gas, vapor, or powder, into some opening of the body. See insufflation, 3.

insuit† (in'sūt), n. A word found only in the place cited, and undoubtedly a printer's error. Most modern editions have "infinite cunning" in place of the old "infuite comming."

And, in fine,
Her insuit coming with her modern grace,
Subdued me to her rate.
Shak., All's Well, v. 3, 215.

insuitability (in-sū-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< insuitable: see -bility.] Unsuitableness; incongruity.

The inequality and the insuitability of his arms, and his grave manner of proceeding.
Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, iv. 10.

insuitable† (in-sū'ta-bl), a. [< in-[3] + suitable.] Unsuitable.

Many other rites of the Jewish worship seemed to him insuitable to the divine nature.
Bp. Burnet, Life of Rochester.

★ insula (in'sū-lä), n.; pl. insulæ (-lē). [L., an island: see isle[1].] In anat., a portion of the cerebral cortex concealed in the Sylvian fissure, consisting of five or six radiating convolutions, the gyri operti. It lies just out from the lenticular nucleus. Also called island of Reil, lobule of the Sylvian fissure, lobule of the corpus striatum, and central lobe. See cut under gyrus.—Insula Reili. Same as insula.

insular (in'sū-lär), a. and n. [= F. insulaire = Sp. Pg. insular, < L. insularis, of or belonging to an island, < insula, an island, perhaps < in, in, + salum, the main sea, = Gr. σάλος, surge, swell of the sea. Hence ult. (< L. insula) E. isle[1], isolate, etc.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to an island; surrounded by water: opposed to continental.

Their insular situation defended the people from invasions by land. J. Adams, Works, IV. 505.

2. Hemmed in like an island; standing alone; surrounded by what is different or incongruous: as, an insular eminence in a plain.

But how insular and pathetically solitary are all the people we know! Emerson, Society and Solitude.

3. Of or pertaining to the inhabitants of an island; characteristic of insulated or isolated persons; hence, narrow; contracted: as, insular prejudices.

England had long been growing more truly insular in language and political ideas when the Reformation came to precipitate her national consciousness.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 149.

4. In entom., situated alone: applied to galls which occur singly on a leaf.—5. In anat., of or pertaining to the insula of the brain, or island of Reil.—Insular sclerosis. See sclerosis.

II. n. One who dwells in an island; an islander.

It is much to be lamented that our insulars . . . should yet, from grossness of air and diet, grow stupid or doat sooner than other people. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 109.

insularism (in'sū-lär-izm), n. [< insular + -ism.] The quality of being insular in personal character; narrowness of opinion or conception; mental insularity.

His [Alfred's] freedom from a narrow insularism.
J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 95.

insularity (in-sū-lar'i-ti), n. [= F. insularité; as insular + -ity.] The state of being an island, or of being insular in situation or character; restriction within or as within an island; that which is characteristic of an island or of the inhabitants of an island; insularism.

In his first voyage to the South Seas, he discovered the Society Islands, determined the insularity of New Zealand, . . . and made a complete survey of both.
Cook, Third Voyage, v. 3.

We may rejoice in and be grateful for the insularity of our position, but we cannot escape from the inherent solidarity of all civilised races.
W. R. Greg, Misc. Essays, 1st ser., p. 35.

Cosmopolitanism is greater than selfish insularity.
Westminster Rev., CXXV. 515.

insularly (in'sū-lär-li), adv. In an insular manner.

insulary (in'sū-lā-ri), a. and n. [< L. insularis, insular: see insular.] I. a. Same as insular. [Rare.]

Druina, being surrounded with the sea, is hardly to be invaded, having many other insulary advantages. Howell.

II. n. Same as insular. [Rare.]

Clearly, therefore, it is not for us, poor insularies that we are, to judge of the moral aspect of the "Naturalist" movement. Contemporary Rev., LI. 61.

insulate (in'sū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. insulated, ppr. insulating. [< LL. insulatus, made like an island, pp. of insulare (> It. isolare (> ult. E. isolate) = F. insuler), make like an island, < insula, island: see insular.] 1. To make an island of (a place) by surrounding it with water.

An impetuous torrent boiled through the depth of the chasm, and, after eddying round the base of the castle-rock, which it almost insulated, disappeared in the obscurity of a woody glen. Peacock, Melincourt, i.

2. To place in an isolated situation or condition; set apart from immediate contact or association with others; detach; segregate.

In Judaism, the special and insulated situation of the Jews has unavoidably impressed an exclusive bias upon its principles. De Quincey.

Everything that tends to insulate the individual — to surround him with barriers of natural respect, so that each man shall feel the world as his, and man shall treat with man as a sovereign state with a sovereign state — tends to true union as well as greatness. Emerson, Misc., p. 95.

3. In elect. and heat, to separate, as an electrified or heated body, from other bodies by the interposition of a non-conductor; more specifically, in electrostatics, to separate from the earth (since an electrified body tends to part with its electricity to the earth); to surround the conductor with non-conducting material, so as to keep the current in its proper path. 4. In chem., to free from combination with other substances.

insulate (in′sụ-lāt), a. [< L. insulatus, insulated: see the verb.] In entom., detached from other parts or marks of the same kind. — Insulate vein, a discal vein or nervure of the wing not connected with another.

insulation (in-sụ-lā′shọn), n. [< insulate + -ion.] 1. The act of insulating or detaching, or the state of being detached, from other objects. — 2. In elect. and thermotics, that state in which the communication of electricity or heat to other bodies is prevented by the interposition of a non-conductor; also, the material or substance which insulates. See insulate and insulator. — 3. The act of setting free from ★combination, as a chemical body; isolation.

insulator (in′sụ-lā-tọr), n. [< insulate + -or.] One who or that which insulates; specifically, a substance or body that interrupts the communication of electricity or heat to surrounding objects; a non-conductor; anything through which an electric current will not pass. The figures show the usual forms of insulators employed in telegraph-lines to support the wire on the post. They are frequently made of porcelain or glass, and in the shape of an inverted cup, round which the wire is wrapped or is attached by a hook depending from it, or the like. In the case of electricity the commonest insulators for supports are glass, porcelain, and vulcanized rubber; and for covering wires conveying currents, silk, cotton, gutta-percha, and rubber. These substances do not absolutely prevent the communication of electricity, but a good glass Leyden jar, for example, will hold a charge for months. No perfect insulator for either electricity or heat is known, and the distinction between conductors and insulators is somewhat arbitrary.

Insulators.

A, glass insulator used on Western Union lines, usually supported by an oak stalk. B, double-cup insulator used on English lines: c, c′, cups of brown earthenware; b, an iron stalk by means of which the insulator is fixed to the cross-arm of the telegraph-pole.

insulous† (in′sụ-lus), a. [< LL. insulosus, full of islands, < L. insula, island: see insular.] Abounding in islands. Bailey.

insulse† (in-suls′), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. insulso, < L. insulsus, unsalted, insipid, < in- priv. + salsus, salted, pp. of salere, salt: see salt[1], sauce.] Dull; insipid; stupid: as, "insulse and frigid affectation," Milton.

insulsity† (in-sul′si-ti), n. [< L. insulsita(t-)s, tastelessness, insipidity, < insulsus, unsalted, insipid: see insulse.] Dullness; insipidity; stupidity.

To justify the councils of God and fate from the insulsity of mortal tongues. Milton, Divorce, ii. 3.

★insult (in-sult′), v. [< F. insulter = Sp. Pg. insultar = It. insultare, < L. insultare, leap or spring at or upon, behave insolently toward, insult, ML. attack, freq. of insilire, leap at or upon, < in, on, at, + salire, leap: see salient, and cf. assault, exult, result.] I. trans. 1. To leap upon; specifically, to make a sudden, open, and bold attack upon; attack in a summary manner, and without recourse to the usual forms of war. [Rare.]

An enemy is said to insult a coast when he suddenly appears upon it, and debarks with an immediate purpose to attack. Stocqueler.

2. To offer an indignity to; treat contemptuously, ignominiously, or insolently, either by speech or by action; manifest scorn or contempt for.

Not so Atrides: he, with wonted pride,
The sire insulted, and his gifts deny'd.
Pope, Iliad, i. 493.

A stranger cannot so much as go into the streets of the town [Damiata] that are not usually frequented by them without being insulted. Pococke, Description of the East, I. 19.

I shall not dare insult your wits so much
As think this problem difficult to solve!
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 271.

II. intrans. 1†. To leap or jump.

And they know how,
The lion being dead, even hares insult.
Daniel, Funeral Poem.

There shall the Spectator see some insulting with joy; others fretting with melancholy. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

2. To behave with insolent triumph; exult contemptuously: with on, upon, or over. [Obsolete or archaic.]

You I afford my pity; baser minds Insult on the afflicted.
Fletcher (and another ?), Prophetess, iv. 5.

I insult not over his misfortunes, though he has himself occasioned them. Dryden, Duke of Guise.

What then is her reward, that out of peevishness,
Contemns the honest passion of her lover,
Insults upon his virtue? Shirley, Love Tricks, iv. 2.

★insult (in′sult), n. [< LL. insultus, insult, scoffing, lit. a leaping upon, < L. insilire, pp. insultus, leap upon, insult: see insult, v.] 1†. The act of leaping on anything.

The bull's insult at four she may sustain.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iii. 99.

2. An assault; a summary assault; an attack. [Rare.]

Many a rude tower and rampart there Repelled the insult of the air.
Scott, Marmion, vi. 2.

3. An affront, or a hurt inflicted upon one's self-respect or sensibility; an action or utterance designed to wound one's feelings or ignominiously assail one's self-respect; a manifestation of insolence or contempt intended to provoke resentment; an indignity.

To refuse a present would be a deadly insult — enough to convert the would-be donor into an inveterate and implacable enemy. O'Donovan, Merv, xiv.

And I heard sounds of insult, shame, and wrong,
And trumpets blown for wars.
Tennyson, Fair Women.

4. Contemptuous treatment; outrage.

Yet e'en these bones from insult to protect.
Gray, Elegy.

To take an insult, to submit without retaliation to something regarded as insulting: as, I will take no insults from you. = Syn. 3. Indignity, etc. See affront.

insultable (in-sul′tạ-bl), a. [< insult + -able.] Capable of being insulted; apt to feel insulted; quick to take insult.

Civility has not completed its work if it leave us unsocial, morose, insultable. Alcott, Tablets, p. 71.

insultance† (in-sul′tạns), n. [< insultan(t) + -ce.] Insult; insolence.

I staid our ores, and this insultance vsede;
Cyclop! thou shouldst not haue so much abusde Thy monstrous forces. Chapman, Odyssey, ix.

insultant (in-sul′tạnt), a. [< L. insultan(t-)s, ppr. of insultare, insult: see insult, v.] Inflicting insult; wounding honor or sensibility; insulting. [Rare.]

Meanwhile for thy insultant ambassage, Cherub, abide in chains, a spy's desert.
Bickersteth, Yesterday, To-day, and Forever, viii. 376.

insultation† (in-sul-tā′shọn), n. [= OF. insultation = It. insultazione, < L. insultatio(n-), a leaping upon, a scoffing, < insultare, leap upon: see insult, v.] The act of insulting or treating with indignity; manifestation of contempt or scorn.

When he looks upon his enemies dead body, 'tis with a kind of noble heavines, not insultation.
Sir T. Overbury, Characters, A Worthy Commander.

The impudent insultations of the basest of the people. Prideaux, Euchologia, p. 185.

insulter (in-sul′tẹr), n. 1†. One who attacks.

Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
Paying what ransom the insulter willeth.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 550.

2. One who insults or offers an indignity.

insulting (in-sul′ting), p. a. 1†. Attacking; injurious.

And the fire could scarcely preuaile against the insulting tyrannie of the cold, to warme them. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 434.

2. Containing or inflicting insult; derogatory or abusive: as, insulting language. = Syn. Insolent, Insulting (see insolent); abusive, blackguard, ribald.

insultingly (in-sul′ting-li), adv. In an insulting manner; with insolent contempt.

insultment† (in-sult′ment), n. [< insult + -ment.] The act of insulting; an insult.

He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body. Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 5, 145.

insume† (in-sūm′), v. t. [< L. insumere, take, assume, < in, in, + sumere, take: see sumption. Cf. assume, consume, etc.] To take in; absorb.

In dressing the roots be as sparing as possible of the fibres, . . . which are as it were the emulgent veins, which insume and convey the nourishment to the whole tree. Evelyn, Terra (ed. 1825), p. 25.

insuperability (in-sū″pẹ-ra-bil′i-ti), n. [< insuperable: see -bility.] The quality of being insuperable.

insuperable (in-sū′pẹ-ra-bl), a. [< OF. insuperable, insoperable = Sp. insuperable = Pg. insuperavel = It. insuperabile; as in-[3] + superable.] Not superable; incapable of being passed over, overcome, or surmounted.

Overhead up grew
Insuperable highth of loftiest shade,
Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm.
Milton, P. L., iv. 138.

The difficulties of his task had been almost insuperable, and his performance seemed to me a real feat of magic. H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 278.

= Syn. Insurmountable, impassable, unconquerable, invincible.

insuperableness (in-sū′pẹ-ra-bl-nes), n. The character of being insuperable or insurmountable; insuperability.

insuperably (in-sū′pẹ-ra-bli), adv. In an insuperable manner; insurmountably; inextricably.

Many who toil through the intricacy of complicated systems are insuperably embarrassed with the least perplexity in common affairs. Johnson, Rambler, No. 180.

insupportable (in-su-pōr′tạ-bl), a. [= F. insupportable = Pg. insupportavel, < LL. insupportabilis, not supportable, < in- priv. + supportabilis*, supportable: see supportable.] 1. Not supportable; incapable of being supported or borne; insufferable; intolerable.

To those that dwell under or near the Equator this spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable Summer. Bentley.

Too weak to bear
The insupportable fatigue of thought.
Cowper, Task, vi. 106.

2†. Irresistible.

That when the knight he spide, he gan advance,
With huge force and insupportable mayne,
And towardes him with dreadfull fury praunce.
Spenser, F. Q., I. vii. 2.

insupportableness (in-su-pōr′tạ-bl-nes), n. The quality of being insupportable; insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

insupportably (in-su-pōr′tạ-bli), adv. 1. So as not to be supported or endured; intolerably.

Who follows his desires, such tyrants serves
As will oppress him insupportably.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, v. 1.

2†. Irresistibly.

When insupportably his foot advanced.
Milton, S. A., l. 136.

insupposable (in-su-pō′za-bl), a. [< in-[3] + supposable.] Not supposable; incapable of being supposed.

insuppressible (in-su-pres′i-bl), a. [< in-[3] + suppressible.] Not suppressible; incapable of being suppressed or removed from observation.

insuppressibly (in-su-pres′i-bli), adv. So as not to be suppressed or concealed.

insuppressive (in-su-pres′iv), a. [< in-[3] + suppressive.] Incapable of being suppressed; insuppressible. [Rare.]

But do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor th' insuppressive metal of our spirits.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1, 134.

Man must soar;
An obstinate activity within,
An insuppressive spring, will toss him up
In spite of fortune's load.
Young, Night Thoughts, vii.

insurable (in-shör′a-bl), a. [< insure + -able.] Capable of being insured against loss, damage, death, and the like; proper to be insured. — Insurable interest. See insurance, 2.

The French law annuls the latter policies so far as they exceed the insurable interest which remained in the insured at the time of the subscription thereof. Walsh.

★insurance (in-shör′ans), n. [= OF. enseurance, assurance, < enseurer, insure: see insure.] 1. The act of insuring or assuring against loss; a system of business by which a company or corporation (called an insurance company, or, rarely, assurance company or society) guarantees the insured to a specified extent and under stipulated conditions against pecuniary loss arising from such contingencies as loss of or damage to property by fire or the efforts to extinguish fire (fire-insurance), or by shipwreck or disaster at sea (marine insurance), or by explosion, breakage, or other accidents to property, or the loss of future earnings, either through disablement (accident-insurance) or through death (life-insurance), etc. Also called assurance. Specifically — 2. In law, a contract by which one party, for an agreed consideration (which is proportioned to the risk involved), undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified thing, from specified causes. The party agreeing to make the compensation is usually called the insurer or underwriter, the other the insured or assured, the agreed consideration the premium, the written contract a policy, the events insured against risks or perils, and the subject, right, or interest to be protected the insurable interest. Bouvier.

3. The premium paid for insuring property, life, etc.—4†. Engagement; betrothal.

Dyd I not knowe afore of the insurance
Betweene Gawyn Goodlucke and Christian Custance?
Udall, Roister Doister, iv. 6.

Agreement for insurance. See agreement.—Co-insurance, insurance in which two or more parties are jointly responsible for any loss which may come upon certain specified property; specifically, a form of insurance in which the insured, in consideration of a reduced rate of premium, agrees to maintain insurance upon his property to a certain specified extent, say 80 per cent. of its actual cash value, and failing to do so becomes his own insurer for the difference, and in case of partial loss is jointly responsible with the insurance company in that proportion.—Graveyard insurance, a method of swindling insurance companies by means of insurance effected on the life of a very old or infirm person, who, through collusion with the medical examiner, may be personated by one of robust health, or otherwise falsely passed upon.—Hazardous insurance. See hazardous.—Insurance broker, one whose business it is to procure insurance for other persons, or to act as broker between owners of property and insurance companies.—Insurance commissioner, in some of the United States, a State officer who in behalf of the public maintains a supervision over the affairs of insurance companies.—Insurance company, a company or corporation whose business is to insure against loss or damage.—Insurance policy. See def. 2, above.=Syn. Assurance, Insurance. See the extract.

The terms insurance and assurance have been used indiscriminately for contracts relative to life, fire, and shipping. As custom has rather more frequently employed the latter term for those relative to life, I have in this volume entirely restricted the word assurance to that sense. If this distinction be admitted, assurance will signify a contract dependent on the duration of life, which must either happen or fail, and insurance will mean a contract relating to any other uncertain event, which may partly happen or partly fail.
Babbage, Comparative View of Institutions for Assurance of Lives (1826), quoted in Encyc. Brit., XIII. 169.

[The distinction here made has not become established, although it is observed to some extent, especially in Great Britain.]

insurancer† (in-shör'an-sėr), n. [< insurance + -er[1].] An insurer; an underwriter.

The far-fam'd sculptor, and the laurell'd bard,
Those bold insurancers of deathless fame,
Supply their little feeble aids in vain.
Blair, The Grave.

insure (in-shör'), v.; pret. and pp. insured, ppr. insuring. [Also ensure; ME. insuren, ensuren, enseuren, < OF. (AF.) enseurer, assure, < en- + seur, sure. Cf. assure, which is earlier.] I. trans. 1. To make sure, certain, or secure; give assurance of; assure: as, to insure safety to any one.

The knyght ensured hym his feith to do in this maner.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 684.

I ensure you, very many godly men in divers places give daily thanks unto God in prayer for you.
T. Lever, in Bradford's Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 137.

It is easy to entail debts on succeeding ages, but how to ensure peace for any term of years is difficult enough.
Swift.

Specifically—2. To guarantee or secure indemnity for future loss or damage (as to a building from fire, or to a person from accident or death) on certain stipulated conditions; make a subject of insurance; assure: as, to insure a ship or its cargo, or both, against the dangers of the sea; to insure a house against fire.

Take a whiff from our fields, and your excellent wives
Will declare it's all nonsense insuring your lives.
O. W. Holmes, Berkshire Festival.

3†. To pledge; betroth.

There grew such a secret love between them that at length they were insured together, intending to marry.
G. Cavendish, Wolsey (ed. Singer, 1825), I. 57.

=Syn. Insure, Assure. Assure may express the making certain in mind: as, I was assured of safety by his friendly manner; insure has not this sense. Insure is a possible word to express the making certain in fact, and is more common than ensure: as, his lack of money insured his early return; assure has not this sense. Insure and assure are both used of the act of pledging a payment of money upon loss or death, but assure is rarely used in that sense in the United States.

II. intrans. To undertake to secure or assure against loss or damage on receipt of a certain payment or premium; make insurance: as, the company insures at a low premium.

insurer (in-shör'ėr), n. 1. One who or that which insures or makes sure or certain.

The mysterious Scandinavian standard of white silk, having in its centre a raven, . . . the supposed insurer of victory. Preble, Hist. of the Flag, p. 164.

2. One who contracts, in consideration of a stipulated payment called a premium, to indemnify a person or company against certain perils or losses, or against a particular event; an underwriter.

That the chance of loss is frequently undervalued, and scarce ever valued more than it is worth, we may learn from the very moderate profit of insurers.
Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations, i. 10.

insurge (in-sėrj'), v.; pret. and pp. insurged, ppr. insurging. [Early mod. E. insourge; < F. insurger = Sp. Pg. insurgir = It. insurgere, < L. insurgere, rise upon, rise up against, < in, upon, + surgere, rise: see surge.] I.† intrans. To rise against anything; engage in a hostile uprising; become insurgent.

It is the devilishe sort of men that insourgeth and reiseth garboile against the veritie. J. Udall, On Luke xxiii.

What mischief hath insurged in realmes by intestine devision. Hall, Hen. IV., Int.

If in the communicacion or debating therof, either with her sonne or his counsail, ther shulde insurge any doubte or difficulte, . . . she wolde interpone her authority. State Papers, Wolsey to Hen. VIII., 1527.

II. trans. To stir up to insurrection. [Rare.]

The news of the dispute between England and Spain about Nootka Sound in 1790 recalled him [Miranda] to England, where he saw a good deal of Pitt, who had determined to make use of him to insurge the Spanish colonies, but the peaceful arrangement of the dispute again destroyed his hopes. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 498.

insurgence (in-sėr'jens), n. [= F. insurgence; as insurgen(t) + -ce.] Same as insurgency.

There was a moral insurgence in the minds of grave men against the Court of Rome.
George Eliot, Romola, lxxi.

insurgency (in-sėr'jen-si), n. The state or condition of being insurgent; a state of insurrection.

Our neighbors, in their great revolutionary agitation, if they could not comprehend our constitution, imitated our arts of insurgency. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 363.

insurgent (in-sėr'jent), a. and n. [< F. insurgent = Sp. Pg. It. insurgente, < L. insurgen(t-)s, ppr. of insurgere, rise up or to, rise up against: see insurge.] I. a. Rising against lawful authority or established government; engaged in insurrection or rebellion: as, insurgent chiefs.

In the wildest anarchy of man's insurgent appetites and sins, there is still a reclaiming voice. Chalmers.

Many who are now upon the pension rolls, and in receipt of the bounty of the Government, are in the ranks of the insurgent army, or giving them aid and comfort.
Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 174.

II. n. One who rises in forcible opposition to lawful authority; one who engages in armed resistance to a government or to the execution of laws.

Rich with her spoils, his sanction will dismay,
And bid the insurgents tremble and obey.
Falconer, The Demagogue.

The insurgents rode about the town, and cried, Liberty! liberty! and called upon the people to join them.
J. Adams, Works, I. 103.

To advance is the only safety of insurgents.
R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xv.

=Syn. Insurgent, Rebel, Traitor. An insurgent differs from a rebel chiefly in degree. The insurgent opposes the execution of a particular law or scheme of laws, or the carrying out of some particular measure, or he wishes to make a demonstration in favor of some measure or to express discontent; the rebel attempts to overthrow or change the government, or he revolts and attempts to place his country under another jurisdiction. A traitor is one who breaks faith or trust by betraying his country or violating his allegiance, especially a sworn allegiance: the word is applied in strong reprobation to one who, even without express breach of faith, makes war upon his sovereign or country, or goes over from the side to which his loyalty is due. See insurrection.

insurmountability (in-sėr-moun-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< insurmountable: see -bility.] The character of being insurmountable.

insurmountable (in-sėr-moun'ta-bl), a. [= F. insurmontable; as in-[3] + surmountable.] Not surmountable; incapable of being surmounted, passed over, or overcome.

The face of the mountain towards the sea is already by nature, or soon will be by art, an insurmountable precipice. H. Swinburne, Travels through Spain, viii.

insurmountableness (in-sėr-moun'ta-bl-nes), n. The state of being insurmountable.

insurmountably (in-sėr-moun'ta-bli), adv. So as not to be surmounted or overcome.

insurrect (in-su-rekt'), v. i. [< L. insurrectus, pp. of insurgere, rise up: see insurge, insurgent.] 1†. To rise up.

Richard Franck, in his Northern Memoirs, p. 202, uses insurrect of "vapours." F. Hall, False Philol., p. 73.

2. To rise; make an insurrection. [Colloq.]

If there's any gratitude in free niggers, now they'll insurrect and take me out of prison.
Vanity Fair, April 5, 1862.

insurrection (in-su-rek'shon), n. [= F. insurrection = Sp. insurrección = Pg. insurreição = It. insurrezione, < LL. insurrectio(n-) (in a gloss), a rising up, insurrection, < L. insurgere, pp. insurrectus, rise up: see insurgent.] 1†. A rising up; uprising.

He [an impulsive man] lies open to every insurrection of ill humour, and every invasion of distress.
H. Blair, Works, II. ii.

2. The act of rising against civil authority or governmental restraint; specifically, the armed resistance of a number of persons to the power of the state; incipient or limited rebellion.

It is found that this city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein. Ezra iv. 19.

In the autumn of 1806 his [Napoleon's] troops penetrated into Prussian Poland, where French agents had stirred up an insurrection, and in 1807 the Russians, Prussia's only hope, were defeated at Friedland.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, App. ii., p. 403.

It is not the insurrections of ignorance that are dangerous, but the revolts of intelligence. Lowell, Democracy.

Whisky Insurrection or Rebellion, an outbreak in Pennsylvania in 1794 against the enforcement of an act of Congress of 1791 imposing an excise duty on all spirits distilled within the United States. A large body of militia was sent to the disturbed district, but the insurrection was suppressed without bloodshed.=Syn. 2. Insurrection, Sedition, Rebellion, Revolt, Mutiny, Riot. The first five words are distinguished from the last in that they express action directed against government or authority, while riot has this implication only incidentally if at all. They express actual and open resistance to authority, except sedition, which may be secret or open, and often is only of a nature to lead to overt acts. An insurrection goes beyond sedition in that it is an actual rising against the government in discontent, in resistance to a law, or the like. (See insurgent, n.) Rebellion goes beyond insurrection in aim, being an attempt actually to overthrow the government, while an insurrection seeks only some change of minor importance. A rebellion is generally on a larger scale than an insurrection. A revolt has generally the same aim as a rebellion, but is on a smaller scale. A revolt may be against military government, but is generally, like insurrection, sedition, and rebellion, against civil government. A mutiny is organized resistance to law in an army or navy, or sometimes a similar act by an individual. All these words have figurative uses. When literally used, only insurrection and revolt may be employed in a good sense. The success of a rebellion often dignifies it with the name of a revolution. A riot is generally a blind and unguided outburst of fury, with violence to property and often to persons: as, the draft-riots in New York city in 1863.

insurrectional (in-su-rek'shon-al), a. [= F. insurrectionnel = Sp. insurreccional; as insurrection + -al.] Of or pertaining to insurrection; consisting in insurrection.

insurrectionary (in-su-rek'shon-ā-ri), a. [< insurrection + -ary.] Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of insurrection; favoring or engaged in insurrection: as, insurrectionary acts.

The author writes that on their murderous insurrectionary system their own lives are not sure for an hour, nor has their power a greater stability.
Burke, A Regicide Peace, iv.

A proclamation was issued for closing the ports of the insurrectionary districts by proceedings in the nature of a blockade. Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 143.

insurrectioner† (in-su-rek'shon-ėr), n. An insurrectionist. [Rare.]

What had the people got if the Parliament, instead of guarding the Crown, had colleagued with Venner and other insurrectioners? Roger North, Examen, p. 418.

insurrectionise, v. t. See insurrectionize.

insurrectionist (in-su-rek'shon-ist), n. [< insurrection + -ist.] One who favors, excites, or is engaged in insurrection; an insurgent.

It would tie the hands of Union men, and freely pass supplies from among them to the insurrectionists.
Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 143.

insurrectionize (in-su-rek'shon-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. insurrectionized, ppr. insurrectionizing. [< insurrection + -ize.] To cause an insurrection in. Also spelled insurrectionise. [Rare.]

"The Western Powers," he [Bismarck] wrote, "are not capable of insurrectionising Poland."
Lowe, Bismarck, I. 201.

insusceptibility (in-su-sep-ti-bil'i-ti), n. [< insusceptible: see -bility.] The character or quality of being insusceptible; want of susceptibility.

The remarkable insusceptibility of our household animals to cholera. Science, III. 557.

insusceptible (in-su-sep'ti-bl), a. [= F. insusceptible; as in-[3] + susceptible.] Not susceptible. (a) Incapable of being moved or affected in some way or by something: with of.

It is not altogether insusceptible of mutation, but a friend to it. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 854.

Who dares struggle with an invisible combatant? . . . It acts, and is insusceptible of any reaction.
Coleridge, quoted in Choate's Addresses, p. 165.

(b) Not liable to be moved or affected by something: with to.

Venomous snakes are insusceptible to the venom of their own species. The Academy, May 25, 1889, p. 363.

insusceptive (in-su-sep'tiv), a. [< in-[3] + susceptive.] Insusceptible. [Rare.]

The sailor was wholly insusceptive of the softer passions, and, without regard to tears or arguments, persisted in his resolution to make me a man.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 198.

insusurration† (in-sū-su-rā′shon), n. [< LL. insusurratio(n-), a whispering to or into, < insusurrare, whisper into or to, insinuate, suggest, < L. in, in, to, + susurrare, whisper, murmur: see susurration.] The act of whispering into the ear; insinuation.

The other party insinuates their Roman principles by whispers and private insusurrations.
Legenda Lignea, Pref. A. 4 b: 1653. (Latham.)

inswathe (in-swāᴛʜ′), v. t. [< in-1 + swathe.] ★Same as enswathe.

int. An abbreviation (a) of interest and (b) of introduction.

intack (in′tak), n. Same as intake, 4.

intact (in-takt′), a. [= F. intact = Sp. Pg. intacto = It. intatto, < L. intactus, untouched, uninjured, < in- priv. + tactus, pp. of tangere, touch: see tangent, tact.] Untouched, especially by anything that harms or defiles; uninjured; left complete, whole, or unimpaired.

When the function is needless or even detrimental, the structure still keeps itself intact as long as it can.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 444.

intactable (in-tak′ta-bl), a. [< in-3 + tactable.] Not perceptible to the touch.

intactible (in-tak′ti-bl), a. Same as intactable.
E. Phillips, 1706.

intactness (in-takt′nes), n. The state of being intact or unimpaired; completeness.

The intactness of the cortical motor region is a necessary condition for the development of a complete epileptic attack. Atien. and Neurol., VI. 449.

Intæniolata (in-tē″ni-ō-lā′tä), n. pl. [NL.; < in-3 + Tæniolata.] A group of Hydrozoa containing such as the Campanulariidæ and the Sertulariidæ: opposed to Tæniolata. Hamann.

intagliate (in-tal′yāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intagliated, ppr. intagliating. [< It. intagliato, pp. of intagliare, cut in, carve: see intaglio.] To engrave or cut in the surface of, as a stone, or to form by engraving or cutting in, as a design on the stone.

Clay, plaster-of-Paris, or any artificial stone compound may be used, which is pressed into the mould, so that the intagliated lines in this will appear upon the plaque or tile. C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 422.

intaglio (in-tal′yō), n.; pl. intaglii, intaglios (-yē, -yōz). [< It. intaglio (= F. intaille), intaglio, < intagliare, cut in, carve: see intail, entail.] 1. Incised engraving as opposed to carving in relief; ornamentation by lines, patterns, figures, etc., sunk or hollowed below the surface.

Two large signet rings, on one of which a hunting scene and on the other a battle were engraved in intaglio.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 263.

Hence—2. A figure or work so produced; an incised representation or design. Specifically—(a) A precious or semi-precious stone in the surface of which a head, figure, group, or other design is cut; an incised gem. (b) Any object ornamented by incised engraving. (c) In a more industrial sense, any incised or sunk design intended as a mold for the reproduction of the design in relief; an incised or countersunk die.

Bas reliefs beaten into a corresponding intaglio previously incised in stone or wood.
C. D. E. Fortnum, S. K. Cat. Bronzes of European Origin.

intaglio (in-tal′yō), v. t. [< intaglio, n.] To incise; engrave with a sunk pattern or design. [Rare.]

The device intaglioed upon it [a finger-ring] is supposed to be flowers bursting from the bud.
Art Jour., N. S., VIII. 46.

intaglio-rilevato (in-tal′yō-rē-le-vä′tō), n. [It.] In sculp., same as cavo-rilievo.

intagliotype (in-tal′yō-tīp), n. [< intaglio + type.] A process of producing a design in intaglio on a metallic plate, resembling somewhat the graphotype process. The plate is first coated with zinc oxid rendered very uniform and smooth by hydraulic pressure. Upon this surface the design is traced with an oily ink. The coating is then washed with a solution of zinc chlorid, the effect of which upon the parts not protected by the ink is to harden them, leaving the parts under the ink-tracings in a friable condition. When these friable parts are removed by brushes or other implements, the design is left in intaglio. From the plate so prepared stereotype or electrotype plates are obtained for use in printing. Other solutions are sometimes substituted for the zinc chlorid.

intail†, v. and n. See entail.

intake (in′tāk), n. [< *in*1 + take.] 1. A ★taking or drawing in.—2. That which is taken in. Specifically—3. Quantity taken in.

The annual in-take and out-put of these constituents on a hectare of beech forest. Nature, XXXIX. 511.

4. A tract of land, as of a common, inclosed; an inclosure; part of a common field planted or sown when the other part lies fallow. Halliwell. Also intack. [North. Eng.]—5. The point at which a narrowing or contraction begins, as in a tube or a stocking.

After the Norman Conquest, when a great part of the first City was turn'd into a Castle by King William I., it is probable they added the last intake southward in the angle of the Witham.
Defoe, Tour through Great Britain, III. 4.

6. In hydraul., the point at which water is received into a pipe or channel: opposed to outlet.

The intakes [of the London water-supply] were removed further from sources of pollution, and more efficient arrangements for filtration were adopted.
Nature, XXX. 165.

7. In mining: (a) The airway going inbye, or toward the interior of the mine. (b) The air moving in that direction.

intakeholder (in′tāk-hōl″dėr), n. One who holds or possesses an intake. Also intackholder. [Prov. Eng.]

Poor People, as Cotlers, Intackholders, Prentices, and the like, who are engaged by Trades [Isle of Man].
Statute (1664), quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 446.

intaker (in′tā-kėr), n. 1. One who or that which takes or draws in.—2†. A receiver of stolen goods. Spell. Gloss.

intaminated† (in-tam′i-nā-ted), a. [= It. intaminato, < L. intaminatus, unsullied, < in- priv. + taminatus*, pp. of taminare* in comp. contaminare, sully, contaminate: see contaminate.] Uncontaminated.

The inhabitants use the antient and intaminated Frisic language, which is of great affinity with the English Saxon.
Wood, Athenæ Oxon.

intangibility (in-tan-ji-bil′i-ti), n. [< intangible: see -bility.] The quality of being intangible.

intangible (in-tan′ji-bl), a. [= F. intangible = Sp. intangible = It. intangibile; as in-3 + tangible.] Not tangible; incapable of being touched; not perceptible to the touch: often used figuratively.

Tom was not given to inquire subtly into his own motives, any more than into other matters of an intangible kind. George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 5.

A point imperceptible to the eye, a touchstone intangible by the finger, alike of a scholiast and a dunce.
Swinburne, Shakespeare, p. 234.

intangibleness (in-tan′ji-bl-nes), n. Intangibility.

intangibly (in-tan′ji-bli), adv. So as to be intangible.

intangle† (in-tang′gl), v. t. See entangle.

intanglement† (in-tang′gl-mėnt), n. Same as entanglement.

intastable† (in-tās′ta-bl), a. [< in-3 + tastable.] Tasteless; unsavory.

Something which is invisible, intastable, and intangible, as existing only in the fancy, may produce a pleasure superiour to that of sense. Grew.

integer (in′tē-jėr), n. [= F. intègre = Pr. integre, entegre = Sp. integro = Pg. It. integro, < L. integer, untouched, unhurt, unchanged, sound, fresh, whole, entire, pure, honest, < in- priv. + tangere, touch: see tangere, tact. From L. integer, through OF., comes E. entire: see entire.] An entire entity; particularly, in arith., a whole number, in contradistinction to a fraction. Thus, in the number 54.7, 54 is an integer, and .7 a fraction (seven tenths of a unit).

integrability (in″tē-grą-bil′i-ti), n. [< integrable: see -bility.] The quality of being integrable; capability, as of a differential equation, of being solved by means of known functions.

integrable (in′tē-grą-bl), a. [= F. intégrable = Pg. integravel; as integr(ate) + -able.] 1. Capable of being integrated; that may be formed into, or assimilated to, a whole.

An organism whose medium, though unceasingly disintegrating it, is not unceasingly supplying it with integrable matter. H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 134.

2. In math., capable of being integrated, as a mathematical function or differential equation.—Integrable function. See function.—Integrable in ★finite terms. See finite.

integral (in′tē-grąl), a. and n. [= F. intégral = Pr. Sp. Pg. integral = It. integrale, < ML. integralis, < L. integer, entire: see integer.] I. a. 1. Relating to a whole composed of parts spatially distinct (as a human body of head, trunk, and limbs), or of distinct units (as a number).

The integrale partes make perfeicte the whole, and cause the bigness thereof. Sir T. Wilson, Rule of Reason (1552).

A local motion keepeth bodies integral and their parts together. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An integral whole is that which has part out of part. Parts integral, because each is endued with his proper quantity, not only differ in themselves, but also in site, or at least order; so that one is not contained in another. For this it is to have part out of part. . . . This whole is termed mathematical, because quantity is of mathematical consideration: vulgarly, integral.
Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman, Monitio Logica, [I. xiv. 12.

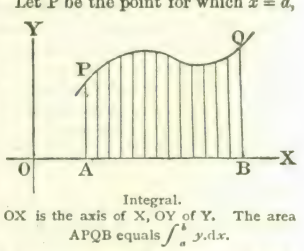
Whole integral is that which consisteth of integral parts, which though they cleave together yet they are distinct and severall in number, as mans body, consisting of head, brest, belly, legs, etc.
Blundeville, Arte of Logicke.

Hence, and by a reversion to the classical meaning of integer—2. Unmaimed; unimpaired.

No wonder if one . . . remain speechless . . . (though of integral principles) who, from an infant, should be bred up amongst mutes, and have no teaching.
Holder, Elem. of Speech, App., p. 115.

3. Intrinsic; belonging as a part to the whole, and not a mere appendage to it.

It is a little uncertain whether the groups of figures at either end of the verandah are integral, or whether they may not have been added at some subsequent period.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 261.



All the Teutonic states in Britain became first dependencies of the West-Saxon king, then integral parts of his kingdom. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 185.

4. In math.: (a) Of, pertaining to, or being a whole number or undivided quantity. (b) Pertaining to or proceeding by integration: as, the integral method.—Integral calculus, a branch of the infinitesimal or differential calculus, which is partly the inverse of the pure differential calculus in the narrower sense. The integral calculus is sometimes taken to include the solution of differential equations, and in that case a comprehensible definition of it can be given: namely, it is the complete discussion of differential equations. So considered, it has the theory of functions as an outgrowth. But the subject of differential equations is sometimes excluded from the integral calculus; and then the latter is left without any clear unity, including the finding and discussion of integrals, a part of the theory of functions, the theory of spherical harmonics, the theory of residuation, etc. The integral calculus is distinguished from the differential calculus in the narrow sense by the far greater importance in it of imaginaries. Compare calculus, 3.—Integral curvature, function, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. 1. An integral whole; a whole formed of parts spatially distinct, or of numerical parts.—2†. An integral part.

They all make up a most magnificent and stately temple, and every integral thereof full of wonder.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 372.

3. In math., the result of integration, or of the operation inverse to differentiation. An integral is either (a) the integral of a quantity or (b) the integral of an equation; and the latter phrase has two senses. (a) The integral of a function is relative to an independent variable, and is taken between limits, which, however, may remain indefinite. A definite integral is conceived as resulting from the multiplication of each value of the function by the corresponding value of the differential of the independent variable, as this variable passes through a continuous series of values from one of the limits, called the first, lower, or inferior, to the other, called the second, upper, or superior, followed by the addition of all the infinitesimal products so obtained. Suppose, for example, that the value of a quantity y depends upon that of another quantity x, so that $y = Fx$, where F signifies some operation performed on x; then, measuring off x and y, upon the axes of a system of two rectangular coördinates, we shall get a plane curve. (See the figure.) Let OX and OY be the axes of x and y respectively. Let A be the point for which $x = a$, $y = 0$; and B the point for which $x = b$, $y = 0$. Let P be the point for which $x = a$, while $y = Fa$; and let Q be the point for which $x = b$, while $y = Fb$. Then conceive the whole space APQB to be filled up with lines parallel to the axis of Y, at infinitesimal distances from one another. Then $y.dx$ will measure the infinitesimal area between two of these lines, the axis of abscissas and the curve; and the sum of all such infinitesimals, or the integral of y relatively to x from $x = a$ to $x = b$, written $\int_a^b y dx$, will measure the whole area APQB. It is to be understood that we never pass from one limit to the other through infinity; but if the first limit is greater than the second, the sign of the definite integral is reversed. This gives a distinct idea of a definite integral, in case the variable is real. If the variable is imaginary, the definite integral is still conceived as the sum of all the values of ydx from one limit to the other; only there is in this case an infinite variety of different paths by which the variable can pass from one limit to the other. It is found, however, that in the plane of the imaginary variable there are generally certain points such that integration round one of them in a closed contour gives a constant value not zero, and but for that the path of integration does not affect the result, for all ordinary functions. An indefinite integral is a function of the independent variable with an arbitrary constant or wholly indeterminate constant added to it, and such that if its value for one value of the independent variable is sub-

Integral.
OX is the axis of X, OY of Y. The area APQB equals $\int_a^b y.dx$.

tracted from another, the difference is the definite integral from the first value of the independent variable to the second. If A is the indefinite integral of B relative to C, then also B is the differential coefficient of A relative to C. (b) An integral of a differential equation or system of such equations is a system of a lower order (it may be a single equation, and it may be one or more ordinary equations) from which the first system is deducible. If the order of the second system is lower than the first by one, the former is a first integral; if by two, a second integral, etc. A complete integral is one which contains the greatest possible number of arbitrary constants for an integral of that order. A singular integral is one which contains a smaller number of arbitrary constants, but is not a particular case of any irreducible complete integral. A general integral is one which contains the greatest possible number of arbitrary functions; but the complete integral of an ordinary differential equation is also termed a general integral. A particular integral is a particular case of a complete integral having a smaller number of arbitrary constants. (c) A quantity or expression which a system of differential equations makes to be constant is also termed an integral of that system.—Abelian integral. See Abelian.—Circular integral, an integral taken round a circle in the plane of the imaginary variable, any pole of the function being the center.—Closed integral, an imaginary integral whose upper and lower limits coincide, a circuit being described by the variable in the course of the integration.—Complete integral. See complete.—Cosine integral. See cosine.—Dirichletian integral, an integral of the form

$$\int_0^a \Phi(x, h)\mathrm{d}x,$$ which for $h = \infty$ has a finite and determinate value other than zero and independent of a. Such, for example, is

$$\int_0^a \frac{\sin hx}{x}\,\mathrm{d}x.$$

Elliptic, Eulerian, exponential integral. See the adjectives.—First integral, the result of performing the operation of taking the integral once.—Fourierian integral, a double integral of the form which, after the performance of the integration relatively to y, becomes a Dirichletian integral.—Hyperelliptic, imaginary, etc., integral. See the adjectives.—Integral of the first kind, an Abelian integral for which the second member of Abel's formula vanishes.—Integral of the second kind, an Abelian integral for which the second member of Abel's formula is rational.—Integral of the third kind, an Abelian integral for which the second member of Abel's formula involves a logarithmic function.—Irreducible integral, an integral not a rational integral homogeneous function of integrals of lower degree.—Linear integral, an integral along one or more straight lines in the plane of the imaginary variable.—Line-integral, surface-integral, volume-integral, having different values at different points of space, the integral obtained by breaking a curve, a surface, or a solid into equal elementary portions, and taking the sum of the products obtained by multiplying each by the value of the quantity integrated at that point.—Open integral, an integral whose two limits are unequal.

$$\int_0^h \mathrm{d}y \int_0^a \mathrm{d}x.\ \phi(x, y),$$

integralism (in′tē-gral-izm), n. [< integral + -ism.] Same as integrality.

> The philosophy developed from universology he [Stephen Pearl Andrews] called integralism.
> Appleton's Ann. Cyc., 1886, p. 663.

integrality (in-tē-gral′i-ti), n. [= F. intégralité; as integral + -ity.] The quality of being integral; entireness. [Rare.]

> Such as in their integrality support nature.
> Whitaker, Blood of the Grape.

integrally (in′tē-gral-i), adv. In an integral manner; wholly; completely.

integrant (in′tē-grant), a. and n. [= F. intégrant = Sp. Pg. It. integrante, < L. integran(t-)s, ppr. of integrare, make whole, repair, renew: see integrate.] I. a. 1. Going to the formation of an integral whole.

> In the integrate whole of a human body, the head, body, and limbs, its integrant parts, are not contained in, but each lies out of, each other. Hamilton.

> If the sun was not created till the Fourth Day, what becomes of the astronomic teaching that earth has been from the beginning an integrant part of the solar system?
> G. D. Boardman, Creative Week, p. 140.

2. Intrinsic: same as integral, 3, but modified in form by an affectation of precision.

> A process . . . of degeneration is an integrant and active part of the economy of nature.
> Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 237.

Integrant molecule, in Haüy's theory of crystals, the smallest particle of a crystal that can be arrived at by mechanical division.

II. n. An integral part.

integrate (in′tē-grāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. integrated, ppr. integrating. [< L. integratus, pp. of integrare (> It. integrare = Sp. Pg. integrar = F. intégrer), make whole, renew, repair, begin again, < integer, whole, fresh: see integer.] 1. To bring together the parts of; bring together as parts; segregate and bring together like particles.

> All the world must grant that two distinct substances, the soul and the body, go to compound and integrate the man. South, Works, VII. i.

> There is a property in the horizon which no man has but he whose eye can integrate all the parts—that is, the poet. Emerson, Nature.

2. To perform the mathematical operation of integration. The mean value of a quantity over a space or time is obtained by integrating that quantity; hence, instruments which register the mean values of quantities or the totals of their instantaneous effects are called integrating instruments: as, an integrating thermometer.—Integrating factor. See factor.—To integrate a differential, in the integral calculus, to determine from that differential its primitive function.

integrate (in′tē-grāt), a. [< L. integratus, pp.: see the verb.] Summed up; resulting from the aggregation of separate parts; complete.

> Phi. How liked you my quip to Hedon, about the garter? Was't not witty?
> Mor. Exceeding witty and integrate.
> B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

> This whole is termed mathematical, because quantity is of mathematical consideration: vulgarly, integral, more properly, integrate. Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

★integration (in-tē-grā′shọn), n. [= F. intégration = Sp. integración = Pg. integração = It. integrazione, < LL. integratio(n-), a renewing, restoring, < L. integrare, renew, restore: see integrate.] 1. The act of integrating, or bringing together the parts of an integral whole; the act of segregating and bringing together similar particles.

> Integration of parts means the connected play of them, so that, one being affected, the rest are affected.
> W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 95.

> The term integration we have already partly defined as the concentration of the material units which go to make up any aggregate. But a complete definition must recognize the fact that, along with the integration of wholes, there goes on (in all cases in which structural complexity is attained) an integration of parts. This secondary integration may be defined as the segregation, or grouping together, of those units of a heterogeneous aggregate which resemble one another. A good example is afforded by crystallization. . . . Integration is seen in the rising of cream upon the surface of a dish of milk, and in the frothy collection of carbonic acid bubbles covering a newly-filled glass of ale. J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 336.

2. In math., the operation inverse to differentiation; the operation of finding the integral of a function or of an equation.—3. The inference of subcontrariety from "Some A is B" to "Some A is not B."—Constant of integration, the constant which must be added to every integral with one limit fixed, in order to get the complete expression for an indefinite integral: denoted by the letter C.—Finite integration, the summation of any number of terms of a series whose law is known.—Gaussian method of approximate integration. See Gaussian.—Indefinite, definite integration. See indefinite integral, under integral.—Integration by parts, integration by the formula by means of which many expressions are integrated.—Integration by quadratures, the numerical approximation to the value of an integral.—Limits of integration, the initial and terminal values of the variable, between which a definite integral is taken.—Path of integration, the path on the plane of imaginary quantity along which a complex variable is supposed to vary in integration.—Sign of integration, the character $\int$, modified from a long S for summa (sum), used to signify the process of integration. It was invented by Leibnitz.

$$\int uv\,\mathrm{d}t = u\int v\,\mathrm{d}t - \int\left(\int v\,\mathrm{d}t\right)\frac{\mathrm{d}u}{\mathrm{d}t}.\,\mathrm{d}t,$$

integrative (in′tē-grā-tiv), a. [< integrate + -ive.] Tending to integrate or complete; conducive to integration or the formation of a whole.

> The integrative process which results in individual evolution. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 333.

★integrator (in′tē-grā-tọr), n. [< integrate + -or.] An instrument for performing numerical integrations. There are a great variety of such instruments, as planimeters, tide-integrating machines, integrating thermometers, etc.

integripalliate (in″tē-gri-pal′i-āt), a. An infrequent but more correct form of integropalliate.

integrity (in-teg′ri-ti), n. [= F. intégrité = Pr. integritat = Sp. integridad = Pg. integridade = It. integrità, < L. integrita(t-)s, unimpaired condition, wholeness, entireness, purity, innocence, honesty, < integer, untouched, unimpaired, whole: see integer. From L. integrita(t-)s, through the OF., comes E. entirety, q. v.] 1. The state of being integral; unimpaired extent, amount, or constitution; wholeness; completeness.

> In Japanese eyes every alien became a Bateren (padre), and therefore an evil person harbouring mischievous designs against the integrity of the empire.
> Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 681.

> To violate the integrity of one part of the Key of India is to impair the value of the whole of it.
> Marvin, Gates of Herat, v.

2. Unimpaired condition; soundness of state; freedom from corruption or impurity.

> Your dishonour
> Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
> Of that integrity which should become it.
> Shak., Cor., iii. 1, 158.

> We plead for no more but that the Church of God may have the same purity and integrity which it had in the primitive times. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. ix.

3. Unimpaired morality; soundness of moral principle and character; entire uprightness or fidelity.

> The moral grandeur of independent integrity is the sublimest thing in nature. Buckminster.

> Our foe,
> Tempting, affronts us with his foul esteem
> Of our integrity. Milton, P. L., ix. 329.

> There is no surer mark of integrity than a courageous adherence to virtue in the midst of a general and scandalous apostacy. Ep. Atterbury, Sermons, II. xii.

Law of integrity, in logic, the principle that in any inquiry all the known facts should be taken into account.—Syn. 1. Completeness.—3. Probity, Uprightness, etc. See honesty.

Integropallia (in″tē-grō-pal′i-ạ), n. pl. [NL., pl. of integropallis:* see integropallial.] A subdivision of the lamellibranchiate mollusks, in which the pallial line in the interior of the shell is unbroken in its curvature and presents no indentation, and which have either no siphons or short unretractile ones.

integropallial (in″tē-grō-pal′i-ạl), a. [< L. integer, whole, + pallium, mantle.] Same as integropalliate.

integropalliate (in″tē-grō-pal′i-āt), a. [< L. integer, whole, + pallium, mantle: see palliate.] In conch., having the pallial line integral or unbroken by a notch or sinus, as a bivalve mollusk or lamellibranch: opposed to sinupalliate. Also integripalliate, integropallial.

Left Valve of Oyster (Ostrea virginiana), showing unbroken pallial impression, m, m, m.

> Integropalliate and sinupalliate, . . . applied to Lamellibranchs which have the pallial line evenly rounded or notched. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 413.

integument (in-teg′ū-ment), n. [= F. intégument = Sp. It. integumento, < L. integumentum, a covering, < integere, cover, < in, upon, + tegere, cover: see tegmen, tegument.] 1. In general, a covering; that which covers or clothes.

> Many and much in price
> Were those integuments they wrought, t' adorne thy exequies. Chapman, Iliad, xxii.

Specifically—2. That which naturally covers or invests any animal or vegetable body, as a skin, shell, case, crust, or rind; especially, a continuous investment or covering, as the cutaneous envelop or skin of an animal body, with or without its special appendages. The integument may be thin, soft, and membranous, as a flexible skin, or variously thickened, hardened, crustaceous, chitinous, etc., as the shells of crustaceans and mollusks or the hard cases of insects; and it often bears particular outgrowths or appendages, as hairs, feathers, or scales.

integumental (in-teg-ū-men′tạl), a. [< integument + -al.] Same as integumentary.

> An integumental pit or genital cloaca.
> Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 276.

integumentary (in-teg-ū-men′tạ-ri), a. [< integument + -ary.] 1. Covering or investing in general, as a skin, rind, or peel.—2. Pertaining to or consisting of integument; tegumentary; integumental; cutaneous.

integumentation (in-teg″ū-men-tā′shọn), n. [< integument + -ation.] The act of covering with integument; the covering itself.

★intellect (in′te-lekt), n. [= F. intellect = Sp. (obs.) intelecto = Pg. intellecto = It. intelletto, < L. intellectus, a perceiving, perception, understanding, < intellegere, intelligere, perceive, understand: see intelligent.] 1. The understanding; the sum of all the cognitive faculties except sense, or except sense and imagination. The Latin word intellectus was used to translate the Greek νοῦς, which in the theory of Aristotle is the faculty of the cognition of principles, and that which mainly distinguishes man from the beasts. Hence, the psychologists of the Scotch school use intellect as the synonym of common sense, or the faculty of apprehending a priori principles. The agent or active intellect, according to Aristotle, is the impersonal intellect that has created the world (see phrase below); the passive, patient, or possible intellect is that which belongs to the individual and perishes with him. But with St. Thomas Aquinas the distinction is quite different, the possible intellect being the faculty receptive of the intelligible species emitted by things, while the agent intellect is the power of operative thought. The term pure intellect, said to be used by St. Augustine, and certainly as early as Scotus Erigena, had always denoted the divine intellect, unmixed with matter, until Kant (adopting, as was his frequent practice, the terminology of Löscher) applied it to intellect as separated, in its use or application, from sense. Practical intellect is distinguished from theoretical or speculative, by Aristotle and all other psychologists, as having an end in view. The Platonists at all periods during the middle ages made intellect a special cognitive faculty, higher than reason and lower than intelligence—namely, the faculty of understanding and conceiving of things natural but invisible, as soul and its faculties and operations. (Intellectus more often means the cognitive act, product (concept), or habit than the faculty.) With Kant the intellect is, first, in a general sense, the nonsensuous, self-active faculty of cognition; the faculty of producing representations, of bringing unity into the matter given in sense, of conceiving objects, and of judging; the faculty of concepts, or rules, of discursive cognition; the faculty of a priori synthesis, of bringing the manifold of given representations under the unity of self-consciousness; and secondly, in a narrower sense, the faculty of conceiving of intuited objects and of forming concepts and judgments concerning them, but excluding the pure use of the understanding, which in the Kantian system is reason.

Intellect, sensitivity, and will are the three heads under which the powers and capacities of the human mind are now generally arranged. In this use of it the term intellect includes all those powers by which we acquire, retain, and extend our knowledge, as perception, memory, imagination, judgment, &c. Fleming, Vocab. of Philos.

The intellect is only a subtler and more far-seeing sense, and the sense is a short-sighted and grosser intellect.
W. Wallace, Epicureanism, p. 93.

I was readily persuaded that I had no idea in my intellect which had not formerly passed through the senses.
Descartes, Meditations (tr. by Veitch), vi.

2. Mind collectively; current or collective intelligence: as, the intellect of the time.

The study of barbaric languages and dialects — a study that now absorbs so much of the most adventurous intellect of philology. Amer. Jour. Philol., VII. 255.

3. pl. Wits; senses; mind: as, disordered in his intellects. [Obsolete or vulgar.]—Agent intellect [L. intellectus agens, tr. Gr. νοῦς ποιητικός, creative reason], in the Peripatetic philosophy, a being, faculty, or function, the highest form of mind, or the highest under the Deity. To determine with precision what Aristotle meant by it is an insoluble problem, and it has been understood in the most widely different senses by different philosophers: sometimes it is regarded as consisting of the intellectual relations really existing in outward things and acting upon the understanding as upon a perceptive faculty; sometimes it is conceived as a divine life which at once animates the soul and creates the objects of its knowledge; sometimes it is believed to be a living being, a sort of angel, imparting knowledge to the mind; sometimes it is made a faculty creative of the ideas which the possible intellect then apprehends; sometimes it is little more than the power of abstracting general notions from singulars; sometimes it is treated as an unconscious activity of thought: and each of the senses of the term has had its varieties. =Syn. 1. Soul, Spirit, etc. See mind.

intellected (in'te-lek-ted), a. [< intellect + -ed[2].] Endowed with intellect; having intellectual powers or capacities. [Rare.]

In body and in bristles they became
All swine, yet intellected as before.
Cowper, Odyssey, x. 297.

intellectible (in-te-lek'ti-bl), a. [< ML. intellectibilis, < L. intelligere, pp. intellectus, understand: see intellect.] In metaph., of the nature of a pure self-subsistent form, apprehended only by the reason. See intelligible, 2.

intellection (in-te-lek'shon), n. [= F. intellection = Pr. entellectio = Sp. intelección = Pg. intellecção = It. intellezione, < L. intellectio(n-), understanding (in L. used only in a technical sense, synecdoche, but in ML. in lit. sense), < intellegere, intelligere, perceive, understand: see intellect, intelligent.] 1. An act of understanding; simple apprehension of ideas; mental activity; exercise of or capacity for thought.

I may say frustra to the comprehension of your intellection. B. Jonson, Case is Altered, i. 2.

The immortality of man is as legitimately preached from the intellections as from the moral volitions.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 301.

So exquisite was his [Spenser's] sensibility that with him sensation and intellection seem identical, and we "can almost say his body thought."
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 176.

In thinking, or intellection, as it has been conveniently termed, there is always a search for something more or less vaguely conceived, for a clue which will be known when it occurs by seeming to satisfy certain conditions.
J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 75.

2. In rhet., the figure also called synecdoche.

Intellection . . . is a trope, when we gather or judge the whole by the part or part by the whole.
Sir T. Wilson, Art of Rhetoric (1553), p. 177.

intellective (in-te-lek'tiv), a. [= F. intellectif = Pr. intellectiu = Sp. intelectivo = Pg. intellectivo = It. intellettivo, < ML. as if intellectivus*, < L. intellegere, intelligere, pp. intellectus, understand: see intellect, intelligent.] 1. Of or pertaining to the intellect; having power to understand, know, or comprehend.

According to his power intellective, to understand, to will, to nill, and such like. Blundeville.

For the total man, therefore, the truer conception of God is as "the Eternal Power, not ourselves, by which all things fulfil the law of their being;" by which, therefore, we fulfil the law of our being so far as our being is æsthetic and intellective, as well as so far as it is moral.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma.

2. Produced by the understanding. Harris.— 3. Capable of being perceived by the understanding only, not by the senses.

Instead of beginning with arts most easy, . . . they present their young unmatriculated novices with the most intellective abstractions of logick and metaphysicks.
Milton, Education.

4†. Intellectual; intelligent.

In my iudgment there is not a beast so intellectiue as are these Eliphants. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 235.

Intellective cognition. See cognition.

intellectively (in-te-lek'tiv-li), adv. In an intellective or intelligible manner.

Not intellectiuely to write
Is learnedly they troe.
Warner, Albion's England, ix. 44.

intellectual (in-te-lek'tū-al), a. and n. [= F. intellectuel = Pr. intellectual = Sp. intelectual = Pg. intellectual = It. intellettuale, < LL. intellectualis, pertaining to the understanding, < L. intellectus, understanding: see intellect.] I. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of intellect or understanding; belonging to the mind; performed by the understanding; appealing to or engaging the intellect or the higher capacities of man; mental: as, intellectual powers or operations; intellectual amusements.

What is the whole history of the intellectual progress of the world but one long struggle of the intellect of man to emancipate itself from the deceptions of nature?
Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 56.

Knowledge of books, and a habit of careful reading, is a most important means of intellectual development.
J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 312.

2. Perceived by the intellect; existing in the understanding; ideal.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene. Cowley.

3. Having intellect, or the power of understanding; characterized by intellect, or the capacity for the higher forms of knowledge: as, an intellectual being.

Could have approach'd the eternal light as near
As th' intellectual angels could have done.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality, Int.

Intellectual cognition. See cognition.—Intellectual distinctness, the separate apprehension of the different marks which enter into any idea.—Intellectual feelings. See the extract.

It will also be convenient to include under the one term intellectual feelings not only the feelings connected with certainty, doubt, perplexity, comprehension, and so forth, but also what the Herbartian psychologists—whose work in this department of psychology is classical—have called par excellence the formal feelings—that is to say, feelings which they regard as entirely determined by the form of the flow of ideas, and not by the ideas themselves.
J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 69.

Intellectual indistinctness. See indistinctness, 2.—Intellectual intuition, an immediate cognition, or an intuition of a general truth: a phrase invented by Kant for the purpose of denying the existence of the thing, which was afterward asserted by Fichte.

II. n. The intellect or understanding; mental powers or faculties: commonly in the plural. [Now rare.]

By these Extravagancies and odd Chimera's of my Brain you may well perceive that I was not well, but distemper'd, especially in my Intellectuals.
Howell, Letters, ii. 29.

Her husband . . . not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I shun.
Milton, P. L., ix. 483.

A person whose intellectuals were overturned, and his brain shaken out of its natural position.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, ix.

intellectualisation, intellectualise. See intellectualization, intellectualize.

intellectualism (in-te-lek'tū-al-izm), n. [< intellectual + -ism.] 1. Exercise of intellectuality; devotion to intellectual occupation or thought.

The whole course of study is narrowed to a dry intellectualism. The American, V. 278.

2. Belief in the supremacy of the intellect; the doctrine that all knowledge is derived from pure reason.

Here again he [Carneades] opposed a free intellectualism to what was, in reality, the slavish materialism of the Stoics. J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptics, I. 314.

intellectualist (in-te-lek'tū-al-ist), n. [< intellectual + -ist.] One who intellectualizes; a devotee of the intellect or understanding; one who believes or holds that all knowledge is derived from pure reason.

Upon these intellectualists, which are, notwithstanding, commonly taken for the most sublime and divine philosophers, Heraclitus gave a just censure.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i.

These pure and seraphic intellectualists forsooth despise all sensible knowledge as too grosse and materiall for their nice and curious faculties.
Bp. Parker, Platonick Philos., p. 62.

To satisfy all those intellectualists who might wish to do the computing and theorizing for themselves.
Piazzi Smyth, Pyramid, p. 172.

intellectualistic (in-te-lek″tū-a-lis'tik), a. [< intellectualist + -ic.] Of or pertaining to intellectualism, or the doctrine of the intellectualists.

Of what may be called spiritualistic or intellectualistic pantheism. T. Whittaker, Mind, XII. 455.

intellectuality (in-te-lek-tū-al'i-ti), n. [= F. intellectualité = Sp. intelectualidad = Pg. intellectualidade = It. intellettualità, < LL. intellectualita(t-)s, < intellectualis, intellectual: see intellectual.] The state of being intellectual; intellectual endowment; force or power of intellect.

A certain plastick or spermatick nature, devoid of all animality or conscious intellectuality.
Hallywell, Melampronœa (1681), p. 84.

He [Hogg] was protected by a fine non-conducting web of intellectuality and of worldliness from all those influences which startle and waylay the soul of the poet, the lover, the saint, and the hero. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 57.

intellectualization (in-te-lek″tū-al-i-zā'shon), n. [< intellectualize + -ation.] A making intellectual; development of the intellect. Also spelled intellectualisation.

A superficial intellectualization is to be secured [in schools] at the cost of a deep-seated demoralization.
H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 373.

intellectualize (in-te-lek'tū-al-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. intellectualized, ppr. intellectualizing. [= F. intellectualiser; as intellectual + -ize.] 1. To treat or reason upon in an intellectual manner.—2. To inform or endow with intellect; cause to become intellectual; develop the intellect or intellectuality of.—3. To give or attribute an intellectual or ideal character or aspect to; idealize.

Leibnitz intellectualised perception, just as Locke sensualised the conceptions of the understanding.
E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 506.

The biological bond which binds man to the past and to the outer world has an intellectualizing effect upon our conceptions. N. A. Rev., CXX. 259.

Also spelled intellectualise.

intellectually (in-te-lek'tū-al-i), adv. In an intellectual manner; by means of the understanding; with reference to the intellect.

intellectualness (in-te-lek'tū-al-nes), n. The quality of being intellectual; intellectuality.

Is it impossible to combine the hardiness of these savages with the intellectualness of the civilized man?
Thoreau, Walden, p. 16.

★ intelligence (in-tel'i-jens), n. [< ME. intelligence, intelligens, < OF. (also F.) intelligence = Pr. intelligencia, entelligencia = Sp. inteligencia = Pg. intelligencia = It. intelligenza, < L. intellegentia, intelligentia, discernment, understanding, intelligence, < intellegen(t-)s, intelligen(t-)s, discerning, intelligent: see intelligent.] 1. The quality of being intelligent; understanding; intellect; power of cognition.

God, of himselfe incapable to sense,
In 's Works, reueales him t' our intelligence.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

The intelligence is not one thing among others in the intelligible world, but the principle in reference to which alone that world exists, and, . . . therefore, there is nothing in the nature of intelligence to prevent it from understanding a universe which is essentially the object of intelligence. E. Caird, Hegel, p. 153.

Intelligence is that which sees itself, or is at once object and subject.
J. Watson, Schelling's Transcendental Idealism, p. 37.

2. Cultivated understanding; acquired knowledge; information stored up in the mind.

An ancient, not a legendary tale,
By one of sound intelligence rehears'd.
Cowper, Task, vi. 480.

Common instinct is sufficient to guard against palpable causes of injury; intelligence alone can protect us from the latent and deeper agencies of physiological mischief.
Huxley and Youmans, Physiol., § 380.

3. Exercise of superior understanding; address; skill: as, he performed his mission with much intelligence.

Oedes regned in the marches tho;
Sagilly hym ruled to intelligens.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5315.

4. Mutual understanding; interchange of information or sentiment; intelligent intercourse: as, a glance of intelligence passed between them; to have intelligence with the enemy.

From whence I found a secret means to have Intelligence with my kind lord, the king.
Drayton, Pierce Gaveston.

The inhabitants could not long live in good intelligence among themselves; they fell into dissentions.
J. Adams, Works, IV. 516.

5. Information received or imparted; communicated knowledge; news: as, intelligence of a shipwreck.

I can give you intelligence of an intended marriage.
Shak., Much Ado, i. 3, 46.

6. An intelligent being; intellectual existence; concrete understanding: as, God is the Supreme Intelligence.

How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure Intelligence of heaven, angel serene!
Milton, P. L., viii. 181.

The great Intelligences fair
That range above our mortal state.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxxv.

Intelligence department, a bureau of statistics or of information with regard to certain specified matters; especially, in the military and naval establishments of several countries, a department which collects and prepares abstracts of all the information attainable concerning the resources of all civilized nations for waging offensive or defensive wars. The subjects of information relate chiefly to organization of armies, topography and routes, speed and armament of naval vessels, defenses, strategy and tactics, etc.—Intelligence office, an office or place where information may be obtained, particularly respecting servants to be hired.=Syn. 1. Understanding, intellect, mind, perception, common sense.—5. Advice, Tidings, etc. (see news), notification.

intelligence† (in-tel'i-jens), v. t. [< intelligence, n.] To convey intelligence; tell tales; tattle.

If you stir far in this, I'le have you whipt, your ears nail'd for intelligencing o' the pillory, and your goods forfeit. Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, iii. 1.

intelligencer (in-tel'i-jen-sėr), n. [< intelligence, v., + -er[1].] One who or that which sends or conveys intelligence; one who or that which gives notice of private or distant transactions; a messenger or spy. [The word was formerly much used in the specific sense of 'a newspaper.']

Alas, I know not how to feign and lie,
Or win a base intelligencer's meed.
Middleton, Father Hubbard's Tales.

It was a carnival of intellect without faith, . . . when prime ministers and commanders-in-chief could be intelligencers of the Pretender, nay, when even Algernon Sidney himself could be a pensioner of France.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 400.

intelligency† (in-tel'i-jen-si), n. Same as intelligence.

From flocks, herds, and other natural assemblages or groups of living creatures, to human intelligencys and correspondencys, or whatever is higher in the kind.
Shaftesbury, Misc. Reflect., iii. 2.

intelligent (in-tel'i-jent), a. [< F. intelligent = Sp. Pg. It. intelligente, < L. intellegen(t-)s, intelligen(t-)s, discerning, understanding, ppr. of intellegere, intelligere, see into, perceive, discern, distinguish, discriminate, understand, < inter, between, + legere, gather, collect, pick, choose, read: see legend.] 1. Having the faculty of understanding; capable of comprehending facts or ideas: as, man is an intelligent being.

If worms have the power of acquiring some notion, however rude, of the shape of an object and of their burrows, as seems to be the case, they deserve to be called intelligent. Darwin, Vegetable Mould, p. 97.

2. Having an active intellect; possessing aptitude or skill; well informed: as, an intelligent artisan or officer.

There is nothing that . . . may more easily deceive the unwary, or that may more amuse the most intelligent observer. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 331.

3. Marked by or indicating intelligence; guided by knowledge or comprehension: as, the intelligent actions of ants; an intelligent answer.

Vallandigham . . . was too far away for intelligent and efficient direction. The Century, XXXVIII. 553.

4†. Having knowledge; cognizant: followed by of.

The eagle and the stork
On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build:
Part loosely wing the region; part, more wise,
In common, ranged in figure, wedge their way, Intelligent of seasons. Milton, P. L., vii. 427.

5†. Bearing intelligence; giving information; communicative.

Servants, who seem no less;
Which are to France the spies and speculations Intelligent of our state. Shak., Lear, iii. 1, 25.

=Syn. 2. Common-sense, etc. (see sensible); quick, bright, acute, discerning, sharp-witted, clear-headed.

intelligential (in-tel-i-jen'shal), a. [< intelligence (L. intelligentia) + -al.] 1. Pertaining to the intelligence; relating to or capable of understanding; intellectual.

That grand prerogative of our nature, a hungering and thirsting after truth, as the appropriate end of our intelligential, and its point of union with our moral, nature.
Coleridge, The Friend, ii. 9.

The generality of men attend . . . hardly at all to the indications . . . of a true law of our being on its æsthetic and intelligential side.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, i.

2. Consisting of intelligence or concrete mind.

Food alike those pure
Intelligential substances require.
Milton, P. L., v. 408.

3†. Intelligent.

In at his mouth
The devil enter'd; and his brutal sense,
In heart or head, possessing, soon inspired With act intelligential. Milton, P. L., ix. 190.

4. Conveying intelligence; serving to transmit information.

The New York telegraph office, radiating 250,000 miles of intelligential nerves to ten thousand mind-centers in America. The Century, XXVI. 692.

intelligentiary† (in-tel-i-jen'shi-ā-ri), n. [< intelligence (L. intelligentia) + -ary.] One who conveys intelligence; one who communicates information; an intelligencer. Holinshed.

intelligently (in-tel'i-jent-li), adv. In an intelligent manner; so as to manifest knowledge or understanding.

intelligibility (in-tel″i-ji-bil'i-ti), n. [= F. intelligibilité = It. intelligibilità, < L. as if intellegibilita(t-)s*, < intellegibilis, intelligible: see intelligible.] 1. The quality or character of being intelligible; capability of being understood.

I call it outline, for the sake of immediate intelligibility; strictly speaking, it is merely the edge of the shade.
Ruskin, Elem. of Drawing.

2†. The property of possessing intelligence or understanding; intellection.

The soul's nature consists in intelligibility. Glanville.

intelligible (in-tel'i-ji-bl), a. [= F. intelligible = Sp. inteligible = Pg. intelligivel = It. intelligibile, < L. intellegibilis, intelligibilis, that can be understood, < intellegere, intelligere, understand: see intelligent.] 1. That can be understood; capable of being apprehended by the intellect or understanding; comprehensible.

If Charles had been the last of his line, there would have been an intelligible reason for putting him to death.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

2. In the Kantian philosophy, capable of being apprehended by the understanding only; incapable of being given in sense or applied to it. In the middle ages intelligible and intellectible were carefully distinguished, the former word having its ordinary present sense, and the latter that of being apprehended only by the intellect acting alone, without the senses. The distinction became later somewhat broken down, and finally Kant introduced the use of intelligible defined above.

A real division of objects into phenomena and noumena, and of the world into a sensible and intelligible world, is therefore quite inadmissible, although concepts may very well be divided into sensible and intelligible. No objects can be assigned to noumena, nor can they be represented as objectively valid. . . . With all this, the concept of a noumenon, if taken as problematical only, remains not only admissible, but, as a concept to limit the sphere of sensibility, indispensable. In this case, however, it is not a purely intelligible object for our understanding, but an understanding to which it could belong is itself a problem, if we ask how I could know an object not discursively by means of categories, but intuitively, and yet in a non-sensuous intuition—a process of which we could not understand even the bare possibility. . . . If by purely intelligible objects we understand things which, without all schemata of sensibility, are thought by mere categories, such objects are simply impossible.
Kant, Critique of Pure Reason, tr. by Max Müller, II. iii.

Intelligible form, in metaph. See form.—Intelligible matter, in metaph., that which is distinguished as matter by the understanding.

Aristotle divides matter into intelligible and sensible: and intelligible is that when in accidents or other simple things the mind distinguishes between material and formal. So letters are said to be the matter of words, words of speech. Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

Intelligible species. See species.=Syn. 1. Comprehensible, perspicuous, plain, clear.

intelligibleness (in-tel'i-ji-bl-nes), n. The quality of being intelligible; intelligibility.

intelligibly (in-tel'i-ji-bli), adv. In an intelligible manner; so as to be understood; clearly; plainly: as, to write or speak intelligibly.

intemerate† (in-tem'e-rāt), a. [= OF. intemeré = Pg. It. intemerato, < L. intemeratus, undefiled, < in- priv. + temeratus, pp. of temerare, defile: see temeration.] Pure; undefiled.

The entire and intemerate comeliness of virtues.
Partheneia Sacra, Pr. A. iiij. b: 1633. (Latham.) intemerateness† (in-tem'e-rāt-nes), n. The state of being intemerate, pure, or undefiled.

They [letters] shall therefore ever keep the sincerity and intemerateness of the fountain whence they are derived.
Donne, Letters, x.

intemperament (in-tem'pėr-a-ment), n. [= Pg. intemperamento; as in-[3] + temperament.] A physically bad state or constitution. [Rare.]

The intemperament of the part ulcerated. Harvey.

intemperance (in-tem'pėr-ans), n. [= F. intempérance = Sp. intemperancia = Pg. intemperança = It. intemperanza, < L. intemperantia, want of mildness, inclemency (as of weather), want of moderation, excess (intemperantia vini, immoderate use of wine), insolence, arrogance, < intemperan(t-)s, immoderate, given to excess, intemperate, incontinent, profligate: see intemperant, temperance.] 1. The quality of being intemperate; lack of temperance or moderation; immoderateness or excess in any kind of action; excessive indulgence of any passion or appetite.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny. Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3, 67.

God is in every creature; be cruel toward none, neither abuse any by intemperance. Jer. Taylor.

Their fierce and irregular magnificence, their feverish and strenuous intemperance of rhetoric.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 536.

2. In a restricted sense, excessive indulgence in intoxicating drink; habitual lack of temperance in drink, with or without actual drunkenness.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness and intemperance by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts.

intemperancy† (in-tem'pėr-an-si), n. Same as intemperance. North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 619.

intemperant (in-tem'pėr-ant), a. and n. [< L. intemperan(t-)s, ppr., intemperate, immoderate, given to excess, profligate, < in-, not, + temperan(t-)s, ppr. of temperare: see temper, temperate.] I.† a. Intemperate.

Soche as be intemperaunt—that is, foloers of their naughtie appetites and lustes.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 15.

II. n. One who is intemperate; especially, one who uses alcoholic liquors intemperately. Dr. Richardson.

intemperate (in-tem'pėr-āt), a. [< ME. intemperat = F. intempéré = It. intemperato, < L. intemperatus, untempered, inclement (of the weather), immoderate, excessive, < in- priv. + temperatus, tempered, moderate, temperate: see temperate.] 1. Immoderate in conduct or action; not exercising or characterized by proper moderation: as, intemperate in labor or in zeal; intemperate in study.

They understand it not, and think no such matter, but admire and dote upon worldly riches and honours, with an easie and intemperat life.
Milton, Church-Government, ii., Concl.

2. In a restricted sense, immoderate in the use of intoxicating drink; given to excessive drinking.—3. Immoderate in measure or degree; excessive; inordinate; violent: as, intemperate language; intemperate actions; an intemperate climate.

The fitful philosophy and intemperate eloquence of Tully. Sumner, Orations, I. 143.

Intemperate habits, habitual and excessive indulgence in the use of alcoholic drinks; in law, the habit of drinking to intoxication when occasion offers, sobriety or abstinence being the exception. Stone, J., in Tatum vs. State, 63 Ala., 152.

intemperately (in-tem'pėr-āt-li), adv. In an intemperate manner; immoderately; excessively.

As little or rather less am I able to coerce the people at large, who behaved very unwisely and intemperately on that occasion. Burke, Conduct of the Minority.

intemperateness (in-tem'pėr-āt-nes), n. 1. The state of being intemperate; want of moderation; excessive indulgence: as, the intemperateness of appetite or passion.

For a Christian to excuse his intemperatenesse by his natural inclination, and to say I am borne cholericke, sullen, amorous, is an apology worse than the fault.
Bp. Hall, Heaven upon Earth, § 7.

2†. Disturbance of atmospheric conditions; excess of heat or cold.

I am very well aware that divers diseases . . . may be rationally referred to manifest intemperatenesses of the air. Boyle, Works, V. 50.

intemperature† (in-tem'pėr-ā-tūr), n. [< OF. intemperature; < in- priv. + temperature, temperature: see temperature.] Intemperance; excess.

The prince was layed vpon his bed bare headed, in his ierkin, for the great heat and intemperature of the weather. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 37.

Yet doth it not follow that any one man, with the multitude, should run to Rome to suck the infection of dissolute intemperature. Ford, Line of Life.

Great intemperatures of the air, especially in point of heat. Boyle, Works, V. 58.

intemperous† (in-tem′pėr-us), a. [Irreg. < intemper(ate) + -ous.] Intemperate.

And rather would, hearts so intemperous
Should not enjoy mee, than imploy mee thus.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas.

intempestive† (in-tem-pes′tiv), a. [= F. intempestif = Sp. Pg. It. intempestivo, < L. intempestivus, untimely, unseasonable, < in- priv. + tempestivus, timely, seasonable: see tempestive.] Unseasonable; untimely.

Intempestive laughing, weeping, sighing.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 238.

intempestively† (in-tem-pes′tiv-li), adv. Unseasonably.

That sound true opinion that in all Christian professions there is way to salvation (which I think you think) may have been so incommodiously or intempestively sometimes uttered by you. Donne, Letters, xc.

intempestivity† (in-tem-pes-tiv′i-ti), n. [< L. intempestivita(t-)s, untimeliness, < intempestivus, untimely: see intempestive.] Untimeliness; unseasonableness.

Our moral books tell us of a vice which they call ἀκαιρία, intempestivity; an indiscretion by which unwise and unexperienced men see not what befits times, persons, occasions. Hales, Sermon at Eton, p. 4.

in tempo (in tem′pō). [It.: in, in; tempo, time: see tempo.] In music, in strict rhythm.

intenable† (in-ten′a-bl), a. [= F. intenable; as in-[3] + tenable.] I. Not tenable; untenable; not to be held or maintained.

His Lordship's proposition may be expressed in plainer terms, "That the more the world has advanced in real knowledge, the more it has discovered of the intenable pretensions of the Gospel." Warburton, Works, IX. xiii.

2. Incapable of containing. Also intenible.

I know I love in vain, strive against hope;
Yet, in this captious and intenible sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love,
And lack not to lose still.
Shak., All's Well, i. 3, 208.

★ intend (in-tend′), v. [Early mod. E. also entend; < ME. intenden, entenden, < OF. entendre, F. entendre = Pr. entendre = Sp. Pg. entender = It. intendere, intend, < L. intendere, stretch out, extend, aim at, stretch toward, direct toward, turn to, purpose, intend, ML. also attend, < in, in, upon, to, + tendere, stretch: see tend[1]. Cf. attend, contend, extend, etc.] I. trans. 1†. To stretch forth or out; extend or distend.

With sharpe intended sting so rude him smott
That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 38.

Unless an age too late, or cold Climate, or years, damp my intended wing.
Milton, P. L., ix. 45.

By this the lungs are intended or remitted. Sir M. Hale.

2. To direct; turn; fix in a course or tendency. [Archaic.]

Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tharsus Intend my travel. Shak., Pericles, i. 2, 116.

Guide him to Fairy-land who now intends
That way his flight. Crabbe, Works, I. 193.

For example, a man explores the basis of civil government. Let him intend his mind without respite, without rest, in one direction. Emerson, Intellect.

Our forefathers, by intending their minds to realities, have established a harmony of thought with external nature which is a pre-established harmony in our nature.
Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 11.

3†. To fix the attention upon; attend to; superintend.

There were Virgins kept which intended nothing but to weaue, and spinne, and dye clothes, for their Idolatrous seruices. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 882.

Herodicus . . . did nothing all his life long but intend his health. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 270.

I pray you intend your game, sir; let me alone.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, v. 3.

Intend at home,
While here shall be our home, what best may ease
The present misery. Milton, P. L., ii. 457.

4. To fix the mind upon, as something to be done or brought about; have in mind or purpose; design: often used with the infinitive: as, I intend to write; no deception was intended.

Whatsoeuer mischiefe they entend to practise against a man, they keepe it wonderfully secrete.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 55.

When he intends any warres, he must first have leave of the Great Turke. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 38.

Sir John North delivered me one lately from your Lordship, and I send my humble Thanks for the Venison you intend me. Howell, Letters, I. iv. 21.

For why should men ever intend to repent, if they did not think it necessary? Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

5. To design to signify; mean to be understood; have reference to.

The words . . . sounded so as she could not imagine what they might intend. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

By internal war we intend movements more serious and lasting than sedition. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 136.

6†. To pretend; make believe; simulate.

Intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio.
Shak., Much Ado, ii. 2, 35.

Ay, and amid this hurly I intend
That all is done in reverend care of her.
Shak., T. of the S., iv. 1, 206.

7†. To look for; expect.

I that alle trouthe in yow entende.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1649.

8†. To intensify; increase.

The magnified quality of this star [Sirius], conceived to cause or intend the heat of this season.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 13.

II. intrans. 1†. To stretch forward; extend; move; proceed.

When your mayster intendeth to bedward, see that you haue Fyre and Candell suffycyent.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 69.

He intended homewards. He by this Needs must have gain'd the city.
Chapman, Revenge for Honour, iii. 1.

Now breaks, or now directs, intending lines.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 63.

2†. To attend; pay attention.

Ech to his owen nedes gan entende.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 424.

A man that Intendyth to mynstrels, shalle soone be weddyd to poverte, & his sonne shalle hyte derisione.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 31.

They were the first that entended to the obseruation of nature and her works.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 4.

3. To have intention; be inclined or disposed. [Rare.]

If you intend so friendly as you say, send hence your armes. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 210.

To intend for†, to design to go to.

I shall make no stay here, but intend for some of the electoral courts. Richardson.

intendable† (in-ten′da-bl), a. [< intend + -able.] Attentive. Halliwell.

intendance (in-ten′dans), n. [< ME. entendaunce, < OF. (and F.) intendance = Sp. Pg. intendencia = It. intendenza; as intend + -ance.] 1. Intendancy; superintendence; direction; business management; specifically, in France, official superintending authority, or a body of official intendants, especially of the army.

Probably in the history of modern organisations there is no greater instance of stupendous and abject failure than the French Intendance.
Arch. Forbes, Experiences of War, 1871, II. 338.

As to improving the arrangements . . . for making the staff and the intendance [in France, 1867] more efficient, not a thought was bestowed on these important matters.
Edinburgh Rev., CLXIV. 303.

2†. Attention; care; guidance.

But the maide whom wee would haue specially good requireth all intendance both of father and mother.
Vives, Instruction of a Christian Woman, i. 1.

intendancy (in-ten′dan-si), n. [Formerly also intendency; < intendan(t) + -cy. Cf. intendance.] The office or employment of an intendant; the district, duties, direction, etc., committed to the charge of an intendant.

Hence we went to see Dr. Gibbs, a famous poet and countryman of ours, who had some intendency in an Hospital built on the Via Triumphalis.
Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 25, 1645.

Promoted to the intendancy of Hispaniola.
Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 234.

intendant (in-ten′dant), n. [Formerly also intendent; < F. intendant = Sp. Pg. It. intendente, a steward, surveyor, intendant, < L. intenden(t-)s, ppr. of intendere, exert oneself, endeavor, intend, ML. also attend: see intend. Intendant, after the F., is the common form, while intendent, after the L., is the reg. form in the compound superintendent. Cf. dependant, dependent.] One who has the oversight, direction, or management of some public business; a superintendent; a manager: used as a title of many public officers in France and other European countries: as, an intendant of marine; an intendant of finance.

Subordinate to him are four other intendents.
Evelyn, State of France, Lewis XIV.

Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicrates, his intendant general of marine, have both left relations of the Indies. Arbuthnot.

Yon young gallant —
Your miserly intendant and dense noble —
All — all suspected me. Byron, Werner, iii. 1.

A French medical officer of the navy who was going back to his duties as Intendant of Pondicherry.
W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 5.

Specifically — (a) In Canadian law, the second officer in Canada under the French rule, having civil and maritime jurisdiction. (b) In Mexican law, the chief officer of the treasury or of the district; a high functionary having administrative and some judicial power: in this use also written, as Spanish, intendente.

intended (in-ten′ded), p. a. and n. I. p. a. Purposed; to be, or to be done, according to an agreement or design: as, an intended entertainment; her intended husband.

II. n. An intended husband or wife: with a possessive pronoun preceding. [Colloq.]

If it were not that I might appear to disparage her intended, . . . I would add that to me she seems to be throwing herself away. Dickens, David Copperfield, xxii.

intendedly (in-ten′ded-li), adv. With purpose or intention; intentionally.

To add one passage more of him, which is intendedly related for his credit. Strype, Abp. Parker.

intendency†, intendent†, n. See intendancy, intendant.

intender[1] (in-ten′dėr), n. One who intends.

intender[2]† (in-ten′dėr), v. t. Same as entender.

Night opes the noblest scenes, and sheds an awe
Which gives those venerable scenes full weight,
And deep reception in th' intendered heart.
Young, Night Thoughts, ix. 731.

intendiment† (in-ten′di-ment), n. [< ML. intendimentum, attention: see intendment.] Attention; patient hearing; consideration; understanding; knowledge; intention.

Into the woods thenceforth in haste shee went,
To seeke for hearbes that mote him remedy;
For shee of herbes had great intendiment.
Spenser, F. Q., III. v. 32.

The noble Mayd still standing all this vewd,
And merveild at his straunge intendiment.
Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 5.

intending (in-ten′ding), p. a. Designing or purposing to be or become.

If the intending entomologist should content himself with merely learning a string of names by rote, he must expect to find his lesson a hard and repulsive one.
J. G. Wood, Insects at Home, p. 13.

And what to intending emigrants will prove very useful.
Contemporary Rev., L. 303.

The construction of a roof for an equatorial room (technically called the "dome," whatever may be its precise form) is a great crux to the intending builder of an observatory. Nature, XXXIII. 57.

★ intendment (in-tend′ment), n. [Early mod. E. also entendment; < ME. entendement, understanding, sense, < OF. (also F.) entendement = Pr. entendement, entendemen, intendemen = Sp. entendimiento = Pg. entendimento = It. intendimento, < ML. intendimentum, attention, intent, purpose, understanding, < L. intendere, intend, ML. also attend: see intend. Cf. intendiment.] 1†. Understanding; intelligence.

Mannes hedde imaginen ne can,
Ne entendement considere, ne tonge telle
The cruel peynes of this sorwful man.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1096.

By corruption of this our flesh, man's reason and entendment . . . were both overwhelmed.
Sir T. Wilson (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 464).

2†. Intention; design; purpose.

We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us.
Shak., Hen. V., i. 2, 144.

See the privacy of this room, how sweetly it offers itself to our retired intendments.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

Therefore put in act your resolute intendments.
Dekker and Webster, Sir Thomas Wyatt.

3. True intention or meaning: specifically used of a person or a law, or of any legal instrument. — In the intendment of law, in the judgment of law; according to the legal view; by a presumption of law.

The time of their absence is in the intendment of law bestowed to the Church's great advantage and benefit.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

intenebrate† (in-ten′ē-brāt), v. t. [Cf. It. intenebrare, darken; < L. in, in, + tenebrare, darken, < tenebræ, darkness: see tenebræ.] To darken; obscure; make shadowy.

A pretty conjecture intenebrated by antiquity.
Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 251.

intenerate (in-ten′ē-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intenerated, ppr. intenerating. [< ML. intenera-tus*, pp. of intenerare* (> It. intenerare), make tender, < L. in, in, + tener, tender: see tender.] To make tender; soften. [Rare.]

So have I seen the little purls of a stream sweat through the bottom of a bank and intenerate the stubborn pavement till it hath made it fit for the impression of a child's foot.
Jer. Taylor, Sermons (1651), p. 204.

Thus she [Nature] contrives to intenerate the granite and feldspar. Emerson, Compensation.

intenerate† (in-ten′ē-rāt), a. [< ML. intenera-tus*, pp.: see the verb.] Made tender; tender; soft; intenerated.

inteneration (in-ten-ę-rā′shọn), n. [< intenerate + -ion.] The act of intenerating or making soft or tender. [Rare.]

Restauration of some degree of youth, and inteneration of the parts. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 55.

intenible† (in-ten′i-bl), a. [< in-[3] + tenible* for tenable: see tenable.] Same as intenable, 2.

intensate (in-ten′sāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intensated, ppr. intensating. [< intense + -ate[2].] To make intense or more intense; intensify. [Rare.]

Poor Jean Jacques! . . . with all misformations of Nature intensated to the verge of madness by unfavourable fortune. Carlyle, Diderot.

intensation (in-ten-sā′shọn), n. [< intense + -ation.] The act of intensating; elevation to a higher degree of intensity. [Rare.]

There are cooks too, we know, who boast of their diabolic ability to cause the patient, by successive intensations of their art, to eat with new and ever new appetite, till he explode on the spot. Carlyle, Diderot.

intensative (in-ten′sā-tiv), a. [< intensate + -ive.] Making intense or more intense; adding intensity; intensifying. [Rare.]

intense (in-tens′), a. [< F. intense = Sp. Pg. It. intenso, < L. intensus, stretched tight, pp. of intendere, stretch out: see intend.] 1. Existing in or having a high degree; strong; powerful: as, intense pain; intense activity; hence, extreme or absolute of its kind; having its characteristic qualities in a high degree.

I fear that your Love to me doth not continue in so constant and intense a Degree. Howell, Letters, I. v. 1.

The national and religious prejudices with which the English were regarded throughout India were peculiarly intense in the metropolis of the Brahminical superstition. Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

From the intense, clear, star-sown vault of heaven,
O'er the lit sea's unquiet way.
M. Arnold, Self-dependence.

A passion so intense
One would think that it well
Might drown all life in the eye.
Tennyson, Maud, xxiv. 8.

I prefer a winter walk that takes in the nightfall and the intense silence that ere long follows it.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 51.

2. Exhibiting a high degree of some quality or action.

[He was] studiously intense in acquiring more knowledge. N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 341.

3. Susceptible to strong emotion; emotional. [Recent cant.]

Scene, a drawing-room in Passionate Brompton.
Fair Æsthetic (suddenly, and in deepest tones, to Smith, who has just been introduced to take her in to dinner). Are you Intense?
Du Maurier, English Society at Home, pl. 49.

4. In photog., same as dense, 3.

intensely (in-tens′li), adv. 1. In an intense degree; with intensity; extremely; very: as, weather intensely cold.—2†. Attentively; earnestly; intently.

To persons young, and that look intensely if it be dark, there appear many strange images moving to and fro.
J. Spencer, Vanity of Vulgar Prophecies, p. 103.

3. With intense feeling or emotion.

He lived intensely in his own imaginings, wise or idle, beautiful or feebly extravagant. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 41.

intenseness (in-tens′nes), n. The state or character of being intense, in any sense of that word; intensity.

He was in agony, and prayed with the utmost ardency and intenseness. Jer. Taylor.

intensification (in-ten″si-fi-kā′shọn), n. [As intensify + -ation.] 1. The act of intensifying or of making intense.

The result of training for prize-fights and races is more shown in the prolongation of energy than in the intensification of energy. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 303.

Specifically—2. In photog., the process of thickening or rendering more opaque the chemical deposits in the film of a picture. Intensification is required to improve the printing quality of a negative, when the exposure has been ill-timed or the subject badly lighted. It is sometimes effected, in the case of too short exposure, by carrying the development to an extreme, but more commonly the negative is intensified by a new chemical process after development.

intensifier (in-ten′si-fī-ėr), n. One who or that which intensifies. Specifically—(a) In photog., one of the substances which, when applied to a negative, increase the opacity of the deposit already formed. (b) In physical and mechanical appliances, an apparatus for intensifying or increasing the pressure upon a mass of confined air or other fluid. Two directly connected pistons of different areas, working in separate cylinders supplied with proper valves, constitute the main features of the apparatus. The smaller cylinder receiving the fluid at a given pressure on one side of its piston, the latter is thereby moved to the end of its stroke, and its valve is closed to prevent escape of the fluid. Next, the fluid is, at the same pressure, admitted into the larger cylinder, on the opposite side of its piston to that upon which the admission was effected in the smaller cylinder. The fluid in the smaller cylinder is thus compressed, and its pressure upon each unit of interior surface of the cylinder is intensified in the exact ratio of the areas of the pistons. By a series of these intensifiers, or by properly proportioning the cylinders and pistons, pressure is thus increased without limit, except such as is introduced by the limits of strength in materials.

intensify (in-ten′si-fī), v.; pret. and pp. intensified, ppr. intensifying. [= F. intensifier; < L. intensus, intense, + -ficare, < facere, make.] I. trans. 1. To render intense or more intense; heighten the action or some quality of.

We have seen the influence of universal empire expanding, and the influence of Greek civilisation intensifying, the sympathies of Europe. Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 290.

2. Specifically, in photog., to render more opaque, as the chemically affected parts of a negative. See intensification, 2.

II. intrans. To become intense or more intense; act with greater effort or energy.

intension (in-ten′shọn), n. [= Sp. intensión = Pg. intensão = It. intensione, < L. intensio(n-), a stretching out, < intendere, pp. intensus, stretch out: see intend, intense.] 1. Intensity, quantity, or degree of a quality, action, or effect.

The greatness of the glory eternal consists not only in the eternity of its duration, but in its intension also, as being supreme. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 376.

Art demands, in addition to the dimension of extension, a dimension of intension or degree.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 248.

2. The act of making intense; intensification. [Rare.]

It is by alternate intension and remission of effort that rhythm is made obvious to our senses.
J. Hadley, Essays, p. 95.

3. In logic, a term used by Sir William Hamilton for the sum of the characters given in the definition of a term: intended to replace the term comprehension.—Intension and remission of forms†, in metaph., higher and lower degrees of substantial forms as they exist in the individuals: for instance, one thing may be supposed to possess the elemental form of fire in a more intense state than another thing. This doctrine was held by Duns Scotus and his followers, but was denied by the rest of the scholastic doctors.

intensity (in-ten′si-ti), n. [= F. intensité = Sp. intensidad = Pg. intensidade = It. intensità, < L. as if intensita(t-)s*, < intensus, tight: see intense.] 1. The character or state of being intense; the quantity or degree of a quality, action, or effect; degree; specifically, a high degree. Intensity (as opposed to extension) is a quantity which is not apprehended by a successive synthesis, but all at once; a quantity the parts of which are not separately identifiable, and which has an absolute minimum.

The intensity of the heat was tremendous: the tar melted in the seams of the deck; we could scarcely bear it even when we were under the awning.
R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 2.

It is no doubt also true that intensity of antecedent desire intensifies the pleasure of fruition when that comes—the pleasure not only appears, as Plato thought, but actually is greater. H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 124.

The intensity and persistence of grief at the loss of a friend measures the depth of the affection.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 491.

Wealth of expanded and convoluted cerebral hemispheres is, in some general way, a measure of the richness and intensity of mental life.
G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 246.

2. In physics and mech., the amount or degree of energy with which a force operates or a cause acts; effectiveness, as estimated by the result; the magnitude of a force, measured in appropriate units: as, the intensity of gravitation. In electricity, the intensity of a current is properly its strength (expressed in amperes); in popular language, however, it is often used of the electromotive force or potential-difference of the current, as when a voltaic battery, coupled in series, is said to be arranged for intensity.

The intensity of light depends upon the extent of the vibrations of the height of the waves.
Spottiswoode, Polarization, p. 32.

The intensity of magnetization of a uniformly magnetized body is defined as the quotient of its moment by its volume. J. D. Everett, Units and Phys. Constants, p. 121.

3. Used absolutely: Intense feeling or emotion; also, the exhibition or embodiment of intense feeling or emotion.

But this led him to search the Bible and dwell upon it with an earnestness and intensity which no determination of a calmer mind could have commanded.
Southey, Bunyan, p. 32.

In proportion to the intensity needful to make his [Wordsworth's] nature thoroughly aglow is the very high quality of his best verses.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 243.

4. In photog., opacity or density, as of a negative. See intensification, 2.—Chromatic, colorific, magnetic, etc., intensity. See the adjectives.—Intensity of a pressure or other stress, the total force divided by the area over which it is distributed.

intensive (in-ten′siv), a. and n. [= F. intensif = Sp. Pg. It. intensivo, < NL. intensivus, < L. intensus, intense: see intense.] I. a. 1. Pertaining or referable to intensity or degree; increasing in intensity or degree; making or becoming intense; intensifying.

The pressure [of population], from being simply extensive, has also become intensive.
Amer. Anthropologist, I. 17.

Those persons requiring the intensive treatment [in vaccination] have to come again in the afternoon.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 853.

2. Intense.

A very intensive pleasure follows the passion or displeasure. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 255.

The elevating force is more intensive in the Chilian Andes than in the neighboring countries.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 90.

3†. Intent; unremitted; assiduous.

Hereupon Salomon said, kisse me with the kisse of thy mouth, to note the intensive desire of the soule.
Benvenuto, Passengers' Dialogues (1612).

4. In gram., expressing intensity or a high degree of action or quality; serving to give force or emphasis: as, an intensive particle or prefix. Many particles and prefixes, as well as verbs, are called intensive, especially in Latin and Greek grammar, even when their force is not expressible by paraphrase or translation. Prefixes originally intensive often become neutral.—Intensive distance, difference in the degree of some quality.

The intensive distance between the perfection of an angel and of a man is but finite. Sir M. Hale.

Intensive distinctness, distinctness and completeness in logical depth.—Intensive gas-burner. See gas-burner.—Intensive proposition, a proposition in which the subject is viewed as the containing whole.—Intensive quantity. (a) A continuous quantity the parts of which cannot be separately identified, and which has an absolute minimum; degree; intensity.

That quantity which can be apprehended as unity only, and in which plurality can be represented by approximation only to negation = 0, I call intensive quantity. Every reality therefore in a phenomenon has intensive quantity—that is, a degree.
Kant, Critique of Pure Reason, tr. by Max Müller.

(b) Logical comprehension or depth; the sum of the characters predicable of a term; the sum of consequences from a given fact.—Intensive sublimity, sublimity due to the high degree of some quality.

II. n. Something serving to express intensity, or to give force or emphasis; specifically, in gram., an intensive particle, word, or phrase.

intensively (in-ten′siv-li), adv. In an intensive manner; by increase of degree; as regards intensity or degree.

An object is intensively sublime when it involves such a degree of force or power that the Imagination cannot at once represent, and the Understanding cannot bring under measure, the quantum of this force; and when, from the nature of the object, the inability of the mind is made at once apparent, so that it does not proceed in the ineffectual effort, but at once calls back its energies from the attempt. Sir W. Hamilton, Metaph., xlvi.

Frequently the linguistic material available is of a precarious quality, intensively and extensively.
Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVI., App., p. xii.

intensiveness (in-ten′siv-nes), n. The character or quality of being intensive; intensity.

He chose a solitary retired garden, where nothing might or could interrupt or divert the intensiveness of his sorrow and fear. Sir M. Hale, Christ Crucified.

intent (in-tent′), a. [= OF. intent = Sp. Pg. It. intento, < L. intentus, stretched, strained, eager, intent, pp. of intendere, stretch, intend, attend: see intend. Cf. intent, n.] 1. Firmly or steadfastly fixed or directed (upon something); fixed with strained or earnest attention: as, an intent look or gaze; his thoughts are intent upon his duty.

People whose hearts are wholly bent towards pleasure, or intent upon gain, never hear of the noble occurrences among men of industry and humanity.
Steele, Spectator, No. 248.

But this whole hour your eyes have been intent
On that veiled picture.
Tennyson, Gardener's Daughter.

2. Having the mind bent or earnestly fixed upon something; sedulously engaged or settled: usually with on or upon: as, a person intent upon business or pleasure.

The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand.
Pope, Windsor Forest, l. 138.

Her head erect, her face turned full to me,
Her soul intent on mine through two wide eyes.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 302.

3†. Earnestly attentive; strongly devoted: with to.

Distractions in England made most men intent to their own safety. Eikon Basilike.

intent (in-tent′), n. [Early mod. E. also entent; < ME. intent, usually entent, entente, < OF. entent, m., entente, F. entente, f., = Pr. enten, m., ententa, f., = Sp. Pg. It. intento, m., intent, < L.

intentus, m., purpose, intent, ML. also a stretching out, < L. intendere, pp. intentus, stretch out, intend: see intend. Cf. intent, a.] 1. That which is intended; purpose; aim; design; intention; meaning.

Ne no thing wist thai what it ment
That thai honurd with gude entent.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 88.

I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?
Acts x. 29.

He [my guide] too went readily in with me; it may be not knowing my intent was to buy.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 91.

But Dante recked not of the wine;
Whether the women stayed or went,
His visage held one stern intent.
D. G. Rossetti, Dante at Verona.

2. In law: (a) Personal intention; the state of mind in respect of intelligent volition; the voluntary purposing of an act: often distinguishable from the motive which led to the formation of the intent. See criminal intent, below. (b) The tendency imputable by law to an act; the constructive purpose of an action, for which the doer may be responsible, although the actual intent was not wrongful: as when a conveyance is said to be intended to defraud creditors, because, although it may have been without actual dishonest intention, it necessarily has that tendency.—3†. Notion; idea; thought; opinion.

To myn entent ther is best abydeng,
I wote he will be gladde of your comyng.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 629.

4†. Attention; heed.

Awake, dougter myne,
And to my talkyng take entent.
Early Eng. Poems, p. 141.

The lesse lyght all-way to the nyght sall take entent.
York Plays, p. 11.

Criminal intent, the intent to do the criminal act or to omit the duty, if the law makes the act or omission an offense, irrespective of whether the person knew of the law, and in many cases irrespective of whether he knew the facts which bring the act or omission within the law, and irrespective of motive. Thus, for example, if a person, whether from the motive of pleasure in the noise, or anger at a cat, discharges a firearm from his window in a city with reckless disregard of human life, and kills a person who is unknown to him, within range, the criminal intent is the intelligent purpose to discharge the gun in a highly dangerous manner, as distinguished alike from the motive, from any purpose to violate law, and from any purpose to kill a human being. If he was insane in the legal sense, or if the discharge was accidental, there was no criminal intent; otherwise the intent was criminal, although he had an innocent motive, and was ignorant of the law and of the existence of the bystander.—Specific intent, actual intent.—To all intents and purposes, in every respect; in all applications or senses; in a looser use, practically; substantially, but not literally.

To all intents and purposes, he who will not open his eyes is for the present as blind as he that cannot.
South, Sermons.

intent†, v. t. [< L. intentare, stretch out toward, freq. of intendere, stretch out: see intend.] To accuse; charge. Nares.

For of some former she had now made known
They were her errors, whilst she intented Browne.
Verses prefixed to Browne's Pastorals.

intentation† (in-ten-tā'shọn), n. [= It. intentazione, < L. intentatio(n-), a stretching out toward, < intentare, stretch out toward: see intent.] The act of intending, or the result of such an act; intention. Bp. Hall, Ahab and Naboth.

intentio (in-ten'shi-ō), n. [L., a stretching out: see intention.] In anc. music, the process or ★act of passing from a lower to a higher pitch.

intention (in-ten'shọn), n. [< ME. intencion, entencioun, < OF. intencion, entencion, intention, F. intention = Pr. entencio, entensio = Sp. intención = Pg. intenção = It. intenzione, < L. intentio(n-), a stretching out, exertion, attention, design, purpose, intention, < intendere, pp. intentus, stretch out, intend: see intend.] 1. Direction of the mind; attention; hence, uncommon exertion of the intellectual faculties; closeness of application; fixedness of attention; earnestness. [Archaic.]

O, she did so course o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass! Shak., M. W. of W., i. 3, 73.

I suffer for their guilt now, and my soule
(Like one that lookes on ill-affected eyes)
Is hurt with mere intention on their follies.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 5.

When the mind with great earnestness, and of choice, fixes its view on any idea, considers it on all sides, and will not be called off by the ordinary solicitation of other ideas, it is that we call intention or study.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xix. 1.

It [reading well] requires a training such as the athletes underwent, the steady intention almost of the whole life to this object. Thoreau, Walden, p. 110.

2. The act of intending or purposing.

It is evident that "good intention" is of the very essence of an act of duty, and not "good results" nor "pleasurable feelings" felt in its performance.
Mivart, Nature and Thought, p. 150.

3. That which is intended, purposed, or meant; that for which a thing is made, designed, or done; intent; purpose; aim; meaning; desire: often in the plural, especially (in colloquial use) with regard to marriage.

The chief intention of pillars, in Egyptian buildings, being to support a weighty covering, it was necessary they should be very strong.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 216.

Therefore have they ever been the instruments of great designs, yet seldom understood the true intention of any.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err.

So little intention had we of shooting bears that we had not brought rifle or even gun with us.
Froude, Sketches, p. 79.

He unbosomed himself with the simplicity of a rustic lover called upon by an anxious parent to explain his intentions. O. W. Holmes, Essays, p. 109.

4†. A straining or putting forth of action; exertion; intension.

The operations of agents admit of intention and remission. Locke.

5. In surg., and figuratively in other uses, natural effort or exertion; course of operation; process: as, the wound healed by first or by second intention. See below.

The third intention is deligation, or retaining the parts so joined together. Wiseman, Surgery.

You discern at a glance that it is only what was natural to him and reached by the first intention.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 45.

6†. A mental effort or exertion; notion; conception; opinion.

A monke, by our Lordes gras,
Off Maillers it is myn entencioun.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2643.

7. Special end or purpose.

Thi passioun & thi mercy
We take to oure entensioun.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 21.

8. In law, intent; the fixing of the mind on an act with purpose to do it. Stephen. The will and understanding must unite herein. In civil law, the clause of a formula that defines or sets forth the question at issue. Sohm.—9. In scholastic logic, a general concept. [This use of the word (Latin intentio), first found in a translation from Avicenna, was common throughout the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries. Aquinas says that the intelligible species or first apprehension is the beginning, while the intention is the end of the process of thought.]—Declaration of intention. See declaration.—First intention, in logic, a general conception obtained by abstraction from the ideas or images of sensible objects.—Second intention, in logic, a general conception obtained by reflection and abstraction applied to first intentions as objects. Thus, the concepts man, animal, and thing are first intentions; but if we reflect that man is a species of animal, and animal a species of organism, we see there is no reason why this process should not be continued until we have a concept embracing every other object or being (ens); and this concept, not obtained by direct abstraction from the species offered by the imagination, but by thinking about words or concepts, is a second intention. In particular, the concepts of a genus, of a species, of a specific difference, of a property, and of an accident were considered to be derived from the consideration of particular genera, species, differences, properties, and accidents, and so to be second intentions par excellence. At the present day such terms as being, nothing, identity, negation, and the like are called terms of second intention when it is desired to emphasize the fact that they are obtained by abstraction from the logical relations of other terms.—Special intention, the celebration of the eucharist for a specific object. Lee's Glossary.—To heal by first intention, in surg., to cicatrize without suppuration, as a wound.—To heal by second intention, in surg., to unite after suppuration, as the borders of a wound.

intentional (in-ten'shọn-al), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. intencional = It. intenzionale = F. intentionnel; as intention + -al.] I. a. 1. Done with intention, design, or purpose; intended; designed.

The glory of God is the end which every intelligent being is bound to consult, by a direct and intentional service. Rogers.

2. In metaph., pertaining to an appearance, phenomenon, or representation in the mind; phenomenal; representational; apparent.—Intentional abstraction, being, etc. See the nouns.—Intentional ens†. Same as intentional, n.—Intentional existence, existence as an immediate object of consciousness.—Syn. 1. Premeditated, contemplated, studied.

II.† n. In metaph., an appearance having no substantial existence.

To a true being are opposed beings of reason, as genus, species, etc., . . . secondly, the fictitious or feigned, as chimæra, centaure, etc., . . . thirdly, appearances, or as they commonly say intentionals, as the rainbow, colours appearing, species's and spectres of the senses and understanding, and other things whose essence only consists in their apparition. Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

intentionality (in-ten-shọ-nal'i-ti), n. [< intentional + -ity.] The character or fact of being intentional; designedness.

To render the analysis here given of the possible states of the mind in point of intentionality absolutely complete, it must be pushed to such a farther degree of minuteness, as to some eyes will be apt to appear trifling.
★ Bentham, Introd. to Principles of Morals, viii.

intentionally (in-ten'shọn-al-i), adv. In an intentional manner; with intention or design; of purpose; not casually.

intentioned (in-ten'shọnd), a. [< intention + *-ed*².] Having intentions or designs, of a kind specified by some qualifying term: as, well-intentioned; ill-intentioned.

intentive† (in-ten'tiv), a. [< ME. ententif, < OF. ententif = Pr. ententiu = It. intentivo, < LL. intentivus, intensive (said of adverbs), < L. intendere, pp. intentus, stretch out: see intend. Cf. intensive.] 1. Having an intent or purpose; intent; attentive.

Who is so trewe and eke so ententyf
To kepe him, syk and hool, as is his make?
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 44.

While Vortimer was thus intentive for his Countrey's Liberty, Rowena the former King's Wife, being Daughter to Hengist, was as intentive to bring it into Servitude.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 4.

But her most intentive care was how to unite England and Scotland in a solid friendship.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 367.

Objects
Worthy their serious and intentive eyes.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

2. Of or pertaining to attention.

Our souls for want of spirits cannot attend exactly to so many intentive operations. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 256.

intentively† (in-ten'tiv-li), adv. [< ME. ententifly; < intentive + *-ly*².] Attentively; intently.

And for his grete bewte the maydenys be-hilde hym often ententifly. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 608.

Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intentively. Shak., Othello, i. 3, 155.

intentiveness† (in-ten'tiv-nes), n. Closeness of attention or application of mind; attentiveness. W. Montague, Devoute Essays, ii. 224.

intently (in-tent'li), adv. In an intent manner; with close attention or application; with eagerness or earnestness; fixedly.

And he be-heilde hym ententely that he loked on noon other, and after that he be-heilde his felowes, that were stille and koy, that seiden not o worde, but be-heilde hym that spake. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 318.

intentness (in-tent'nes), n. The state of being intent; close or earnest attention or application.

inter¹ (in-tėr'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interred, ppr. interring. [Formerly enter; < ME. enteren, < OF. enterrer, F. enterrer = Pr. Sp. Pg. enterrar = It. interrare, < ML. interrare, put in the earth, bury, < L. in, in, + terra, earth: see terra.] 1. To place in the earth and cover with it. [Rare in this general sense.]

The best way is to inter them as you furrow pease.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

Specifically—2. To bury; inhume; place in a grave, or, by extension, in a tomb of any kind.

The princes entred in to the town gladde and ioyfull, and dide entere the deed corps.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 603.

To be enterit in a towmbe, as a triet qwene,
And laid by hir legis, that the lond aght.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 11568.

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones.
Shak., J. C., iii. 2, 81.

inter² (in'tėr), prep. [L., in the midst, between, during, among (in comp. also under, down: see inter-) (= Skt. antar, within), < in, in, within, + -ter, a compar. suffix, = E. -der, -ther, -ter, in under, other, after, etc. Cf. under.] A Latin preposition meaning 'between' or 'among,' used in some Latin phrases occurring in English books, as in inter nos (between or among ourselves), inter arma silent leges (laws are silent among arms—that is, in time of war), etc., and very common as a prefix. See inter-.

inter³†, v. A Middle English form of *enter*¹.

inter-. [Early mod. E. also enter- (a form still extant in entertain, enterprise, etc.); ME. enter-, entre-, rarely inter-, < OF. entre-, inter-, < F. entre-, inter- = Sp. Pg. entre-, inter- = It. enter-, inter-, < L. inter- (changed to intel- before l, namely, in intellegere, intelligere, understand: see intellect, intelligent, etc.), a very common prefix, being the adv. and prep. inter used with verbs and nouns, with the meaning 'between, among, amid, during,' in some instances 'under, down': see inter-2.] A common prefix meaning 'between' or 'among' or 'during,' occurring in many English words taken from the Latin, either directly or through Middle English and Old French or French forms (being then in Middle English also enter-, and so retained in some modern forms: see enter-), or formed in English on the Latin model. Words formed in English with this prefix may have the second element of non-Latin origin, as in interdash, interknow, intertangle, interweave, etc. The second element is (in the original) either a verb, as in interact, v., intercalate, intercept, interchange, etc., or a noun, as in interact, n., interaxis, interval, intervale, etc. The prefix is freely used in English in the making of new compounds, often without immediate reference to its Latin status. In such cases, in the following etymologies, it is, for the sake of brevity, usually treated as an English prefix, and not carried back to the Latin preposition, as in other cases. For the relation of inter- to the second element in adjectives, compare the similar relation of ante-, anti-, etc.

interaccessory (in″tėr-ak-ses′o̤-ri or in-tėr-ak′-se-so̤-ri), a. [< inter- + accessory.] In anat., situated between accessory processes of vertebræ: as, an interaccessory muscle.

interacinous (in-tėr-as′i-nus), a. [< L. inter, between, + NL. acinus, q. v.] Situated or occurring between the acini.

The growth [of a tumor] is accompanied by a strong vascularization of the interacinous connective tissue.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, III. 353.

interact (in-tėr-akt′), n. [= F. entr'acte = Sp. Pg. entreacto; as inter- + act, n.] In the drama, the interval between two acts, or a short piece between others; an interlude; hence, any intermediate employment or time.

interact (in-tėr-akt′), v. i. [< inter- + act, v.] To act reciprocally; act on each other.

The two complexions, or two styles of mind — the perceptive class, and the practical finality class — are ever in counterpoise, interacting mutually.
Emerson, English Traits, xiv.

interaction (in-tėr-ak′sho̤n), n. [< interact, v., after action.] Mutual or reciprocal action; action or influence of things upon each other.

The interaction of the atoms throughout infinite time rendered all manner of combinations possible. Tyndall.

There can be no morality when there is not interaction between the moral subject and the moral object.
H. N. Day, Princeton Rev., Sept., 1879, p. 311.

interactional (in-tėr-ak′sho̤n-a̤l), a. [< interaction + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of interaction. [Rare.]

The sum of being consists of the two systems of substantial forms and interactional relations, and it reappears in the form of concept and judgment, the concept representing being and the judgment being in action.
Encyc. Brit., XXI. 412.

interactive (in-tėr-ak′tiv), a. [< inter- + active.] Mutually active; acting upon or influencing each other.

These phenomena are ever intermingled and interactive. J. Fiske, Cosmic Philos., I. 39.

interadditive (in-tėr-ad′i-tiv), a. [< inter- + additive.] Inserted parenthetically, or between other things, as a clause in a sentence. Coleridge.

interagency (in-tėr-ā′jen-si), n. [< inter- + agency.] The act or acts of one acting as an interagent; intermediate agency.

interagent (in-tėr-ā′jent), n. [< inter- + agent.] An intermediate agent.

Domitian . . . tried by secret interagents to corrupt the fidelity of Cerialis. Gordon, tr. of Tacitus.

inter alia (in′tėr ā′li-a̤). [L.: inter, among; alia, neut. pl. acc. of alius, other: see alias.] Among other things or matters: as, he spoke, inter alia, of the slavery question.

interall†, n. An obsolete variant of *entrail*1.

When zephyr breathed into the watery interall.
G. Fletcher.

interalveolar (in″tėr-al-vē′o̤-lär), a. [< inter- + alveolar.] 1. In zoöl., situated between the alveoli: applied to the transverse muscles which connect the apposed surfaces of the five alveoli of the dentary apparatus of a sea-urchin. See lantern of Aristotle, under lantern.—2. In anat., situated between or among the alveoli of the lungs.

interambulacra, n. Plural of interambulacrum.

interambulacral (in-tėr-am-bū-lā′kral), a. ★[= F. interambulacral; as inter- + ambulacral.] 1. In echinoderms, situated between ambulacra; interradial. See cut under Astrophyton.

Transverse muscles connect the two interambulacral pieces, the oral edges of which are articulated with a long narrow plate, the torus angularis.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 483.

2. Of or pertaining to interambulacra.

interambulacrum (in-tėr-am-bū-lā′krum), n.; pl. interambulacra (-krä). [< inter- + ambulacrum.] In zoöl., one of the imperforate plates which occupy the intervals of the perforate plates, or ambulacra, in the shells of echinoderms. See ambulacrum.

interamnian (in-tėr-am′ni-a̤n), a. [< LL. interamnus, between two rivers, < L. inter, between, + amnis, a river.] Situated between two rivers: applied specifically to Mesopotamia.

From one end of the Inter-amnian country to the other.
Piazzi Smyth, Pyramid, p. 75.

interanimate (in-tėr-an′i-māt), v. t.; pret. and pp. interanimated, ppr. interanimating. [< inter- + animate.] To animate mutually.

When love with one another so Interanimates two souls.
Donne, The Ecstasy.

interantennal (in″tėr-an-ten′a̤l), a. [< inter- + antennæ + -al.] Situated between the antennæ: as, the interantennal clypeal region of a myriapod.—Interantennal ridge, a longitudinal ridge or carina between the antennæ, seen in many Hymenoptera.

interarboration† (in-tėr-är-bo̤-rā′sho̤n), n. [< inter- + *arbor*1 + -ation.] The intermixture of the branches of trees standing in opposite ranks.

And though the inter-arboration do imitate the Areostylos, or thin order, not strictly answering the proportion of intercolumniations; yet in many trees they will not exceed the intermission of the columnes in the court of the Tabernacle. Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, iv.

interarticular (in″tėr-är-tik′ū-lär), a. [= F. interarticulaire; as inter- + articular.] Situated in a joint (that is, between the articular ends of the bones that compose the joint).—Interarticular cartilage, fibrocartilage. See cartilage.

interarytenoid (in-tėr-ar-i-tē′noid), a. [< inter- + arytenoid.] Situated between the arytenoids.

This inflammatory action in the interarytenoid space is responsible for the spasmodic attacks characterizing pertussis. Medical News, LII. 601.

interatomic (in″tėr-a-tom′ik), a. [< inter- + atom + -ic.] Existing or acting between atoms, especially those of a single molecule.

It may be also [admitting] an interatomic energy, between the atoms of the individual molecules.
Encyc. Brit., XVI. 611.

interaulic (in-tėr-â′lik), a. [< L. inter, between, + aula, a hall: see aulic.] Existing between royal courts: as, "interaulic politics," Motley. [Rare.]

interauricular (in″tėr-â-rik′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + auricula, auricle, + *-ar*3.] In anat., situated between the auricles of the heart: as, the interauricular septum.

interaxal (in-tėr-ak′sa̤l), a. [< interaxis + -al.] In arch., situated in an interaxis.

interaxillary (in-tėr-ak′si-lā-ri), a. [< L. inter, between, + axilla, axil, + -ary.] In bot., situated between the axils of leaves.

interaxis (in-tėr-ak′sis), n. [< L. inter, between, + axis, axis: see *axis*1.] In arch., the space between axes.

interbastation† (in″tėr-bas-tā′sho̤n), n. [< inter- + *baste*3 + -ation.] Patchwork. [Rare.]

A metaphor taken from interbastation, patching or piecing, sewing or clapping close together.
J. Smith, Portrait of Old Age (1666), p. 184.

interbedded (in-tėr-bed′ed), a. Same as interstratified.

Interbedded or contemporaneous [rock].
Geikie, Encyc. Brit., X. 807.

interblend (in-tėr-blend′), v. t.; pret. interblended, pp. interblended or interblent, ppr. interblending. [< inter- + *blend*1.] To blend or mingle so as to form a union.

Three divisions of the Apocalypse, though the first and second interblend imperceptibly with each other.
E. H. Sears, Fourth Gospel the Heart of Christ, p. 100.

★interbrachial (in-tėr-brā′ki-a̤l), a. [< inter- + brachium + -al.] Situated between brachia, arms, or rays, as of a starfish; interradial; interambulacral: as, the interbrachial area of an ophiurian.

The reproductive organs . . . open by orifices on the ventral surface of the body or in the interbrachial areas.
H. A. Nicholson, Zoöl. (5th ed.), p. 196.

interbrain (in′tėr-brān), n. [< inter- + brain.] The diencephalon.

interbranchial (in-tėr-brang′ki-a̤l), a. [< inter- + branchiæ + -al.] Situated between or among branchiæ or gills.

interbreed (in-tėr-brēd′), v. [< inter- + breed.] I. trans. To breed by crossing species or varieties; cross-breed.

II. intrans. 1. To practise cross-breeding, as a farmer.—2. To procreate with an animal of a different variety or species: as, hens and pheasants interbreed.

interbreeding (in-tėr-brē′ding), n. The process of breeding between different species or varieties; cross-breeding; hybridization.

interbring† (in-tėr-bring′), v. t. [< inter- + bring.] To bring mutually.

Bless'd pair of swans, oh, may you interbring
Daily new joys, and never sing.
Donne, Eclogue, Dec. 25, 1613.

intercalar (in-tėr′kā-lär), a. [= F. intercalaire = Sp. Pg. intercalar = It. intercalare, < L. intercalaris (also intercalarius), of or for insertion (dies or mensis intercalaris, an inserted day or month), < intercalare, insert: see intercalate.] Intercalary.

Which is the cause that the king's reputing the third of these intercalar daies to be desasterous and dismal.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1052.

intercalare (in-tėr-kā-lā′rē), n.; pl. intercalaria (-ri-ä). [NL., neut. of L. intercalaris: see intercalary.] The opisthotic bone of the skull. ★Gegenbaur; Cope.

intercalary (in-tėr′kā-lā-ri), a. [= It. intercalario, < L. intercalarius, equiv. to intercalaris: see intercalar.] 1. In chron., inserted in the calendar out of regular order, as an extra day or month; having an additional day or month, as one of a cycle of years. The lunar reckoning and other features of the Greek, Roman, and other ancient calendars made the year of twelve months too short, and intercalary days and months were officially added at intervals to adjust the difference. Since the reformation of the calendar by Julius Cæsar, in 46 B. C., only one intercalary day in every fourth year, or leap-year, has been required, the 29th of February.

Ve Adar was an intercalary month, added, some years, unto the other twelve, to make the solar and lunary year agree. Raleigh, Hist. World, II. iii. § 6.

The names of the Parthian months were as follows: . . . together with an intercalary month inserted occasionally, called Embolimus.
B. V. Head, Historia Numorum, p. 692.

Hence—2. Inserted or coming between others; introduced or existing interstitially: as, intercalary beds in geology.

How shall these chapters be annominated? Intercalary they shall not. That word will send some of my readers to Johnson's Dictionary for its meaning; and others to Sheridan or Walker for its pronunciation.
Southey, Doctor, interchapter i.

The truth was that the poet began his career at an intercalary transition period. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 209.

3. In biol., intermediate in character between two types, yet not representing the actual genetic passage from one form to the other; interposed or intercalated, yet not biologically transitional.

It seems not improbable that these ancient corals represent an intercalary type between the Hexacoralla and the Octocoralla. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 149.

Intercalary days. (a) In chron., see def. 1, and bissextus. (b) In med., the days intervening between the critical days or crises of a disease.—Intercalary growth, in bot., a form of growth observed in certain fungi and algæ, in which the new part is intercalated into the old. In Œdogonium, for example, the cells frequently present a striated appearance at one extremity, the striation being the result of intercalary growth—that is, just below the septum of the cell a ring or cushion of cellulose is formed, and at this point the cell-wall splits, as if by a circular cut, into two pieces, which separate from each other, but remain attached to the ring or cushion. The process is repeated, the next ring forming a little further away from the septum.

The typical form of intercalary growth takes place in definite belts which surround the cell.
Bessey, Botany, p. 22.

Intercalary verse, a refrain.

intercalate (in-tėr′kā-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intercalated, ppr. intercalating. [< L. intercalatus, pp. of intercalare (> It. intercalare = Sp. Pg. intercalar = F. intercaler), proclaim the insertion of a day or month in a calendar, < inter, between, + calare, call: see calends.] 1. In chron., to insert in the calendar by proclamation or authority, as an extra day or month. See intercalary, 1.

In the time of Solon, and probably that of Herodotus also, it was the custom with Greeks to add, or, as it is termed, to intercalate a month every other year.
Priestley, History, xiv.

Hence—2. To insert between others; introduce interstitially; interject or interpolate, as something irregular or unrelated.

So wrote Theodoret in days when men had not yet intercalated into Holy Writ that fine line of an obscure modern hymn, which proclaims . . . that "There is no repentance in the grave." C. Kingsley, Hypatia.

intercalation (in-tėr-kā-lā′sho̤n), n. [= F. intercalation = Sp. intercalación = Pg. intercalação = It. intercalazione, < L. intercalatio(n-), < intercalare, intercalate: see intercalate.] 1. In chron., an official insertion of additional time, as a day or a month, in the regular reckoning of the calendar, to make the year of the right length. See intercalary, 1.

The number of days required to bring the lunar year into correspondence with the solar had been supplied by irregular intercalations at the direction of the Sacred College. Froude, Cæsar, p. 472.

Hence—2. The insertion of anything between other things; irregular interposition or interjection, as, in geology, the intrusion of layers or beds between the regular rocks of a series.

Intercalations of fresh-water species in some localities. Mantell.

Effective scale of intercalations, in math. See effective.

intercalative (in-tėr'kā-lā-tiv), a. [< intercalate + -ive.] Tending to intercalate; that ★intercalates; in philol., same as incorporative.

intercanal (in″tėr-ka-nal′), n. [< inter- + canal[1].] In sponges, an incurrent canal.

These canals are the intercanals of Haeckel, now generally known by their older name of incurrent canals. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 413.

intercarotic (in″tėr-ka-rot′ik), a. [< inter- + carot(id) + -ic.] Situated between the external and internal carotid arteries: as, the intercarotic ganglion or glandule. See ganglion.

This gland [Luschka's] should be considered as an arterial gland, of which the intercarotic ganglion is another example. Holden, Anat. (1885), p. 507.

intercarotid (in″tėr-ka-rot′id), a. [< inter- + carotid.] Same as intercarotic.

intercarpal (in-tėr-kär′pal), a. [< inter- + carpus + -al.] Situated between or among carpal bones: as, intercarpal ligaments.

intercede (in-tėr-sēd′), v.; pret. and pp. interceded, ppr. interceding. [= F. intercéder = Sp. Pg. interceder = It. intercedere, < L. intercedere, come between, intervene, interpose, become surety, etc., < inter, between, + cedere, go: see cede.] I. intrans. 1†. To come between; pass or occur intermediately; intervene.

Miserable losses and continual had the English, by their frequent eruptions, from this time till the Norman conquest: 'twixt which intercedes two hundred and seventy-nine years. Selden, Illustrations of Drayton's Polyolbion, i.

2. To make intercession; act between parties with a view to reconcile those who differ or contend; plead in favor of another; interpose; mediate: followed by with, formerly sometimes by to.

I to the lords will intercede. Milton, S. A., l. 920.

She being certainly informed, that they first sued to the French K. for help, denied the Request, yet promised to intercede earnestly with the K. of Spain for Peace. Baker, Chronicles, p. 351.

II.† trans. To pass between.

Those superficies reflect the greatest quantity of light which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton, Opticks, II. iii. 1.

intercedence† (in-tėr-sē′dens), n. [< intercede + -ence.] Intercession; intervention; intermediation.

Without the intercedence of any organ. Bp. Reynolds, The Passions.

intercedent (in-tėr-sē′dent), a. [= OF. intercedent, < L. intercedent(t-)s, ppr. of intercedere, go between: see intercede.] Passing between; mediating; pleading. Ash. [Rare.]

interceder (in-tėr-sē′dėr), n. One who intercedes; a mediator; an intercessor.

intercellular (in-tėr-sel′ū-lär), a. [< L. inter, between, + NL. cellula, cellule, + -ar[3].] Situated between or among cells; interstitial in a cellular tissue: as, the intercellular substance or matrix of cartilage. In a broad sense, all tissues or histological structures consist of intercellular substance except in so far as they are composed of cells themselves.—Intercellular passages, in anat., the ultimate ramifications of the lobular bronchial tubes, beset with air-cells or alveoli.—Intercellular spaces, in bot., spaces or passages of greater or less size which occur within the tissues of plants. They are formed by the separation of the walls of the cells through unequal growth, or by the breaking down of intermediate cells. These spaces may contain only air or air and watery sap, or some of the substances usually formed in cells, as resin, crystals, etc. The intercellular spaces occurring within plants of loose tissue are generally connected with one another, and with the outer air by means of stomata.

a, a, a, Intercellular Spaces.

intercensal (in-tėr-sen′sal), a. [< L. inter, between, + census, census: see census.] Occurring between the taking of one census and another. [Rare.]

Experience, however, has shown the rate of increase of the London population to have been very steady in previous intercensal periods. The Lancet, No. 3436, p. 26.

intercentra, n. Plural of intercentrum.

intercentral (in-tėr-sen′tral), a. [< intercentrum + -al.] Passing between or connecting centers; situated between vertebral centra; having the character of an intercentrum.

Intercentral Nerve-Fibres. These, which do not convey impulses to or from peripheral parts and nerve-centres, but connect one centre with another, form a final group in addition to efferent and afferent nerve-fibres. ★ Martin, Human Body (3d ed.), p. 187.

intercentrum (in-tėr-sen′trum), n.; pl. intercentra (-trä). [NL., < L. inter, between, + centrum, center (centrum).] In anat., an intermediate vertebral centrum; a centrum interpolated between two others, as in the extinct batrachian order Ganocephala. Such a centrum occupies the position, and to some extent has the relations, of the intervertebral substance of ordinary vertebræ.

intercept (in-tėr-sept′), v. t. [< F. intercepter = Sp. Pg. interceptar = It. intercettare, < L. intercipere, pp. interceptus, take between, intercept, < inter, between, + capere, take: see capable.] 1. To take or seize by the way; interrupt the passage or the course of; bring to a halt or a stop: as, to intercept a letter or a messenger; to intercept rays of light.

I then . . .
March'd toward Saint Alban's to intercept the queen. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 1, 114.

I believe in my conscience I intercept many a thought which heaven intended for another man. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, viii. 11.

If we take any gas, such as oxygen, and pass light through it, we find that that gas intercepts, or weakens, certain particular colors. W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 169.

2. To interrupt connection with or relation to; cut or shut off by interposition or interference; obstruct: as, to intercept one's view or outlook.

We must meet first and intercept his course. Dryden.

From the dry fields thick clouds of dust arise,
Shade the black host, and intercept the skies.
Pope, Iliad, xi. 196.

3†. To interrupt; break off; put an end to.

To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 4, 14.

God will shortly intercept your brethe. Joye, Expos. of Daniel, x.

4. In math., to hold, include, or comprehend.

Right ascension is an arc of the equator, reckoning toward the east, intercepted between the beginning of Aries and the point of the equator which rises at the same time with the sun or star in a right sphere. Bailey.

Intercepted axis, in geom., the abscissa.—Intercepting trochanter, a trochanter intervening between the coxa and the femur so as to separate them entirely.

intercept (in′tėr-sept), n. [< intercept, v.] That which is intercepted; specifically, in geom., the part of a line lying between the two points at which it is intersected by two other lines, by a curve, by two planes, or by a surface.

intercepted (in-tėr-sep′ted), p. a. In astrol., included between two cusps.—Intercepted sign, in astrol., a sign found between the cusps of two houses ★and not in either of them.

intercepter (in-tėr-sep′tėr), n. One who or that which intercepts; an opponent.

Thy intercepter, full of despight, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Shak., T. N., iii. 4, 242.

interception (in-tėr-sep′shon), n. [= F. interception = Pr. interceptio = Sp. intercepción = Pg. intercepção = It. intercezione, < L. interceptio(n-), a taking away (interception), < intercipere, take between, intercept: see intercept.] 1. The act of intercepting; a stopping or cutting off; obstruction; hindrance.

The pillars, standing at a competent distance from the outmost wall, will, by interception of the sight, somewhat in appearance diminish the breadth. Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.

Loving friends, as your sorrows & afflictions have bin great, so our croses & interceptions in our proceedings hear have not been small. Quoted in Bradford's Plymouth Plantation, p. 138.

2†. Intrusion; intervention.

We might safely suppose the ice to be as solid as entire pieces of ice are wont to be with us, and not to be made up of icy fragments cemented together, with the interception of considerable cavities filled with air. Boyle, Works, II. 542.

interceptive (in-tėr-sep′tiv), a. [< intercept + -ive.] Serving to intercept or obstruct.

intercerebral (in-tėr-ser′ē-bral), a. [< inter- + cerebral.] Situated between the right and left cerebral hemispheres, or connecting two cerebral ganglia: as, an intercerebral commissure.

intercession (in-tėr-sesh′on), n. [= F. intercession = Sp. intercesión = Pg. intercessão = It. intercessione, < L. intercessio(n-), a coming between, intervention, intercession, < intercedere, pp. intercessus, come between, intercede: see intercede.] 1. The act of interceding; mediation; interposition between parties; solicitation or entreaty in behalf of, or sometimes against, a person or an action.

And when he was in tribulacion, he besought the Lorde hys God, and humbled hymselfe exceadynglie before the God of his fathers, and made intercession to hym. Bible of 1551, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 13.

His perpetual intercession for us (which is an article of faith contained in plainest words of Holy Scripture) does not interfere with that one atonement made upon the Cross. Pusey, Eirenicon, p. 35.

2. In liturgics, a petition or group of petitions for various orders of men and classes in the church, whether living or departed; a form of conjoint or mutual prayer for or with the living, the departed, saints, and angels.—Great intercession, in liturgics, the intercession in the canon of the liturgy, as distinguished from intercessions outside the canon.—Intercession of Christ, the pleading of Christ with God in heaven on behalf of the redeemed (Heb. vii. 25).—Intercession of saints, prayer offered in behalf of Christians living on earth by saints—that is, by the faithful departed in the intermediate state or in heaven (especially those canonized as saints) and by angels. The doctrine of the intercession of saints was generally believed in among the Jews and early Christians, and is authoritatively taught by the Orthodox Greek and other Oriental churches and by the Roman Catholic Church.

intercessional (in-tėr-sesh′on-al), a. [< intercession + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or containing intercession or entreaty: as, an intercessional hymn.

intercessionate† (in-tėr-sesh′on-āt), v. t. [< intercession + -ate[2].] To intercede with. [Rare.]

To intercessionate God for his recovery. Nash, Terrors of the Night.

intercessor (in-tėr-ses′or), n. [= F. intercesseur = Sp. intercesor = Pg. intercessor = It. intercessore, < L. intercessor, one who intervenes, a mediator, surety, fulfiller, performer, etc., < intercedere, pp. intercessus, intervene, intercede: see intercede.] 1. One who intercedes or makes intercession, especially with the stronger for the weaker; a person who pleads with one in behalf of another, or endeavors to reconcile parties at variance; a mediator.

Christ doth remain everlastingly a gracious intercessor, even for every particular penitent. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vi. 5.

The generality of the Moos'lims regard their deceased saints as intercessors with the Deity. E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, I. 304.

2. Eccles., in the early African Church, an officer who during a vacancy of a see administered the bishopric till a successor was elected. Also called interventor.

intercessorial (in″tėr-se-sō′ri-al), a. [< intercessory + -al.] Pertaining to an intercessor or to intercession; intercessory. [Rare.]

intercessory (in-tėr-ses′ō-ri), a. [= OF. intercessoire, < ML. intercessorius, intercessory, < L. intercessor, intercessor: see intercessor.] Containing intercession; interceding.

The Lord's prayer has an intercessory petition for our enemies. Earbery, Modern Fanaticism (1720), p. 39.

interchain (in-tėr-chān′), v. t. [< inter- + chain.] To chain or link together; unite firmly.

Two bosoms interchained with an oath. Shak., M. N. D., ii. 3, 49.

interchange (in-tėr-chānj′), v.; pret. and pp. interchanged, ppr. interchanging. [Formerly also enterchange; < ME. enterchangen, entrechaungen, < OF. entrechangier, < entre, between, + changier, changer, change: see change, v.] I. trans. 1. To exchange mutually or reciprocally; put each of in the place of the other; give and take in reciprocity: as, to interchange commodities; to interchange compliments or duties.

The hands the spears that lately grasp'd,
Still in the mailed gauntlet clasp'd,
Were interchanged in greeting dear. Scott, L. of L. M., v. 6.

With whom, friends
And foes alike agree, throughout his life
He never interchanged a civil word. Browning, Ring and Book, I. 179.

Sweet is the scene where genial friendship plays
The pleasing game of interchanging praise. O. W. Holmes, An After-Dinner Poem.

2. To cause to follow one another alternately: as, to interchange cares with pleasures.

But then hee had withall a strange kind of interchanging of large and inexpected pardons with seuere executions. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 236.

II. intrans. To change reciprocally; succeed alternately.

His faithful friend and brother Euarchus came so mightily to his succour that, with some interchanging changes of fortune, they begat of a just war the best child—peace.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

interchange (in'tėr-chānj), n. [= OF. entrechange; from the verb.] 1. The act of exchanging reciprocally; the act or process of giving and receiving with reciprocity: as, an interchange of civilities or kind offices.

Ample interchange of sweet discourse.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3, 99.

Their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attorneyed with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies. Shak., W. T., i. 1, 30.

It is this recognition of something like our own conscious self, yet so widely sundered from it, which gives something of their exquisite delight to the interchanges of feeling even of mature men and women.
J. Sully, Sensation and Intuition, p. 252.

2. Alternate succession: as, the interchange of light and darkness.

Sweet interchange
Of hill, and valley, rivers, woods, and plains.
Milton, P. L., ix. 115.

=Syn. 1. See exchange.

interchangeability (in-tėr-chān-ja-bil'i-ti), n. [< interchangeable: see -bility.] The state of being interchangeable; interchangeableness.

interchangeable (in-tėr-chān'ja-bl), a. [= OF. entrechangeable; as interchange + -able.] 1. Capable of being interchanged; admitting of exchange.

So many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counterrolments, running through the hands and resting in the power of so many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood.
Bacon, Office of Alienations.

2. Appearing in alternate succession.

Darkness and light hold interchangeable dominions.
Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus.

interchangeableness (in-tėr-chān'ja-bl-nes), n. The state of being interchangeable.

interchangeably (in-tėr-chān'ja-bli), adv. In an interchangeable manner; reciprocally; alternately.

The lovers interchangeably express their loves.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Arg.

The terms clearness and distinctness seem to be employed almost interchangeably.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 228.

Interchangeably posed.

Interchangeably posed, in her., placed or lying across one another, as three fishes, three swords, three arrows, etc., the head of each appearing between the tails, hilts, or butts of the others.

interchanged (in-tėr-chānjd'), a. In her., same as counterchanged, 2.

interchangement (in-tėr-chānj'-mėnt), n. [< OF. entrechangement; as interchange + -ment.] Interchange; mutual transfer. [Rare.]

A contract . . .
Strengthen'd by interchangement of your rings.
Shak., T. N., v. 1, 162.

★ interchanger (in-tėr-chān'jėr), n. One who or that which interchanges; specifically, in artificial ice-making, a tank containing a coil of pipes, or its equivalent, through which the brine cooled by the ice-machine, after extracting all the heat possible from the ice-molds in the ice-making tank, is caused to flow. Water placed in the interchanger in contact with the exterior surface of the coil is cooled preparatory to being placed in the molds for freezing it, thus increasing the economical efficiency of the apparatus.

interchapter (in'tėr-chap-tėr), n. [< inter- + chapter.] An interpolated chapter. Southey.

interchondral (in-tėr-kon'dral), a. [< inter- + chondrus + -al.] Situated between any two costal cartilages: as, an interchondral articulation.

intercidence† (in-tėr'si-dens), n. [< interciden(t) + -ce[3].] A coming or falling between; an intervening occurrence.

Talking of the instances, the insults, the intercidences, communities of diseases, and all to shew what books we have read, and that we know the words and tearmes of physick. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 508.

incident† (in-tėr'si-dent), a. [< L. interciden(t-)s, ppr. of intercidere, fall between, < inter, between, + cadere, fall: see cadent, case[1].] Falling or coming between other things; intervening.

Nature rouses herself up to make a crisis, not only upon improper, and, as physicians call them, intercident days, such as the third, fifth, ninth, &c., . . . but also when there appear not any signs of coction.
Boyle, Free Enquiry, p. 226.

intercilium (in-tėr-sil'i-um), n.; pl. intercilia (-ä). [LL., < L. inter, between, + cilium, eyelid: see cilium.] The space between the eyebrows; the glabella. See cut under craniometry.

intercipient† (in-tėr-sip'i-ent), a. and n. [< L. intercipien(t-)s, ppr. of intercipere, intercept: see intercept.] I. a. Intercepting; seizing or stopping on the way.

II. n. One who or that which intercepts or stops on the way. Wiseman.

intercision (in-tėr-sizh'on), n. [= OF. intercision = It. intercisione, < LL. intercisio(n-), a cutting through, < L. intercidere, pp. intercisus, cut through, cut asunder, < inter, between, + cædere, cut.] A cutting off; interception. [Rare.]

Whenever such intercision of a life happens to a vicious person, let all the world acknowledge it for a judgment.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 257.

Some sudden intercisions of the light of the sun.
J. Spencer, Prodigies, p. 233.

intercitizenship (in-tėr-sit'i-zn-ship), n. [< inter- + citizenship.] The principle of citizenship of a person in different political communities at the same time; the right to the privileges of a citizen in all the states of a confederation.

The Articles of Confederation were framed with the grand principle of intercitizenship, which gave to the American confederation a superiority over every one that preceded it. Bancroft, Hist. Const., II. 121.

interclavicle (in-tėr-klav'i-kl), n. [< inter- + clavicle.] In zoöl. and anat., a median membrane bone developed between the clavicles, or in front of the breast-bone, in many Vertebrata. Different names have been given to a bone answering to this definition. In the monotremes, where alone in Mammalia a true interclavicle occurs, it is the large T-shaped bone which prolongs the sternum anteriorly, bearing upon its arms the small splint-like clavicles. In a bird, when developed, it is always incorporated with the clavicles, as the hypoclidium. (See cut under furcula.) In a reptile, when developed, it is distinct from the clavicles, and in a turtle it is the entoplastron or entosternum, the median anterior piece of the plastron. (See second cut under Chelonia.) In a frog it appears to be represented by the omosternum. (See cut under omosternum.) Certain presternal elements in placental mammals are sometimes called interclavicles. In some fishes the interclavicle is an intermediate element of the scapular arch, and, like the supraclavicle and postclavicle, is variously homologized by different writers. See postclavicle, and quotation under supraclavicle.

Ventral View of Shoulder-girdle of a Young Duckbill (Ornithorhynchus paradoxus).

icl, interclavicle, or tau-bone; cl, clavicle; s, s, scapula; cr, coracoid; ecr, epicoracoid; ost, omosternum; r, r, two pairs of sternal ribs; gl, glenoid fossa of shoulder-joint.

interclavicula (in"tėr-klā-vik'ū-lä), n.; pl. interclaviculæ (-lē). [NL., < L. inter, between, + NL. clavicula, q. v.] Same as interclavicle.

In many Vertebrata, the inner ends of the clavicles are connected with, and supported by, a median membrane bone which is closely connected with the ventral face of the sternum. This is the interclavicula, frequently called episternum. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 36.

interclavicular (in"tėr-klā-vik'ū-lär), a. [= F. interclaviculaire; < L. inter, between, + NL. clavicula, q. v., + -ar[3].] 1. Situated between clavicles: as, the interclavicular space; interclavicular ligament. Specifically used—(a) In herpet., with reference to the entoplastron of a tortoise or turtle: as, the interclavicular scute. See plastron, and cut under carapace (fig. 2). (b) In ornith., with reference to the internal inferior air-sac of the neck of birds.

2. Of or pertaining to an interclavicle.

interclose† (in-tėr-klōz'), v. t. [Also enterclose (cf. OF. entreclos, pp.); < inter- + close[1]. Cf. interclude.] To shut in or within; confine.

I see not why it should be impossible for art to interclose some very minute and restless particles, which, by their various and incessant motions, may keep a metalline body in a state of fluidity. Boyle, Works, I. 638.

intercloud† (in-tėr-kloud'), v. t. [< inter- + cloud[1].] To intersperse with clouds; overcloud.

None the least blackness interclouded had So fair a day, nor any eye look'd sad.
Daniel, Civil Wars, v.

interclude† (in-tėr-klöd'), v. t. [= OF. entreclore, entreclorre = It. interchiudere, intercludere, < L. intercludere, shut off, shut in, < inter, between, + claudere, shut, close: see close[1]. Cf. interclose.] To shut off from a place or course by something intervening; intercept; cut off.

Laying siege against their cities, intercluding their ways and passages, and cutting off from them all commerce with other places or nations. Pococke, On Hosea, p. 53.

interclusion† (in-tėr-klö'zhon), n. [= Sp. interclusión, < L. interclusio(n-), < intercludere, pp. interclusus, shut off: see interclude.] Interception; a cutting or shutting off.

The interclusion of commerce. Bisset, Burke, I. 411.

intercoccygeal (in"tėr-kok-sij'ē-al), a. [< inter- + coccyx (coccyg-) + -e-al.] Situated between portions of the coccyx.—Intercoccygeal fibrocartilage. See fibrocartilage.

intercoccygean (in"tėr-kok-sij'ē-an), a. Same as intercoccygeal.

intercollegiate (in"tėr-kō-lē'ji-āt), a. [< L. inter, between, + collegium, college: see collegiate.] Between colleges; of or pertaining to different colleges in participation: as, an intercollegiate contest or discussion.

intercolline (in-tėr-kol'in), a. [< L. inter, between, + collis, a hill: see colline.] Lying between hills or hillocks: as, an intercolline hamlet. Specifically, in geology, applied by Lyell to the hollows which lie between the conical hillocks made up of accumulations from volcanic eruptions. [Rare.]

intercolonial (in"tėr-kō-lō'ni-al), a. [= F. intercolonial; < L. inter, between, + colonia, colony, + -al.] Between colonies; of or pertaining to different colonies in intercourse: as, intercolonial commerce.

Happily for the national interests of British North America, its public men agreed at this critical juncture in their affairs to a political union, which has stimulated intercolonial trade. Westminster Rev., CXXV. 404.

intercolonially (in"tėr-kō-lō'ni-al-i), adv. As between colonies.

intercolumnar (in"tėr-kō-lum'nar), a. [= F. intercolumnaire = Pg. intercolumnar, < L. inter, between, + columna, column: see columnar.] Between two columns; specifically, in anat., extending between the pillars or columns of the external abdominal ring.

Recumbent figures fill the spandrils of the arches thrown over the inter-columnar spaces.
C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, p. 190.

Intercolumnar fascia. See fascia.—Intercolumnar fibers, transverse fibers on the surface of the aponeurosis of the external oblique muscle, extending across the upper part of the external abdominal ring, between its pillars or columns.

intercolumniation (in"tėr-kō-lum-ni-ā'shon), n. [< L. intercolumnium, the space between two columns (< inter, between, + columna, column: see column), + -ation.] 1. In arch., the space between two columns, measured at the lower part of their shafts, usually taken as from center to center. This space, in the practice of the ancients, varied in proportion in almost every building. Vitruvius enumerates five varieties of intercolumniations, and assigns to them definite proportions expressed in measures of the inferior diameter of the column. These are: the pycnostyle, of one diameter and a half; the systyle, of two diameters; the diastyle, of three diameters; the areostyle, of four or sometimes five diameters; and the eustyle, of two and a quarter diameters. It is found, however, on examining the remains of ancient architecture, that the intercolumniations rarely if ever agree with the Vitruvian dimensions, which must therefore, like nearly all other theories of Vitruvius, be regarded as arbitrary.

Intercolumniation.

A, areostyle; B, coupled columns; C, diastyle; D, eustyle.

2. The system of spacing between columns, particularly with reference to a given building.

The position of the other two [columns] must be determined either by bringing forward the wall enclosing the stairs, so as to admit of the intercolumniation east and west being the same as that of the other columns, or of spacing them so as to divide the inner roof of the pronaos into equal squares. J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 269.

intercombat† (in-tėr-kom'bat), n. [< inter- + combat.] A combat; fight.

The combat granted, and the day assign'd,
They both in order of the field appear,
Most richly furnish'd in all martial kind,
And at the point of intercombat were.
Daniel, Civil Wars, i.

intercome† (in-tėr-kum'), v. i. [< inter- + come.] To intervene; interpose; interfere.

Notwithstanding the pope's intercoming to make himself a party in the quarrel, the bishops did adhere to their own sovereign. Proc. against Garnet (1606), Rr. b. (Rich.) intercommon (in-tėr-kom'on), v. [< ME. entercomenen, entercombnen, < OF. entrecommuner, entrecomuner, intercommon; as inter- + common, v. Cf. intercommune.] I. intrans. 1†. To participate or share in common; have intercourse, dealings, or relations with others; in Scots law, have dealings with outlaws.

That thowe cannyst nat, percaase anoder can,
To entyrcomyn as a brodyr dothe with a-noder.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 22.

To this adde that precept of Aristotle, that wine be forborne in all consumptions: for that the spirits of the wine do prey upon the roscide juyce of the body, and intercommon with the spirits of the body, and so deceive and rob them of their nourishment. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 55.

2. In Eng. law, to graze cattle reciprocally on each other's common; use two commons interchangeably or in common.

Common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, is where the inhabitants of two townships which lie contiguous to each other have usually intercommoned with one another. Blackstone, Com., II. iii.

II.† trans. To denounce for criminal communication or fellowship. See intercommoning.

But it appeared that there had been no such designs, by this, that none came into it but those desperate intercommoned men who were as it were hunted from their houses into all those extravagances that men may fall in. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1679.

intercommonage (in-tėr-kom'o̤n-āj), n. [< intercommon + -age.] Mutual commonage; in Eng. law, a privilege enjoyed by the inhabitants of two or more contiguous manors or townships of pasturing their cattle in common.

intercommoner† (in-tėr-kom'o̤n-ėr), n. One who intercommons; one who participates with others in something, as a common pasture.

They are intercommoners by suffrance with God, children, and servants. Gataker.

intercommoning† (in-tėr-kom'o̤n-ing), n. [Verbal n. of intercommon, v.] Denunciation or outlawing for criminal communication or fellowship.

And upon that great numbers were outlawed; and a writ was issued out, that was indeed legal, but very seldom used, called intercommoning; because it made all that harboured such persons, or did not seize them, when they had it in their power, to be involved in the same guilt. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1676.

intercommune (in″tėr-ko̤-mūn'), v. i.; pret. and pp. intercommuned, ppr. intercommuning. [In older form intercommon, q. v.; < OF. entrecommuner, < ML. intercommunicare, communicate, < L. inter, between, + communicare, communicate, commune: see commune[1].] 1. To commune together or jointly; unite in communion or intercourse.—2. To hold communication or intercourse: as, to intercommune with rebels. [Scotch.]—Letters of intercommuning, in Scotch hist., letters from the Privy Council prohibiting all persons from holding any kind of intercourse or communication with those therein denounced, under pain of being regarded as art and part in their crimes. E. D.

In the year 1676 letters of intercommuning were published. Hallam.

intercommunicability (in″tėr-ko̤-mū″ni-ka-bil'i̤-ti), n. [< intercommunicable: see -bility.] The quality of being intercommunicable; capability of being mutually communicated.

The intercommunicability of scarlet fever and diphtheria. Quoted in Millican's Morbid Germs, p. 28.

intercommunicable (in″tėr-ko̤-mū'ni-ka-bl), a. [< intercommunic(ate) + -able. Cf. communicable.] Capable of being mutually communicated. Coleridge.

intercommunicate (in″tėr-ko̤-mū'ni-kāt), v.; pret. and pp. intercommunicated, ppr. intercommunicating. [< ML. intercommunicatus, pp. of intercommunicare, communicate: see intercommune and communicate.] I. intrans. To have or hold reciprocal communication.

II. trans. To communicate reciprocally; transmit to and from each other.

The rays coming from the vast body of the sun, and carried to mighty altitudes, receive one from another and intercommunicate the lights, as they be sent to and fro. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 954.

intercommunication (in″tėr-ko̤-mū-ni-kā'shọn), n. [= F. intercommunication, < ML. intercommunicatio(n-), < intercommunicare, communicate: see intercommunicate.] Reciprocal communication or intercourse.

The free intercommunication between the basal spaces into which the auricles open and from which the arteries proceed. Owen, Anat.

It is hard to say what . . . may be due to the more highly organised state of society, the greater activity of its forces, the readier intercommunication of its parts. Gladstone, Gleanings, I. 136.

Common felons are allowed almost unrestricted intercommunication and association in the forwarding prisons, and are deported as speedily as practicable to Siberia. G. Kennan, The Century, XXXV. 761.

intercommunion (in″tėr-ko̤-mū'nyọn), n. [< inter- + communion.] Communion one with another; intimate intercourse.

That seemingly unsociable spirit so necessary in them to prevent . . . an entire intercommunion with the idolatrous religions round them. Law, Theory of Religion, ii.

intercommunity (in″tėr-ko̤-mū'ni̤-ti), n. [< inter- + community.] 1. Reciprocal communication or possession; community.

It admits of no tolerance, no intercommunity of various sentiments, not the least difference of opinion. Bp. Lowth, To Warburton, p. 13.

2. The state of living or existing together in harmonious intercourse.

When, in consequence of that intercommunity of Paganism, . . . one nation adopted the gods of another, they did not always take in at the same time the secret worship or mysteries of that god. Warburton, Divine Legation, ii. 4.

intercomplexity (in″tėr-ko̤m-plek'si̤-ti), n. [< inter- + complexity.] A mutual involvement or entanglement.

Intercomplexities had arisen between all complications and interweavings of descent from three original strands. De Quincey, Spanish Nun, § 20.

intercondylar (in-tėr-kon'di-lär), a. [< inter- + condyle + -ar[3].] Same as intercondyloid.

intercondyloid (in-tėr-kon'di-loid), a. [< inter- + condyle + -oid.] In anat., situated between two condyles: as, the intercondyloid fossa of the femur, a depressed space between the inner and the outer condyle of that bone.

interconnect (in″tėr-ko̤-nekt'), v. t. [< inter- + connect.] To connect or conjoin mutually and intimately.

So closely interconnected, and so mutually dependent. H. A. Nicholson.

interconnection (in″tėr-ko̤-nek'shọn), n. [< inter- + connection.] The state or condition of being interconnected; intimate or mutual connection.

There are cases where two stars dissemble an interconnection which they really have, and other cases where they simulate an interconnection which they have not. De Quincey, System of the Heavens.

intercontinental (in-tėr-kon-ti-nen'tal), a. [= F. intercontinental, etc.; < inter- + continental.] Subsisting between different continents: as, intercontinental trade.

intercontradictory (in-tėr-kon-tra-dik'tọ̄-ri), a. [< inter- + contradictory.] Contradictory one of the other, as statements or depositions.

interconversion (in″tėr-ko̤n-vėr'shọn), n. [< inter- + conversion.] Reciprocal conversion; interchange of form or constitution.

Till it shall be shown . . . how their interconversion [that of forms of molecular movement] is effected. Sir J. Herschel, Pop. Lects., p. 473.

interconvertible (in″tėr-ko̤n-vėr'ti-bl), a. [< inter- + convertible.] Convertible each into the other; capable of being exchanged equivalently, the one for the other: as, interconvertible terms.

intercoracoid (in-tėr-kor'a̤-koid), a. [< inter- + coracoid.] Situated between the coracoids: as, the intercoracoid part of the sternum.

intercorallite (in-tėr-kor'a̤-līt), a. [< inter- + corallite.] Situated between corallites; noting space or substance so placed: as, intercorallite walls; intercorallite tissue.

intercosmic, intercosmical (in-tėr-koz'mik, -mi-ka̤l), a. [< inter- + cosmos, the universe: see cosmical.] Between the constituent parts of the universe.

The doctrine of attenuated matter scattered through the intercosmical spaces of organized systems is distinct. Winchell, World-Life, p. 49.

★intercostal (in-tėr-kos'ta̤l), a. and n. [= F. intercostal = Sp. Pg. intercostal = It. intercostale, < NL. intercostalis, < L. inter, between, + costa, rib: see costal.] I. a. Situated or intervening between successive ribs of the same side of the body: as, intercostal muscles, vessels, spaces.—Intercostal artery, an artery, generally a branch of the thoracic aorta, situated in an intercostal space. There are generally as many such arteries as there are such spaces, and the artery usually hugs the under border of a rib. In man there are 11 pairs, the one or two uppermost of which are branches of the subclavian artery, the remaining pairs being derived directly from the aorta. They run to some extent in a groove inside the lower border of the rib, and between the external and the internal layer of intercostal muscles.—Intercostal fasciæ. See fascia.—Intercostal gland, a lymphatic gland situated in an intercostal space. In man there are several intercostal glands, of small size, near the heads of the ribs, and between the layers of intercostal muscles. They empty for the most part into the thoracic duct.

We have seen these intercostal glands enlarged and diseased in phthisis. Holden, Anat. (1885), p. 213.

Intercostal keelson, muscle, etc. See the nouns.—Intercostal nerve, an anterior branch of any spinal nerve which runs in an intercostal space to a greater or less extent. In man there are 12 pairs of such nerves. They are sometimes divided into upper and lower, or pectoral and abdominal, sets of 6 pairs each.—Intercostal neuralgia, neuralgia of an intercostal nerve.—Intercostal vein, a vein running with and corresponding to an intercostal artery, and usually emptying into an azygous vein.—Intercostal vessel, an intercostal artery, vein, or lymphatic duct.

II. n. An intercostal structure, as an artery, and especially a muscle; an intercostalis. The intercostals are two layers of muscular fibers occupying the intercostal spaces, running obliquely, and for the most part between any two successive ribs. They are respiratory in function.—External intercostals, the outer layer of intercostal muscles, running obliquely downward and forward from one rib to another. In man there are 11 on each side of the chest.—Internal intercostals, the inner layer of intercostal muscles, the direction of whose fibers crosses that of the external layer. Some of them usually run over more than one intercostal space; such are called subcostals or infracostals.

intercostalis (in″tėr-kos-tā'lis), n.; pl. intercostales (-lēz). [NL.: see intercostal.] In anat., an intercostal; one of the intercostal muscles.

intercostohumeral (in-tėr-kos-tō-hū'me-ra̤l), a. and n. [< intercost(al) + humeral.] I. a. Proceeding from an intercostal space to the upper arm: specifically applied to certain nerves.

II. n. An intercostohumeral nerve.

The posterior lateral branch of the second intercostal nerve . . . is larger than the others, and is called the intercosto-humeral, because it supplies the integuments of the arm. . . . The corresponding branch of the third intercostal is also an intercosto-humeral nerve. Holden, Anat. (1885), p. 332.

intercostohumeralis (in-tėr-kos-tō-hū-me-rā'lis), n.; pl. intercostohumerales (-lēz). [NL.: see intercostohumeral.] An intercostohumeral nerve.

intercourse (in'tėr-kōrs), n. [Formerly also entercourse; < ME. entercourse, entrecourse (also intercurse, after L.), < OF. entrecors, entrecours, intercours, intercourse, < L. intercursus, a running between, intervention, interposition (ML. also intercommunication), < intercurrere, pp. intercursus, run between, intervene: see intercur, intercurrent.] 1. Communication between persons or places; frequent or habitual meeting or contact of one person with another, or of a number of persons with others, in conversation, trade, travel, etc.; physical interchange; reciprocal dealing: as, the intercourse between town and country.

At the last shall ye come to people, cities, and towns, wherein is continual intercourse and occupying of merchandize and chaffare. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

Euen then when in Assyria it selfe it was corrupted by entercourse of strangers. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 47.

By which [bridge] the spirits perverse
With easy intercourse pass to and fro.
Milton, P. L., ii. 1031.

2. Mental or spiritual interchange; reciprocal exchange of ideas or feelings; intercommunion.

Food of the mind [talk] or this sweet intercourse
Of looks and smiles. Milton, P. L., ix. 238.

Thou wast made for social intercourse and gentle greetings. Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 54.

The neighboring Indians in a short time became accustomed to the uncouth sound of the Dutch language, and an intercourse gradually took place between them and the new comers. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 101.

His intercourse with heaven and earth becomes part of his daily food. Emerson, Nature.

Sexual intercourse, coition.

intercoxal (in-tėr-kok'sa̤l), a. [< inter- + coxa + -al.] In entom., situated between the coxæ or bases of the legs.—Intercoxal process, a projection of the hard integument between the coxæ: specifically applied to a process of the first ventral segment of the abdomen extending between the posterior coxal cavities. It is found especially in many Coleoptera.

intercross (in-tėr-krôs'), v. [< inter- + cross[1].] I. trans. To cross reciprocally; specifically, in biol., to fertilize by impregnation of one species or variety by means of another; interbreed.

These plants [those capable of self-fertilization] are frequently intercrossed, owing to the prepotency of pollen from another individual or variety over the plant's own pollen. Darwin, Cross and Self Fertilisation, p. 2.

Natural species . . . are nearly always more or less sterile when intercrossed. A. R. Wallace, Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XL. 301.

II. intrans. In biol., to become impregnated by a different variety or species, or, in the case of hermaphrodites, by a different individual.

Cultivated plants like those in a state of nature frequently intercross, and will thus mingle their constitutional peculiarities. Darwin, Cross and Self Fertilisation, p. 255.

intercross (in'tėr-krôs), n. [< intercross, v.] An ★instance of cross-fertilization. Darwin.

intercrural (in-tėr-krö̤'ra̤l), a. [< inter- + crura + -al.] In zoöl.: (a) Of or pertaining to the space between the crura or rami of the under jaw; interramal; submental. (b) Situated between the crura cerebri, as the interpeduncular space or area at the base of the brain.

intercultural (in-tėr-kul′tūr-al), a. [< inter- + culture + -al.] Intermediate in the process of cultivation.

By "intercultural tillage," Dr. Sturtevant means tilling, stirring the soil, while the plant is growing. The value of intercultural tillage has long been understood.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII. 376.

The intercultural tillage should be applied whenever the upper soil has regained . . . its connection with the lower soil. Nature, XXXVII. 524.

intercur† (in-tėr-kėr′), v. i. [Early mod. E. entercorre, < OF. entrecorre, entrecourre, < L. intercurrere, run between, run along with, mingle with, intercede, < inter, between, + currere, run: see current[1]. Cf. concur, decur, incur, etc.] To run or come between; intervene.

I [Wolsey] as your lieutenaunt being alwaies propice and redy to entercorre, as a loving mynister for the stablishing &c. of good amyte bitwene your hignes and hym.
State Papers, Wolsey to Hen. VIII., 1527.

So that there intercur no sin in the acting thereof.
Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, II. iv. 9.

intercurl (in-tėr-kėrl′), v. t. [< inter- + curl.] To curl or twine between; entwine.

Queen Helen, whose Jacinth-hair curled by nature, but intercurled by art (like a fine brook through golden sands), had a rope of fair pearl. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

intercurrence (in-tėr-kur′ens), n. [< intercurren(t) + -ce.] 1. A running or coming between; intervention. [Rare.]

We may . . . consider what fluidity salt-petre is capable of, without the intercurrence of a liquor.
Boyle, Hist. Fluidity, xvi.

2†. An intervening occurrence; an incident.

To be sagacious in such intercurrences is not superstition, but wary and pious discretion.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., i. 29.

★ intercurrent (in-tėr-kur′ent), a. and n. [= F. intercurrent = Sp. intercurrente = Pg. intercorrente, < L. intercurren(t-)s, ppr. of intercurrere, run between, intervene: see intercur.] I. a. 1. Running between or among; occurring between; intervening. [Rare.]

Transacts with the Dane, with the French, the rupture with both; together with all the intercurrent exploits at Guiny, the Mediterranean, West Indies, and other signal particulars. Evelyn, To my Lord Treasurer.

The ebbing and flowing of the sea Des Cartes ascribeth to the greater pressure made upon the air by the moon, and the intercurrent ethereal substance, at certain times (of the day, and of the lunary month) than at others.
Boyle, Works, I. 41.

2. Specifically, in pathol., occurring in a patient already suffering from some disease: said of a second disease.

He died of intercurrent disease.
Alien. and Neurol., VI. 404.

II.† n. Something that intervenes; an intercurrence; an incident.

[Fortune] having diversified and distinguished even from the beginning our enterprise, like a play or enterlude, with many dangerous intercurrents, was assistant and ran with us, at the very point and upshot of the execution thereof. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 998.

intercurset†, n. An obsolete form of intercourse.

intercut† (in-tėr-kut′), v. t. [< inter- + cut.] To intersect.

The countrey whence he sprung . . . is so inlayed and everywhere so intercutt and indented with the sea or fresh navigable rivers that one cannot tell what to call it, either water or land. Howell, Parly of Beasts, p. 5.

intercystic (in-tėr-sis′tik), a. [< inter- + cyst + -ic.] Lying or occurring between cysts: as, the intercystic tissue of a cystic tumor.

interdash (in-tėr-dash′), v. t. [< inter- + dash.] To intersperse with dashes; interline. [Rare.]

A prologue interdash'd with many a stroke.
Cowper, Table-Talk, l. 538.

interdeal† (in′tėr-dēl), n. [Also enterdeal; < inter- + deal[1].] 1. Intercourse; conduct.

To learne the enterdeale of Princes strange,
Tc marke th' intent of counsells, and the change
Of states. Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 785.

2. Commerce; traffic.

The trading and interdeale with other nations rounde about have chaunged and greatly altered the dialect therof. Spenser, State of Ireland.

interdental (in-tėr-den′tal), a. [< L. inter, between, + den(t-)s = E. tooth: see dental.] Occurring or produced between the teeth.

The interdental sound of z. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 350.

Interdental space, the space or interval between the cogs of a geared wheel.

interdentil, interdentel (in-tėr-den′til, -tel), n. [< inter- + dentil, dentel.] In arch., the space between two dentils.

interdependence, interdependency (in″tėr-dē-pen′dens, -den-si), n. [= F. interdépendance; as inter- + dependence, dependency.] Mutual dependence.

There is an intimate interdependence of intellect and morals. Emerson, Conduct of Life.

The wonderful interdependence shown by Darwin to exist between insects and plants in the fertilization of the latter. E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 145.

interdependent (in″tėr-dē-pen′dent), a. [< inter- + dependent.] Mutually dependent.

And this because phenomena are independent not less than interdependent.
G. H. Lewes, Probs. of Life and Mind, I. 88.

Ignorance, intemperance, immorality, and disease—these things are all interdependent and closely connected.
Westminster Rev., CXXV. 16.

Painting, for example, is an interdependent process, and both in its execution and results its interdependence lies in purely physical combinations of visible and touchable materials. Argyll, Nineteenth Century, XXIII. 152.

interdestructiveness (in-tėr-dē-struk′tiv-nes), n. [< inter- + destructiveness.] Mutual destructiveness. Godwin, Mandeville, II. 103.

interdict (in-tėr-dikt′), v. t. [In ME. entrediten, < OF. entredit (pp. of entredire); < L. interdictus, pp. of interdicere (> It. interdicere, interdire = Sp. entredecir, interdecir = Pg. entredizer, interdizer = OF. entredire, F. interdire), interpose by speaking, contradict, forbid, < inter, between, + dicere, speak, say: see diction.] 1. To declare authoritatively against, as the use or doing of something; debar by forbidding; prohibit peremptorily.

Let the brave chiefs their glorious toils divide,
And whose the conquest, mighty Jove decide;
While we from interdicted fields retire,
Nor tempt the wrath of heav'n's avenging sire.
Pope, Iliad, v. 43.

Nature, however, . . . is an excellent friend in such cases; sealing the lips, interdicting utterance, commanding a placid dissimulation. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, vii.

2. To prohibit from some action or proceeding; restrain by prohibitory injunction; estop; preclude.

To prevent their seeking relief from the slow agonies of this torture, they would be interdicted the use of knives and forks, and every other instrument of self-destruction.
Everett, Orations, I. 500.

They [the Plantagenets] were interdicted from taxing; but they claimed the right of begging and borrowing.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., i.

Specifically—3. Eccles., to cut off from communion with a church; debar from ecclesiastical functions or privileges.

The reame was therefore nygh thre yere enderdited, and stode a-cursed that neuer manes body ne womans was byried in noon halowed place.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 466.

Becket had gotten him more Friends at Rome, and by their means prevailed with the Pope to give him Power to interdict some Bishops in England that had done him Wrong. Baker, Chronicles, p. 57.

★=Syn. Prohibit, etc. See forbid.

interdict (in′tėr-dikt), n. [In ME. enterdit, < OF. entredit, F. interdit = Pr. entredich = Sp. entredicho, interdicto = Pg. interdicto = It. interdetto; < L. interdictum, a prohibition, neut. of interdictus, pp. of interdicere, forbid, prohibit: see interdict, v.] 1. An official or authoritative prohibition; a prohibitory order or decree.

No interdict
Defends the touching of these viands pure.
Milton, P. R., ii. 369.

2. In Rom. law, an adjudication, by a solemn ordinance issued by the pretor, in his capacity of governing magistrate, for the purpose of quieting a controversy, usually as to peaceable possession, between private parties. More specifically—(a) in earlier times, a prohibition or injunction incidental or introductory to an action, forbidding interference with possession until the right should have been determined; (b) in later times, the extension of this remedy so as to include not merely such injunctive relief, but also production or discovery (called exhibitory interdict or interdict for production), and the delivery of possession, the reinstatement of a previous situation, or other undoing of a wrong (called interdict of restitution). Throughout the various extensions of the term the characteristic idea seems to have been the act of the pretor in assuming in some sense the functions of a plaintiff or a prosecutor on grounds of public policy, somewhat as in modern practice the court makes orders or decrees upon some subjects, which, though made in a private controversy, it will enforce in the name of the people by proceedings for contempt.

3. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., an ecclesiastical censure by which persons are debarred from the use of certain sacraments, from all the divine offices, and from Christian burial.

Interdicts are divided into local, personal, and mixed. In the first kind a place is interdicted, so that no divine office may be celebrated or heard in it, either by the inhabitants or by strangers. By the second kind persons are interdicted, so as to be debarred from using the sacraments or exercising the functions prohibited, in whatever place they may be. By the mixed kind both place and persons are directly interdicted—e. g. a city and its inhabitants. Again, each of the first two kinds may be either general or particular. A particular local interdict strikes a single locality—e. g. a church; a general one comprehends many localities, being pronounced against a kingdom, a province, or a city. Cath. Dict.

4. In Scots law, an injunction. See suspension.

interdiction (in-tėr-dik′shon), n. [= F. interdiction = Sp. interdicción = Pg. interdicção = It. interdizione, < L. interdictio(n-), a prohibiting, < interdicere, pp. interdictus, prohibit, forbid: see interdict, v.] 1. The act of interdicting; authoritative prohibition; declaratory estoppel.

The truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3, 106.

By this means the Kingdom was released of the interdiction. Baker, Chronicles, p. 73.

2. In law, judicial restraint imposed upon one who, from unsoundness of mind, weakness, or improvidence, is incapable of managing his own affairs, or is liable to imposition. An inquisition of lunacy relates to the present or past. The interdiction expressed or implied by the confirmation of the inquisition and the appointment of a guardian relates to the future, and from the time of interdiction no act of the person is valid without the intervention of the court.

3. In Rom. law, an edict or decree of the pretor to meet the circumstances of a particular case, but granted usually from considerations of a public character. See interdict, n., 2.—4. Same as interdict, n., 4.—Interdiction of fire and water, banishment by an order that no man should supply the person banished with fire or water, the two necessaries of life. Rapalje and Lawrence.

interdictive (in-tėr-dik′tiv), a. [< interdict + -ive.] Of the nature of an interdict; constituting an interdict; prohibitory.

A timely separation from the flock by that interdictive sentence; lest his conversation unprohibited, or unbranded, might breathe a pestilential murrain into the other sheep. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

interdictory (in-tėr-dik′tō-ri), a. [< LL. interdictorius, prohibitory, < L. interdicere, pp. interdictus, prohibit: see interdict, v.] Serving to interdict or prohibit.

interdifferentiation (in-tėr-dif-ē-ren-shi-ā′shon), n. [< inter- + differentiation.] Differentiation between or among.

interdiffuse (in″tėr-di-fūz′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interdiffused, ppr. interdiffusing. [< inter- + diffuse.] To diffuse or spread among or between. North British Rev. [Rare.]

interdiffusion (in″tėr-di-fū′zhon), n. [< inter- + diffusion.] The act of interdiffusing; mutual diffusion.

In the case of molten metals the interdiffusion may be extremely rapid. Sci. Amer. Supp., p. 8788.

interdigital (in-tėr-dij′i-tal), a. [= F. interdigital; < L. inter, between, + digitus, finger: see digital.] Situated between digits; connecting fingers or toes one with another. The webbing of a duck's foot is interdigital; so is most of the membrane of a bat's wing.

interdigitate (in-tėr-dij′i-tāt), v.; pret. and pp. interdigitated, ppr. interdigitating. [< L. inter, between, + digitus, finger: see digitate.] I. trans. To insert between the fingers; interweave like the joined fingers of the two hands. [Rare.]

II. intrans. 1. To be interwoven; commingle like interlocked fingers.

The groups of characters that are essential to the true definition of a plant and animal interdigitate, so to speak, in that low department of the organic world from which the two great branches rise and diverge. Owen.

2. In anat., specifically, to interpose finger-like processes or digitations between similar processes of another part, as one muscle may do to another; inosculate by means of reciprocal serrations: followed by with. Thus, the human serratus magnus muscle interdigitates by several of its serrations with similar processes of the external oblique muscle of the abdomen.

In certain species of Mustelus . . . a rudimentary placenta is formed, the vascular walls of the umbilical sac becoming plaited, and interdigitating with similar folds of the wall of the uterus. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 120.

interdigitation (in-tėr-dij-i-tā′shon), n. [< interdigitate + -ion.] 1. The act of inserting between the fingers, or of inserting the fingers of one hand between those of the other; hence the state of being inextricably interwoven or run into each other, as is the case with the characters of the lowest classes of plants and animals; intermixture.—2. In anat., specifically—(a) Reciprocal digitation; the state or quality of being interdigitated or reciprocally interposed by means of digitate processes. Interdigitation presents an appearance as of two saws with the teeth of one set in the spaces between the teeth of the other. (b) The set of spaces between digits or finger-like processes.

interduce (in′tėr-dūs), n. [< L. inter, between, + ducere, lead: see duct.] In carp., same as intertie.

interepimeral (in-tėr-ep-i-mē′ral), a. [< inter- + epimera + -al.] Situated between epimera: as, the interepimeral membrane. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 269.

interepithelial (in-tėr-ep-i-thē′li-al), a. [< inter- + epithelial.] Situated between or among epithelial cells. Also intra-epithelial.

interequinoctial (in-tėr-ē-kwi-nok′shal), a. [< inter- + equinoctial.] Coming between the equinoxes.

Spring and autumn I have denominated equinoctial periods. Summer and winter I have called interequinoctial intervals. Asiatic Researches.

interess† (in′tėr-es), v. t. [Also interesse; < OF. interesser, F. intéresser (formerly chiefly in pp. intéressé), interest, concern, OF. also damage, = Pr. interessar = Sp. interesar = Pg. interessar = It. interessare, concern, interest, < L. interesse, be between, be distant, be different, be present at, be of importance, import, concern (impers. interest, it concerns), < inter, between, + esse, be: see be[1]. Cf. interest.] To interest; concern; affect; especially, to concern or affect deeply.

To whose young love
The vines of France and milk of Burgundy
Strive to be interess'd. Shak., Lear, i. 1, 187.

To love our native country, and to study its benefit and its glory, to be interessed in its concerns, is natural to all men, and is indeed our common duty.
Dryden, Epick Poetry.

interess† (in′tėr-es), n. [Also interesse; < ME. interesse (= G. Dan. interesse = Sw. intresse), < OF. interesse = Pr. interesse = Sp. interés = Pg. It. interesse, < ML. interesse, n., concern, interest, premium on money lent, right, etc., < L. interesse, v., concern: see interess, v.] Interest; concern; deep concern.

That false forsweryng have there noon interesse.
Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 210.

But wote thou this, thou hardy Titanesse,
That not the worth of any living wight
May challenge ought in Heavens interesse.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vi. 33.

interesse termini (in-tėr-es′ē tėr′mi-nī). [ML.: interesse, interest (see interess, n.); termini, gen. of terminus, end, ending: see term, n.] The right of entry upon land vested in a lessee. It is not an estate, but an interest for the term; and the right may be exercised by the executors or administrators ★of the owner if he dies without having entered.

interest (in′tėr-est), n. [Late ME. interest (= D. interest), < OF. interest, interest, concern, also damage, prejudice, F. intérêt, interest, profit, advantage, < L. interest, it concerns, it is to the advantage, 3d pers. sing. pres. ind. impers. of interesse, concern: see interess, v. Practically interest is a later var. of interess, n.] 1. That which concerns or is of importance; that which is advantageous, or connected with advantage or welfare; concern; concernment; behoof; advantage: as, the common interests of life; to act for the public interest.

We destroy the Common-wealth, while we preserve our own private Interests, and neglect the Publick.
Selden, Table-Talk, p. 58.

'Tis for the fowler's interest to beware
The bird intangled should not 'scape the snare.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love, i. 444.

Inglorious slave to int'rest, ever join'd
With fraud, unworthy of a royal mind!
Pope, Iliad, i. 195.

By the term interests I mean not only material well-being, but also all those mental luxuries, all those grooves or channels for thought, which it is easy and pleasing to follow, and painful and difficult to abandon.
Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 203.

The provinces were ruled, or rather plundered, in the interest of the privileged class, above all in the interest of the leading members of the privileged class.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 332.

2. The feeling that something (the object of the feeling) concerns one; a feeling of the importance of something with reference to one's self; a feeling of personal concernment in an object, such as to fix the attention upon it; appreciative or sympathetic regard: as, to feel an interest in a person; to excite one's interest in a project; a subject of absorbing interest.

From all a closer interest flourish'd up,
Tenderness touch by touch.
Tennyson, Princess, vii.

Something further is necessary to that lively interaction of mind and object which we call a state of attention; and this is interest. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 92.

A little more than a year ago the whole world was following with intense interest the fortunes of the English flying column dispatched by Lord Wolseley from Korti to cross the desert of Matammeh.
Westminster Rev., CXXV. 557.

3. Personal or selfish consideration; regard to private benefit or profit: as, his actions are controlled by interest; the clashing of rival interests.

"Interest and passion" may "come in, and be too strong for reflection and conscience," but still reflection and conscience are always present with us to bear witness against them. Fowler, Shaftesbury and Hutcheson, p. 145.

A man never pleads better than where his own personal interest is concerned. Addison, Trial of the Wine-brewers.

Interest . . . ought in reason to be treated as an objection to the credit of a witness, and not to his competence.
Nineteenth Century, XX. 455.

4. Influence from personal importance or capability; power of influencing the action of others: as, he has interest at court; to solicit a person's interest in behalf of an application.

Come, come, Lydia, hope for the best — Sir Anthony shall use his interest with Mrs. Malaprop.
Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 2.

Ingeniously made interest with the Pope
To set such tedious regular forms aside.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 191.

5. Personal possession or right of control; share or participation in ownership: as, to have great interests in a county; an interest in a stock company; also, anything that is of importance from a commercial or financial point of view; a business; property in general: as, the mining interests.

Anjou, a Dutchy, Main, a County great,
Of which the English long had been possest;
And Manus, a city of no small receit,
To which the duke pretended interest.
Drayton, Miseries of Queen Margaret.

All your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you: all is lost.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1, 84.

The Priests and Levites they bid consider what would become of them all if the Law of Moses was abrogated, by which their interest was upheld.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. iii.

The contest was for an interest then riding at single anchor. De Quincey, Essenes, ii.

6. In law, in the most general sense, legal concern of a person in a thing or in the conduct of another person, whether it consist in a right of enjoyment in or benefit from property, or a right of advantage, or a subjection to liability in the event of conduct; more specifically, a right in property, or to some of those uses or benefits from which the property is inseparable. In a narrower sense it was used in the English common law of real property, to designate a right less than an estate, such as a lease or an easement, etc.

7. Payment, or a sum paid, for the use of money, or for forbearance of a debt. The interest bears a fixed ratio (agreed upon by the parties) to the sum loaned, and is to be paid at certain stated times, as once or twice a year. The money lent or due is called the principal, the sum paid for the use of it the interest, the fixed ratio, which is so many units in one hundred, the rate per cent., or simply the per cent. The rate per cent. is usually so much a year, or per annum. Sometimes the rate is mentioned as so much per month; $100 at 1 per cent. per month is equal to $100 at 12 per cent. per annum. Legal interest is the rate established by law, and it is always understood that legal interest is intended when no specific rate is mentioned. Interest greater than the legal rate is usury, and is prohibited by law. In certain jurisdictions, however, it is allowable to give and receive higher than legal rates by special contract between the parties. Interest may be either simple or compound. Simple interest is the interest arising from the principal sum only, and, though not paid, is not itself chargeable with interest. Compound interest is the interest paid not only on the original or principal sum, but also on the interest as it falls due and, remaining unpaid, is added to the principal.

Who pawn their souls and put them out at interest for a very small present advantage, although they are sure in a very little time to lose both their Interest and the Principal too. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. xii.

Hence — 8. Something added or thrown in by way of premium or enhancement; an added quantity over and above what is due, deserved, or expected.

With all speed,
You shall have your desires, with interest.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3, 49.

Beneficial interest, a right or interest to be enjoyed for one's own benefit, as distinguished from the right of a trustee for the benefit of another. — Chattel interest. See chattel. — Equitable interest, such an interest as is recognized and protected by courts of equity, although it might not be at common law. — Insurable interest. See insurance, 2. — Interest or no interest, a provision in a policy of insurance signifying that the contract will be executed even though the insured have no insurable interest in the subject-matter. — Landed interest. See landed. — Maritime interest. See maritime. — Party in interest, a person who, though he may not be named in a contract as a contracting party, or in a suit as a party on the record, has a legal interest in the subject. — To make interest for a person, to secure influence on his behalf.

I made interest with Mr. Blogg the beadle to have him as a Minder. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, i. 16.

Vested in interest, conferred in title or ownership, although it may be as yet expectant, and not with a present right of possession. See vested. — Vested interest, an interest completely assured, and constituting such a right as a change in the law generally ought not to take away except for public use and upon compensation.

interest (in′tėr-est), v. t. [A var. of earlier interess, v., prob. through confusion of interessed = interest, pret. and pp. of the verb, with interest, n.: see interess.] 1†. To concern; affect; be of advantage or importance to.

After his returne for England, he endevoured by his best abilities to interest his Countrey and state in those faire Regions. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 266.

Or rather, gracious sir,
Create me to this glory, since my cause
Doth interest this fair quarrel. Ford.

2. To engage the attention of; excite concern in; stimulate to feeling or action in regard to something.

The multitude is more easily interested for the most unmeaning badge, or the most insignificant name, than for the most important principle. Macaulay, Milton.

To interest the reader in a contest against heresy in the East, and then transport him to a battle against Erastianism in the West. J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 8.

We are interested in a thing when we are affected by it either pleasurably or painfully.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 83.

3. To cause to take a personal concern or share; induce to participate: as, to interest a person in an enterprise. — 4†. To place or station.

Interested him among the gods. Chapman.

interested (in′tėr-es-ted), p. a. 1. Concerned in a cause or in consequences; hence, biased by personal considerations; concerned chiefly for one's private advantage; also, springing from or influenced by self-interest or selfishness: as, an interested witness.

His familiars were his entire friends, and could have no interested views in courting his acquaintance.
Steele, Spectator, No. 497.

Ill successes did not discourage that ambitious and interested people. Arbuthnot, Anc. Coins.

We have no interested motive for this undertaking, being a society of gentlemen of distinction.
Goldsmith, Magazine in Miniature.

2. Having an interest or share; having money involved: as, one interested in the funds.

interestedly (in′tėr-es-ted-li), adv. In an interested manner; with interest.

interestedness (in′tėr-es-ted-nes), n. The state of being interested, or of having an interest in a question or an event; hence, regard for one's own private views or profit.

I might give them what degree of credit I pleased, and take them with abatement for Mr. Solmes's interestedness, if I thought fit. Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, II. 243.

interesting (in′tėr-es-ting), p. a. Exciting or adapted to excite interest; engaging the attention or curiosity: as, an interesting story.

Our pleasures and pains make up the interesting side of our experience. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 450.

interestingly (in′tėr-es-ting-li), adv. In an interesting manner.

interestingness (in′tėr-es-ting-nes), n. The quality of being interesting.

No special beauty or interestingness of the locality can directly cause the delight.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 54.

interface (in′tėr-fās), n. [< inter- + face.] A plane surface regarded as the common boundary of two bodies.

The interface of the two liquids in the axial line.
Encyc. Brit., XV. 264.

interfacial (in-tėr-fā′shial), a. [< L. inter, between, + facies, face: see facial, and cf. interface.] 1. In geom., included between two faces: thus, an interfacial angle is formed by the meeting of two planes. — 2. Pertaining to an interface.

interfascicular (in″tėr-fa-sik′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + fascicle + -ar[3].] 1. In anat., situated or occurring between fascicles: as, interfascicular veins; interfascicular spaces. — 2. In bot., lying between the fascicles or fibrovascular bundles. Interfascicular cambium is that part of the cambium zone which lies between the fibrovascular bundles in the stems of gymnosperms and dicotyledons. Bastin.

interfection† (in-tėr-fek′shon), n. [< L. interfectio(n-), a killing, < interficere, pp. interfectus, kill, destroy, interrupt, lit. put between, < inter, between, + facere, do: see fact.] Killing; murder. Bailey.

interfemoral (in-tėr-fem′ō-ral), a. [< L. inter, between, + femur, pl. femora, thigh: see femoral.] Situated between the thighs; connecting the hind limbs: as, the interfemoral membrane of a bat.

★interfere (in-tėr-fēr′), v. i.; pret. and pp. interfered, ppr. interfering. [Formerly also enterfere; < ME. enterferen, < OF. entreferir, exchange blows, F. interférer, interfere, < ML. interferire*, strike between, < L. inter, between, + ferire, strike.] 1. To take a part in the affairs of others; especially, to intermeddle; act in such a way as to check or hamper the action of other persons or things.

So cautious were our ancestors in conversation, as never to interfere with party disputes in the state. Swift.

Our war no interfering kings demands,
Nor shall be trusted to Barbarian hands.
Rowe, tr. of Lucan's Pharsalia, viii.

A Sheik Arab, who lives here [Suez], has really all the power, whenever he pleases to interfere.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 133.

2. To clash; come in collision; be in opposition: as, the claims of two nations may interfere; the two things interfere with each other.

Nature is ever interfering with Art. Emerson, Art.

3. In farriery, to strike one hoof or the shoe of one hoof against the fetlock of the opposite leg (of the same pair): said of a horse.—4. In physics, to act reciprocally upon one another so as to modify the effect of each, by augmenting, diminishing, or nullifying it: said of waves of light, heat, sound, water, etc. See interference, 5.

When two similar and equal series of waves arrive at a common point, they interfere, as it is called, with one another, so that the actual disturbance of the medium at any instant is the resultant of the disturbances which it would have suffered at that instant from the two series separately. P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XIV. 606.

★=Syn. 1. Intermeddle, Intervene, etc. See interpose.

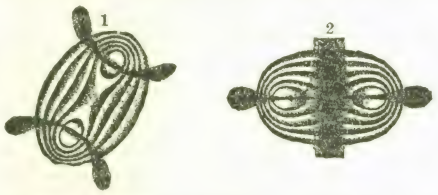
interference (in-tėr-fēr′ens), n. [= F. interférence = Pg. interferencia = It. interferenza; as interfere + -ence.] 1. The act of interfering; interposition; especially, intermeddling.

This circumstance, which is urged against the bill, becomes an additional motive for our interference.
Burke, On Fox's East India Bill.



A part of the European powers have attempted to establish a right of interference to put down revolutionary principles in that continent.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 45.

2. A clashing or collision; the act of coming into violent contact.—3. In farriery, a striking of one foot against the one next to it, as one hind foot against the other.—4. In Amer. patent law, the conflict between two patents or applications for patent which claim in whole or in part the same invention. Hence, to go into interference (of an application for a patent) is to be reserved for the purpose of litigating the question in the patent office before the application shall be granted.

5. In physics, the mutual action of waves of any kind (whether those in water, or sound-, heat-, or light-waves) upon one another, by which, under certain conditions, the vibrations and their effects are increased, diminished, or neutralized. The term was first employed by Dr. Young to express certain phenomena which result from the mutual action of the rays of light on one another. In general, if two systems of waves come together, they interfere—that is, they unite to reinforce or destroy one another, the actual disturbance of the medium at any instant being the resultant of the two disturbances considered separately. For example, if the two systems are of equal intensity and in the same phase, the result will be a doubled disturbance; if, however, they are half a wave-length apart, the result will be rest. Thus, two sounds of the same pitch and intensity produce a note of double the intensity when they meet in the same phase, the point of condensation of one corresponding to that of the other; when, on the other hand, the point of maximum condensation of the first corresponds to that of rarefaction of the other, they destroy each other. Again, if two notes differing but slightly in pitch (say one vibration per second) are sounded together, there will be one instant in each second when the two wave-systems will nearly coincide in phase, and one when they will be half a wave-length apart; the result is that they alternately strengthen and weaken each other at these moments, and the ear perceives the pulsations in the note called beats (see beat[1], 7). The same principles hold true in the case of light, as was first shown by Young. The interference of light-waves is illustrated by the phenomena of diffraction (see diffraction): thus, a diffraction grating gives with monochromatic light a series of light and dark bands (interference fringes), corresponding respectively to the points of maximum and minimum motion resulting from the mutual action of the two wave-systems; for the former they are in the same phase, for the latter they differ in phase by half a wave-length. If white light is employed, a series of spectra (interference spectra) of different orders is obtained. Newton's rings, obtained, for example, when ordinary light is reflected from a convex lens of long focus pressed upon a plate of glass, are circular interference spectra. The colors of thin films, as of oil on water or of a soap-bubble, are due to interference, as is also the iridescence of some antique glass or of mother-of-pearl. Still again, the beautiful figures produced when a section of a uniaxial crystal cut normal to the axis, or of a biaxial crystal cut normal to the bisectrix, is viewed in converging polarized light are similar phenomena, and are hence called interference figures. Electric waves, produced, for example, by induction discharges between two metal surfaces and propagated through space, also exhibit under proper conditions interference phenomena. These waves may have a length of several feet. See wave. = Syn. 1. Mediation, Intervention, etc. See interposition.

Interference Figure of a Uniaxial Crystal.

Interference Figures of a Biaxial Crystal: (1) when the axial plane (passing through the two ovals) is inclined 45° to the vibration-planes of the polarizer and analyzer, and (2) when it is respectively parallel and perpendicular to them.

interferer (in-tėr-fēr′ėr), n. One who or that which interferes.

interferingly (in-tėr-fēr′ing-li), adv. In an interfering manner; by interference; by intermeddling.

interfibrillar (in″tėr-fī-bril′ăr), a. [= F. interfibrillaire; as inter- + fibrilla + -ar[3].] Situated between fibrils.

Tumours in which we have . . . a swollen and semi-liquid condition of the interfibrillar substance.
Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), I. § 143.

interfibrillary (in-tėr-fī′bri-lą-ri), a. Same as interfibrillar.

interfibrous (in-tėr-fī′brus), a. [< inter- + fiber[1] + -ous.] Situated between fibers.

Pressing the combined lime and interfibrous matter out of the tissue. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 384.

★interfilamentar (in-tėr-fil-ą-men′tăr), a. [< inter- + filament + -ar[3].] Situated between filaments. E. R. Lankester, Encyc. Brit., XVI. 689.

interfillet (in-tėr-fil′et), v. t. [< inter- + fillet.] To bind in and over; weave. [Rare.]

There is an actual predominance of the practical or ethical aim, not only as the immediate motive and ultimate goal of his endeavor, but constantly interfilleted and interwoven with the theoretical tissue.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 387.

interflow (in-tėr-flō′), v. i. [< inter- + flow[1].] To flow between.

What way the current cold
Of Northern Ocean with strong tides doth interflow and swell. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 12.

interfluent (in-tėr′flō̤-ent), a. [< L. interfluen(t-)s, ppr. of interfluere, flow between, < inter, between, + fluere, flow: see fluent.] 1. Flowing between; flowing back and forth.

The agitation of some interfluent subtile matter.
Boyle, Works, II. 503.

2. Flowing together; harmoniously blending: of sounds, forms, etc.

As written by Chaucer, it was picturesque, full of music and color—the interfluent, luxurious pentameter couplet, revived by Hunt and Keats.
Stedman, The Century, XXIX. 508.

interfluous (in-tėr′flō̤-us), a. [< L. interfluus, flowing between, < interfluere, flow between: see interfluent.] Same as interfluent.

Hated to hear, under the stars or moon,
One nightingale in an interfluous wood
Satiate the hungry dark with melody.
Shelley, The Woodman and the Nightingale.

interfold (in-tėr-fōld′), v. t. [< inter- + fold[1].] To fold one into the other; fold together.

Life's most beautiful Fortune
Kneels before the Eternal's throne; and, with hands interfolded, Praises thankful and moved the only Giver of blessings.
Longfellow, tr. of Tegnér's Children of the Lord's Supper.

interfoliaceous (in-tėr-fō-li-ā′shius), a [< L. inter, between, + folium, leaf: see foliaceous.] In bot., situated between opposite leaves: as, interfoliaceous stipules in the Rubiaceæ.

interfoliate (in-tėr-fō′li-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. interfoliated, ppr. interfoliating. [< L. inter, between, + folium, leaf: see foliate.] To interleave.

So much [improvement of a book] as I conceive is necessary, I will take care to send you with your interfoliated copy. Evelyn, To Mr. Place, Aug. 17, 1696.

Almost immediately upon receiving information that a new work is to be produced, he [the stage-manager] interfoliates the piano score with blank leaves, upon which he notes what is to occur simultaneously with the playing of certain bars of music on the page opposite.
Scribner's Mag., IV. 443.

interfretted (in-tėr-fret′ed), a. [< inter- + fret[2] + -ed[2].] In her., same as interlaced, but applied especially to objects which are closed so that the interlacing cannot be separated: as, two keys interfretted by their bows.

interfriction (in-tėr-frik′shon), n. [< inter- + friction.] A rubbing together; mutual friction. [Rare.]

Kindling a fire by interfriction of dry sticks.
De Quincey, Spanish Nun, § 16.

interfrontal (in-tėr-fron′tal), a. [= F. interfrontal; as inter- + frontal.] Situated between the right and left frontal bones, or the right and left halves of the frontal bone: as, an interfrontal suture.

interfulgent† (in-tėr-ful′jent), a. [< L. interfulgen(t-)s, ppr. of interfulgere, shine between, < inter, between, + fulgere, shine: see fulgent.] Shining between. Bailey.

interfuse (in-tėr-fūz′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interfused, ppr. interfusing. [< L. interfusus, pp. of (LL.) interfundere, pour between, < inter, between, + fundere, pour: see found[3], fuse[1].] 1. To pour or spread between or among; diffuse throughout; permeate or cause to permeate.

The kingdom of China is in all parts thereof interfused with commodious riuers. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. ii. 89.

The ambient air, wide interfused,
Embracing round this florid earth.
Milton, P. L., vii. 89.

Ice upon ice, the well-adjusted parts
Were soon conjoin'd, nor other cement ask'd
Than water interfus'd to make them one.
Cowper, Task, v. 148.

And through chaos, doubt, and strife, Interfuse Thy calm of life
Whittier, Andrew Rykman's Prayer.

2. To fuse together or interblend; associate; make interdependent.

A people amongst whom religion and law were almost identical, and in whose character both were so thoroughly interfused. Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, ii.

interfusion (in-tėr-fū′zhon), n. [< LL. interfusio(n-), < interfundere, pp. interfusus, pour between: see interfuse.] The act of pouring or spreading between; an intimate intermingling.

I foresaw that I should find him a true American, full of that perplexing interfusion of refinement and crudity which marks the American mind.
H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 24.

interganglionic (in-tėr-gang-gli-on′ik), a. [< inter- + ganglion + -ic.] Situated between ganglia; connecting ganglia: specifically applied to the commissures or connecting nervous cords of ganglia, especially of the sympathetic system.

intergatory† (in-tėr′gą-tō-ri), n. A contraction of interrogatory.

Let us go in;
And charge us there upon inter'gatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1, 99.

I have an entrapping question or two more
To put unto them, a cross intergatory.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, v. 2.

intergenital (in-tėr-jen′i-tąl), a. [< inter- + genital.] Situated between the genitals: applied to the calcareous plates of echinoderms which are attached to and come more or less between those which bear the orifices of the genital organs.

intergern† (in-tėr-gėrn′), v. i. [< inter- + gern.] To exchange grins or snarls. Davies.

The angry beast [a badger] to his best chamber flies,
And (angled there) sits grimly inter-gerning.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Decay.

interglacial (in-tėr-glā′shiąl), a. [< inter- + glacial.] In geol., formed or occurring between two periods of glacial action: as, interglacial beds; an interglacial period.

interglandular (in-tėr-glan′dū-lăr), a. [< inter- + glandular.] Situated between glands.

interglobular (in-tėr-glob′ū-lăr), a. [< inter- + globular.] Situated between globules.

Interglobular spaces are represented as black marks.
Micros. Science, XXIX. i. 16.

intergradation (in″tėr-grā-dā′shon), n. [< intergrade + -ation.] Intermediate gradation.

intergrade (in-tėr-grād′), v. i.; pret. and pp. intergraded, ppr. intergrading. [< inter- + grade[1], v.] To become alike gradually, or approach in character by degrees, as one animal or plant compared with another; be graduated with diminishing degrees of difference, or graded into one another, as two or more species. See the extract.

I compromised the matter by reducing to the rank of varieties the nominal species that were known or believed to intergrade. . . . We treat as "specific" any form, however little different from the next, that we do not know or believe to intergrade. Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 79.

intergrade (in'tėr-grād), n. [< inter- + grade[1], n.] An intermediate grade.

That nephele, north of the belt, breeds true, is certain, because the intergrades and alope are not found here.
Nature, XXXIX. 194.

★ intergrowth (in'tėr-grōth), n. [< inter- + growth.] A growing together; a growth between.

There are not wanting signs of an intergrowth of the two minerals. Geol. Jour., XLIV. 449.

intergyral (in-tėr-jī'rạl), a. [< inter- + gyrus + -al.] Situated between gyri of the brain.

★ interhemal, interhæmal (in-tėr-hē'mal), a. and n. [< inter- + hemal.] I. a. Situated between hemal spines.—Interhemal bone, interhemal spine, in ichth., one of the dermal bones or spines which support the rays of the median or unpaired fins of fishes on the hemal or lower side of the body: so called from their situation deep in the flesh between hemal spines. See interneural.

II. n. An interhemal bone.

A series of interhæmals. Encyc. Brit., XII. 641.

interhemicerebral (in-tėr-hem-i-ser'ē-bral), a. [< inter- + hemicerebrum.] Situated between the hemispheres of the brain.

interhyal (in-tėr-hī'al), a. and n. [< inter- + hy(oid) + -al.] I. a. Situated between or among parts of the hyoid arch of a fish, in relation with the hyomandibular and symplectic bones.

The lower part of the [hyoid] arch retains its connection with the upper part, in fishes, by means of an interhyal piece. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 21.

II. n. An intermediate osseous or cartilaginous element of the hyoid arch of a fish, connecting its upper and lower parts, in relation with the hyomandibular and symplectic bones; an element connecting the hyomandibular with the branchiostegal arch.

interim (in'tėr-im), adv. [L., in the mean while, meantime, < inter, between, + im*, equiv. to eum, acc. of is, that: see he[1].] In the mean while; meantime.

I hope some gentleman will soon be appointed in my room here who is better able to serve the publick than I am. Interim, I am, gentlemen, your most obedient servant.
Benedict Arnold, Letter, May 23, 1775 (Amer. Archives).

★ interim (in'tėr-im), n. and a. [< interim, adv.] I. n. 1. The mean time; time intervening.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1, 64.

2. A provisional arrangement for the settlement of religious differences between Protestants and Roman Catholics in Germany during the Reformation epoch, pending a definite settlement by a church council. There were three interims: the Ratisbon Interim, promulgated by the emperor Charles V., July 29th, 1541, but ineffective; the Augsburg Interim, proclaimed also by Charles V., May 15th, 1548, but not carried out by many Protestants; and the Leipsic Interim, carried through the diet of Saxony December 22d, 1548, by the efforts of the elector Maurice, and enlarged and published as the Greater Interim in March, 1549; it met with strenuous opposition. Religious toleration was secured for the Lutherans by the peace of Passau, 1552.

II. a. Belonging to or connected with an intervening period of time; temporary: as, an interim order.

The first and second interim reports of the Royal Commission appointed to enquire into the Depression of Trade.
Quarterly Rev., CLXIII. 151.

Interim decree, in Scots law, a decree disposing of part of a cause, but leaving the remainder unexhausted.—Interim factor, a receiver or curator appointed for temporary service. In Scots law it was formerly usual for creditors of a bankrupt to appoint a manager, called an interim factor, to preserve the estate until a trustee should be chosen. This practice was superseded by that of the court appointing a judicial factor.

interimist (in'tėr-im-ist), n. [< interim + -ist.] Eccles., a German Protestant who accepted one of the interims.

interimistic (in″tėr-i-mis'tik), a. [< interimist + -ic.] Pertaining to the decree of Charles V. in 1548 at Augsburg, known as the Interim, or to the subsequent agreement of Melanchthon and others partially in accord with this.

The Emperor had strongly urged upon the ambassadors the settling of a form of religion agreeable to the Interimistic doctrine.
Byrchman, to Bullinger, Dec., 1549, in R. W. Dixon, Hist. [Church of Eng., III. 98, note.

interinhibitive (in″tėr-in-hib'i-tiv), a. [< inter- + inhibitive.] Mutually inhibitive.

An impairment of the interinhibitive functions.
Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 267.

interior (in-tē'ri-ọr), a. and n. [Early mod. E. interiour, < OF. interior, interieur, F. intérieur = Pr. Sp. Pg. interior = It. interiore, < L. interior, inner, compar. of interus*, < inter, within, between: see inter[2].] I. a. 1. Being within; inside of anything that limits, incloses, or conceals; internal; further toward a center: opposed to exterior or superficial: as, the interior parts of a house or of the earth.

Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 3, 65.

This fall of the monarchy was far from being preceded by any exteriour symptoms of decline. . . . The interiour were not visible to every eye. Burke, A Regicide Peace, i.

2. Inland; remote from the limits, frontier, or shore: as, the interior parts of a country; an interior town.—3. Of or pertaining to that which is within; inside: as, an interior view.

O that you could . . . make but an interior survey of your good selves! Shak., Cor., ii. 1, 43.

4. Pertaining to the immediate contents of consciousness; relating to that which one can perceive within one's self; inward; inner; inmost; mental.

The Earle of Northumberlande . . . began secretely to communicate his interior imaginacions and priuie thoughtes with Richard Scrop, Archebishop of Yorke.
Hall, Hen. IV., an. 6.

Rather desiryng soner to die then lenger to liue, and perauenture for this cause, that her interiour iye sawe priuily, and gaue to her a secrete monicion of the great calamities and aduersities which then did hang ouer her hed. Hall, Edw. IV., an. 10.

Sense, inmost, interior, internal. This was introduced, as a convertible term with consciousness in general, by the philosophers of the Cartesian school, and thus came to be frequently applied to denote the source, complement, or revelation of immediate truths. It is however not only in itself vague, but is liable to be confounded with internal sense in other very different significations. We need not therefore regret that in this relation it has not (though Hutcheson set an example) been naturalized in British Philosophy. Sir W. Hamilton.

5. In entom., inner; lying next to the body or the median line.—Interior angle. See angle[3], 1.—Interior epicycloid, in geom., a hypocycloid.—Interior palpi, in entom., the labial palpi.—Interior planets, in astron., the planets that are between the earth's orbit and the sun.—Interior screw, a screw cut on the interior surface of anything hollow, as a nut or a tap-hole.—Interior slope, in fort., the slope from the superior slope to the tread of the banquette. See cut under parapet. = Syn. Inward, Internal, etc. See inner.

II. n. 1. The internal part; the inside.

The fool multitude, that choose by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach,
Which pries not to th' interior.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 9, 28.

2. In art: (a) An inside part of a building, considered as a whole from the point of view of artistic design or general effect, convenience, etc.

There is a grandeur and a simplicity in the proportions of this great temple [the Pantheon] that render it still one of the very finest and most sublime interiors in the world.
J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 311.

(b) A picture of such an inclosed space, or of any subject considered as within such an inclosure, or under the conditions of lighting, etc., obtaining therein.—3. That part of a country or state which is at a considerable distance from its frontiers.

Her frontier was terrible, her interiour feeble.
Burke, A Regicide Peace, ii.

In some regions . . . rivers afford, if not the only means of access to the interior, still by far the easiest means.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 112.

4. The internal or domestic affairs of a country as distinguished from its external or foreign affairs.—Department of the Interior. See department.

interiority (in-tē-ri-or'i-ti), n. [= F. intériorité = Sp. interioridad = It. interiorità, < ML. interiorita(t-)s, < L. interior, being within: see interior.] The quality of being interior; inwardness. [Rare.]

He had been a breaker of the law in its essential spirit, in its interiority, all the way through.
H. W. Beecher, Plymouth Pulpit, March 19, 1884, p. 496.

interiorly (in-tē'ri-ọr-li), adv. In the interior part; internally; inwardly.

The divine nature sustains and interiourly nourisheth all things. Donne, Hist. Septuagint, p. 205.

interj. An abbreviation of interjection.

interjacence (in-tėr-jā'sẹns), n. [< interjacen(t) + -ce.] A lying or being between.

interjacency (in-tėr-jā'sẹn-si), n. 1. Same as interjacence.

England and Scotland [are] . . . divided only by the interjacency of the Tweed and some desert ground.
Sir M. Hale.

2. That which is interposed or lies between. [Rare.]

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient; which windes, stormes, shores, . . . and every interjacency irregulates. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vii. 17.

interjacent (in-tėr-jā'sẹnt), a. [= Pg. interjacente; < L. inter, between, + jacen(t-)s, ppr. of jacere, lie: see jacent. Cf. adjacent, etc.] Lying or being between; intervening: as, interjacent isles.

Observations made at the feet, tops, and interjacent parts of high mountains. Boyle, Works, I. 89.

The Saxon forces were employed in subduing the midland parts of Britain, interjacent between their two first established colonies. Sir W. Temple, Hist. England, Int.

interjaculate (in-tėr-jak'ū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. interjaculated, ppr. interjaculating. [< inter- + jaculate.] To ejaculate in the midst of conversation; interject (a remark).

"O Dieu! que n'ai-je pu le voir?" interjaculates Madame Moiselle. Thackeray, Newcomes, vii.

interjangle (in-tėr-jang'gl), v. i.; pret. and pp. interjangled, ppr. interjangling. [< inter- + jangle.] To make a dissonant, harsh noise one with another.

The divers disagreeing cords Of interjangling ignorance. Daniel, Musophilus.

interject (in-tėr-jekt'), v. [< L. interjectus, pp. of interjacere, interjicere, throw between, put between, < inter, between, + jacĕre, throw: see jet[1]. Cf. abject, adject, conject, deject, eject, inject, etc.] I. trans. To throw in between other things; insert; interpolate.

But Athryllatus, the physician, a Thasian born, interjected some stay of farther searching into this cause.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 564.

II. intrans. To come between; interpose. [Rare.]

The confluence of soldiers, interjecting, rescued him.
Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III., p. 61.

interjection (in-tėr-jek'shọn), n. [= F. interjectio(n-) = Pr. interjectio = Sp. interjección = Pg. interjeição = It. interjezione, < L. interjectio(n-), a throwing or placing between, in gram. an interjection, in rhet. a parenthesis, < interjacere, interjicere, throw between: see interject.] 1. The act of throwing between; an interjecting.—2. The act of ejaculating, exclaiming, or forcibly uttering.

Laughing causeth a continual expulsion of the breath, with the loud noise which maketh the interjection of laughing. Bacon.

3. In gram., an interjected or exclamatory word; a word thrown in between other words or expressions, but having no grammatical relation to them, or used independently, to indicate some access of emotion or passion, and commonly emphasized to the eye in writing by a mark of exclamation, as oh! ah! alas! hurrah! Interjections are regarded as constituting a part of speech by themselves, although they are properly no "part of speech," but holophrastic utterances, originally more or less instinctive, though coming, like the rest of speech, to be used conventionally. Some interjections, however, are transformations or abbreviations of ordinary words, as alas, zounds, 'sdeath, gad. Abbreviated interj.

Dij vestram fidem, O good Lord, it standeth always in the place of an interjection of meruayling, and not of callyng on. Udall, Flowers (trans.), fol. 98.

As I am cholerick, I forbear not only swearing, but all interjections of fretting, as pugh! pish! and the like.
Tatler, No. 1.

4. A manner or means of expressing emotion with the effect of an interjection. [Rare.]

"He rent his garments" (which was the interjection of the country, and custom of the nation).
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 293.

interjectional (in-tėr-jek'shọn-al), a. [< interjection + -al.] 1. Thrown in between other words or expressions; interjected: as, an interjectional remark.

Another explanation understands this clause as an interjectional suggestion of the evangelist himself. . . . But why should both evangelists make the same interjectional suggestion at the same place?
J. A. Alexander, On Mark xiii. 14.

2. Partaking of the character of an interjection; consisting in or characterized by exclamations.

Demosthenes, . . . in an interjectional form, . . . invokes the vengeance of the gods on Philip of Macedon.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xiii.

The staccato sharpness of interjectional croaks and brittle calls from the river edge and swamp.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 48.

interjectionally (in-tėr-jek'shọn-al-i), adv. In an interjectional manner; by way of interjection.

She had said interjectionally to her sister, "It would be a mercy, Fanny, if that girl were well married!"
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, ix.

interjectionary (in-tėr-jek'shọn-ā-ri), a. [< interjection + -ary.] Same as interjectional.

interjectural (in-tėr-jek'tū-ral), a. [< interjecture* (< L. interjectura, an insertion, < interjacere, interjicere, throw between: see interject) + -al.] Same as interjectional. [Rare.]

He started back two or three paces, rapt out a dozen interjectural oaths, and asked what the devil had brought you here. Sheridan, The Rivals, ii. 1.

interjoin (in-tėr-join'), v. t. [< OF. entrejoindre, < L. interjungere, join together, < inter, between, + jungere, join: see join. Cf. interjunction.] To join one with another; combine.

So, fellest foes . . . shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues. Shak., Cor., iv. 4, 22.

interjoist (in'tėr-joist), n. [< inter- + joist.] In building, the space or interval between two joists.

interjunction (in-tėr-jungk'shọn), n. [< inter- + junction. Cf. interjoin.] A mutual joining. Smart.

interknit (in-tėr-nit'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interknitted or interknit, ppr. interknitting. [< inter- + knit.] To knit together. [Rare.]

interknot (in-tėr-not'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interknotted, ppr. interknotting. [< inter- + knot[1].] To knot together mutually and intricately. [Rare.]

Millennial oaks interknotted their python roots below its surface, and vouchsafed protection to many a frailer growth of shrub or tree. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 743.

interknow† (in-tėr-nō'), v. t. [< inter- + know[1].] Same as enter-know.

How familiarly do these prophets interknow one another! Bp. Hall, Rapture of Elijah.

interknowledge† (in-tėr-nol'ej), n. [< inter- + knowledge.] Reciprocal knowledge.

See them in mutuall inter-knowledge, enjoying each other's blessednesse. Bp. Hall.

interlace (in-tėr-lās'), v.; pret. and pp. interlaced, ppr. interlacing. [Formerly also enterlace; < ME. entrelacen, < OF. entrelacier, entrelacer, entrelasser, interlace, < entre-, between, + lacier, lacer, tie, entangle, lace: see lace, v.] I. trans. To cross one with another; interweave: as, to interlace wires; hence, to mingle; blend. In the mathematical theory of knots, to interlace three or more closed bands is to put them together so that no two are linked together, and yet so that they cannot be separated without a breach of continuity.

St. Paul, when he boasts of himself, doth oft interlace "I speak like a fool." Bacon, Praise (ed. 1887).

Very rich flesh coloured marble interlaced with veynes of white. Coryat, Crudities, I. 52.

They acknowledged what services he had done for the commonwealth, yet interlacing some errors, wherewith they seemed to reproach him. Hayward.

The innermost layer . . . is composed wholly of fine interlaced fibers of the optic nerve. Le Conte, Sight, p. 55.

II. intrans. To cross one another as if woven together, as interlacing branches; intertwine; blend intricately.

Her bashful shamefastnesse ywrought
A great increase in her faire blushing face,
As roses did with lilies interlace.
Spenser, F. Q., V. iii. 23.

Interlacing arches, in arch., an arcature of which the arches intersect as in the figure. They are frequent in medieval architecture of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries.

Interlacing Arches, Norwich Cathedral, England.

interlaced (in-tėr-lāst'), p. a. In her., represented as interwoven: said of sickles, crescents, and the like, two or three in number. Compare interfretted.

Three Crescents Interlaced.

interlacement (in-tėr-lās'-mẹnt), n. [< OF. entrelacement, entrelassement, an interlacing, < entrelacer, interlace: see interlace and -ment.] An interlacing; interweaving; intertwining. Imp. Dict.

interlacing (in-tėr-lā'sing), n. [Verbal n. of interlace, v.] The act of interweaving or crossing threads or lines; the threads or lines so interwoven or crossed.—Animal interlacings, a name given to the decoration of early Northern and especially Irish manuscripts, and other works of art, distinguished by a free employment of interwoven bands which are finished with heads, paws, etc., of animals.

interlamellar (in-tėr-lam'e-lär), a. [< inter- + lamella + -ar[3].] Between lamellæ: as, the interlamellar spaces of the cornea.

interlaminar (in-tėr-lam'i-när), a. [< inter- + laminar.] Same as interlaminated.

interlaminated (in-tėr-lam'i-nā-ted), a. [< inter- + laminated.] Placed between laminæ or plates; inclosed by laminæ.

interlamination (in-tėr-lam-i-nā'shọn), n. [< inter- + lamination.] The state of being interlaminated.

interlap (in-tėr-lap'), v. i.; pret. and pp. interlapped, ppr. interlapping. [< inter- + lap[2].] To fold or infold mutually; lap one with another.

Thus, in case of any serious accident, the whole of the mains can, by one turn of a screw, be disconnected from the dynamos, the interlapping pieces all dropping out. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV. 281.

interlapse (in'tėr-laps), n. [< inter- + lapse.] The lapse or flow of time between two events; interval. [Rare.]

These dregs are calcined into such salts, which, after a short interlapse of time, produce coughs. Harvey.

interlard (in-tėr-lärd'), v. t. [< OF. entrelarder, mix in between, mingle (different things, as fat and lean) together, lit. put fat in between (the lean), < entre, between, + lard, fat: see lard, n. and v.] 1. To mix, as fat with lean; hence, to insert between or among other things; sandwich.

Your fourth [verse] of one bissillable, and two monosillables interlarded.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 103.

2. To mix; diversify by mixture or by interjection: as, to interlard discourse with oaths.

Those other Epistles lesse question'd are yet so interlarded with Corruptions as may justly indue us with a wholsome suspition of the rest.
Milton, Prelatical Episcopacy.

Ignorant and illogical persons are naturally very prone to interlard their discourse with these fragmentary expressions [expletives].
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xiii.

=Syn. 2. To intersperse, intermix.

interlardment (in-tėr-lärd'mẹnt), n. [< OF. entrelardement, an interlarding, < entrelarder, interlard: see interlard and -ment.] The act of interlarding, or the state of being interlarded; intermixture.

I know thou cheerest the hearts of all thy acquaintance with such detached parts of mine [letters] as tend not to dishonour characters or reveal names; and this gives me an appetite to oblige thee by interlardment.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, III. 89.

interlay† (in-tėr-lā'), v. t. [< inter- + lay[1].] To lay or place among or between. Daniel, Civil Wars, iv.

interleaf (in'tėr-lēf), n.; pl. interleaves (-lēvz). [< inter- + leaf.] One of a number of (blank) leaves inserted between the leaves of a book for notes and additions.

interleague (in-tėr-lēg'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interleagued, ppr. interleaguing. [< inter- + league[1].] To combine in a league; engage in joint action.

Their strength the Fire, the Water gave
In interleagued endeavor.
Bulwer, Fridolin (tr. from Schiller).

interleave (in-tėr-lēv'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interleaved, ppr. interleaving. [< inter- + leaf (leave[3]).] 1. To insert a leaf or leaves in: as, to interleave a book with blank leaves or with illustrations.

If he may be said to have kept a commonplace, it was nothing more than a small interleaved pocket-almanack, of about three inches square.
Bp. Hurd (Warburton's Works, I. 87).

An interleaved copy of Bailey's Dictionary, in folio, he [Johnson] made the repository of the several articles.
Sir J. Hawkins.

2. To insert between leaves: as, to interleave engravings, or blank leaves for notes or additions, in a book.

interlibel (in-tėr-lī'bel), v. t.; pret. and pp. interlibeled, interlibelled, ppr. interlibeling, interlibelling. [< inter- + libel.] To libel mutually or reciprocally. Bacon.

interline[1] (in-tėr-līn'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interlined, ppr. interlining. [< OF. entreligner, < ML. interlineare, write between lines, < L. inter, between, + linea, line: see line[2].] 1. To insert between lines: as, to interline corrections in a writing.—2. To write or print between the lines of, as of something already written or printed.

Then the accuser will be ready to interline the schedules of thy debts, thy sins, and insert false debts.
Donne, Sermons, ix.

The minute they had signed was in some places dashed and interlined. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1530.

3. To write or print in alternate lines: as, to interline Greek with Latin.

When, by . . . interlining Latin with English one with another, he has got a moderate knowledge of the Latin tongue, he may then be advanced.
Locke, Education, § 168.

interline[1] (in'tėr-līn), n. [< OF. entreligne; as inter- + line[2], n. Cf. interline[1], v.] A line between other lines.

There is a network of wrinkles at the temple, and lines and interlines about the brow and side of the nose.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XL. 11.

interline[2] (in-tėr-līn'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interlined, ppr. interlining. [< inter- + line[3], v.] To insert, as a thickness of fabric or material, between the lining and the outer surface of (a garment): as, a cloak lined with silk, and interlined with flannel.

interlineal (in-tėr-lin'ē-al), a. [= Sp. Pg. interlineal; as inter- + line[2] + -al. Cf. lineal.] Between lines; interlinear. Imp. Dict.

interlinear (in-tėr-lin'ē-ạr), a. [= F. interlinéaire = Sp. interlinear = It. interlineare, < ML. interlinearis, being between lines, < L. inter, between, + linea, line: see line[2]. Cf. interline[1], v.] 1. Situated between the lines; inserted between lines; hence, intermediate: as, interlinear corrections. Also interlineary.

He sometimes saved his cash
By interlinear days of frugal hash.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 110.

2. Having interpolated lines; interlined: as, an interlinear translation (one in which a line of the translated text is followed by a corresponding line of the translation).—Interlinear system, the Hamiltonian system of teaching languages, by using texts with interlined translations.

interlinearily (in-tėr-lin'ē-ā-ri-li), adv. Same as interlinearly. Bp. Hall, Great Impostor.

interlinearly (in-tėr-lin'ē-ạr-li), adv. In an interlinear manner; by interlineation.

interlineary (in-tėr-lin'ē-ā-ri), a. and n. [< ML. interlinearis: see interlinear.] I. a. Same as interlinear.

Devotion is no marginal note, no interlineary gloss, no parenthesis that may be left out; it is no occasional thing, no conditional thing. Donne, Sermons, xxiii.

II. n.; pl. interlinearies (-riz). A book having interlined matter. [Rare.]

The infinit helps of interlinearies, breviaries, synopses, and other loitering gear. Milton, Areopagitica, p. 41.

interlineation (in-tėr-lin-ē-ā'shọn), n. [< ML. interlineatio(n-)*, < interlineare, interline: see interline[1].] The act of interlining; alteration or correction, as of written or printed matter, by interlinear insertion; also, that which is interlined; specifically, in law, an alteration made in a written instrument by inserting any matter after it is engrossed.

Of these lines, and of the whole first book, I am told that there was yet a former copy, more varied, and more deformed with interlineations. Johnson, Pope.

Gerald took a slip of manuscript from his hand. It was written in pencil and showed many corrections and interlineations. The Century, XXXVII. 303.

interlining[1] (in-tėr-lī'ning), n. [Verbal n. of interline[1], v.] Same as interlineation.

We blot out this hand-writing of God's ordinances, or mingle it with false principles and interlinings of our own. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 800.

interlining[2] (in-tėr-lī'ning), n. [Verbal n. of interline[2], v.] A layer of textile fabric or other material placed between the lining and the outer surface, as of a garment.

interlink (in-tėr-lingk'), v. t. [< inter- + link[1], v.] To join together by or as by links; unite by strong ties, as of interest or affection.

These are two chains which are interlinked, which contain and are at the same time contained.
Dryden, tr. of Dufresnoy's Art of Painting, § 71.

Many an incomparable lovely pair
With hand in hand were interlinked seen,
Making fair honour to their sovereign queen.
Sir J. Davies, Dancing.

interlink (in'tėr-lingk), n. [< inter- + link[1], n.] A link in a chain; hence, an intermediate step in a process of reasoning. Coleridge.

interlobular (in-tėr-lob'ū-lär), a. [< inter- + lobule + -ar[3].] Situated between or among lobules: specifically said of structures in the liver, and correlated with intralobular.—Interlobular veins, branches of the portal vein which ramify between the lobules of the liver. Also called peripheral veins, as distinguished from central or intralobular veins.

interlocution† (in″tėr-lō-kū'shọn), n. [< inter- + location.] A placing between; interposition.

Your eclipse of the sun is caused by an interlocation of the moon betwixt the earth and the sun.
Buckingham, Rehearsal.

★interlock (in-tėr-lok'), v. [< inter- + lock[1].] I. intrans. To be locked together; mutually engage, clasp, or cling; embrace: as, the interlocking boughs of a wood.

In the first, the edges of the bones are in close contact, often interlocking by means of projections of one bone fitting into corresponding depressions of the other.
W. H. Flower, Osteology, p. 8.

Interlocking system of signals, in railroading, any system of devices whereby signals denoting the positions of switches at stations, junctions, and bridges are, by means of locking mechanism, connected with and controlled by the switch mechanism, in such manner that any movement of the switches operates the proper signal to indicate to engine-drivers and others the position in which the switch is set. Various systems have been introduced, and they have added greatly to the safety of modern railway traffic.

II. trans. To lock or clasp together; lock or hitch one in another: as, cattle sometimes interlock their horns.

My lady with her fingers interlock'd.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

interlocular (in-tėr-lok'ū-lär), a. [< inter- + loculus + -ar.] Situated between loculi; of or pertaining to an interloculus.

The internal cavity of the corallites is divided into a series of closed longitudinal chambers or interlocular spaces. Geol. Jour., XLIV. 209.

interloculus (in-tėr-lok'ū-lus), n.; pl. interloculi (-lī). [NL., < inter- + loculus.] A space or chamber between any two loculi, as of a coral.

This matrix usually infills the cups and some of the interloculi in the specimens. Geol. Jour., XLV. 130.

interlocution (in″tėr-lō-kū'shon), n. [= F. interlocution = Sp. interlocución = Pg. interlocução = It. interlocuzione, < L. interlocutio(n-), a speaking between, < interloqui, speak between, interrupt, < inter, between, + loqui, speak: see locution.] 1. Interchange of speech; alternation in speaking; dialogue.

It [rehearsal of the Psalms] is done by interlocution, and with a mutuall returne of sentences from side to side.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. § 37.

A good continued speech, without a good speech of interlocution, shewes slownesse. Bacon, Discourse.

The Hearer of prayer invites interlocution with man.
Is. Taylor, Nat. Hist. Enthusiasm (ed. 1853), p. 47.

2. Intermediate discussion or argument; in law, an intermediate act or decree before final decision.

interlocutor (in-tėr-lok'ū-tor), n. [= F. interlocuteur = Sp. Pg. interlocutor = It. interlocutore, < L. as if interlocutor*, < interloqui, speak between: see interlocution.] 1. One who speaks in a dialogue or takes part in a conversation.

The interlocutors in this dialogue are Socrates and one Minos, an Athenian, his acquaintance.
Bentley, On Phalaris.

2. In Scots law, a judgment or sentence pronounced in the course of a suit, but which does not finally determine the cause. The term, however, in Scotch practice, is applied indiscriminately to the judgments or orders of any court of record, whether they exhaust the question at issue or not.

interlocutory (in-tėr-lok'ū-tō-ri), a. [= F. interlocutoire = Sp. Pg. It. interlocutorio, < L. as if interlocutorius*, < interloqui, speak between: see interlocutor.] 1. Consisting in or partaking of the character of dialogue; pertaining to, characterized by, or participating in conversation; conversational: as, interlocutory instruction; an interlocutory encounter.

There are several interlocutory discourses in the Holy Scriptures. Fiddes.

The recitative consequently is of two kinds, narrative and interlocutory. Jago, Adam, an Oratorio.

2. Spoken intermediately; interjected into the main course of speech; specifically, in law, uttered or promulgated incidentally; not determinative or final in purport: as, an interlocutory argument; an interlocutory order, decree, or judgment (that is, one relating to a particular question or point in a case, but not to the final issue).

It is easy to observe that the judgment here given is not final, but merely interlocutory. Blackstone, Com., III. xxiv.

The effect of the Governor's eloquence was much diminished, however, by the interlocutory remarks of De Herpt and a group of his adherents.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 359.

3. In law, intermediately transacted; taking place apart from the main course of a cause.

The interlocutory hearings before the judges in chambers were numerous.
R. J. Hinton, Eng. Radical Leaders, p. 321.

Interlocutory injunction. See injunction.—Interlocutory judgment or decree, a judgment or decree which, though it may determine the substantial rights of the parties, yet is preliminary to a further hearing and decision on details, or amounts, or other questions involving such matters, and necessary to be determined before a judgment can be awarded that can be executed or appealed from: as, a decree adjudging that plaintiff is entitled to an accounting from defendant, and directing the account to be taken, in order that he may have a final decree for the balance found due.

interlocutress (in-tėr-lok'ū-tres), n. [< interlocutor + -ess. Cf. interlocutrice.] A female interlocutor.

For ten minutes Longmore felt a revival of interest in his interlocutress. H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 367.

interlocutrice (in-tėr-lok'ū-tris), n. [= F. interlocutrice = It. interlocutrice, < L. as if interlocutrix*: see interlocutrix.] An interlocutress.

Have the goodness to serve her as auditress and interlocutrice. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xiv.

interlocutrix (in-tėr-lok'ū-triks), n. [As if L., fem. of interlocutor*: see interlocutor.] An interlocutress.

interlope (in-tėr-lōp'), v. i.; pret. and pp. interloped, ppr. interloping. [< interloper, q. v.] 1. To run between parties and intercept the advantage that one should gain from the other; traffic without a proper license; forestall.

Saints may not trade, but they may interlope.
Dryden, The Medal, l. 41.

The patron is desired to leave off his interloping trade, or admit the knights of the industry to their share. Tatler.

2. To obtrude one's self into a business in which one has no right.

interloper (in'tėr-lō-pėr), n. [< D. enterlooper, a coaster, a coasting vessel, hence a smuggler, smuggling vessel (one that runs in and out along the coast), < F. entre, between (see enter-, inter-), + D. looper (= E. leaper), a runner, < loopen = E. leap, run: see leap[1], lope. The F. interlope, Sp. intérlope, an interloper (vessel), interloping, are from E.] 1. One who trades without license.

Whatever privileges are allowed your company at Dort will be given by the other towns, either openly or covertly, to all those interlopers who bring their woollen manufacture directly thither.
Sir W. Temple, To the Gov. and Comp. of Merchant [Adventurers, March 26, 1675.

2. One who interferes obtrusively or officiously; one who thrusts himself into a station to which he has no claim, or into affairs in which he has no interest.

The untrained man, . . . the interloper as to the professions. Is. Taylor.

interlucate† (in-tėr-lū'kāt), v. t. [< L. interlucatus, pp. of interlucare, let the light through (sc. trees, by cutting away some of the branches), < inter, between, + lux (luc-), light: see light[1].] To admit light through, as by removing branches of trees. Cockeram.

interlucation† (in″tėr-lū-kā'shon), n. [< L. interlucatio(n-), < interlucare: see interlucate.] The act of thinning a wood to let in light. Evelyn.

interlucent (in-ter-lū'sent), a. [< L. interlucen(t-)s, ppr. of interlucere, shine through, be visible, < inter, between, + lucere, be light, shine: see lucid.] Shining between.

interlude (in'tėr-lūd), n. [Formerly also enterlude; < ME. entrelude, < OF. entrelude, < ML. interludium, an interlude, < L. inter, between, + ludus, play: see ludicrous.] 1. In dramatic art, an intermediate entertainment; a short independent performance introduced on the stage between the parts or in the course of the main entertainment; also, any similar by-play or episode or incident occurring in other circumstances.—2. In the early English drama, a play; particularly, a play from real life, distinguished from the mysteries and moralities. They were generally short and coarse. The first plays distinctively so called were those of John Heywood, beginning about 1521, although the name had previously been applied occasionally to dramas of any kind, and at an early date to the moralities.

Their new comedies or ciuill enterludes were played in open pauilions or tents of linnen cloth or lether, halfe displayed that the people might see.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 29.

Comedy is the immediate successor of the Interludes, which are themselves only a popularized form of the Moralities, abstractions having been converted into individual types. A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., Int., p. xxi.

The Interlude—a short humorous piece, to be acted in the midst of the Morality for the amusement of the people—had been frequently used, but Heywood isolated it from the Morality, and made of it a kind of farce. Out of it, we may say, grew English comedy.
Stopford Brooke, Primer of Eng. Lit., p. 79.

3. In music, a subordinate passage or composition inserted between the principal sections of a work or performance. Specifically—(a) A short instrumental or vocal piece inserted between the acts of a drama or an opera; an intermezzo. (b) An instrumental passage between the stanzas or the lines of a hymn or metrical psalm.

Interludes are played, in Germany, not between the verses of the Choral, but between the separate lines of each verse. Grove, Dict. Music.

(c) An instrumental piece between successive parts of a church service.

interluded (in'tėr-lū-ded), a. Inserted as an interlude; having interludes.

interluder (in'tėr-lū-dėr), n. One who performs in an interlude. [Rare.]

They make all their scholars play-boys! Is 't not a fine sight to see all our children made interluders?
B. Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 2.

Here are a certain company of players— . . .
Country comedians, interluders, sir.
Middleton (and another), Mayor of Queenborough, v. 1.

interludial (in-tėr-lū'di-al), a. [< ML. interludium, interlude, + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of an interlude.

At first [comedy was] wholly unregarded as a sphere for art uses, then admitted for interludial purposes in a fabrication styled intermezzo, that was played between the acts of a serious composition. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 94.

interluency† (in-tėr-lū'en-si), n. [< L. interluen(t-)s, ppr. of interluere, wash under, flow between, < inter, between, + luere, wash: see lave, lotion.] A flowing between; interposition of water. [Rare.]

Those parts of Asia and America which are not disjoyned by the inter-luency of the sea might have been formerly in some age of the world contiguous to each other. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 193.

interlunar (in-tėr-lū'när), a. [= F. interlunaire = Pg. interlunar; < L. inter, between, + luna, the moon: see lunar.] Pertaining to the moon's monthly interval of invisibility; between the periods of moonlight: as, interlunar nights. The interlunar cave is the place of seclusion into which the moon was anciently supposed to retire at such times.

And silent as the moon,
When she deserts the night,
Hid in her vacant interlunar cave.
Milton, S. A., l. 89.

Prometheus . . . repairs to a certain exquisite interlunar cave, and there dwells in tranquillity with his beloved Asia. S. Lanier, The English Novel, p. 100.

interlunary† (in-tėr-lū'na-ri), a. Same as interlunar.

If we add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, eclipses of sun, etc. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 13.

interly†, adv. A Middle English form of entirely.

He telles tham so that ilke aman may fele,
And what thei may interly knowe
Yf thei were dyme [obscure],
What the prophettis saide in ther sawe,
All longis to hym. York Plays, p. 206.

intermarriage (in-tėr-mar'āj), n. [< inter- + marriage.] 1. The union of two persons in marriage. [Rare.]—2. Marriage between members of two families, classes, or races; the relation rising from such marriage, as that two families are united in intermarriage.—3. Consanguineous marriage, or that between persons nearly related by blood. [Rare.]

Intermarriage certainly predisposes to disease.
Quain, Dict. of Med., p. 384.

intermarry (in-tėr-mar'i), v. i.; pret. and pp. intermarried, ppr. intermarrying. [< inter- + marry[1].] To become connected by marriage, as two families, clans, classes, or tribes.

About the middle of the fourth century from the building of Rome, it was declared lawful for nobles and plebeians to intermarry. Swift, Contests in Athens and Rome.

As the Gentoo tribe never intermarry, India may properly be said to contain four different nations.
Mickle, Inq. into the Bramin Philosophy.

intermaxilla (in″tėr-mak-sil'ä), n.; pl. intermaxillæ (-ē). [< inter- + maxilla.] The intermaxillary or premaxillary bone; the premaxilla. See intermaxillary, n.

intermaxillary (in-tėr-mak'si-lā-ri), a. and n. [< L. inter, between, + maxilla, jaw: see maxillary.] I. a. (a) Situated between the maxillary or upper jaw-bones: specifically applied to the intermaxilla or premaxilla. (b) Of or pertaining to the intermaxilla: as, intermaxillary teeth (that is, in mammals, incisors). (c) In Crustacea, situated between those somites of the head which bear the maxillæ: as, the intermaxillary apodeme (which is developed from the membrane connecting the two maxillary somites).—Intermaxillary lobe, in entom., a name given by Straus-Durckheim to the maxillary lobe or apex of the maxilla.

II. n.; pl. intermaxillaries (-riz). 1. The intermaxilla or premaxilla; one of a pair of bones of the upper jaw, situated between or rather in front of the maxillary bones, and in relation with its fellow of the opposite side. In man it is small, and speedily unites with the supramaxillary, with obliteration of all signs of its previous distinctness. In most mammals it is large, permanently distinct, and prominent; and, being usually rather in front of the superior maxillaries than between them, it is oftener called premaxillary. Whatever its size, shape, or situation, it is the bone of the upper jaw which bears the incisor teeth, when these occur. In birds it is by far the largest and principal bone of the upper mandible. It is single and median, representing a coalesced pair of bones; it represents that part of the upper jaw which is sheathed in horn, and its shape conforms with that of the beak. It has usually three prongs, one of which mounts to the forehead, the other two running along the palate. See cuts under Anura, Balænidæ, Crotalus, and Gallinæ.

2. One of the foremost pair of the upper jawbones in most teleostean fishes, once generally supposed to be homologous with the intermaxillary of the higher vertebrates.—3. The intermaxillary lobe of an insect. See I.

intermean† (in′tėr-mēn), n. [< inter- + *mean*³.] Something done in the mean time; an interact.

The propensity to laugh at the expense of good sense and propriety is well ridiculed in the Intermeane at the end of the first act of the "Staple of Newes" by Jonson.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 232.

intermeation† (in″tėr-mē-ā′shọn), n. [< L. as if intermeatio(n-)*, < intermeare, pass through or between, < inter, between, + meare, pass: see meatus.] A flowing or passing between. Bailey, 1731.

intermeddle (in-tėr-med′l), v.; pret. and pp. intermeddled, ppr. intermeddling. [< ME. entermedlen, entremedlen, < OF. entremedler, entremesler, entremeller (> ME. intermellen: see intermell), F. entremêler (= Pr. entremesclar = Sp. entremezclar = It. intramischiare), intermeddle, < entre, between, + medler, mesler, etc., mix, meddle: see inter- and meddle.] I. intrans. 1. To take part in some matter; especially, to interfere officiously or impertinently; take part in business with which one has no concern.

Henry, Earl of Northumberland, who, though on King Richard's Side, intermeddled not in the Battel, was incontinently taken into Favour, and made of the Council.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 233.

And [they] over boldly intermeddle with duties whereof no charge was ever given them.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 62.

It is usually thought, with great justice, a very impertinent thing in a private man to intermeddle in matters which regard the state. Steele, Guardian, No. 128.

2†. To give one's self concern.

Through desire a man, having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom. Prov. xviii. 1.

=Syn. Interfere, Intervene, etc. See interpose.

II.† trans. To intermix; mingle; mix up.

Agein the peple of Pounce Antonye, that alle were entermedled with the peple of Arthur, that foughten full harde on that oo part and the tother.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 402.

He hath intermedled in his historie certaine things contrary to the trueth. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 572.

This kynde of workemanshippe intermedled of stone and timber . . . is no euil syght.
Golding, tr. of Cæsar, fol. 191.

Veritie is perfect when it is not intermedled with falshood. Devil Conjur'd (1596).

intermeddler (in-tėr-med′lėr), n. One who intermeddles; a meddler in affairs which do not concern him, or with which he cannot properly interfere.

Nor did I ever know a Man that touch'd on Conjugal Affairs could ever reconcile the jarring Humours, but in a common hatred of the Intermedler.
Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, i. 1.

"The consequence was, as but too often happens," wrote the afflicted intermeddler, "that all concerned became inimical to me." E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 106.

intermeddlesome (in-tėr-med′l-sum), a. [< intermeddle + -some.] Prone to intermeddle; meddlesome. Imp. Dict.

intermeddlesomeness (in-tėr-med′l-sum-nes), n. The quality of being intermeddlesome. Imp. Dict.

intermedia, n. Plural of intermedium.

intermediacy (in-tėr-mē′di-ạ-si), n. [< intermedia(te) + -cy.] The state of being intermediate, or of acting intermediately; intermediate agency; interposition; intervention.

In birds the auditory nerve is affected by the impressions made on the membrane by only the intermediacy of the columella. Derham, Physico-Theology, iv. 3, note 20.

★intermedial (in-tėr-mē′di-ạl), a. [< L. intermedius, that is between (see intermedium), + -al.] Intermediate; intervening; intervenient.

Since all thy creatures obey thy word, I alone may not disorder the creation, and cancel those bands and intermedial links of subordination.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 64.

Black, white, red, or any other of the intermedial colours.
Evelyn, Sculptura, i. 5.

intermedian† (in-tėr-mē′di-ạn), a. [< L. intermedius, that is between (see intermedium), + ★-an.] Lying between; intermediate. Blount.

intermediary (in-tėr-mē′di-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. intermédiaire = Sp. intermediar = It. intermediario; < L. intermedius, that is between (see intermedium), + -ary.] I. a. Being or occurring between; having an intermediate position or action: as, an intermediary process.—Intermediary function, in math., a function holomorphic in the whole plane which satisfies the conditions

$$f(x+\omega)=e^{ax+b}\,fx$$
$$f(x+\omega')=e^{a'x+b'}\,fx,$$

where ω and ω' are quasi-periods.

II. n.; pl. intermediaries (-riz). One who or that which interposes or is intermediate; an intermediate agent; a go-between.

They [senates] have been instruments, but never intermediaries. Landor.

England was acting only as an intermediary.
The Atlantic, XLIX. 701.

Sometimes two or three intermediaries would be employed. J. R. Soley, Blockade and Cruisers, p. 183.

The enterprising Hellenes becoming the intermediaries between the native Libyan population of the interior and the outer world. B. V. Head, Historia Numorum, p. 725.

intermediate (in-tėr-mē′di-āt), v. i.; pret. and pp. intermediated, ppr. intermediating. [< ML. intermediatus, pp. of intermediare, come between, act as a mediator, < L. intermedius, that is between: see intermedium. Cf. mediate.] To act intermediately; intervene; interpose.

I'll tell ye what conditions threaten danger,
Unless you intermediate. Ford, Lady's Trial, v. 1.

By interposing your intermediating authority, endeavour to avert the horrid cruelty of this edict.
Milton, Letters of State, Oliver to Gustavus Adolphus.

★intermediate (in-tėr-mē′di-ạt), a. and n. [= F. intermédiat, < ML. intermediatus: see intermediate, v.] I. a. Situated between two extremes; coming between, in either position or degree; intervening; interposed: generally followed by between when the extremes are mentioned: as, an intermediate space; intermediate obstacles.

Arviragus, the king's son, . . . having escaped with life in the late battle, had employed the intermediate time in privately collecting his father's scattered forces, to put him again into a condition of facing the enemy.
W. Mason, Caractacus, Arg.

These plants are beautifully intermediate between the oxlip and the primrose.
Darwin, Different Forms of Flowers, p. 70.

Intermediate area, a part of an insect's wing between the subcostal and the internal vein.—Intermediate genus, in logic, a genus narrower than the widest and wider than the narrowest class.—Intermediate grade or school, in the system of graded common schools in the United States, the grade or department next above the primary and below the grammar grade. See grammar-school, 2.—Intermediate palpi, the maxillary palpi of those insects in which the outer lobes of the maxillæ are palpiform, so that apparently there are three pairs of palpi, two on the maxillæ and one on the labium, as in the Cicindelidæ and Carabidæ.—Intermediate rafter. See rafter.—Intermediate state, in theol., the state or condition of souls after death and before the resurrection of the body; by extension of meaning, the place of departed spirits, as distinct from both earth and heaven; Hades.—Intermediate terms, in arith. and alg., the terms of a progression or proportion between the first and last, which are called the extremes: thus, in the proportion 2 : 4 : : 6 : 12, four and six are the intermediate terms.—Intermediate witness or authority, one who witnesses to a thing not by virtue of his own direct knowledge of it, but resting on other testimony.

II. n. 1. In math., a syzygetic function: thus, if U and V are quanties of the same order, and if λ and μ are indeterminate constants, $\lambda U + \mu V$ is an intermediate of U and V.—2. An intermediary. [Rare.]

That sea he had read of, though never yet beheld, . . . gladly would he have hailed it as an intermediate betwixt the sky and the earth.
G. Macdonald, Warlock o' Glenwarlock.

intermediately (in-tėr-mē′di-ạt-li), adv. In an intermediate manner; by way of intervention. Johnson.

intermediation (in-tėr-mē-di-ā′shọn), n. [< intermediate + -ion, after mediation.] The act of intermediating, or the state of being intermediate; intervention; interposition; intermediacy.

An external action being related to a feeling only through an intermediate nervous change, the intermediation cannot well be left out of sight.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 77.

The latter consists of a lateral arch upon each side, united . . . by the intermediation of medial basal elements below. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 114.

intermediator (in-tėr-mē′di-ā-tọr), n. [< ML. intermediator, a middleman, < L. inter, between, + LL. mediator, one who mediates: see mediator.] A mediator between parties; any person or thing that acts intermediately.

In touch, it is the epidermis . . . which is the intermediator between the nerve and the physical agent.
Huxley and Youmans, Physiol., § 240.

intermedietto (in-tėr-mē-di-et′ō), n. [It., dim. of intermedio, an interlude: see intermedious.] A short interlude.

intermedious†, a. [= F. intermède = Sp. Pg. It. intermedio, intermediate; as a noun, an interlude; < L. intermedius, that is between: see intermedium.] Intermediate.

There was nothing intermedious, or that could possibly be thrust in between them.
Cudworth, Intellectual System.

intermedium (in-tėr-mē′di-um), n.; pl. intermedia (-ạ). [< L. intermedium, neut. of intermedius, that is between, < inter, between, + medius, middle: see medium.] 1. Intermediate space. [Rare.]—2. That which intervenes; an intervening agent or medium.

The influence of the elastic intermedium on the voltaic arc. W. R. Grove, Corr. of Forces, p. 7.

3. In anat. and zoöl., a median carpal or tarsal bone of the proximal row, so called from its situation between the ulnare and the radiale in the carpus, and between the tibiale and the fibulare in the tarsus. See cuts under carpus and Ichthyosauria.

intermeet†, v. i. [Early mod. E. entremeete; apar. < inter- + *meet*¹, but perhaps for intermete, old form of intermit, mingle.] To meet together; mingle.

Upon her cheekes the Lillie and the Rose
Did entremeete wyth equall change of hewe.
Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew of Bath.

intermell† (in-tėr-mel′), v. [< ME. intermellen, entermellen, < OF. entremeller, var. of entremesler (F. entremêler), intermix: see intermeddle.] I. trans. To intermix; intermingle.

II. intrans. To interfere; meddle.

But thay loved eche other passynge well,
That no spyes durst with thame intermell.
MS. Lansd. 208, f. 19. (Halliwell.)

To . . . boldly intermel
With sacred things.
Marston, Scourge of Villanie, Satire ix. 110.

intermembral (in-tėr-mem′brạl), a. [< L. inter, between, + membrum, member, + -al.] Existing (as a relation) between the limbs: as, intermembral homology (the homological correspondence between the fore and hind limbs of vertebrates or between the corresponding members of other animals).

intermenstrual (in-tėr-men′strö-ạl), a. [< inter- + menstrua + -al.] Occurring between the menstrual periods.

interment (in-tėr′ment), n. [< ME. enterment, entierment, < OF. enterrement, < ML. interramentum, burial, < interrare, bury, inter: see *inter*¹ and -ment.] The act of interring or depositing in the earth; burial; sepulture.

Achilles hade appetite, & angardly dissiret,
The Citie for to se, and the solemne fare
At the entierment full triet of the tru prinse.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 9106.

Interment in churches of favourite martyrs and apostles was at one time much sought after. Encyc. Brit., IX. 826.

intermention (in-tėr-men′shọn), v. t. [< inter- + mention.] To mention among others; include in mentioning. [Rare.]

There is scarce any grievance or complaint come before us in this place wherein we do not find him [Archbishop Laud] intermentioned. Grimstone. (Latham.) intermesenterial (in-tėr-mez-en-tē′ri-ạl), a. [< inter- + mesentery + -al.] Same as intermesenteric. G. C. Bourne, Micros. Science, XXVIII. 34.

intermesenteric (in-tėr-mez-en-ter′ik), a. [< inter- + mesentery + -ic.] Situated between mesenteries; in Actinozoa, noting specifically the chambers between the partitions or mesenteries which radiate from the gastric sac to the body-wall. See cut under Actinozoa.

As the mesenteries increase in number, the tentacles grow out as diverticula of the intermesenteric spaces.
Huxley, Encyc. Brit., I. 130.

intermess†, n. [< OF. entremes, F. entremets, something put between, a side dish: see entremets.] An interlude.

I likewise added my little History of Chalcography, a treatise of the perfection of Paynting, . . . with some other intermesses which might divert within doores.
Evelyn, To Lady Sunderland.

intermet†, v. [ME. intermetten: see entermit.] Same as entermit.

For loue of hir even cristene thei intermettid hem with worldely besynes in helpynge of hir sugettis; and sothly that was charite.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 25.

intermetacarpal (in-tėr-met-a-kär′pal), a. [< inter- + metacarpus + -al.] Situated between metacarpal bones: as, intermetacarpal ligaments.

intermetatarsal (in-tėr-met-a-tär′sal), a. [< inter- + metatarsal.] Situated between metatarsal bones: as, intermetatarsal ligaments.

intermewer (in-tėr-mū′ėr), n. [< inter + *mew*² + -er.] A hawk between its first mewing and the full growth of its next coat.

intermezzo (in-tėr-med′zō), n. [It., < L. intermedius, that is between: see intermedium.] 1. A light and pleasing dramatic entertainment introduced between the acts of a tragedy, comedy, or grand opera; later, a ballet divertissement introduced in like manner.

The theatre itself came to supplement its waning attractions by every species of illegitimate intermezzo.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 10.

2. In music: (a) A short musical work of light character inserted between the acts of a serious drama or opera; a burlesque or comedy. The intermezzo was the germ of the opera bouffe or comic opera. (b) A short composition, without any definite musical form, introduced in an extended musical work, or a piece composed in a similar style.

intermicate† (in-tėr-mī′kāt), v. t. [< L. intermicatus, pp. of intermicare, glitter among, < inter, between, among, + micare, glitter, shine: see mica.] To shine between or among. Blount.

intermication† (in″tėr-mī-kā′shọn), n. [< intermicate + -ion.] A shining between or among. Bailey.

intermigration (in″tėr-mī-grā′shọn), n. [< inter- + migration.] Reciprocal migration; exchange of persons or populations between districts or countries.

Nay, let us look upon men in several climates, though in the same continent, we shall see a strange variety among them in colour, figure, stature, complexion, humour; and all arising from the difference of the climate, though the continent be but one, as to point of access and mutual intercourse, and possibility of intermigrations.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 200.

interminable (in-tėr′mi-nạ-bl), a. [= F. interminable = Sp. interminable = Pg. interminavel = It. interminabile, < LL. interminabilis, endless, < in- priv. + terminabilis*, terminable: see terminable.] Without termination; endless; having no limits or limitation; unending; long drawn out: as, interminable space or duration; interminable sufferings.

As if they would confine the Interminable,
And tie him to his own prescript,
Who made our laws to bind us, not himself.
Milton, S. A., l. 307.

The word
That, finding an interminable space
Unoccupied, has filled the void so well.
Cowper, Task, v. 556.

=Syn. Limitless, illimitable.

interminableness (in-tėr′mi-nạ-bl-nes), n. The state of being interminable; endlessness.

The interminableness of those torments which after this life shall incessantly vex the impious.
Annotations on Glanville, etc. (1682), p. 59.

interminably (in-tėr′mi-nạ-bli), adv. In an interminable manner or extent; endlessly.

interminate[1] (in-tėr′mi-nāt), a. [= OF. interminé = It. interminato, < L. interminatus, unbounded, < in- priv. + terminatus, bounded: see terminate, a.] Not terminated; unbounded; unlimited; endless.

Within a thicket I reposde; when round
I ruffled vp falne leaues in heape, and found (Let fall from heauen) a sleepe interminate.
Chapman, Odyssey, vii.

The Epicurean hypothesis admits not of such an interminate division of matter, but will have it stop at certain solid corpuscles, which, for their not being further divisible, are called atoms, ἄτομοι. Boyle, Works, III. 661.

Interminate decimal, a decimal conceived as carried to an infinity of places: thus, the decimal .010010001 +, where the number of ciphers between successive ones is conceived to increase in arithmetical progression to infinity, is an interminate decimal.

interminate[2]† (in-tėr′mi-nāt), v. t. [< L. interminatus, pp. of interminari, also interminare, threaten, < inter, between, + minari, threaten: see menace.] To menace.

Enough, enough of these interminated judgements, wherewith . . . I might strike your hearts with just horrour. Bp. Hall, Remains, p. 163.

intermination† (in″tėr-mi-nā′shọn), n. [< LL. interminatio(n-), < L. interminari, threaten: see interminate[2].] A menace or threat.

It were strange that it should be possible for all men to keep the commandments, and required and exacted of all men with the intermination or threatening of horrid pains.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 430.

intermine (in-tėr-mīn′), v. t.; pret. and pp. intermined, ppr. intermining. [< inter- + mine[2].] To intersect or penetrate with mines.

Her large oaks so long green, as summer there her bowers
Had set up all the year, her air for health refin'd,
Her earth with allom veins so richly intermin'd.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xxviii. 344.

intermingle (in-tėr-ming′gl), v.; pret. and pp. intermingled, ppr. intermingling. [< inter- + mingle.] I. trans. To mingle or mix together; mix up; intermix.

I'll intermingle everything he does
With Cassio's suit. Shak., Othello, iii. 3, 25.

II. intrans. To be mixed or incorporated.

They will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. Shak., Much Ado, v. 2, 64.

So sportive is the light
Shot through the boughs, it dances as they dance,
Shadow and sunshine, intermingling quick.
Cowper, Task, i. 347.

intermingledom (in-tėr-ming′gl-dum), n. [< intermingle + -dom.] Something which intermingles. [Humorous.]

The case is filled with bits and ends to ribbons, patterns, and so forth, of all manner of colours, faded and fresh; with intermingledoms of gold-beater's skin plasters for a cut finger.
Richardson, Sir Charles Grandison, VI. 184.

interministerium (in-tėr-min-is-tē′ri-um), n. [Formed after the analogy of interregnum; < L. inter, between, + ministerium, ministry: see ministry.] The period between the dissolution of one ministerial government and the formation of another. [Rare.]

The regency are so temporizing and timid, especially in this interministerium, that I am in great apprehension of our having the plague. Walpole, To Mann, July 31, 1743.

intermise† (in′tėr-mīz), n. [< F. entremise, intervention, interference, < entremettre, pp. entremis, intervene: see intermit.] Interference; interposition. Bacon.

intermiss†, n. [< L. intermissus, an intermission, < intermittere, pp. intermissus, intermit: see intermit.] Intermission.

In which short intermiss the King relapseth to his former errour. E. Fannant, Hist. Edw. II. (1680), p. 94.

intermission (in-tėr-mish′ọn), n. [= F. intermission = Pr. intermissio = Sp. intermisión = Pg. intermissão = It. intermissione, < L. intermissio(n-), a breaking off, interruption, intermission, < intermittere, pp. intermissus, break off: see intermit.] 1. The act of intermitting, or the state of being intermitted; temporary cessation; pause: as, to labor without intermission; intermission of the pulse.

Thou hast no intermission of thy sins,
But all thy life is a continued ill.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, v. 4.

The spirit of man cannot demean it selfe lively in this body without some recreating intermission of labour, and serious things. Milton, Church-Government, Pref., ii.

2. In med., the temporary cessation or subsidence of a disease, as fever; interval between paroxysms. Intermission is an entire cessation, as distinguished from remission or abatement of fever.

3. Period of cessation; an intervening time; interval; specifically, recess at school.

But, gentle heavens,
Cut short all intermission; front to front
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3, 232.

Times have changed since the jackets and trousers used to draw up on one side of the road, and the petticoats on the other, to salute with bow and courtesy the white neckcloth of the parson or the squire, if it chanced to pass during intermission.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 242.

4†. Interference.

No other . . . towns, whom those Countries did no way concern, shall in any part meddle by way of friendly intermission tending to an accord.
Heylin, Hist. Presbyterians, p. 126.

=Syn. 1 and 3. Rest, Suspension, etc. (see stop, n.), interval, interruption, respite.

intermissive (in-tėr-mis′iv), a. [< L. intermissus, pp. of intermittere, intermit, + -ive.] Intermitting; coming by fits or after temporary cessations; not continuous.

Wounds will I lend the French, instead of eyes,
To weep their intermissive miseries.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1, 88.

Make pleasure thy recreation or intermissive relaxation, not thy Diana, life, and profession.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., iii. 23.

intermit (in-tėr-mit′), v.; pret. and pp. intermitted, ppr. intermitting. [< ME. intermetten, entermeten, < OF. entremettre, intremettre, F. entremettre = Pr. entremetre = It. intermettere, < L. intermittere, pp. intermissus, leave off, break off, interrupt, omit, leave an interval, cease, pause, < inter, between, + mittere, send: see mission. Cf. amit[2], admit, commit, omit, etc.] I. trans. 1. To put a temporary stop to; suspend or delay; interrupt: as, to intermit one's efforts.

Yet once againe, my muse, I pardon pray,
Thine intermitted song if I repeate.
Wyatt, Death of the Countesse of Pembroke.

If nature should intermit her course, and leave altogether, though it were but for a while, the observation of her own laws, . . . what would become of man himself?
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 3.

Thou intermittest not Thine everlasting journey.
Bryant, River by Night.

2†. To omit; pass by or over; neglect.

Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.
Shak., J. C., i. 1, 59.

Wer't your case,
You being young as I am, would you intermit
So fair and sweet occasion?
Webster and Rowley, Cure for a Cuckold, v. 1.

II. intrans. To cease or break off for a time; come to a temporary stop; stop or pause at intervals: as, a spring that intermits once in three minutes; an intermitting pulse.

Why intermete, of what thou hast to done?
Cartwright, Ordinary, iv. 2.

That power [of self-dislocation] by which a sequence of words that naturally is directly consecutive commences, intermits, and reappears at a remote part of the sentence.
De Quincey, Rhetoric.

=Syn. Subside, etc. See abate.

intermittence (in-tėr-mit′ens), n. [< intermitten(t) + -ce.] The state or condition of being intermittent; intermitting character or quality: as, the intermittence of a fever, or of a spring.

The intermittence [of the heart] continued until the end of the voyage. B. W. Richardson, Prevent. Med., p. 471.

intermittency (in-tėr-mit′en-si), n. Same as intermittence.

Thirteen [tobacco-users] had intermittency of the pulse.
★ Science, XII. 223.

intermittent (in-tėr-mit′ent), a. and n. [= F. intermittent = Sp. intermitente = Pg. It. intermittente, < L. intermitten(t-)s, ppr. of intermittere, leave off, cease, pause: see intermit.] I. a. Ceasing at intervals; that alternately stops and starts; intermitting: as, an intermittent fever; an intermittent spring.

As to me, I was always steadily of opinion that this disorder was not in its nature intermittent.
Burke, A Regicide Peace, ii.

Good water is spoiled and bad water rendered worse by the intermittent system of supply.
E. Frankland, Exper. in Chemistry, p. 557.

Intermittent current. See electric current, under current[1].—Intermittent earth, fever, etc. See the nouns.—Intermittent gear, any arrangement of geared wheels, as a mutilated gear, or a cog-wheel with a part of the cogs left out, or a rack, pinion, segment, or cam, devised to produce a regular pause or change of speed in the motion of any machine, as in many printing-presses, motors, counters, etc.; an intermittent wheel.—Intermittent or intermitting spring, a spring which flows for a time and then ceases, again begins to flow after an interval, and again ceases, and so on. Such alternations may depend directly on the rainfall; but the name of intermittent spring is more properly applied to a spring whose periods of flowing are pretty regular, and are determined by the fact that the water is conveyed from a reservoir in the interior of a hill or rising ground by a siphon-shaped channel which is able to discharge a greater quantity of water than the reservoir regularly receives. When the cavity is filled till the surface of the water is as high as the bend of the siphon, the water begins and continues to flow till it sinks as low as the inner aperture of the siphon, whereupon the outflow ceases till the water is again as high as the bend of the siphon, and so on.—Intermittent wheel, a general name for all kinds of escape-wheels, counting-wheels in registers and meters, stop-motions in watches, clocks, etc.

II. n. [L. febris intermitten(t-)s, an intermittent fever.] Intermittent fever.

The symptoms of intermittents are those of a decided and completely marked "cold stage." After this occurs the "hot stage." Dunglison.

intermittently (in-tėr-mit′ent-li), adv. In an intermittent manner; by alternate stops and starts.

intermitting (in-tėr-mit′ing), p. a. Ceasing for a time; stopping or pausing at intervals.

The vast intervals between the local points from which the intermitting voice ascends proclaim the storm-like pace at which he travels. De Quincey, Style, ii.

Intermitting spring. See intermittent.

intermittingly (in-tėr-mit′ing-li), adv. In an intermitting manner; with intermissions; at intervals.

intermix (in-tėr-miks′), v. [< inter- + mix, after L. intermiscere, mix among, < inter, between, + miscere, mix.] I. trans. To mix together; intermingle.

They sing praises unto God, which they intermix with instruments of music.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 11.

He doth ever intermix the correction and amendment of his mind with the use and employment thereof.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 97.

II. intrans. To be mixed together; become intermingled.

intermix (in′tėr-miks), n. [< intermix, v.] An intermixing or intermixture. [Rare.]

Just so are the actions or dispositions of the soul, angry or pleasant, lustful or cold, querulous or passionate, according as the body is disposed by the various intermixes of natural qualities. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 41.

intermixedly (in-tėr-mik′sed-li), adv. In an intermixed manner; with intermixture; indiscriminately. Locke.

intermixtion†, n. [< intermix + -tion.] Same as intermixture.

The whole congregacion of true christen people in this world, which, without intermixcion of obstinate heresies, professe the ryghte catholike faith.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 202.

intermixture (in-tėr-miks′tūr), n. [< intermix + -ture, after mixture.] 1. The act of intermixing or intermingling.

But for intermixture of rivers, and contiguity of situation, the inlands of Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock are partly infolded.
Selden, Illustrations of Drayton's Polyolbion, vi.

2. A mass formed by mixture; a mass of ingredients mixed.—3. Admixture; something additional mingled in a mass.

In this height of impiety there wanted not an intermixture of levity and folly. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII.

intermobility (in″tėr-mō-bil′i-ti), n. [< inter- + mobility.] Capability of moving amongst each other, as the particles of fluids. Brande.

intermodillion (in″tėr-mō-dil′yon), n. [< inter- + modillion.] In arch., the space between two modillions.

intermolecular (in″tėr-mō-lek′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + molecule + *-ar*³.] Between molecules; among the smallest particles of a substance: as, "intermolecular action," A. Daniell.

intermontane (in-tėr-mon′tān), a. [< L. inter, between, + mon(t-)s, a mountain: see mountain.] Lying between mountains: as, intermontane soil. Mease.

intermundane (in-tėr-mun′dān), a. [< L. inter, between, + mundus, world: see mundane.] Lying between worlds, or between orb and orb.

The vast distances between these great bodies [sun, planets, and fixed stars] are called intermundane spaces.
Locke, Elem. of Nat. Phil., ii.

intermundian (in-tėr-mun′di-an), a. [< L. intermundia, neut. pl., spaces between the worlds (in which, according to Epicurus, the gods reside), < inter, between, + mundus, world. Cf. intermundane.] Intermundane. Coleridge.

intermural (in-tėr-mū′ral), a. [= Pg. intermural, < L. intermuralis, between walls, < inter, between, + murus, a wall: see mural.] Lying between walls.

intermure† (in-tėr-mūr′), v. t. [< L. inter, between, + murus, a wall. Cf. immure.] To surround with walls; wall in.

A bulwark intermur'd with walls of brass,
A like can never be, nor ever was.
★ Ford, Fame's Memorial.

intermuscular (in-tėr-mus′kū-lär), a. [< L. inter, between, + musculus, muscle: see muscular.] Situated between muscles or muscular fibers.—Intermuscular fascia. See fascia.—Intermuscular ligaments, in lower vertebrates, tendinous bands separating myocommata.—Intermuscular septum. (a) An interspace between muscles, or between myotomes.

The interspaces between them appearing as intermuscular septa. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 44.

(b) A fascia of white fibrous connective tissue separating two muscles or muscular fibers.

intermusculary (in-tėr-mus′kū-lā-ri), a. Same as intermuscular. Beverley.

intermutation (in″tėr-mū-tā′shon), n. [< LL. as if intermutatio(n-)*, < intermutare, interchange, < L. inter, between, + mutare, change: see *mute*², mutation.] Interchange; mutual or reciprocal change.

Mutation is the replacement or substitution of elements, and when the change occurs between vowels we may term it intermutation. S. S. Haldeman, Etymology, p. 17.

intermutual† (in-tėr-mū′tū-al), a. [< inter- + mutual.] Mutual.

A solemn oath religiously they take,
By intermutual vows protesting there
This never to reveal, nor to forsake
So good a cause for danger, hope, or fear.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iii.

intermutually† (in-tėr-mū′tū-al-i), adv. Mutually. Daniel, Civil Wars, vii.

intern (in-tėrn′), a. and n. [Also interne (as F.); < F. interne = Sp. Pg. It. interno, < L. internus, inward, internal, < inter, between, < in, in, within: see *in*¹, *in*², *inter*², interior, etc. Cf. extern.]

I. a. Internal. [Rare.]

Your predicaments, substance and accident,
Series extern and intern, with their causes.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 1.

II. n. An inmate, as of a school; especially, an assistant resident physician or surgeon in a hospital, usually a student or recent graduate, acting in the absence of the attending physician ★or surgeon. [A recent use, from the French.]

intern (in-tėrn′), v. t. [< F. interner = Sp. Pg. internar = It. internare, send into the interior, confine in a certain locality, < L. internus, internal: see intern, a.] 1. To send into the interior of a country, as merchandise.—2. To confine within fixed or prescribed limits; specifically, to cause to reside in an interior locality without permission to leave it. [Chiefly used in connection with French subjects, in either sense.]

Calderon is a greater poet than Goethe, but even in the most masterly translation he retains still a Spanish accent, and is accordingly interned (if I may Anglicize a French word) in that provincialism which we call nationality. ★ Lowell, Wordsworth.

internal (in-tėr′nal), a. [= OF. internel; as intern + -al.] 1. Situated or comprised within, or in an inner part or place; inclosed; on the finite side of a bounding surface or line; within the outer boundary of; visceral.

If all depended upon the frame of our bodies, there must be some internal organs within us as far above the organs of brutes as the operations of our minds are above theirs.
Stillingfleet, Works, III. vii.

2. Pertaining to the subject itself, and independent, or relatively so, of other things. Thus, the internal affairs of a country are the affairs of its people with one another. [This is the most proper sense of the word, which no other expresses so well.]

Mine eyes he closed, but open left the cell
Of fancy, my internal sight. Milton, P. L., viii. 461.

His [Warren Hastings's] internal administration, with all its blemishes, gives him a title to be considered as one of the most remarkable men in our history.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

The question of internal improvement within the States by the federal government took a new and large development after the war. T. H. Benton, Thirty Years, I. 3.

3. Inner; pertaining to the mind, or to the relations of the mind to itself. [In this sense the word interior is preferable.]

With our Saviour internal purity is everything. Paley.

Inasmuch as consciousness is the condition of all internal experience whatsoever, we cannot deduce or explain the essential nature of consciousness from other forms of such experience. G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 544.

4. In anat. and zoöl., in general, inner or interior; not superficial; deep-set; away from the surface or next to the axis of the body or of a part: as, the internal carotid or iliac artery; the internal head of the gastrocnemius. —5. In entom.: (a) Nearest the axis of the body: as, the internal angles of the elytra; the internal surfaces of the tibiæ. (b) On that surface of the tegumentary parts or organs which is opposed to the external or visible surface: as, the internal plicæ of the elytra in certain Coleoptera. [In all senses opposed to external.]—Internal adjunct, an adjunct which belongs to its subject irrespective of other things.

Adjuncts are divided into internal and external. Adjuncts internal are those which inhere in the subject. External, which are ordered and disposed externally about it. A subject receives adjuncts internal into itself: as snow, whiteness; the soul, science or knowledge;—external to itself: as the sight, colour; soldiers, arms, etc.
Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman.

Internal bisector, capsule, carotid, etc. See the nouns.—Internal cause, a cause constituting a part of its effect; the matter or form, according to the peripatetic philosophy. See internal proximate cause, below.—Internal cell, a cell behind the internal vein, distinguished in many Hymenoptera. It is sometimes divided into two.—Internal criticism, judgment concerning the authenticity of a writing based on the contents thereof.—Internal denomination†. See denomination.—Internal epicondyle. See epicondyle.—Internal evidence, evidence in regard to a thing or a subject afforded by its intrinsic character or quality.

There is strong internal evidence that he himself wrote the last part of the work. Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 144.

Internal forces. See *force*¹.—Internal friction. See friction, 2.—Internal gage, gear, good etc. See the nouns.—Internal intercostals. See intercostal.—Internal multiplication, that kind of multiplication in which the order of the factors is indifferent. See multiplication.—Internal necessity, a necessity springing from the very nature of the subject.—Internal proximate cause, a cause which resides in the same subject in which the effect is produced, as the emanative and synectic or continent cause of Galen and the physicians.—Internal quantity, in logic, the sum of the marks of a logical term; logical depth or comprehension.—Internal revenue. See revenue.—Internal sense, or inner sense, the impressions produced on the mind by what is within the soul or organism; immediate empirical consciousness; self-consciousness; the apprehension of what passes in the world of thought; reflex perception.

The other fountain from which experience furnisheth the understanding with ideas is the perception of the operations of our own mind within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got; which operations, when the soul comes to reflect on and consider, do furnish the understanding with another set of ideas, which could not be had from things without; and such are perception, thinking, doubting, believing, reasoning, knowing, willing, and all the different actings of our own minds; which we being conscious of, and observing in ourselves, do from these receive into our understandings as distinct ideas, as we do from bodies affecting our senses. This source of ideas every man has wholly in himself; and though it be not sense, as having nothing to do with external objects, yet it is very like it, and might properly enough be called internal sense. But as I call the other sensation, so I call this reflection. Locke, Human Understanding, II. i. 4.

Internal or spiritual sense of the Word, according to Swedenborg, the symbolic or spiritual meaning of those parts of the Bible which are written according to the correspondence of all natural things with spiritual principles or things in the spiritual world, and which alone, therefore, he regards as constituting the true Divine Word. These parts are the Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, the books of Samuel and Kings, the Psalms and the prophets, the Gospels, and the Apocalypse.—Internal triangle, a small triangular cell, adjoining the inner side of the larger or discoidal triangle, found in the wings of some dragon-flies.—Internal vein, a longitudinal vein, nearly parallel with and close to the inner margin, found in the wings of many Lepidoptera and Hymenoptera.—Internal wheel, an annular cogged wheel, with presentation of the cogs on the interior periphery.—Internal work, in physics. See work.—Policy of internal improvements. See improvement.=Syn. 1 and 2. Inward, Interior, etc. See inner.

internality (in-tėr-nal′i-ti), n. [< internal + -ity.] The quality of being internal; the state of being interior; inwardness.

All ligaments [of bivalve shells] are external [in relation to the body of the animal], and their internality or externality is in respect of the hinge-line.
Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 406.

internally (in-tėr′nal-i), adv. 1. Interiorly; within or inside of external limits; in an inner part or situation; in or into the interior parts: as, to take or administer medicine internally.—2. With regard to internal affairs.

There never was seen so strong a government internally as that of the French municipalities.
Burke, On French Affairs.

3. Inwardly; spiritually.

We are symbolically in the sacrament, and by faith and the Spirit of God internally united to Christ. Jer. Taylor.

internarial (in-tėr-nā′ri-al), a. [< L. inter, between, + nares, nostrils: see narial.] Situated between or separating the nostrils; inter-★nasal.

internasal (in-tėr-nā′zal), a. [< L. inter, between. + nasus, nose: see nasal.] Situated between nasal parts or passages, or dividing them right and left.

A thin vertical lamella—the internasal septum.
Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 546.

internation (in-tėr-nā′shon), n. [< Sp. internación; as intern + -ation.] The act of interning; internment.

Importations and internations which are made from the 1st of April to the date on which this ordinance takes effect, through the frontier custom-house of Paso del Norte, shall be subjected to the provisions in the tariff laws of November 8, 1880. U. S. Cons. Rep., No. 53½ (1885), p. 282.

international (in-tėr-nash′on-al), a. and n. [= F. international = Sp. Pg. internacional = It. internazionale (all after E.); as inter- + national.]

I. a. 1. Pertaining to or mutually affecting two or more nations; concerning different nations in common: as, an international exhibition; international law; international relations.

With regard to the political quality of the persons whose conduct is the object of the law. These may, on any given occasion, be considered either as members of the same state, or as members of different states: in the first case, the law may be referred to the head of internal, in the second case, to that of international jurisprudence. . . . The word international, it must be acknowledged, is a new one; though, it is hoped, sufficiently analogous and intelligible. It is calculated to express, in a more significant way, the branch of law which goes commonly under the name of the law of nations: an appellation so uncharacteristic that, were it not for the force of custom, it would seem rather to refer to internal jurisprudence. The chancellor D'Aguesseau has already made, I find, a similar remark: he says that what is commonly called droit des gens ought rather to be termed droit entre les gens.
Bentham, Introd. to Principles of Morals, xvii. 25, note.

2. [cap.] Of or pertaining to the society called the International.

The essence of the International movement was a federal association, a combination of movements in part already begun, with the social end in view of raising the operatives up over against the employers and capitalists.
Woolsey, Communism and Socialism, p. 133.

International alphabet. See Morse alphabet, under alphabet.—International copyright. See copyright.—International embargo. See embargo, 1.—International law, the law of nations; those maxims or rules which independent political societies or states observe, or ought to observe, in their conduct toward one another; "the system of rules which regulates the intercourse and determines the rights and obligations of sovereign states" (Minor). More specifically, international law is the aggregate of the rules which Christian states acknowledge as obligatory in their relations to each other's subjects. The rules also which they unite to impose on their subjects, respectively, for the treatment of one another, are included here, as being in the end rules of action for the states themselves.

The classical expression for international law is Jus Feciale, or the law of negotiation and diplomacy.
Maine, Ancient Law, p. 53.

International law, as we have viewed it, is a system of rules adopted by the free choice of certain nations for the purpose of governing their intercourse with each other, and not inconsistent with the principles of natural justice. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 203.

Private international law, the rules by which the laws of one state are recognized and applied, in the courts of another, to civil or private rights of persons of, or property within, the former.

It is the province of private international law to decide which of two conflicting laws of different territories is to be applied in the decision of cases; and for this reason this branch is sometimes called the conflict of laws. It is called private, because it is concerned with the private rights and relations of individuals. Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 69.

II. n. [cap.] 1. A society (in full, "the International Workingmen's Association"), formed in London in 1864, designed to unite the working classes of all countries in promoting social and industrial reform by political means. Its chief aims were: (1) the subordination of capital to labor through the transference of industrial enterprises from the capitalists to bodies of workingmen; (2) the encouragement of men on strike by gifts of money, or by preventing laborers of one locality from migrating to another when the laborers in the latter are on strike; (3) the overthrow of all laws, customs, and privileges considered hostile to the working classes, and the encouragement of whatever aids them, as the shortening of hours of labor, free public education, etc.; (4) the end of all wars. By 1867 the International had become a powerful organization, though strenuously opposed by the continental European governments; but its manifestation in 1872 of sympathy with the doings of the Paris Commune in the preceding year, and internal dissensions, caused a great loss of reputation and strength.

Of the International Marx was the inspiring and controlling head from the beginning; and the German social democracy, though originated by Lassalle, before long fell under Marx's influence. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 214.

2. A member of the International, or a believer in its principles and methods.

Internationalism (in-tėr-nash′ọn-ạl-izm), n. [< international + -ism.] The principles, doctrine, or theory advocated by Internationalists.

internationalist (in-tėr-nash′ọn-ạl-ist), n. [< international + -ist.] 1. A student, expounder, or upholder of international law.

In the days of Elizabeth, the publicists of England, both as constitutionalists and internationalists, in so far as international law was then understood, had nothing to fear from a comparison with their continental rivals. North British Rev.

2. [cap.] A member of or a believer in the International.

internationalize (in-tėr-nash′ọn-ạl-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. internationalized, ppr. internationalizing. [< international + -ize.] To make international; cause to affect the mutual relations of two or more countries: as, to internationalize a war.

internationally (in-tėr-nash′ọn-ạl-i), adv. With reference to the mutual relations or interests of nations; from an international point of view.

Internationally speaking, they may be looked upon as export duties. J. S. Mill.

interne, n. Same as intern.

interneciary (in-tėr-nē′shi-ā-ri), a. [< L. internecium, slaughter (see internecion), + -ary.] Same as internecine. [Rare.]

internecinal (in-tėr-nes′i-nạl), a. [< internecine + -al.] Same as internecine. [Rare.]

internecine (in-tėr-nē′sin), a. [< L. internecinus, another reading of internecivus, deadly, murderous: see internecive.] Destructive; deadly; also mutually destructive.

Th' Egyptians worshipped dogs, and for Their faith made internecine war.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. i. 772.

internecion† (in-tėr-nē′shọn), n. [< L. internecio(n-), internicio(n-), slaughter, destruction, < internecare, slaughter, kill, < inter, between, + necare, kill.] General slaughter or destruction. [Rare.]

The number of internecions and slaughters would exceed all arithmetical calculation. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 215.

internecive (in-tėr-nē′siv), a. [< L. internecivus, deadly, destructive, < internecare, kill: see internecion.] Mutually destructive. Carlyle.

internection† (in-tėr-nek′shọn), n. [< L. internectere, bind together, < inter, between, + nectere, tie, bind. Cf. connection, etc.] Reciprocal connection; interrelation.

He coupled his own goodness and man's evils by so admirable an internection that ev'n the worst parts of the chain drew some good after them. W. Montague, Devoute Essays, II. iv. 1.

interneural (in-tėr-nū′ral), a. and n. [< inter- + neural.] I. a. In anat., situated between the neural spines or spinous processes of successive vertebræ.—Interneural spine, in ichth., one of the spiniform bones more or less interposed between the neural spines, and usually connecting with rays or spines of the dorsal fin or fins of fishes. They are generally dagger-shaped, and are plunged, as it were, up to the hilt in the flesh between the neural spines. See interhemal.

II. n. An interneural part or formation, as in a fish.

Groups of cartilaginous parts representing interneurals. Bean, Proc. U. S. Nat. Mus., 1887, p. 632.

A series of flat spines . . . called interneurals. Encyc. Brit., XII. 640.

internity (in-tėr′ni-ti), n. [= It. internità, < L. internus, inner, internal: see intern and -ity.] The state or condition of being internal; inwardness. [Rare.]

The internity of His ever-living light kindled up an externity of corporeal irradiation. Brooke, Fool of Quality, II. 249.

internment (in-tėrn′mẹnt), n. [< intern + -ment.] The state or condition of being interned; confinement, as of prisoners of war, in the interior of a country.

internodal (in-tėr-nō′dạl), a. [< internode + -al.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or situated on an internode, as a flower-stalk proceeding from the intermediate space of a branch between two leaves.—2. Constituting or including an internode, as the space between two nodes or joints in a plant or an animal.

internode (in′tėr-nōd), n. [= F. entrenœud = Sp. It. internodio, < L. internodium, the space between two knots or joints, < inter, between, + nodus, a knot, joint: see node.] A part or space between two knots or joints. (a) In bot., the space which intervenes between two nodes or leaf-knots in a stem. (b) In anat.: (1) The continuity of a part, as a bone, between two nodes or joints. (2) Especially, one of the phalangeal bones of the fingers or toes, as extending between the nodes or joints of the digits.

Portion of Stem of Ayenia, showing a, internode.

The individual bones of the fingers and thumb are termed internodes. F. Warner, Physical Expression, p. 155.

(c) In zoöl., the part of a jointed stem between any two joints, as of a polyp, a polyzoan, etc.

internodia, n. Plural of internodium.

internodial† (in-tėr-nō′di-ạl), a. [< L. internodium, internode, + -al.] Same as internodal.

But the inter-nodial parts of vegetables, or spaces between the joynts, are contrived with more uncertainty. Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, iii.

internodium (in-tėr-nō′di-um), n.; pl. internodia (-ạ). [NL.: see internode.] In anat. and zoöl., an internode; specifically, one of the phalanges or bones of a finger or toe.

internomedial (in-tėr-nō-mē′di-ạl), a. [< L. internus, inner, internal, + (LL.) medialis, middle: see medial.] Same as internomedian.

internomedian (in-tėr-nō-mē′di-ạn), a. [< L. internus, inner, internal, + medianus, middle: see median.] In entom., within the median line or vein; between the median and the internal vein.—Internomedian cell, a basal cell of the wing, between the median and internal veins, distinguished in the Hymenoptera. Also called submedian cell.—Internomedian vein or nervure, a strong longitudinal vein in the tegmina of orthopterous insects, running from the base obliquely or in a curve to the posterior margin beyond the middle, and limiting the anal or posterior area.—Internomedian veinlet, in Lepidoptera, a longitudinal veinlet between the internal and the median vein, found in a few butterflies.

inter nos (in′tėr nōs). [L.: inter, between, among; nos, acc. pl. of ego, I: see I[2].] Between ourselves: a parenthetical phrase implying that something is said in confidence. In French form, entre nous.

internuclear (in-tėr-nū′klē-ạr), a. [< inter- + nucleus + -ar[3].] Situated between or among nuclei.

By a parity of reasoning, muscular tissue may also be considered a cell aggregate, in which the inter-nuclear substance has become converted into striated muscle. Huxley, Crayfish, p. 190.

internuncial (in-tėr-nun′shạl), a. [< internuncio, internuncius, + -al.] 1. Of or belonging to an internuncio or his office.—2. In physiol., pertaining to, resembling, or possessing the function of the nervous system as communicating between different parts of the body.

It is more probable that "Kleinenberg's fibres" are solely internuncial in function, and therefore the primary form of nerve. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 62.

internuncio (in-tėr-nun′shi-ō), n. [Formerly also internuntio; < It. internuncio, now internunzio, < L. internuntius, less prop. internuncius, a messenger, mediator: see internuncius.] 1. An official representative or ambassador of the papacy at a minor court, in distinction from a nuncio, who is its representative at a more important court.

The internuncio at Brussels proceeded to censure those that were for it, as enemies to the papal authority. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1662.

Hence—2. A messenger between two parties. [Rare.]

They onely are the internuntio's or the go-betweens of this trim devis'd mummery. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

internuncius (in-tėr-nun′shi-us), n. [F. internonce = Sp. Pg. internuncio = It. internunzio, formerly internuncio; < L. internuntius, less prop. internuncius, a messenger between two parties, a mediator, < inter, between, + nuntius, a messenger: see nuncio.] Same as internuncio.

interoceanic (in-tėr-ō-shē-an′ik), a. [< inter- + ocean + -ic.] Between oceans; extending from one ocean to another: as, interoceanic traffic; an interoceanic canal or railroad.

Difficulties concerning interoceanic transit through Nicaragua are in course of amicable adjustment. Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 417.

interocular (in-tėr-ok′ū-lạr), a. [< L. inter, between, + oculus, eye.] Situated between the eyes, as the antennæ of some insects; interorbital.

interolivary (in-tėr-ol′i-vā-ri), a. [< inter- + olivary.] Lying between the olivary bodies of the brain.

interopercle (in′tėr-ō-pėr″kl), n. Same as interoperculum.

interopercula, n. Plural of interoperculum.

interopercular (in″tėr-ō-pėr′kū-lạr), a. [< interoperculum + -ar[3].] Situated among opercular bones in the gill-cover of a fish; having the character of an interoperculum; pertaining to an interoperculum: as, an interopercular bone.

interoperculum (in″tėr-ō-pėr′kū-lum), n.; pl. interopercula (-lạ). [< inter- + operculum.] In ichth., one of the four bones of which a teleost fish's gill-cover usually consists. It lies behind the angle of the jaw, is more or less covered by the preoperculum, and generally has a posterior process interposed between the preoperculum in front and the suboperculum and operculum behind. In some types it is rudimentary or lost. Also interopercle. See cut under teleost.

interoptic (in-tėr-op′tik), a. [< NL. interopticus, < L. inter, between, + NL. opticus, optic (lobe).] Situated between the optic lobes of the brain: applied to a lobe of the brain of some reptiles.

interopticus (in-tėr-op′ti-kus), n.; pl. interoptici (-sī). [NL.: see interoptic.] The interoptic lobe of the brain of some reptiles.

interorbiseptum (in-tėr-ôr-bi-sep′tum), n.; pl. interorbisepta (-tạ). [< L. inter, between, + orbis, orb (orbit), + septum, partition.] An interorbital septum; a partition between the right and left orbits of the eyes.

interorbital (in-tėr-ôr′bi-tạl), a. [< inter- + orbit + -al.] In anat. and zoöl., situated between the orbits of the eyes: as, the interorbital septum. See cut under Esox.—Interorbital foramen. See foramen.

interosculant (in-tėr-os′kū-lạnt), a. [< inter- + osculant.] Interosculating; connecting by or as if by osculation. The epithet is sometimes applied to a genus or family connecting two groups or families of plants or animals by partaking somewhat of the characters of each.

interosculate (in-tėr-os′kū-lāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. interosculated, ppr. interosculating. [< inter- + osculate.] To form a connecting-link between two or more objects; be interosculant.

interosculation (in-tėr-os-kū-lā′shọn), n. [< interosculate + -ion.] Interconnection by or as if by osculation.

Without allowing nearly enough for the intermediate stages and the infinite interosculation of emotional, intellectual, and associational disturbances. G. Allen, Mind, XII. 121.

interosseal (in-tėr-os′ē-ạl), a. Same as interosseous. [Rare.]

interossei, n. Plural of interosseus.

interosseous (in-tėr-os′ē-us), a. [= F. interosseux = It. interosseo, < NL. interosseus, < L. inter, between, + os (oss-), bone: see osseous.] Situated between two bones, or among several bones: specifically applied to different ligaments, as the various intercarpal ligaments, the radio-ulnar and the tibiofibular ligaments, and others.—Interosseous cartilage, ganglion, etc. See the nouns.—Interosseous muscle. Same as interosseus.—Interosseous saw, a fine thin saw with which surgeons work between bones, as those of the forearms, the ribs, etc.

interosseus (in-tėr-os′ē-us), n.; pl. interossei (-ī). [NL.: see interosseous.] An interosse-ous muscle; a muscle lying in an interosseous space, as between the metacarpal bones of the hand or the metatarsal bones of the foot. Those which appear upon the back of the hand or instep of the foot are called dorsal interossei or dorsossei; those appearing on the palm and sole are respectively called palmar and plantar interossei or palmossei and plantossei. In man there are 7 interossei of the hand, 4 dorsal and 3 palmar. They all arise from the sides of the metacarpals, and are inserted into the bases of the proximal phalanges and into the aponeuroses of the extensor tendons. They flex the proximal phalanges on the metacarpal bones, and extend the second and third phalanges. The dorsal interossei abduct the fingers from an imaginary line drawn through the middle finger, and the palmar adduct them toward the same. There are in man the same number of both dorsal and plantar interossei of the foot, arranged like those of the hand. In birds there are two muscles of the manus, called interosseus palmaris and interosseus dorsalis, which respectively flex and extend the phalanges of the longest digit.

interpage (in-tėr-pāj′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interpaged, ppr. interpaging. [< inter- + page[1].] 1. To insert intermediate pages in.—2. To insert on intermediate pages.

"Troilus and Cressida" is interpaged between histories and tragedies. Athenæum, No. 3187, p. 707.

interpale† (in-tėr-pāl′), v. t. [< inter- + pale[1].] To divide by pales, as in heraldry; arrange with vertical divisions.

He ware upon his head a diademe of purple interpaled with white. J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, fol. 151.

interpapillary (in-tėr-pap′i-lā-ri), a. [< inter- + papilla + -ary.] Lying or occurring between the papillæ: as, the interpapillary portion of the epidermis (that which lies between the papillæ of the corium).

interparenchymal (in″tėr-pa-reng′ki-mal), a. [< inter- + parenchyma + -al.] Situated in the parenchyma of an infusorian, as a vacuole. S. Kent.

interparietal (in″tėr-pā-rī′e-tal), a. and n. [< inter- + parietal.] I. a. Situated between the right and left parietal bones of the skull: as, the interparietal suture.—Interparietal bone, a membrane bone lying between the supraoccipital and the parietal bones. It is peculiar to mammals. In man it coössifies with the rest of the occipital, and forms the uppermost part of the supraoccipital. It is occasionally separate, as in the Peruvian mummies, where it has been termed os Incæ. It is frequently separate in mammals other than man. The bone in fishes so called by some old authors is the supraoccipital. See cut under Felidæ.—Interparietal crest. Same as parietal crest (which see, under crest).

II. n. In ichth., the median bone of the posterior part of the roof of the skull, now generally called supraoccipital. See cut under parasphenoid.

interparietale (in″tėr-pā-rī-e-tā′lē), n.; pl. interparietalia (-li-ą). [NL.: see interparietal.] An interparietal bone.

interparlet† (in′tėr-pärl), n. Same as enterparle.

interpause† (in′tėr-pâz), n. [< inter- + pause.] A stop or pause between; a temporary cessation.

Outwardly these inward hates agreed,
Giving an interpause to pride and spite;
Which breath'd but to break out with greater might.
Daniel, Civil Wars, vi.

interpeal† (in-tėr-pēl′), v. t. [< OF. entrepeler, interrupt: see interpel. Cf. appeal.] 1. Same as interpel.—2. To intercede with.

Here one of us began to interpeal
Old Mnemon. Dr. H. More, Psychozoia, iii. 31.

★ interpeduncular (in″tėr-pē-dung′kū-lär), a. [< inter- + pedunculus + -ar[3].] Situated between peduncles; intercrural: specifically applied in anatomy to the space or area between the right and left crura cerebri.

interpel† (in-tėr-pel′), v. t. [< F. interpeller, OF. interpeller, entrepeler (> E. interpeal) = Sp. interpelar = Pg. interpellar = It. interpellare, < L. interpellare, interrupt in speaking, disturb, address, < inter, between, + pellere, drive, urge: see appeal, compel, expel, impel, propel, repel, etc.] To interrupt; break in upon; distract.

Why should my tongue or pen Presume to interpel that fulness?
B. Jonson, Underwoods, cii.

No more now, for I am interpelled by many Businesses. Howell, Letters, I. vi. 1.

interpellate (in-tėr-pel′āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. interpellated, ppr. interpellating. [< L. interpellatus, pp. of interpellare, interrupt in speaking: see interpel.] To address with a question; especially, to question formally or publicly; demand an answer or explanation from: used originally in connection with French legislative proceedings: as, the ministry were interpellated with regard to their intentions.

In the Chamber the Government was angrily interpellated as to the Convention between Italy, Switzerland, and Germany, which was described as highly detrimental to the interests of the Empire. Lowe, Bismarck, I. 492.

interpellation (in″tėr-pe-lā′shọn), n. [< F. interpellation = Sp. interpelación = Pg. interpellação = It. interpellazione, < L. interpellatio(n-), an interruption, < interpellare, interrupt: see interpel.] 1. The act of interpellating, or of interrupting or interfering by speech; verbal interruption.

Good sir, I crave pardon,
If I so chance to break that golden twist
You spin by rude interpellation.
Dr. H. More, Psychozoia, ii. 44.

2. The act of interceding; interposition by entreaty or request; solicitation.

"Praying without ceasing," St. Paul calls it: that is, with continual addresses, frequent interpellations, never ceasing renewing the request till I obtain my desire. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 231.

He was to mention the urgent interpellations made to him by the electors and princes of the Empire in their recent embassy. Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 269.

3. A summons; a citation.

In all extrajudicial acts one citation, monition, or extrajudicial interpellation is sufficient. Ayliffe, Parergon.

4. A question put by a member of a legislative assembly to a minister or member of the government: used originally with reference to proceedings in the French legislature.

Interpellation followed upon interpellation, and Signor Mancini could only answer that the Red Sea expedition was a first step in the way to that colonial expansion which the country had shown its desire to achieve. Contemporary Rev. (trans.), LI. 289.

interpenetrate (in-tėr-pen′ē-trāt), v.; pret. and pp. interpenetrated, ppr. interpenetrating. [< inter- + penetrate.] I. trans. 1. To penetrate or pass into reciprocally; unite with by mutual penetration.

We feel that in a work of art [classical poetry] thought and language, idea and form, so interpenetrate each other that the impression produced is a result of substance and expression subtly interblended. J. Caird.

2. To penetrate between or among (the component parts of a body or substance); pass into or within the different parts of (a body); penetrate in various directions or throughout.

II. intrans. To penetrate mutually; become united by mutual penetration.

interpenetration (in-tėr-pen-ē-trā′shọn), n. [< interpenetrate + -ion.] 1. The act of interpenetrating; reciprocal or mutual penetration; the occupation of the same space by the parts of two bodies.

We meet as water meets water, or as two currents of air mix, with perfect diffusion and interpenetration of nature. Emerson, Compensation.

The view of Kant that matter is not absolutely impenetrable, and that chemical union consists in the interpenetration of the constituents. C. S. Peirce, Amer. Jour. Sci., Jan., 1863.

2. In late medieval arch., from the end of the fifteenth century, the system of continuing mouldings which meet each other independently past the intersection, and generally of considering the identity of various architectural members as preserved after one has come to coincide partly with another or to be swallowed up in it, so that, for instance, the angles and edges of a square member which has become united with a member having a curved surface are shown on the curved surface as if projecting through it. Interpenetration is characteristic of the so-called continuous impost. (See impost.) It is inartistic, and contrary to sound architectural principles, as purporting to represent a false method of construction.

interpenetrative (in-tėr-pen′ē-trā-tiv), a. [< interpenetrate + -ive.] Reciprocally penetrating; mutually penetrative.

interpersonal (in-tėr-pėr′sọn-ạl), a. [< inter- + person + -al.] Existing or occurring between individuals. [Rare.]

A very pleasant chatty tea with the Owens, talking over phrenology, mesmerism, and interpersonal influence. Caroline Fox, Journal, p. 171.

interpetalary (in-tėr-pet′ạ-lā-ri), a. [< inter- + petal + -ary.] In bot., between the petals. Thomas, Med. Dict. [Rare.]

interpetaloid (in-tėr-pet′ạ-loid), a. [< inter- + petal + -oid.] Intervening between petaloid parts, as of an echinoderm.

The interpetaloid spaces [on parts of recent and fossil crinoids] are plain, and devoid of sculpture. Science, IV. 223.

interpetiolar (in-tėr-pet′i-ō-lär), a. [< inter- + petiole + -ar[3].] In bot., situated between the petioles.

interphalangeal (in″tėr-fā-lan′jē-al), a. [< inter- + phalanx (-ang-) + -e-al.] Situated between any two successive phalanges of a finger or toe; nodal, of a digit: as, an interphalangeal articulation (one of the joints of a finger or toe).

interpilaster (in′tėr-pi-las″tėr), n. [< inter- + pilaster.] In arch., the interval between two pilasters.

interplace† (in-tėr-plās′), v. t. [< inter- + place.] To place between or among.

Your nature, virtue, happy birth,
Have therein highly interplac'd your name,
You may not run the least course of neglect.
Daniel, To Lady Anne Clifford.

interplanetary (in-tėr-plan′et-ạ-ri), a. [< inter- + planet + -ary[1].] Situated between the planets; within the solar system, but not within the atmosphere of the sun or any planet.

Light moves in interplanetary spaces with a speed of nearly 186,000 miles per second. Tait, Light, § 64.

interplay (in′tėr-plā), n. [< inter- + play.] Reciprocal action or influence; interchange of action and reaction, as between the parts of a machine; concurrent operation or procedure; interaction.

Indicating rhythms merely with the interplay of strokes between hands and thighs, feet and floor, is capable of a considerable degree of complexity. S. Lanier, Sci. of Eng. Verse, p. 247.

The interplay of manly affection in the two admirals. The Century, XXVI. 291.

interplead (in-tėr-plēd′), v. [Formerly also enterplead; < inter- + plead.] I. intrans. In law, to litigate with each other, in order to determine who is the rightful claimant. See interpleader[2].

Two several persons being found heirs to land by two several officers in one county, the king is brought in doubt whether livery ought to be made; and therefore, before livery be made to either, they must enterplead: that is, try between themselves who is the right heir. Cowell.

II. trans. In law, to cause to litigate with each other.

interpleader[1] (in-tėr-plē′dėr), n. [< interplead + -er[1].] A party who interpleads.

interpleader[2] (in-tėr-plē′dėr), n. [Formerly also enterpleader; < inter- + pleader[2], a plea, < OF. plaider, plead, inf. as a noun: see plead.] 1. A suit by which a person having property belonging to or subject to the claim of others, but uncertain which of adverse claimants is entitled, brings the adverse claimants before the court, that the right may be determined and himself exonerated: as, a bill of interpleader. The court usually allows him to surrender the property or pay the debt into the custody of the law, and be discharged, and allows the claimants to interplead—that is, to proceed to trial as against each other.

2. The process of trial between adverse claimants in such a case: as, the court awarded an interpleader.

interpledge (in-tėr-plej′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interpledged, ppr. interpledging [< inter- + pledge.] To give and take as a mutual pledge.

In all distress of various courts and war,
We interpledge and bind each other's heart.
Sir W. Davenant, Gondibert, I. 5.

interpleural (in-tėr-plö′rạl), a. [< inter- + pleura + -al.] Situated between the right and left pleuræ or pleural cavities.—Interpleural space, the mediastinum.

A space is left between them [the right and left pleuræ] extending from the sternum to the spine. . . . This interval is called by anatomists the interpleural space or the mediastinum. Holden, Anat. (1885), p. 181.

inter pocula (in′tėr pok′ū-lą). [L.: inter, between, among; pocula, acc. pl. of poculum, a cup: see poculent.] Literally, between cups; during a drinking-bout.

interpoint† (in-tėr-point′), v. t. [< inter- + point.] To distinguish by stops or marks; punctuate.

Her heart commands her words should pass out first,
And then her sighs should interpoint her words.
Daniel, Civil Wars, ii.

interpolable (in-tėr′pō-la-bl), a. [< L. as if interpolabilis*, < interpolare, interpolate: see interpolate.] Capable of being interpolated or inserted; suitable for interpolation. De Morgan.

interpolar (in-tėr-pō′lär), a. [< inter- + pole[2] + -ar[3].] Situated between or connecting the poles, as of a galvanic battery.

Connect them by a certain interpolar wire of which the wire of a galvanometer forms a part. J. Trowbridge, New Physics, p. 216.

interpolary (in-tėr′pō-lā-ri), a. [< interpol(ate) + -ary.] Pertaining to interpolation.—Interpolary function. See function.

interpolate (in-tėr′pō-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. interpolated, ppr. interpolating. [< L. interpolatus, pp. of interpolare (> It. interpolare = Sp. Pg. Pr. interpolar = F. interpoler), polish, furbish, or dress up, corrupt, < interpolis, also interpolus, dressed up, altered in form or appearance, falsified, < inter, between, + polire, polish: see polish[1].] 1. To insert in a writing; introduce, as a word or phrase not in the original text; especially, to foist in; introduce surreptitiously, as what is spurious or unauthorized.

The Athenians were put in possession of Salamis by another law, which was cited by Solon, or, as some think, interpolated by him for that purpose. Pope.

I should give here what I have thus found so strangely interpolated among the fragmentary remains of the Returns sent up by the old Gilds.
T. Smith, English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 134, note.

2. To alter, as a book or manuscript, by insertion of new matter; introduce new words or phrases into; especially, to corrupt or vitiate by spurious insertions or additions.

How strangely Ignatius is mangled and interpolated you may see by the vast difference of all copies and editions, Greek and Latin. Bp. Barlow, Remains, p. 115.

3. In math. and physics, to introduce, in a series of numbers or observations (one or more intermediate terms), in accordance with the law of the series; make the necessary interpolations in: as, to interpolate a number or a table of numbers.

The word interpolate has been adopted in analysis to denote primarily the interposing of missing terms in a series of quantities supposed subject to a determinate law of magnitude, but secondarily and more generally to denote the calculating, under some hypothesis of law or continuity, of any term of a series from the values of other terms supposed given. Boole, Finite Differences (2d ed.).

4†. To carry on with intermissions; interrupt or discontinue for a time.

The alluvion of the sea upon these rocks might be eternally continued, but interpolated.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 96.

5. To interpose; place in an intermediate position.

It is quite certain that one can pass from a high state of pleasure to one of intense pain without any interpolated neutral feeling. G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 510.

interpolation (in-tėr-pō-lā′shọn), n. [= F. interpolation = Pr. interpolacio = Sp. interpolación = Pg. interpolação = It. interpolazione, < L. interpolatio(n-), a dressing up, alteration, < interpolare, dress up, alter: see interpolate.] 1. The act of interpolating; the insertion of new words or expressions in a book or manuscript; especially, the falsification of a text by spurious or unauthorized insertions.—2. That which is interpolated; new or (especially) spurious matter inserted; an unannounced or unauthorized insertion in a text.

Sir, I beseech you to accept or pardon these trifling interpolations which I have presumed to send you: not that they add any thing to your work, but testify the disposition I have to serve you.
Evelyn, To Mr. Aubrey, Feb., 1675.

3. In math., the process of finding, from the given values of a function for certain values of the variable, its approximate value for an intermediate value of the variable. The formulæ ordinarily used for this purpose assume that the function is expressible as a polynomial in powers of the variable of the lowest order consistent with the given values. ★

interpolator (in-tėr′pō-lā-tọr), n. [< LL. interpolator, one who corrupts or spoils, < L. interpolare, dress up, alter, spoil: see interpolate.] One who interpolates; one who inserts in a book or manuscript new or spurious words or passages; one who adds something deceptively or without authority to an original text.

interpolish† (in-tėr-pol′ish), v. t. [< inter- + polish[1], after L. interpolare, polish, furbish, or dress up: see interpolate.] To furbish up, as a writing; improve by interpolation or alteration.

All this will not fadge, though it be cunningly interpolisht by some second hand with crooks and emendations.
Milton, Church-Government, i. 5.

interpolity (in-tėr-pol′i-ti), n. [< inter- + polity.] Intercourse between communities or countries; interchange of citizenship. [Rare.]

An absolute sermon upon emigration, and the transplanting and interpolity of our species.
Bulwer, Caxtons, xiii. 1.

interpone† (in-tėr-pōn′), v. t. [= Sp. interponer = Pg. interpor = It. interporre, < L. interponere, put, lay, or set between, < inter, between, + ponere, put, set, place: see ponent. Cf. interpose.] To set or insert between; interpose.

Porphyrius interponed it [the Psyche or soul] betwixt the Father and the Son, as a middle between both.
Cudworth, Intellectual System.

interponent† (in-tėr-pō′nent), n. [< L. interponen(t-)s, ppr. of interponere, put between: see interpone.] One who or that which interpones or interposes.

Lop downe these interponents that withstand
The passage to our throane.
Heywood, Rape of Lucrece.

interportal (in-tėr-pōr′tạl), a. [< inter- + port[1] + -al.] Existing between ports; specifically, carried on between ports of the same country or region.

The total exports by sea exceeded 57 millions, of which 32 millions represent interportal, and 25 millions foreign trade. Encyc. Brit., XII. 764.

Owing to the competition by foreigners in the interportal trade of the East, it is the cargo steamers which "rule the freight market." The Engineer, LXVI. 517.

interposal (in-tėr-pō′zạl), n. [< interpose + -al.] The act of interposing; interposition.

How quickly all our designs and measures, at his [God's] interposal, vanish into nothing. H. Blair, Works, II. xiii. ★ interpose (in-tėr-pōz′), v.; pret. and pp. interposed, ppr. interposing. [< OF. interposer, entreposer, F. interposer, < L. inter, between, + F. poser, place: see inter- and pose[2], and cf. interpone.] I. trans. 1. To place between; cause to intervene: as, to interpose an opaque body between a light and the eye.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night? Shak., J. C., ii. 1, 98.

Were not this banke interposed like a bulwarke betwixt the Citie and the Sea, the waves would utterly overwhelm and deface the Citie. Coryat, Crudities, I. 199.

The sun, though so near, is never seen, but a thick screen of watery clouds is constantly interposed, and yet the heat is such that Fahrenheit's thermometer rises to 100° in the shade. Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 495.

2. To place between or among; intrude; present as an obstruction, interruption, or inconvenience, or for succor, relief, or the adjustment of differences: as, the emperor interposed his aid or services to reconcile the contending parties.

The Queen interpos'd her Authority, and would not suffer it to be enacted. Baker, Chronicles, p. 345.

You, Sir, who listen but interpose no word,
Ask yourself, had you borne a baiting thus?
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 89.

II. intrans. 1. To come between other things; assume an intervening position or relation; stand in the way.

Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 246.

2. To step in between parties at variance; interfere; mediate: as, the prince interposed and made peace.

A stout seaman who had interpos'd and saved the Duke from perishing by a fire-ship in the late warr.
Evelyn, Diary, May 25, 1673.

With clashing falchions now the chiefs had clos'd,
But each brave Ajax heard, and interpos'd.
Pope, Iliad, xvii. 601.

3. To put in or make a remark by way of interruption.

The office of this goddess consisted in interposing, like the Roman tribunes, with an "I forbid it" in all courses of constant and perpetual felicity.
Bacon, Political Fables, v., Expl.

=Syn. 2. Interpose, Interfere, Intermeddle, Intervene. To intermeddle is both unwelcome and impertinent. To interfere is unwelcome to the one interfered with, and often but not necessarily improper: as, the court interfered to prevent further injustice. In this sentence interposed would have been a very proper word to express the benevolence and helpfulness of the action of the court, while interfere suggests the checking of what was going on and the balking of selfish plans. Interpose in its personal application is generally used in a good sense. Interfere may be used of a person or of a thing; intermeddle only of a person or the act of a person. Intervene is used only of things literally or figuratively coming between, and hence without either praise or blame: as, several weeks intervened; an intervening piece of woods. A piece of woods may interfere with a view; we must interfere in a quarrel when life is threatened. See intrude.

interpose† (in′tėr-pōz), n. [< interpose, v.] Interposal; interposition.

Such frequent breakings out in the body politick are indications of many noxious and dangerous humours therein, which, without the wise interpose of state-physicians, presage ruin to the whole. J. Spencer, Prodigies, p. 119.

interposer (in-tėr-pō′zėr), n. One who interposes or comes between others; a mediator or agent between parties.

I must stand first champion for myself Against all interposers.
Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy.

interposit (in-tėr-poz′it), n. [< L. interpositus, a putting between, < interponere, pp. interpositus, put between: see interpone, interpose.] A place of deposit between one commercial city or country and another. Mitford. ★ interposition (in″tėr-pō-zish′ọn), n. [= F. interposition = Pr. interpozicio = Sp. interposición = Pg. interposição = It. interposizione, < L. interpositio(n-), < interponere, pp. interpositus, put between, interpose: see interpone, interpose.] 1. A being, placing, or coming between, as of something that obstructs or interferes; intervention.

It is a mere privation of the sun's light by reason of the interposition of the earth's opacous body.
Bp. Wilkins, That the Moon may be a World.

2. Intervenient agency; agency between parties; interference; mediation.

Great and manifold have the instances been of God's interposition to rescue this church and nation, when they most needed it. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. ix.

This evenhanded retribution of justice, so uncommon in human affairs, led many to discern the immediate interposition of Providence. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 8.

3. That which is interposed.

A shelter, and a kind of shading cool
Interposition, as a summer's cloud.
Milton, P. R., iii. 222.

=Syn. 2. Interposition, Interference, Intervention, Mediation. The first three of these have the same differences as the corresponding verbs. (See interpose.) Intervention and interference are used of persons or things; interposition and mediation only of persons. Mediation is a friendly act performed in order to reconcile those who are estranged or opposed: as, France refused all offers of mediation, and seemed bent upon war. The word mediation is rarely used where the friendly interposition is not consented to by the parties to the controversy, or where it is not at least in some degree successful.

interposure† (in-tėr-pō′zụr), n. [< interpose + -ure.] Interposition.

Some extraordinary interposure for their rescue.
Glanville, Pre-existence of Souls, xiv.

interpret (in-tėr′pret), v. [< ME. interpreten, < OF. interpreter, F. interpréter = Pr. interpretar, enterpretar = Sp. Pg. interpretar = It. interpretare, < L. interpretari, explain, expound, interpret, < interpres (interpret-), an agent, broker, explainer, interpreter, < inter, between, + -pres (-pret-), prob. connected with Gr. φράζειν, point out, show, explain, declare, speak, > φραδή, understanding, φράσις, speech: see phrase.] I. trans. 1. To expound the meaning or significance of, as by translation or explanation; elucidate or unfold, as foreign or obscure language, a mystery, etc.; make plain or intelligible.

There were none that could interpret them [his dreams] to Pharaoh. Gen. xli. 15.

Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.
Mat. i. 23.

A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes.
Pope, R. of the L., iii. 15.

2. To show the purport of; develop or make clear by representation: as, to interpret a drama or a character by action on the stage.—3. To construe; attribute a given meaning to: as, the company interpreted his silence unfavorably.

Nothing new is free from detraction, and when Princes alter customes, even heavie to the subject, best ordinances are interpreted innovations.
Habington, Castara, Author's Preface.

No evil can befall the Parlament or Citty, but he positively interprets it a judgement upon them for his sake.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xxvi.

=Syn. 1. Render, Construe, etc. (see translate); Expound, Elucidate, etc. (see explain).

II. intrans. To practise interpretation; make an interpretation or explanation; tell or determine what something signifies.

Do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?
1 Cor. xii. 30.

My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 6, 2.

interpretable (in-tėr′pre-tạ-bl), a. [= F. interprétable = Sp. interpretable, < LL. interpretabilis, that can be explained or translated, < L. interpretari, explain, translate: see interpret.] Capable of being interpreted or explained.

But howsoever the law be in truth or interpretable (for it might ill beseem me to offer determination in matter of this kind), it is certain that, etc.
Selden, Illustrations of Drayton's Polyolbion, xvii. 207.

Even the differences arising among the limbs, originally alike, were seen to be interpretable by [a principle mentioned]. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 335.

interpretament† (in-tėr′pre-tạ-ment), n. [< L. interpretamentum, explanation, < interpretari, explain: see interpret.] Interpretation. [Rare.]

This bold interpretament, how commonly soever sided with, cannot stand a minute with any competent reverence to God or his law, or his people.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

interpretate† (in-tėr′pre-tāt), v. t. [< L. interpretatus, pp. of interpretari, interpret: see interpret.] To interpret.

How dare they interpretate these words, "my sheep," "my lambs," to be the universal church of Christ?
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 143.

If one consult the critics thereupon,
Some places have a note, some others none;
And when they take interpretating pains,
Sometimes the difficulty still remains.
Byrom, Critical Remarks on Horace.

interpretation (in-tėr-pre-tā′shọn), n. [< ME. interpretacion, interpretacioun, < OF. entrepretatiun, interpretation, F. interprétation = Pr. interpretacio = Sp. interpretación = Pg. interpretação = It. interpretazione, < L. interpretatio(n-), explanation, < interpretari, explain: see interpret.] 1. The act of interpreting, expounding, or explaining; translation; explanation; elucidation: as, the interpretation of a difficult passage in an author; the interpretation of dreams or of prophecy.

Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 2, 13.

This habit, carried into the interpretation of things at large, affects it somewhat as the mathematical habit affects it. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 321.

2. The sense given by an interpreter; assumed meaning; apparent meaning; signification: as, varying interpretations of the same passage or event; to put a bad interpretation upon anything. In law, interpretation in this sense usually implies either (1) that a word or phrase, read in the light of other parts of the instrument or of extrinsic evidence, is found to have a meaning different from that first apparent on its face; or (2) that a word or passage not clear in itself is found, by transposition or reconstruction of the order of words or by different punctuation, to have a clear meaning; and hence the maxim that it is not allowable to interpret that which has no need of interpretation.

Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 2 Pet. i. 20.

We beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy. Bacon.

3. The representation of a dramatic part or character, or the rendering of a musical composition, according to one's particular conception of it: as, an original and spirited interpretation of "Hamlet."—Allegorical interpretation. See allegorical.—Interpretation clause. See clause.—Interpretation of nature, in Bacon's philosophy, scientific reasoning leading to discovery. This, Bacon teaches, consists in successive inductive inferences, each carrying irresistible and immediate conviction, the entire series leading up to widely general principles.=Syn. 1 and 2. Elucidation, construction, version, rendering. See translate.

interpretative (in-tėr′pre-tā-tiv), a. [=F. interprétatif = Pr. interpretatiu = Sp. Pg. interpretativo, < L. as if interpretativus,* < interpretari, explain: see interpret.] 1. Designed or fitted to explain; explaining; explanatory.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation and the word explained should be always reciprocal. Johnson, Eng. Dict., Pref.

So that by this interpretative compact each party hath made that lawful in time of war which is unlawful in time of peace. Sir M. Hale, Cont., Mat. vii. 12.

2. Inferential; implied; constructive.

The rejecting their additions may justly be deemed an interpretative siding with heresies. Hammond.

interpretatively (in-tėr′pre-tā-tiv-li), adv. By interpretation; so as to interpret or give ground for interpretation; inferentially.

They have interpretatively joined in opposing his authority. Clarke, To Mr. Dodwell.

interpreter (in-tėr′pre-tėr), n. [Early mod. E. interpretour, < OF. interpreteur, entrepreteur, < LL. interpretator, an explainer, < L. interpretari, explain: see interpret.] One who or that which interprets; one who explains or expounds; an expositor; a translator; especially, one who explains what is said in a different language.

And they knew not that Joseph understood them; for he spake to them by an interpreter. Gen. xlii. 23.

It is therefore an error to suppose that the judiciary is the only interpreter of the Constitution, for a large field is left open to the other authorities of the government.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 365.

interprise†, n. An obsolete form of enterprise.

interprovincial (in″tėr-prō-vin′shal), a. [< L. inter, between, + provincia, province: see provincial.] Existing between provinces.

The state council . . . was to superintend all high affairs of government, war, treaties, foreign intercourse, internal and interprovincial affairs. Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 209.

interpubic (in-tėr-pū′bik), a. [< L. inter, between, + pubes, pubes: see pubic.] Situated between the right and left pubic bones: as, the interpubic articulation, or symphysis pubis; an interpubic ligament or cartilage.—Interpubic fibrocartilage. See fibrocartilage.

interpunction (in-tėr-pungk′shọn), n. [< L. interpunctio(n-), a placing of points between words, < interpungere, place points between words, < inter, between, + pungere, point: see pungent, point.] The pointing of sentences, or a point or mark placed between the parts or members of a sentence; intermediate punctuation.

The whole course of our life is full of interpunctions or commas; death is but the period or full point.
Jackson, Works, III. 499.

A various interpunction, a parenthesis, a letter, an accent, may much alter the sense.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 333.

Interpunction in the wider sense of the insertion of a distinguishing point is as old as the Moabite Stone, in which every word is divided from the rest by a single point; a fashion which we find occurring in Greek MSS. of late date. J. Rendel Harris.

interpunctuation (in-tėr-pungk-tū-ā′shọn), n. [< inter- + punctuation.] Same as interpunction.

The device of the letter, which by the false interpunctuation of the parasite conveys to the heroine the directly opposite meaning to that which his master intended it to bear, is amusing enough.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I. 142.

interracial (in-tėr-rā′shạl), a. [< inter- + race[3] + -ial.] Existing or taking place between races, or members of different races.

If interracial marriages were legalized (as they are not yet), such unions would always be too exceptional to give ground for alarm. Westminster Rev., CXXV. 380.

interradial (in-tėr-rā′di-ạl), a. and n. [< L. inter, between, + radius, ray: see radial.] I. a. Situated between the radii or rays: as, the interradial petals in an echinoderm. Compare adradial.

II. n. A ray situated between rays, as in some crinoids; an interradiale.

interradiale (in-tėr-rā-di-ā′lē), n.; pl. interradialia (-li-ạ). [NL.: see interradial.] That which is situated between rays, as of an echinoderm; specifically, in Crinoidea, a plate or part between radialia.

In the calyx of the Tessellata there are plates, interradialia, present between the radialia. Encyc. Brit., VII. 636.

interradially (in-tėr-rā′di-ạl-i), adv. Between or among rays: as, "an interradially placed madreporite," Encyc. Brit.

interradius (in-tėr-rā′di-us), n.; pl. interradii (-ī). [< inter- + radius.] An interradial part; specifically, one of the secondary or intermediate rays or radiating parts or processes of a hydrozoan, alternating with the perradii or primary rays.

The madreporite lies in the right anterior interradius of the sea-urchin. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 570.

interramal (in-tėr-rā′mạl), a. [< L. inter, between, + ramus, a branch, + -al.] In zoöl., situated between the forks or rami of the lower jaw; submental; intercrural.

interramicorn (in-tėr-ram′i-kôrn), n. [< L. inter, between, + ramus, a branch, + cornu, a horn.] In ornith., a separate piece of the horny sheath of the bill which is found in some birds, as the albatrosses, between the rami of the lower mandible.

The interramicorn forms the gonal element of the bill.
Coues, Proc. Phila. Acad., 1866, p. 276.

interreceive (in″tėr-rē-sēv′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interreceived, ppr. interreceiving. [< inter- + receive.] To receive between or within. Carlisle. [Rare.]

interregal (in-tėr-rē′gạl), a. [< L. inter, between, + rex (reg-), a king: see regal.] Existing between kings.

When the crime [the massacre of the Huguenots] came at last, it was as blundering as it was bloody; at once premeditated and accidental; the isolated execution of an interregal conspiracy, existing for half a generation, yet exploding without concert.
Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 261.

interregency† (in-tėr-rē′jẹn-si), n. [< inter- + regency.] The space of time, or the government, while there is no lawful sovereign on the throne; an interregnum. Blount.

interregent† (in-tėr-rē′jẹnt), n. [< inter- + regent.] One who governs during an interregnum; a regent. Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 201.

interreges, n. Plural of interrex.

interregnum (in-tėr-reg′num), n. [< L. interregnum, < inter, between, + regnum, reign: see reign. Cf. interreign.] 1. An intermission between reigns; an interval of time elapsing between the end of one reign and the beginning of the next, as in the case of a disputed or uncertain succession.

A great meeting of noblemen and gentlemen who had property in Ireland was held, during the interregnum, at the house of the Duke of Ormond in Saint James's Square.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xii.

Hence—2. An intermission in any order of succession; any breach of continuity in action or influence.

Thousand worse Passions then possest
The Inter-regnum of my breast.
Cowley, The Chronicle, st. 9.

Between the last dandelion and violet . . . and the first spring blossom . . . there is a frozen interregnum in the vegetable world. O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 179.

interreign† (in′tėr-rān), n. [< F. interrègne = Sp. Pg. It. interregno, < L. interregnum, interregnum: see interregnum.] An interregnum.

Comparing that confused anarchy with this interreign.
Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

interrelate (in″tėr-rē-lāt′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interrelated, ppr. interrelating. [< inter- + relate.] To bring into reciprocal relation; connect intimately. [Rare.]

Spaces intervening between the areas may readily be conceived to be filled with fibrils and cells that interrelate these and other functions complexly.
Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 616.

It is a sine qua non that the experiments made with the object of solving such problems be throughout logically interrelated. Nature, XXXVII. 267.

interrelation (in″tėr-rē-lā′shọn), n. [< inter- + relation.] Reciprocal relation or correspondence; interconnection. Athenæum.

interrelationship (in″tėr-rē-lā′shọn-ship), n. [< interrelation + -ship.] The state of being interrelated; the condition of reciprocal relation or correspondence.

The interrelationship between Matthew, Mark, and Luke is perhaps the most complicated . . . problem in the history of literature. Schaff, Hist. Christ. Church, I. § 79.

interrepellent (in″tėr-rē-pel′ẹnt), a. [< inter- + repellent.] Mutually or reciprocally repellent. De Quincey. [Rare.]

interrer (in-tėr′ėr), n. One who inters or buries. Cotgrave.

interrex (in′tėr-reks), n.; pl. interreges (in-tėr-rē′jēz). [L., < inter, between, + rex, king: see rex.] In ancient Rome, a regent; a magistrate who governed during an interregnum. On the death of a king ten interreges were appointed by the senate, each holding the chief power five days, until a new king nominated by them was approved by the curiæ. Under the republic interreges were appointed to hold the comitia when successors to the consulate failed to be elected at the proper time, or a vacancy occurred otherwise.

interrogate (in-ter′ō-gāt), v.; pret. and pp. interrogated, ppr. interrogating. [< L. interrogatus, pp. of interrogare (> It. interrogare = Sp. Pg. interrogar = Pr. interrogar, enterrogar = F. interroger), ask, question, < inter, between, + rogare, ask: see rogation.] I. trans. To question; examine by asking questions: as, to interrogate a witness.

The traveller, . . . coming to the fortified habitation of a chieftain, would probably have been interrogated from the battlements. Johnson, Jour. to Western Isles.

=Syn. Inquire, Question, etc. (see ask[1]); catechize.

II. intrans. To ask questions.

By his instructions touching the queen of Naples, it seemeth he could interrogate touching beauty.
Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII.

interrogate† (in-ter′ō-gāt), n. [< interrogate, v.] A question; an interrogation. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iii. 10.

interrogatedness (in-ter′ō-gā-ted-nes), n. That character of testimony which consists in its having been elicited, or at least supplemented and checked, by interrogation. Bentham, Judicial Evidence, II. iv. § 6.

interrogatee (in-ter″ō-gā-tē′), n. [< interrogate + -ee[1].] One who is interrogated. [Rare.]

interrogation (in-ter-ō-gā′shọn), n. [= F. interrogation = Pr. interrogatio, enterrogacio = Sp. interrogación = Pg. interrogação = It. interrogazione, < L. interrogatio(n-), a questioning, a question, < interrogare, question: see interrogate.] 1. The act of questioning; examination by questions.

Pray you, spare me
Further interrogation, which boots nothing Except to turn a trial to debate. Byron.

2. A question put; an inquiry.

How demurely soever such men may pretend to sanctity, that interrogation of God presses hard upon them, Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights? Government of the Tongue.

3. Any proposition doubted or called in question in the disputations with which, during the prevalence of scholasticism, boys were exercised in the schools.—4. See interrogation-point.—Fallacy of many interrogations. See fallacies in things (7), under fallacy.—Note or mark of interrogation. Same as interrogation-point.

We are compelled to read them with more alertness, and with a greater number of mental notes of interrogation.
The Academy, Nov. 3, 1888, p. 283.

=Syn. 2. Query, Inquiry, etc. See question, n.

interrogation-point (in-ter-ō-gā′shon-point), n. A note, mark, or sign (?) placed after a question (or in Spanish both before and after it, in the former position inverted) in writing or printing.

interrogative (in-te-rog′a-tiv), a. and n. [= F. interrogatif = Pr. enterrogatiu = Sp. Pg. It. interrogativo, < L. interrogativus, serving to question, < interrogare, question: see interrogate.] I. a. Asking or denoting a question; pertaining to inquiry; questioning: as, an interrogative phrase, pronoun, or point; an interrogative look or tone of voice.

The regular place of the interrogative word, of whatever kind, is at the beginning of the sentence, or as near it as possible. Whitney, Essentials of Eng. Grammar, § 470.

Interrogative accent. See accent, 7.—Interrogative judgment, in logic, a mental product corresponding to an interrogative sentence: opposed to determinative judgment (which see, under determinative).

II. n. 1. In gram., a word (pronoun, pronominal adjective, or adverb) implying interrogation, or used for asking a question: as, who? what? which? why?—2. A question; an interrogation. [Rare.]

"Who are you, sir, and what is your business?" demanded the Marquis. . . . "That is a fair interrogative, my lord," answered Dalgetty.
Scott, Legend of Montrose, xii.

interrogatively (in-te-rog′a-tiv-li), adv. In an interrogative manner; in the form of a question; questioningly.

interrogator (in-ter′ō-gā-tor), n. [= F. interrogateur = It. interrogatore, < LL. interrogator, < L. interrogare, question: see interrogate.] One who interrogates or asks questions.

interrogatory (in-te-rog′a-tō-ri), a. and n. [= F. interrogatoire = Pr. interrogatori = Sp. Pg. It. interrogatorio, < LL. interrogatorius, consisting of questions, < L. interrogare, question: see interrogate.] I. a. Interrogative; containing or expressing a question; pertaining to or consisting of questions: as, an interrogatory sentence; the interrogatory method of instruction.

II. n.; pl. interrogatories (-riz). A question or inquiry; in law, usually, a question in writing: as, to file interrogatories to be answered by a party or a witness. Formerly also intergatory.

Their speech was cut off with this one briefe and short interrogatorie: whether Philip would quit those three cities aforesaid or no? Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 832.

Cross interrogatory. See cross[1], a.—Demurrer to interrogatory. See demurrer[2]. = Syn. Query, Inquiry, etc. See question, n.

in terrorem (in te-rō′rem). [L.: in, in, to, for; terrorem, acc. of terror, terror: see terror.] As a warning; by way of intimidation.

interrule (in-tėr-rōl′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interruled, ppr. interruling. [< inter- + rule.] To rule between; mark with intervening ruled lines.

The picture being completed, it is ruled over in squares, each of about twelve inches. These are again interruled with small squares. Ure, Dict., III. 368.

interrupt (in-te-rupt′), v. t. [ME. interrupten (corruptly intrippe), < L. interruptus, pp. of interrumpere (> It. interrompere = Pg. interromper = Sp. interrumpir = Pr. entrerompre = F. interrompre), break apart, break to pieces, break off, interrupt, < inter, between, + rumpere, break: see rupture. Cf. abrupt, corrupt, etc.] 1. To make a break or gap in; break the course or continuity of; hence, to break off; bring to a pause or cessation; hinder the continuation of.

I'll interrupt his reading. Shak., T. and C., iii. 3, 93.

This would surpass Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
In our confusion. Milton, P. L., ii. 371.

2. To break in upon or disturb the action of; stop or hinder in doing something.

Intrippe no man where so that thou wende,
No man in his tale, til he haue maade an eende.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 31.

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you. Shak., Pericles, v. 1, 167.

Th' emphatic speaker . . . had a world of talk
With one he stumbled on, and lost his walk.
I interrupt him with a sudden bow,
Adieu, dear sir! lest you should lose it now.
Cowper, Conversation, l. 281.

interrupt† (in-te-rupt′), a. [ME. interupt, inteript, < OF. interrupt; < L. interruptus, pp.: see the verb.] 1. Gaping; spreading apart, as the sides of anything.

Our adversary, whom no bounds
Prescribed, no bars of hell, nor all the chains
Heap'd on him there, nor yet the main abyss Wide, interrupt, can hold. Milton, P. L., iii. 84.

2. Irregular; interrupted.

Menacing, ghastly looks; broken pace; interrupt, precipitate, half turns. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 612.

3. Disturbed; interrupted.

We will do to yow oure homage and of yow holde oure honoures, and we be-seke yow to respite youre sacringe in to Pentecoste, ne therfore shull ye nothynge be inteript, but that ye shull be oure lorde and oure kynge.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 105.

They are in paradise for the time, and cannot well endure to be interrupt. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 246.

interrupted (in-te-rup′ted), p. a. 1. Broken; intermitted; fitful; acting irregularly or unequally.

How is it that some wits are interrupted,
That now they dazzled are, now clearly see?
Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, xxii.

All is silent, save the faint
And interrupted murmur of the bee.
Bryant, Summer Wind.

2. In bot.: (a) Having the principal leaflets divided by intervals of smaller ones: applied to compound leaves. (b) Having the larger spikes divided by a series of smaller ones: applied to flowers: opposed to continuous.—3. In zoöl., suddenly stopped; having a gap or hiatus: as, an interrupted stria.—Interrupted cadence, current, screw, etc. See the nouns.

interruptedly (in-te-rup′ted-li), adv. With breaks or interruptions.—Interruptedly pinnate, in bot., same as abruptly pinnate (which see, under abruptly).

interrupter (in-te-rup′tėr), n. One who or that which interrupts. Also interruptor.

For, on the theator of France,
The tragedie was ment
Of England too: wherefore our queene
Her interruptors sent.
Warner, Albion's England, x.

Specifically—(a) In elect., any instrument for interrupting an electrical current, as the automatic arrangement used with the induction-coil.

The interruptors of induction coils are usually self-acting. S. P. Thompson, Elect. and Mag., p. 364.

(b) In milit. engin., an electrical device which forms part of a system of apparatus for determining the velocity of projectiles, used in connection with wire targets and chronographs. The passage of the ball or shell through a target serves to interrupt a closed electrical circuit, and thus release the automatic registering mechanism of the chronograph at the instant of passage. Often a number of targets are used, placed at accurately measured and uniform intervals in the path of the projectile, and the registered data serve as a basis for determining the variation of velocity in different parts of the path.

interruption (in-te-rup′shon), n. [< ME. interrupcion, < OF. (also F.) interruption = Sp. interrupción = Pg. interrupção = It. interruzione, < L. interruptio(n-), an interrupting, < interrumpere, pp. interruptus, interrupt: see interrupt.] 1. The act of interrupting or breaking in upon anything.

Places severed from the continent by the interruption of the sea. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Dissonance, and captious art,
And snip-snap short, and interruption smart.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 240.

2. The state of being interrupted; the state of being impeded, checked, or stopped.

Had they held a steady hand upon his Majtys restauration, as they might easily have don, the Church of England had emerg'd and flourish'd without interruption.
Evelyn, Diary, March 12, 1672.

Persons who eminently love, and meet with fatal interruptions of their happiness when they least expect it.
Steele, Tatler, No. 82.

3. Obstruction or hindrance caused by a breaking in upon any course, current, progress, or motion; stoppage: as, interruptions in the execution of a work.

They shall haue full power to geue sentence vpon ye same, & that sentence to be obeyed w'out interrupcion.
Fabyan, Car. 6, an. 1377. (Richardson.)

4. Cessation; intermission; interval.

Amidst the interruptions of his sorrow, seeing his penitent overwhelmed with grief, he was only able to bid her be comforted. Addison, Spectator.

No one, in the face of Church-history, can or does maintain that all interruptions of intercommunion destroy unity. Pusey, Eirenicon, p. 62.

5†. A prorogation of Parliament: used in the seventeenth century. Nares.

interruptive (in-te-rup′tiv), a. [< interrupt + -ive.] Tending to interrupt; interrupting.

Interruptive forces. Bushnell.

interruptively (in-te-rup′tiv-li), adv. By interruption; so as to interrupt.

interruptor (in-te-rup′tor), n. See interrupter.

interscalm (in′tėr-skalm), n. [< L. interscalmium, the space between two oars in a galley, < inter, between, + scalmus, a peg to which an oar was strapped, a thole, a thole-pin.] In an ancient Roman galley, the space between any two successive oars.

interscapilium (in″tėr-skā-pil′i-um), n.; pl. interscapilia (-ä). [L., the space between the shoulders, < inter, between, + scapulæ, shoulder-blades: see scapula.] Same as interscapulum.

interscapula, n. Plural of interscapulum.

interscapular (in-tėr-skap′ū-lär), a. and n. [< inter- + scapula + -ar[3].] I. a. Situated between the scapulæ or shoulder-blades.

II. n. In ornith., an interscapular feather; one of the feathers of the interscapulum.

interscapulary (in-tėr-skap′ū-lā-ri), a. and n. Same as interscapular.

interscapulum (in-tėr-skap′ū-lum), n.; pl. interscapula (-lä). [NL., < L. inter, between, + scapulæ, shoulder-blades: see scapula. Cf. interscapilium.] In ornith., the fore part of the back; the dorsum anticum; the region of the upper back between the shoulder-blades. Also interscapilium. See cut under bird[1].

interscendent (in-tėr-sen′dent), a. [< L. inter, between, + scanden(t-)s, ppr. of scandere (in comp. -scendere), climb: see scan.] In alg., containing radicals in the exponents: thus, $x^{\sqrt{2}}$ or $x^{\sqrt{a}}$ is an interscendent expression: so called by Leibnitz as being intermediate between algebraic and transcendental quantities, but properly belonging to the latter category.

interscene (in′tėr-sēn), n. [< inter- + scene.] A pause, interval, or transition between two scenes, as in a play. Amer. Jour. Philol., IX. 348.

interscind† (in-tėr-sind′), v. t. [< L. interscindere, cut off, separate, break down, < inter, between, + scindere, cut: see scission. Cf. excind.] To cut in two in the midst. Bailey, 1731.

interscribe† (in-tėr-skrīb′), v. t. [< L. interscribere, write between, < inter, between, + scribere, write: see scribe.] To write between; interline. Bailey, 1731.

interscription† (in-tėr-skrip′shon), n. [< L. as if interscriptio*(n-), < interscribere, pp. interscriptus, write between, < inter, between, + scribere, write.] A writing between, or interlining. Bailey, 1731.

inter se (in′tėr sē). [L.] Among or between themselves.

intersecant (in-tėr-sē′kant), a. [= OF. intersequant, < L. intersecan(t-)s, ppr. of intersecare, cut between, cut off: see intersect.] Dividing into parts; cutting across; crossing. [Rare.]

intersect (in-tėr-sekt′), v. [< L. intersectus, pp. of intersecare (> It. intersecare = Sp. (obs.) intersecar), cut between, cut off, < inter, between, + secare, cut: see section.] I. trans. 1. To cut or divide into parts; lie or pass across: as, the ecliptic intersects the equator.

The surface of Norway, as it is shown flat upon a chart, is lined and intersected by these water-ways as the surface of England is by railways. Froude, Sketches, p. 64.

2. To cut apart; separate by intervening. [Rare.]

Lands intersected by a narrow frith
Abhor each other. Cowper, Task, ii. 16.

II. intrans. To cut into one another; meet and cross each other; have, as two geometrical loci, one or more points in common: as, intersecting lines. In the ordinary language of geometry a curve and its tangent are not said to intersect, but in a more careful use of language they no doubt would be said to do so. See extract under intersection, 2.

intersection (in-tėr-sek′shon), n. [= F. intersection = Sp. intersección = Pg. intersecção = It. intersecazione, intersezione, < L. intersectio(n-), < intersecare, cut between, intersect: see intersect.] 1. The act of intersecting; a cutting or dividing, or cutting across: as, the intersection of a map by lines of latitude and longitude.

The frequent intersections of the sense which are the necessary effects of rhyme. Johnson, Thomson.

2. A place of crossing; specifically, a point common to two lines or a line and a surface, or a line common to two surfaces: as, a house at the intersection of two roads; the intersection of two geometrical lines or figures.

The locus (if any) corresponding to a given aggregate relation is the locus common to and contained in each of the loci corresponding to the several constituent relations respectively; or, what is the same thing, it is the intersection of these loci.
Cayley, On Abstract Geometry, § 27, Phil. Trans., 1870, p. 55.

3. In logic, the relation of two classes each of which partly excludes and partly includes the other.—Apparent intersection, a point where two curves not in one plane appear to intersect when viewed from any center of projection.

intersectional (in-tėr-sek′shon-al), a. [< intersection + -al.] Relating to or formed by an intersection or intersections.

intersegmental (in-tėr-seg′men-tạl), a. [< L. inter, between, + segmentum, segment, + -al.] Pertaining to two or more segments; situated between, separating, or connecting segments: as, an intersegmental septum between myotomes or other metameric parts.

interseminate† (in-tėr-sem′i-nāt), v. t. [< L. interseminatus, pp. of interseminare, sow between or at intervals, < inter, between, + seminare, sow: see seminate.] To sow between or among. Bailey, 1731.

interseptal (in-tėr-sep′tạl), a. [< inter- + septum + -al.] Situated between septa.

The interruption of the cavities of the loculi [in Octocoralla] may be more complete by the formation of shelves stretching from septum to septum, but lying at different heights in adjacent loculi. These are interseptal dissepiments. Huxley, Encyc. Brit., I. 130.

intersert† (in-tėr-sėrt′), v. t. [< L. intersertus, pp. of interserere (> It. interserire = Sp. interserir), put or place between, < inter, between, + serere, join, weave: see series. Cf. insert.] To insert, or set or put in between other things.

If I may intersert a short speculation. Brerewood.

intersertion† (in-tėr-sėr′shọn), n. [< L. as if intersertio(n-)*, < interserere, put or place between: see intersert.] The act of inserting between other things, or that which is inserted.

They have some intersertions which are plainly spurious, yet the substance of them cannot be taxt for other then holy and ancient. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

interset† (in-tėr-set′), v. t. [< inter- + set[1].] To set or put between. Daniel, Civil Wars, viii.

intershock† (in-tėr-shok′), v. t. [< inter- + shock[1].] To shock mutually. Daniel, Chorus in Philotas.

intersidereal (in″tėr-sī-dē′rē-ạl), a. [< L. inter, between, + sidus (sider-), star: see sidereal.] Situated between or among the stars; interstellar: as, intersidereal space.

intersocial (in-tėr-sō′shạl), a. [< inter- + social.] Pertaining to intercourse or association; having mutual relations or intercourse; social. [Rare.]

intersomnious (in-tėr-som′ni-us), a. [< L. inter, between, + somnus, sleep: see somnolent.] Occurring between periods of sleep; done or happening in a wakeful interval. Dublin Rev. [Rare.]

intersonant (in-tėr′sọ-nant), a. [< L. intersonan(t-)s, ppr. of intersonare, sound between or among, < inter, between, + sonare, sound: see sonant.] Sounding between. Imp. Dict.

intersour† (in-tėr-sour′), v. t. [< inter- + sour.] To mix with something sour. Daniel, Octavia to M. Antonius.

interspace (in′tėr-spās), n. [< ME. enterspace, < LL. interspatium, space between, interval, < L. inter, between, + spatium, space: see space.] 1. A space between objects; an intervening space; an interval.

Thyne enterspace in oon maner thou kepe.
Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 47.

Posteriorly to the mouth, we come, in the larva, to a rather wide interspace without any apparent articulation or organ. Darwin, Cirripedia, p. 26.

The lucid interspace of world and world,
Where never creeps a cloud.
Tennyson, Lucretius.

Specifically—2. In entom., the space between two longitudinal veins or veinlets of the wings: used especially in describing the Lepidoptera.

interspace (in-tėr-spās′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interspaced, ppr. interspacing. [< interspace, n.] To make or fill the space between; occupy the interval between.

Fog and storms blur the glory of the sky, and foul days . . . interspace the bright and fair.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., p. 192.

A series of circular zinc plates interspaced with the platinums. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV. 58.

interspatial (in-tėr-spā′shạl), a. [< LL. interspatium, interspace, + -al.] Of or pertaining to an interspace; in entom., situated on the interspaces of the wing: as, interspatial dots.

interspatially (in-tėr-spā′shạl-i), adv. In the interspace or interspaces; in entom., so as to correspond to the interspaces of an insect's wing: as, a mark interspatially angulated.

interspecific (in″tėr-spē-sif′ik), a. [< inter- + specific.] Existing between species.

As the description of the relations of organs characterized the physiology of the individual, so that of interspecific adaptations is the physiology of the race.
Nature, XXXIX. 287.

interspeech (in′tėr-spēch), n. [< inter- + speech.] A speech interposed between others. Blount.

intersperse (in-tėr-spėrs′), v. t.; pret. and pp. interspersed, ppr. interspersing. [< L. interspersus, pp. of interspergere, scatter or sprinkle between or among, < inter, between, + spargere, scatter, sprinkle: see sparse. Cf. asperse, disperse.] 1. To scatter between; place here and there among other things: as, to intersperse shrubs among trees.

There, interspersed in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise, that shun each other's shades.
Pope, Windsor Forest, l. 21.

2. To diversify by scattering or disposing various objects here and there.

The actors . . . interspersed their hymns with sarcastic jokes and altercation. Goldsmith, Origin of Poetry.

interspersion (in-tėr-spėr′shọn), n. [< intersperse + -ion. Cf. aspersion, dispersion, etc.] The act of interspersing, scattering, or placing here and there.

These sentiments have obtained almost in all ages and places, though not without interspersion of certain corrupt additaments. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 62.

For want of the interspersion of now and then an elegiack or a lyrick ode. Watts, Improvement of Mind.

interspicular (in-tėr-spik′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + spicule + -ar[3].] Situated between or among spicules, as of a sponge.

interspinal (in-tėr-spī′nạl), a. [= It. interspinale, < NL. interspinalis, < L. inter, between, + spina, spine: see spinal.] In anat., situated between spines—that is, between spinous processes of successive vertebræ: as, an interspinal muscle.

interspinalis (in″tėr-spi-nā′lis), n.; pl. interspinales (-lēz). [NL.: see interspinal.] One of a number of small muscles situated between the spinous processes of any two contiguous vertebræ.

interspinous (in-tėr-spī′nus), a. [< L. inter, between, + spina, spine: see spinous.] Situated between spines; interspinal. Specifically applied in ichthyology to certain bones of the dorsal fin of a teleost fish which are developed between the spines of the vertebræ. See the quotation. See also shackle-joint.

When the dorsal fin exists in the trunk, its rays are articulated with and supported by elongated and pointed bones—the interspinous bones. . . . Not unfrequently, the articulation between the fin-rays and the interspinous bone is effected by the interlocking of two rings, one belonging to the base of the fin-ray and its included dermal cartilage, the other to the summit of the interspinous bone—like the adjacent links of a chain.
Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 131.

interspiration† (in″tėr-spi-rā′shọn), n. [< L. interspiratio(n-), < interspirare, fetch breath between, < inter, between, + spirare, breathe: see spirant. Cf. inspiration, etc.] A breathing-spell; an interval of rest or relief.

What gracious respites are here, what favourable interspirations, as if God bade me to recollect myself.
Bp. Hall, Satan's Fiery Darts Quenched, ii.

interstaminal (in-tėr-stam′i-nạl), a. [< L. inter, between, + stamen, a thread (NL. stamen), + -al.] In bot., situated between the stamens. Thomas, Med. Dict. [Rare.]

interstate (in′tėr-stāt), a. [< inter- + state.] Existing or taking place between different states, or persons in different states; especially, carried on between the States of the American Union, or by persons in one State with persons in another.—Interstate commerce. See commerce.—Interstate Commerce Commission, a body of five commissioners appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, under act of Congress of February 4th, 1887. The commission is charged with the regulation of the business of common carriers as provided for under this act, with the investigation of complaints, and is required to render an annual report to the Department of the Interior.

interstellar (in-tėr-stel′ạr), a. [< L. inter, between, + stella, star: see stella.] Existing between stars; situated among the stars: as, interstellar spaces or worlds.

Such comets as have, by a trajection through the æther, for a long time wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle, Works, I. 379.

interstellary (in-tėr-stel′ạ-ri), a. Same as interstellar.

intersternal (in-tėr-stėr′nạl), a. [< inter- + sternum + -al.] 1. In anat., situated between the pieces of which the breast-bone is composed: as, an intersternal articulation.—2. In zoöl., situated between the sternites or inferomedian parts of the successive somites of an arthropod.

When the abdomen is made straight, it will be found that these intersternal membranes are stretched as far as they will yield. Huxley, Crayfish, p. 97.

interstice (in′tėr-stis or in-tėr′stis), n. [< F. interstice = Sp. Pg. intersticio = It. interstizio, < L. interstitium, a space between, < intersistere, pp. interstitus, stand between, < inter, between, + sistere, stand: see sist, assist, etc.] 1. An intervening space; an opening; especially, a small or narrow space between apposed surfaces or things; a gap, chink, slit, crevice, or cranny.

Net. . . . Texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals. . . . Anything made with interstitial vacuities. . . . Network. . . . Anything reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.
Johnson, Dictionary.

I will point out the interstices of time which ought to be between one citation and another. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Every change of atmospheric pressure produces, from day to day, exits or entrances of the air into all the interstices of the soil. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 7.

2. In canon law, the interval of time required for promotion from a lower to a higher degree of orders.

intersticed (in′tėr-stist or in-tėr′stist), a. [< interstice + -ed[2].] Having an interstice or interstices: as, an intersticed ceiling; intersticed columns.

interstinctive† (in-tėr-stingk′tiv), a. [< L. interstinctus, pp. of interstinguere, separate, divide, distinguish, mark off by pricking, < inter, between, + stinguere, prick: see distinguish, extinguish.] Distinguishing; dividing.

The business of this letter . . . is to ask the favour of you . . . to consult that piece of Cyprian called "Expositio Bissexti" . . . whether the notes of Parenthesis ( ) be used; and what care is taken of the interstinctive points , ; : .
Wallis, To Dr. Smith (Aubrey's Letters, I. 78).

interstitial (in-tėr-stish′al), a. [< L. interstitium, interstice, + -al.] 1. Pertaining to, situated in, or constituting an interstice or interstices: as, interstitial change.

How many chasms he would find of wide and continued vacuity, and how many interstitial spaces unfilled, even in the most tumultuous hurries of business.
Johnson, Rambler, No. 8.

These snatches and interstitial spaces—moments literal and fleet—these are all the chances that we can borrow or create for the luxury of learning.
R. Choate, Addresses, p. 211.

2. In entom., situated between striæ, etc.: as, interstitial punctures on the elytra of beetles.—Interstitial emphysema. See emphysema.—Interstitial growth or absorption (as of bone), growth or absorption taking place throughout the substance of the organ, and not merely on its surface.—Interstitial inflammation, inflammation in which the morbid changes are diffuse and involve mainly the interstitial connective tissue, as distinct both from a circumscribed abscess and from parenchymatous inflammation. In this sense we have such terms as interstitial hepatitis, interstitial nephritis, interstitial pneumonia.—Interstitial lines, in entom., the spaces between striæ.—Interstitial tissue, the fine connective tissue which occurs between the cells of other tissues and binds them together and supports their blood- and lymph-vessels.

interstitially (in-tėr-stish′ạl-i), adv. In or by interstices; in interstitial spaces.

It [water] may be deposited interstitially.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 303.

This thickening takes place . . . interstitially.
R. Bentley, Botany, p. 19.

Chalcedonic quartz is also present, sometimes interstitially. Geol. Jour., XLIV. 35.

interstition†, n. [ME., < L. interstitio(n-), a pause, interval, < intersistere, pause: see interstice.] Interval.

The firste periferie of all Engendreth mist, and ouermore
The dewes, and the frostes hore,
After thilke intersticion,
In whiche thei take impression.
Gower, Conf. Amant., vii.

interstratification (in-tėr-strat″i-fi-kā′shọn), n. [< interstratify: see -fication.] The state of being interstratified, or of lying between other strata; in geol., the condition of a bed, stratum, or member of an aqueous deposit, with reference to the overlying and underlying beds.

The interstratification . . . of loess with layers of pumice and volcanic ashes.
Sir C. Lyell, Manual of Elem. Geology, x.

interstratified (in-tėr-strat′i-fīd), a. [< interstratify + -ed[2].] Inclosed between or alternating with other strata; forming part of a group of stratified rocks. Also interbedded.

interstratify (in-tėr-strat′i-fī), v.; pret. and pp. interstratified, ppr. interstratifying. [< inter- + stratify.] I. trans. In geol., to cause to occupy a position among or between other strata; intermix as regards strata.

Adjacent to Milford the red sand is abundantly interstratified with the white, with which are also occasional seams of coarse pebbles.
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXIX. 42.

Dolomitic limestone is interstratified with the gneissic rocks. Nature, XXX. 45.

But interstratified with these [sandstones and shales] are many beds containing marine fossils.
A. H. Green, Phys. Geol., p. 302.

II. intrans. To assume a position between or among other strata.

interstrial (in-tėr-strī′al), a. [< inter- + stria + -al.] In entom., situated between striæ; interstitial: as, interstrial punctures on the elytra.

intersynapticular (in-tėr-sin-ap-tik′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + synapticula + *-ar*3.] Situated between or among synapticulæ.

These ligaments passing down through the intersynapticular spaces to be fastened, according to their position.
G. C. Bourne, Micros. Science, XXVII. 303.

intertalk† (in-tėr-tâk′), v. i. [< inter- + talk.] To talk to one another; exchange conversation.

Among the myrtles as I walk'd,
Love and my sighs thus intertalk'd.
Carew, Enquiry.

intertangle (in-tėr-tang′gl), v. t.; pret. and pp. intertangled, ppr. intertangling. [Formerly also entertangle; < inter- + tangle.] To intertwist; tangle together.

Now also haue ye in euery song or ditty concorde by compasse & concorde entertangled and a mixt of both.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 69.

Their intertangled roots of love.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3.

intertarsal (in-tėr-tär′sal), a. [< inter- + tarsus + -al.] 1. Situated between the proximal and distal rows of tarsal bones; mediotarsal: as, the intertarsal joint of a bird or a reptile. —2. Situated between or among any tarsal bones: as, intertarsal ligaments.

intertentacular (in″tėr-ten-tak′ū-lär), a. [< L. inter, between, + NL. tentaculum, tentacle, + *-ar*3.] Placed between tentacles.—Intertentacular organ of Farre, a ciliated passage opening between two tentacles of the lophophore in Membranipora, Alcyonidium, and other forms of polyzoans.

intertergal (in-tėr-tėr′gal), a. [< L. inter, between, + tergum, back, + -al.] Situated between successive terga or tergites of an arthropod.

The transparent layer of the cuticle and the uppermost layer of the cells of the hypodermis are continued into the intertergal membrane. Micros. Science, XXIX. iii. 230.

interterritorial (in-tėr-ter-i-tō′ri-al), a. [< inter- + territory + -al.] Between or among territories, or the people of different territories.

A call for an inter-territorial convention of the four north-western Territories — the two Dakotahs, Montana, and Washington. Philadelphia Ledger, Dec. 4, 1888.

intertex† (in-tėr-teks′), v. t. [< L. intertexere, interweave, intertwine, < inter, between, + texere, weave: see text.] To interweave; intertwine.

Lilies and roses, flowers of either sex,
The bright bride's path, embellished more than thine,
With light of love this pair doth intertex.
B. Jonson, Underwoods, xciv.

intertexture (in-tėr-teks′tūr), n. [< intertex, after texture.] The act of interweaving; the condition of being interwoven; joint or combined texture.

They understood not the salt and ingenuity of a witty and useful answer or reply, as is to be seen in the intertextures of Aristophanes' comedies.
Jer. Taylor, Works, I. xxiii.

And the close intertexture of the several parts is as strong a proof of unity in the design and execution as the intense life and consistency in the conception of Achilles.
De Quincey, Homer, iii.

intertidal (in-tėr-tī′dal), a. [< inter- + tide + -al.] Living between high-water mark and low-water mark.

At low tide the limpet (being a strictly intertidal organism) is exposed to the air. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 648.

intertie (in′tėr-tī), n. [< inter- + tie.] A short piece of timber used in roofing, and in timber-framing generally, to bind upright posts together.

intertissued† (in-tėr-tish′ūd), a. [< inter- + tissued.] Same as entertissued.

intertrabecular (in″tėr-trā-bek′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + trabecula + *-ar*3.] Situated between the cranial trabeculæ.

intertraffic (in′tėr-traf-ik), n. [< inter- + traffic, n.] Traffic between two or more persons or places; reciprocal trade.

intertraffic (in-tėr-traf′ik), v. i.; pret. and pp. intertrafficked, ppr. intertrafficking. [< inter- + traffic, v.] To trade together.

And intertrafficke with them, tunne for pound.
Davies, Microcosmos, p. 61.

intertranspicuous (in″tėr-trans-pik′ū-us), a. [< inter- + transpicuous.] Transpicuous between. Shelley. [Rare.]

intertransversalis (in-tėr-trans-vėr-sā′lis), n.; pl. intertransversales (-lēz). [NL., < intertransversus, q. v.] In anat., one of a series of muscles situated between the transverse processes of successive vertebræ.

intertransversarius (in-tėr-trans-vėr-sā′ri-us), n.; pl. intertransversarii (-ī). [NL., < intertransversus, q. v.] Same as intertransversalis.

intertransverse (in″tėr-trans-vėrs′), a. [< NL. intertransversus, q. v.] Situated between the transverse processes of successive vertebræ: specifically applied to ligaments and muscles of the spinal column so placed.

intertransversus (in″tėr-trans-vėr′sus), n.; pl. intertransversi (-sī). [NL., < L. inter, between, + transversus, transverse: see transverse.] Same as intertransversalis.

The anterior lymph-heart; lying in an interspace between the small muscles (intertransversi).
Huxley and Martin, Elementary Biology, p. 95.

intertribal (in-tėr-trī′bal), a. [< inter- + tribe + -al.] Existing or taking place between tribes; passing from tribe to tribe: as, intertribal war or commerce.

It must ever be borne in mind that African slavery is of two distinct kinds: first, inland or intertribal slavery or serviture, which . . . is the normal condition of all rude nations divided into petty contiguous tribes.
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 443.

intertrigo (in-tėr-trī′gō), n. [L., a chafing or galling of the skin in riding, walking, etc., < inter, between, + terere, pp. tritus, rub: see trite.] A slight inflammation of the skin, occurring in creases or folds where one part of skin rubs on another. B. W. Richardson, Prevent. Med., p. 252.

intertrochanteric (in-tėr-trō-kan-ter′ik), a. [< inter- + trochanter + -ic.] In anat., situated between two trochanters: specifically applied to a line or ridge between the greater and the lesser trochanter of the femur. See cut under trochanter.

The posterior intertrochanteric ridge.
N. Y. Med. Jour., XL. 621.

intertrochlear (in-tėr-trok′lē-är), a. [< inter- + trochlear.] Fitting into the middle of a trochlear or pulley-like surface of a joint: as, the intertrochlear ridge along the greater sigmoid cavity of the ulna.

A tongue and groove ("intertrochlear crest") in the elbow-joint. E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 348.

intertropical (in-tėr-trop′i-kal), a. [< inter- + tropic + -al.] Situated between the tropics.

Round many intertropical islands, . . . the bottom of the sea is entirely coated by irregular masses of coral.
Darwin, Coral Reefs, p. 79.

Intertropical portions of the old world. Science, III. 606.

intertubular (in-tėr-tū′bū-lär), a. [< inter- + tubule + *-ar*3.] Situated between tubes: as, the intertubular cells.

interturb†, v. t. [< L. interturbare, disturb by interruption, < inter, between, + turbare, disturb, trouble: see trouble, disturb.] To disturb.

Even so do I interturb and trouble you with my babbling. J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 22.

interturber†, n. A disturber.

The world percase fantazing us to be an interturber of the peace rather than an indifferent mediator.
Henry VIII., To Wyatt, May, 1538.

intertwine (in-tėr-twīn′), v.; pret. and pp. intertwined, ppr. intertwining. [< inter- + twine, v.] I. trans. To unite by twining or twisting one with another; interlace.

Wherever, under some concourse of shades,
Whose branching arms thick intertwined might shield
From dews and damps of night his shelter'd head.
Milton, P. R., iv. 405.

II. intrans. To twine together; be interwoven: as, intertwining vines.

My dwelling stands — a sweet recluse abode!
And o'er my darken'd casement intertwine
The fragrant briar, the woodbine, and the vine.
Scott, Eclogues, i.

intertwine (in′tėr-twīn), n. [< intertwine, v.] A mutual or reciprocal twining or winding. [Rare.]

III

Such intertwine beseems triumphal wreaths Strewed before thy advancing.
Coleridge, To Wordsworth.

intertwiningly (in-tėr-twī′ning-li), adv. By intertwining or being intertwined.

intertwistingly (in-tėr-twis′ting-li), adv. By intertwisting or being intertwisted.

interunion (in-tėr-ū′nyon), n. [< inter- + union.] An interblending. [Rare.]

The . . . more eloquent interunion of human voices in the choir. G. W. Cable, Creole Days, p. 18.

interval (in′tėr-val), n. [Formerly also intervall; = F. intervalle = Pr. entreval = Sp. intervalo = Pg. It. intervallo, < L. intervallum, space between, interval, distance, interval of time, pause, difference, lit. space between two palisades or walls, < inter, between, + vallum, palisade, wall: see *wall*1.] 1. A vacant or unobstructed space between points or objects; an intervening vacancy; an open reach or stretch between limits: as, the intervals between the ranks of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval. Milton, P. L., vi. 105.

2. Specifically, a low level tract of land, as along a river, between hills, etc. Also intervale. [U. S.]

The winding Pemigewasset, . . .
. . . whitening down its rocks,
Or lazily gliding through its intervals.
Whittier, Bridal of Pennacook.

In a green rolling interval, planted with noble trees and flanked by moderate hills, stands the vast white caravansary. C. D. Warner, Their Pilgrimage, p. 210.

There was no wind, except in the open glades between the woods, where the frozen lakes spread out like meadow intervals. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 22.

3. Any dividing tract in space, time, or degree; an intervening space, period, or state; a separating reach or stretch of any kind: with reference either to the space itself or to the points of separation or division: as, an interval of rocky ground between meadows; to fill up an interval in conversation with music; an interval of ease or of relapse in disease; a lucid interval in delirium; to set trees at intervals of fifty feet; to breathe only at long intervals; the clock strikes at intervals of an hour.

This is the freshest, the most busie and stirring intervall or time betweene, that husbandmen have.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xviii. 26.

Short as the interval is since I last met you in this place on a similar occasion, the events which have filled up that interval have not been unimportant. Canning.

There seems to be no interval between greatness and meanness. Emerson, Heroism.

4. Specifically, in entom., one of the spaces between longitudinal striæ of the elytra. When the striæ are regular, both they and the intervals are numbered from the suture outward. — 5. In music, the difference or distance in pitch between two tones. If the tones are sounded simultaneously, the interval is harmonic; if successively, melodic. An interval is acoustically described by the ratio between the vibration-numbers of the two tones: thus, an octave is represented by the ratio 2 : 1; a fifth, by the ratio 3 : 2, etc. Musically the intervals between the key-note of a major scale and its several tones are regarded as the standards with which all possible intervals are compared and from which they are named. The standard intervals are as follows: do to do (C to C, F to F, etc.) is called a first, prime, or unison; do to re (C to D, F to G, etc.), a second; do to mi (C to E, F to A, etc.), a third; do to fa (C to F, F to B♭, etc.), a fourth; do to do' (C to C′, F to F′, etc.), an eighth or octave, etc. These intervals are usually further designated thus: standard firsts, fourths, fifths, and octaves are perfect; standard seconds, thirds, sixths, sevenths, ninths, etc., are major. If an interval is a half-step longer than the corresponding standard interval, it is called augmented (or sharp, superfluous, extreme, redundant): thus, do to fi (C to F♯, F to B♮, etc.) is an augmented fourth; do to li (C to A♯, F to D♯, etc.) is an augmented sixth. If an interval is a half-step shorter than the corresponding major interval, it is called minor (or flat): thus, do to me (C to E♭, F to A♭, etc.) is a minor third, etc. If an interval is a half-step shorter than the corresponding perfect or minor interval, it is called diminished: thus, do to sol♭ (C to G♭, F to C♭, etc.) is a diminished fifth (also called imperfect); di to le (C♯ to A♭, F♯ to D♭, etc.) is a diminished sixth, etc. (This nomenclature is obviously inconsistent, and another is also in use, according to which all standard intervals are called major, all a half-step longer than the corresponding major intervals are called augmented, all a half-step shorter than the corresponding major are called minor, and all a half-step shorter than the corresponding minor are called diminished.) A given interval is measured and named by comparison with a major scale based on the lower tone of the interval. Intervals not greater than an octave are called simple; those greater than an octave, compound — compound intervals being reducible to simple ones by subtracting one or more octaves. When the upper tone of a simple interval is transposed an octave downward or its lower tone an octave upward, the interval is said to be inverted: inverted firsts become octaves, seconds become sevenths, thirds become sixths, etc.; and perfect intervals remain perfect, major intervals become minor, minor intervals become major, augmented intervals become diminished, and diminished intervals become augmented. Intervals are consonant or dissonant: the perfect consonances are standard firsts, fourths, fifths, and octaves: the imperfect consonances are major or minor thirds and sixths; and the dissonances are major or minor seconds and sevenths, with all augmented and diminished intervals. The acoustical values of the more important recognized intervals are as follows:

		Pure.	Tempered.
Prime or unison	(C to C, F to F)	1:1	1:1
Augmented prime	(C to C♯, F to F♯)	24:25	$1:2^{\frac{1}{12}}$
Minor second	(C to D♭, F to G♭)	15:16	$1:2^{\frac{1}{12}}$
Major second	(C to D, F to G)	8:9 (or 9:10)	$1:2^{\frac{1}{6}}$
Augmented second	(C to D♯, F to G♯)	64:75	$1:2^{\frac{1}{4}}$
Minor third	(C to E♭, F to A♭)	5:6	$1:2^{\frac{1}{4}}$
Major third	(C to E, F to A)	4:5	$1:2^{\frac{1}{3}}$
Perfect fourth	(C to F, F to B♭)	3:4	$1:2^{\frac{5}{12}}$
Augmented fourth (tritone)	(C to F♯, F to B♮)	32:45 (or 18:25)	$1:2^{\frac{1}{2}}$
Diminished fifth	(C to G♭, F to C♭)	45:64 (or 25:36)	$1:2^{\frac{1}{2}}$
Perfect fifth	(C to G, F to C)	2:3	$1:2^{\frac{7}{12}}$
Augmented fifth	(C to G♯, F to C♯)	16:25	$1:2^{\frac{2}{3}}$
Minor sixth	(C to A♭, F to D♭)	5:8	$1:2^{\frac{2}{3}}$
Major sixth	(C to A, F to D)	3:5	$1:2^{\frac{3}{4}}$
Augmented sixth	(C to A♯, F to D♯)	128:225	$1:2^{\frac{5}{6}}$
Minor seventh	(C to B♭, F to E♭)	9:16 (or 5:9)	$1:2^{\frac{5}{6}}$
Major seventh	(C to B, F to E)	8:15	$1:2^{\frac{11}{12}}$
Diminished octave	(C to C♭, F to F♭)	135:256	$1:2^{\frac{11}{12}}$
Octave	(C to C′ F to F′)	1:2	1:2.

The values given in the first column are those of the ideal intervals, such as are secured by using pure intonation; those given in the second column are those of equally tempered intonation, such as is used on keyed instruments, like the pianoforte and the organ. (See intonation[2] and temperament.) A diatonic interval is one that occurs between two tones of a normal major or minor scale. A chromatic interval is one that occurs between a tone of such a scale and a tone foreign to that scale. An enharmonic interval is one on an instrument of fixed intonation, that is apparent only in the notation, being in fact a unison, as, on the pianoforte, the interval from F♯ to G♭. In musical science the theory of intervals is introductory to that of chords and to harmony in general.

6. In logic, a proposition. [Rare.]—Angular intervals, in astron. See angular.—At intervals. (a) After intervals. See def. 3. (b) During or between intervals; between whiles or by turns; occasionally or alternately: as, to rest at intervals.

Miriam watch'd and dozed at intervals.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

Consecutive or parallel intervals. See consecutive.—Direct interval, in music, an interval in its usual position: opposed to inverted interval. See def. 5.—Implied interval. See imply.—Natural intervals, in music, the intervals of the diatonic scale.—The extremes of an interval. See extreme.

intervale (in′tėr-vāl), n. [A var. of interval, as if < inter- + vale[1].] A low level tract of land, especially along a river; an interval. See interval, 2. [Local, U. S.]

At one place along the bank of a stream, there was a broad tract which Albert thought would make . . . "a beautiful piece of intervale."
Jacob Abbott, Mary Erskine, ii.

The woody intervale just beyond the marshy land.
The Century, XXIX. 769.

★

intervallic (in-tėr-val′ik), a. [< interval (L. intervallum) + -ic.] In music, pertaining to intervals; pertaining to pitch as distinguished from force, duration, or quality.

intervallum† (in-tėr-val′um), n. [< L. intervallum, an interval: see interval.] An interval.

I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions, which is four terms, or two actions, and a' shall laugh without intervallums.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 1, 91.

interveined (in-tėr-vānd′), a. [< inter- + veined.] Intersected with or as if with veins.

Fair champain with less rivers intervein'd.
Milton, P. R., iii. 257.

intervenant (in-tėr-vē′nant), n. [< F. intervenant, ppr. of intervenir, intervene: see intervene.] In French law, an intervener; one who intervenes.

intervene (in-tėr-vēn′), v.; pret. and pp. intervened, ppr. intervening. [= F. intervenir = Pr. intervenir, entrevenir = Sp. intervenir = Pg. intervir = It. intervenire, < L. intervenire, come between, < inter, between, + venire, come: see come.] I. intrans. 1. To come between; fall or happen between things, persons, periods, or events; be intermediate, or appear or happen intermediately.

I proceed to those errors and vanities which have intervened amongst the studies.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 38.

No pleasing intricacies intervene,
No artful wildness to perplex the scene.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 115.

Between the fall of the Duke of Bourbon and the death of Fleury, a few years of frugal and moderate government intervened.
Macaulay, Mirabeau.

2. To come between in act; act intermediately or mediatorially; interfere or interpose, as between persons, parties, or states.

Another consideration must here be interposed, concerning the intervening of presbyters in the regiment of the several churches.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 230.

But Providence himself will intervene
To throw his dark displeasure o'er the scene.
Cowper, Table-Talk, l. 444.

A magistrate possessed of the whole executive power . . . has authority to intervene between the nobles and commons.
J. Adams, Works, V. 67.

About the time Austria and Prussia proposed to the diet to intervene in the affairs of Schleswig on international grounds.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, App. ii., p. 429.

3. In law, to interpose and become a party to a suit pending between other parties: as, stockholders may intervene in a suit against directors.—Intervening subject, in contrapuntal music, an intermediate or secondary subject or theme.—Syn. 2 and 3. Interfere, Intermeddle, etc. See interpose.

II. trans. To come between; divide. [Rare.]

Self-sown woodlands of birch, alder, &c., intervening the different estates.
De Quincey.

intervene†, n. [< intervene, v.] A coming together; a meeting.

They [Buckingham and Olivarez] had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an intervene of grandees, both vehement in the parts which they swayed.
Sir H. Wotton, Reliquiæ, p. 287.

intervener (in-tėr-vē′nėr), n. One who intervenes; specifically, in law, a third person who intervenes in a suit to which he was not originally a party.

intervenience (in-tėr-vē′niens), n. [< intervenien(t) + -ce.] A coming between; intervention. [Rare.]

In respect of the intervenience of more successive instrumental causes.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 335.

intervenient (in-tėr-vē′nient), a. [< L. intervenien(t-)s, ppr. of intervenire, come between: see intervene.] Coming or being between; intervening. [Rare.]

In the mathematics, that use which is collateral and intervenient is no less worthy than that which is principal and intended.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 172.

On the horizon's verge,
O'er intervenient waste, through glimmering haze
Unquestionably kenned, that cone-shaped hill.
Wordsworth, Near Aquapendente.

intervenium (in-tėr-vē′ni-um), n.; pl. intervenia (-ä). [< L. intervenium, the space between veins (in the earth, in stones, etc.), < inter, between, + vena, vein: see vein.] In bot., the space or area occupied by parenchyma between the veins of leaves.
Lindley.

intervent† (in-tėr-vent′), v. t. [< L. interventus, pp. of intervenire, come between: see intervene.] To obstruct; thwart.

To Ida he descends, and sees from thence Juno and Pallas haste the Greeks' defence:
Whose purpose his command, by Iris given,
Doth intervent.
Chapman, Iliad, viii.

I trust there is both day and means to intervent this bargaine.
N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 56.

intervention (in-tėr-ven′shon), n. [= F. intervention = Sp. intervención = Pg. intervenção = It. intervenzione, < LL. interventio(n-), an interposition, giving security, lit. a coming between, < L. intervenire, pp. interventus, come between: see intervene.] 1. The act or state of intervening; a coming between; interposition; mediatorial interference: as, light is interrupted by the intervention of an opaque body; the intervention of one state in the affairs of another.

Till in soft steam
From Ocean's bosom his light vapours drawn With grateful intervention o'er the sky
Their veil diffusive spread.
Mallet, Amyntor and Theodora.

There was no pretext of a restraint upon the king's liberty for an armed intervention in the affairs of France.
Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 46.

Let us ever bear in mind that the doctrine of evolution has for its foundation not the admission of incessant divine interventions, but a recognition of the original, the immutable fiat of God.
J. W. Draper, Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXII. 189.

2. In law, the act by which a third person interposes and becomes a party to a suit pending between other parties.—Syn. Interference, Mediation, etc. See interposition.

interventionist (in-tėr-ven′shon-ist, n. [< intervention + -ist.] In med., one who favors interfering with the course of a disease for therapeutic purposes under certain circumstances, as contrasted with one who under these circumstances would leave the patient to nature.

interventor (in-tėr-ven′tor), n. [< L. interventor, one who comes in, a visitor, LL. a surety, an intercessor, < intervenire, pp. interventus, come between: see intervene.] 1. Eccles., same as intercessor, 2.—2. An inspector in a mine, whose duty it is to report upon the works carried on, and upon the use made of supplies.
Gregory Yale. [Western U. S.]

interventricular (in″tėr-ven-trik′ū-lär), a. [< L. inter, between, + ventriculus, ventricle, + -ar[3].] 1. In anat., placed between ventricles, as those of the heart or brain: as, an interventricular opening in the heart.—2. In entom., coming between the chambers of the dorsal vessel or heart.—Interventricular valvules, in entom., small valves opening toward the anterior end of the dorsal vessel, and separating the chambers.

intervenue†, n. [< OF. intervenue, entrevenue, intervention, < intervenu, pp. of intervenir, intervene: see intervene. Cf. avenue.] Intervention.
Blount.

intervenular (in-tėr-ven′ū-lär), a. [< inter- + venule + -ar[3].] In entom., lying between the veins of an insect's wing.

With the usual marginal row of minute black intervenular lunules.
Packard.

intervert† (in-tėr-vėrt′), v. t. [= F. intervertir, < L. intervertere, turn aside, turn in another direction, < inter, between, + vertere, turn: see verse. Cf. avert, divert, invert, etc.] To turn to another course or to another use; divert; misapply.

The good never intervert nor miscognize the favour and benefit which they have received.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 893.

intervertebra (in-tėr-vėr′tē-brä), n.; pl. intervertebræ (-brē). [NL., < L. inter, between, + vertebra, vertebra: see vertebra.] In Carus's system of classification (1828), an intervertebral element of the skull; the skeleton of a sense-organ regarded as of vertebral nature and interposed between successive cranial vertebral segments. Carus had three such intervertebræ—auditive, optic, and olfactory. The distinction is perfectly sound, and still endures, though Carus's interpretation of the homologies of the parts is abandoned. The three intervertebræ are now regarded as the skeletons of the ear, eye, and nose: namely, the auditory or otic capsule or otocrane (the petrosal or petromastoid part of the temporal bone), the sclerotic coat of the eyeball (extensively ossified in many animals), and the ethmoid bone (mesethmoid and pair of ethmoturbinals).

intervertebral (in-tėr-vėr′tē-bral), a. [= F. intervertébral; as inter- + vertebra + -al.] Situated between any two successive vertebræ.—Intervertebral disk, the intervertebral fibrocartilage or substance when of discoidal form, as in man.—Intervertebral fibrocartilage. See fibrocartilage.—Intervertebral foramina. See foramen.—Intervertebral substance, in human anat., concentric laminæ of fibrous tissue and more internally fibrocartilage, with soft pulpy matter in the interior, forming an elastic cushion between any two contiguous vertebral bodies.

interview (in′tėr-vū), n. [Early mod. E. enterview; < OF. entrevue, F. entrevue, interview, meeting, < entrevoir, refl., meet, visit, < entre, between, + voir, see, > vue, view, sight: see view.] 1. A meeting of persons face to face; usually, a formal meeting for conference.

To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview.
Shak., Hen. V., v. 2, 27.

'Twas in the temple where I first beheld her. . . .
The church hath first begun our interview,
And that's the place must join us into one.
Middleton, Changeling, i. 1.

But if the busie tell-tale day
Our happy enterview betray—Lest thou confesse too, melt away.
Habington, Castara, i.

2. In journalism: (a) A conversation or colloquy held with a person whose views or statements are sought for the purpose of publishing them.

Mr.———'s refusal was full notice . . . that there would be no use in trying to get out of him through an interview what he was not willing to furnish through his own pen.
The Nation, Nov. 18, 1886.

(b) A report of such a conversation.

interview (in′tėr-vū), v. [Early mod. E. entervieu, enterveu; < interview, n.] I. trans. To have an interview with; visit as an interviewer, usually with the purpose of publishing what is said.

II.† intrans. To hold an interview; converse or confer together. [Rare.]

Their mutuall frendes . . . exhorted theim . . . to mete and enteruieu in some place decent and conuenient.
Hall, Hen. VI., an. 12.

interviewer (in′tėr-vū-ėr), n. One who interviews; a person, especially a newspaper reporter, who holds an interview or practises interviewing for the purpose of publishing what is said to him.

The interviewer is a product of over-civilization.
O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LI. 72.

interviewing (in'tėr-vū-ing), n. [Verbal n. of interview, v.] The practice of seeking interviews and colloquy, especially with persons of some importance or conspicuousness, for the purpose of publishing their remarks in newspapers.

When interviewing began to be a regular enterprise, a few years ago, the English leader-writers denounced it as the most dreadful form which American impertinence had yet assumed. The Nation, Nov. 29, 1883, p. 440.

This led to an article on interviewing in the Nation of January 28, 1869, which was the first formal notice of the practice under that name, and caused the adoption of the term both in this country and in England.
The American, IX. 329.

intervisible (in-tėr-viz'i-bl), a. [< inter- + visible.] Mutually visible; that may be seen the one from the other: applied to signal- and surveying-stations.

intervisit (in-tėr-viz'it), v. i. [< inter- + visit, v.] To exchange visits. [Rare.]

Here we trifled and bathed, and intervisited with the company who frequent the place for health.
Evelyn, Diary, June 27, 1654.

intervisit (in-tėr-viz'it), n. [< intervisit, v.] An intermediate visit. Quarterly Rev. [Rare.]

intervital (in-tėr-vī'tal), a. [< L. inter, between, + vita, life: see vital.] Between two lives; pertaining to the intermediate state between death and the resurrection. [Rare.]

If Sleep and Death be truly one,
And every spirit's folded bloom
Thro' all its intervital gloom
In some long trance should slumber on.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xliii.

intervocalic (in″tėr-vō-kal'ik), a. [< inter- + L. vocalis, a vowel: see vocalic.] Between vowels.

Showing that intervocalic i of the Provençal MSS. should not invariably be reproduced as j.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 490.

intervolution (in″tėr-vō-lū'shon), n. [< intervolve, after volution.] The state of being intervolved. [Rare.]

intervolve (in-tėr-volv'), v. t.; pret. and pp. intervolved, ppr. intervolving. [< L. inter, between, among, + volvere, roll: see volute.] To wind or involve reciprocally, or one within another.

Mystical dance, which yonder starry sphere
Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels Resembles nearest, mazes intricate, Eccentric, intervolved, yet regular
Then most when most irregular they seem.
Milton, P. L., v. 623.

Great Artist! Thou, whose finger set aright
This exquisite machine, with all its wheels,
Though intervolv'd, exact.
Young, Night Thoughts, ix.

interweave (in-tėr-wēv'), v. t.; pret. interwove, pp. interwoven (sometimes interwove, interweaved), ppr. interweaving. [< inter- + weave.] 1. To weave together into a single fabric, as two or more different materials or strands: as, to interweave silk and cotton.

A mass of silvery gauze was thrown back, revealing Cicely attired in an old-fashioned ball dress made of lace interwoven with silver threads.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 254.

2. To intermingle as if by weaving; blend intimately; intertwine; interlace.

Words interwove with sighs found out their way.
Milton, P. L., i. 621.

He so interweaves truth with probable fiction that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us. Dryden.

He has interwoven in the Body of his Fable a very beautiful and well invented Allegory.
Addison, Spectator, No. 273.

interwind (in-tėr-wīnd'), v. i.; pret. and pp. interwound, ppr. interwinding. [< inter- + wind[1], v.] To move in a serpentine course, as one among others moving in the same manner. [Rare.]

Uncounted sails which . . . pass and repass, wind and interwind. E. S. Phelps, Sealed Orders.

interwish† (in-tėr-wish'), v. t. [< inter- + wish.] To wish mutually.

The venome of all stepdames, gamesters' gall,
What tyrants and their subjects interwish.
Donne, The Curse.

interwork (in-tėr-wėrk'), v. i. [< inter- + work.] 1. To work together; act with reciprocal effect.—2. To work between; operate intermediately.

The doctrine of an interworking providence.
E. H. Sears, The Fourth Gospel the Heart of Christ, p. 335.

interworld (in'tėr-wėrld), n. [< inter- + world.] A world between other worlds.

Other worlds, or imaginary inter-worlds and spaces between. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 640.

interwound[1] (in-tėr-wönd' or -wound'), v. t. [< inter- + wound[1].] To wound mutually.

The Captain chuses but three hundred out;
And, arming each but with a Trump and Torch,
About a mighty Pagan Hoast doth march,
Making the same, through their drad sodain sound,
With their owne Arms themselues to inter-wound.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Captaines.

Hence discontented sects and schisms arise;
Hence interwounding controversies spring,
That feed the simple, and offend the wise.
Daniel, Musophilus.

interwound[2] (in-tėr-wound'). Preterit and past participle of interwind.

interwove (in-tėr-wōv'). Preterit and occasional past participle of interweave.

interwoven (in-tėr-wō'vn). Past participle of interweave.

interwreathe (in-tėr-rēŦH'), v. t.; pret. and pp. interwreathed, ppr. interwreathing. [< inter- + wreathe.] To twist or plait into a wreath. [Rare.]

Say, happy youth, crown'd with a heav'nly ray
Of the first flame, and interwreathed bay,
Inform my soul in labour to begin,
Ios or anthems, pæans or a hymn.
Lovelace, Posthuma, ii., To Mr. E. R.

interwrought (in-tėr-rât'). A preterit and past participle of interwork.

interzoœcial (in″tėr-zō-ē'shal), a. [< inter- + zoœcium + -al.] Intervening between or among the zoœcia of a polyzoan: as, "the interzoœcial pores," Nature, XXX. 306.

interzygapophysial (in-tėr-zī″ga-pō-fiz'i-al), a. [< inter- + zygapophysis + -al.] Situated between the zygapophyses or articular processes of a vertebra.

intestable (in-tes'ta-bl), a. [= F. intestable = It. intestabile, < L. intestabilis, disqualified from witnessing or making a will, < in- priv. + testabilis, qualified to give testimony: see testable[2]. Cf. intestate.] Legally unqualified or disqualified to make a will: as, an idiot or a lunatic is intestable.

Such persons as are intestable for want of liberty or freedom of will are by the civil law of various kinds; as prisoners, captives, and the like. But the law of England does not make such persons absolutely intestable.
Blackstone, Com., II. xxxii.

intestacy (in-tes'ta-si), n. [< intesta(te) + -cy.] The condition of dying intestate or without leaving a valid will; the leaving of property not disposed of, or not effectually disposed of, by will. Partial intestacy exists where some of the property is effectually bequeathed, but not all.

The statute 31 Edward III. c. 11. provides that, in case of intestacy, the ordinary shall depute the nearest and most lawful friends of the deceased to administer his goods.
Blackstone, Com., II. xxxii.

intestate (in-tes'tāt), a. and n. [= F. intestat = Sp. Pg. intestado = It. intestato, < L. intestatus, having made no will, < in- priv. + testatus, having made a will, pp. of testari, make a will: see test[2], testament. Cf. intestable.] I. a. 1. Having made no will, or no valid will; having left property not effectually disposed of by will. The decedent is properly said to have died intestate as to any part of his property not so disposed of.

In case a person made no disposition of such of his goods as were testable, whether that were only part or the whole of them, he was, and is, said to die intestate.
Blackstone, Com., II. xxxii.

The ecclesiastical jurisdiction in testamentary matters and the administration of the goods of persons dying intestate was peculiar to England and the sister kingdoms.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 400.

Children inherited equally as co-partners the property of intestate parents, whether real or personal.
Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I. 334.

2. Not disposed of by will; not legally devised or bequeathed: as, an intestate estate.—Intestates' Estates Act, an English statute of 1884 (47 and 48 Vict., c. 71) relating to administration of personal estate, and escheat of real estate.

II. n. A person dying without making a valid will, or leaving any property not effectually bequeathed.

in testimonium (in tes-ti-mō'ni-um). [L.: in, in, for; testimonium, acc. of testimonium, witness, testimony: see testimony.] In witness.

Intestina (in-tes-tī'nā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of intestinus, internal: see intestine.] Intestinal worms—that is, worms living in the intestines of other animals; entozoa in general. It was the first Linnean order of the class Vermes, including worms which for the most part inhabit the bodies of other animals. The term has no exact technical meaning, and is ★not now in use. Also Intestinalia.

intestinal (in-tes'ti-nal), a. [= F. Sp. Pg. intestinal = It. intestinale, < NL. intestinalis, < L. intestinum, an intestine: see intestine, n.] 1. Of or pertaining to the intestine, or the intestines in general; enteric: as, the intestinal tube or tract; intestinal movements.

The cæcum has been called the second stomach, the idea once being that in it the final process of intestinal digestion was carried out.
B. W. Richardson, Prevent. Med., p. 117.

2. Having an intestine or enteron: the opposite of anenterous: applied to nearly all the Metazoa as distinguished from the Protozoa. —3. Inhabiting the intestine; entozoic; of or pertaining to the Intestina or Intestinalia. —Intestinal fever. See fever[1].—Intestinal follicle. See follicle, 2.—Intestinal glands. See gland.—Intestinal juice, the secretion found in the intestine, or more strictly that secreted by the intestinal glands themselves, independently of the gastric, pancreatic, and hepatic contributions; succus entericus. It has some, but apparently unimportant, digestive power.—Intestinal navel, worm, etc. See the nouns.

Intestinales (in-tes-ti-nā'lēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of intestinalis, intestinal: see intestinal.] The intestinal ascidians, in which the intestinal canal lies entirely behind the small branchial sac, as in the salps: distinguished from the branchial ascidians.

Intestinalia (in-tes-ti-nā'li-ă), n. pl. [L., neut. pl. of intestinalis: see intestinal.] Same as Intestina.

intestine (in-tes'tin), a. and n. [= F. intestin = Sp. Pg. It. intestino, < L. intestinus, inward, internal, intestine (neut. intestinum, usually in pl. intestina, entrails), < intus, within, < in = E. in: see in[1]. Cf. internal and entrails, from the same source.] I. a. 1. Internal; inward; pertaining to the interior part of something.

Epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
Intestine stone and ulcer. Milton, P. L., xi. 484.

From chaos and parental darkness came Light, the first fruits of that intestine broil,
That sullen ferment, which for wondrous ends
Was ripening in itself. Keats, Hyperion, ii.

2†. Inner; innate; inborn.

Everything labours under an intestine necessity.
Cudworth.

3. Internal with regard to a company, community, or nation; domestic: usually applied to what is evil: as, intestine feuds.

Thair was not sen King Keneths days
Sic strange intestine crewel stryf.
Battle of Harlaw (Child's Ballads, VII. 189).

Hereof aryse these intestine batails betwixt the crysten kynges, to prepare the waye more esey for the Turke to inuade vs. Joye, Expos. of Daniel, v.

No country in Europe . . . was so sorely afflicted with intestine anarchy as Castile. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., Int.

The boycotter thus becomes the intestine enemy of society and its peace. The Century, XXXII. 321.

Intestine motion, the motion of very small parts of a body, as of molecules.

II. n. In anat., the lower part of the alimentary canal, extending from the pyloric end of the stomach to the anus; gut; bowel: in popular use usually in the plural: the guts; bowels; entrails. In a wider sense, in biology, the term is also used to include the whole alimentary canal or enteron. (See alimentary and enteron.) In man, as in other vertebrates and many invertebrates, the intestine is the tube into which partly digested food is received from the stomach, for the completion of the digestive process by the action upon the food of certain secretions (as the hepatic, pancreatic, and intestinal), the drawing off of the assimilable material by the blood-vessels and lacteals, and the ejection of the refuse or non-assimilable substances, as feces or excrement, by the anus. The length of the human intestine is five or six times that of the body, such extent representing, perhaps, an average of relative length; the intestine is generally shorter in carnivorous animals, and longer in those which are herbivorous. It is a musculomembranous tube invested with a peritoneal coat, lined with mucous membrane, and having in its walls both longitudinal and circular muscular fibers. It lies coiled in many convolutions in the abdomen, the coils being freely movable, though the tube as a whole is held in place by mesenteric folds of peritoneum. Into it are poured the secretions of the liver and pancreas, as well as those of its own numerous glandular structures. The character of the tube in man and mammals generally has caused its division into a small and a large intestine. The former extends from the pylorus to the iliocæcal valve, and is subdivided into duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. The latter consists of the cæcum or head of the colon, with its appendix vermiformis; of the colon proper, divided into ascending, transverse, and descending; and of the rectum or straight gut, continued from the descending colon by the sigmoid flexure. The small intestine is smoothly and simply tubular; the large is more or less extensively sacculated. This distinction does not hold as a rule below a, vermiform appendage; ac, ascending colon; c, cæcum; c', cardiac end of stomach; d, duodenum; dc, descending colon; ė, rectum, ending at anus; li, large intestine or colon, including ac, tc, dc; e, termination of esophagus; py, pyloric end of stomach, whence the coiled small intestine (duodenum, jejunum, and ileum) extends to ir; tc, transverse colon.

Human Stomach and Intestines.

mammals, in many of which, also, the cæcum is of comparatively enormous extent. Thus, in birds, in which there are commonly a pair of cæca, the site of these organs marks the only distinction between the preceding and succeeding portions of the tube. In many lower vertebrates, as fishes, cæca may be very numerous, and situated near the pylorus. In all vertebrates the cavity of the intestine is primitively continuous with that of the umbilical vesicle, and in those which have an allantois with the cavity of that organ. In its simplest possible form the intestine represents the interior of a gastrula. See cut under gastrula.

The intestines appear to be affected with albuminoid disease next in frequency to the spleen, liver, kidneys, and lymphatic glands. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 750.

Clavate intestine. See clavate[1].— Thick intestine, in certain insects, a distention of the posterior end of the ileum, forming a large blind sac which is turned back toward the ventriculus. It is thickened, and ridged on the inner surface. Its function appears to be to subject the food to a second digestion before it is passed out of the body.

intestiniform (in-tes'ti-ni-fôrm), a. [< L. intestinum, intestine, + forma, shape.] Resembling an intestine in form.

Stomach greatly elongated, intestiniform.
Quoted in Encyc. Brit., I. 415.

intext†, n. [< L. intextus, an interweaving, joining together, < intexere, interweave, weave into, < in, in, + texere, weave: see text, and cf. context.] The text of a book; the contents.

I had a book which none
Co'd reade the intext but my selfe alone.
Herrick, To his Closet-Gods, l. 6.

intextine (in-teks'tin), n. [< L. intus, within, + E. extine.] In bot., a supplementary membrane which is sometimes present in the outer coat (extine) of pollen-grains, as in Œnothera, where the extine separates into a true extine and an intextine.

intextured (in-teks'tūrd), a. [< L. intexere, pp. intextus, inweave, < in, in, + texere, weave. Cf. texture.] Woven or worked in. Wright.

in thesi (in thē'sī). [L.: in, in; thesi, abl. of thesis, thesis: see thesis.] As a proposition; in the nature of a thesis.

inthirst† (in-thėrst'), v. t. [< in-[1] + thirst.] To affect with thirst; make thirsty.

Using our pleasure as the traveller doth water, not as the drunkard does wine, whereby he is inflamed and inthirsted the more. Bp. Hall, Christian Moderation, i. 8.

inthrall, inthral, v. t. See enthrall.

inthralment, inthrallment, n. See enthralment.

inthrone (in-thrōn'), v. t. See enthrone.

inthrong (in-thrông'), v. i. [< in[1] + throng.] To throng in.

His people like a flowing stream inthrong. Fairfax.

inthronizate†, a. [< ML. inthronizatus, pp. of inthronizare, enthrone: see enthronize.] Enthroned.

In the feast of all saintes, the archbishop was inthronizate at Canterburie.
Holinshed, Chron., II., V 5, col. 2. (Nares.)

inthronization (in-thrō-ni-zā'shọn), n. See enthronization.

inthronize (in-thrō'nīz), v. t. See enthronize.

intice†, inticement†, etc. Obsolete forms of entice, etc.

intil† (in-til'), prep. [< ME. intil, intyl (< OSw. intil, in til, Sw. intill = Dan. indtil), a var. of until: see until. Cf. into.] 1. Into; in.

It was intill a pleasant time,
Upon a simmer's day.
The Earl of Mar's Daughter (Child's Ballads, I. 171).

She's ta'en the keys intill her hand,
And threw them deep, deep in the sea.
The Knight's Ghost (Child's Ballads, I. 211).

2. Unto.

Although he sought oon intyl Inde.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 624.

But age, with his stealing steps,
Hath claw'd me in his clutch,
And hath shipped me intil the land,
As if I had never been such.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 1, 81.

intima (in'ti-mă), n.: pl. intimæ (-mē). [NL., fem. of L. intimus, inmost: see intimate.] In zoöl. and anat., an intimate (that is, an innermost or lining) membrane, coating, or other structure of some part or organ; specifically, the innermost coat of an artery or vein, consisting of the endothelial lining backed by connective and elastic tissue. The full term is tunica intima.

When the larva undergoes ecdysis, the intima of a portion of the tracheal system is also cast off by means of some of these chords. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 289.

The coats which were found to have undergone morbid change were the intima and the middle coat.
Lancet, No. 3424, p. 749.

intimacy (in'ti-mą-si), n.; pl. intimacies (-siz). [< intima(te) + -cy.] 1. The state of being intimate; close union or conjunction.

Explosions occur only . . . where the elements concerned are . . . distributed among one another molecularly, or, as in gunpowder, with minute intimacy.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 35.

2. Close familiarity or fellowship; intimate friendship.

Rectory and Hall,
Bound in an immemorial intimacy,
Were open to each other.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

The peculiar art of alternate gushing intimacy and cool obliviousness, so well known to London fashionable women. Peep at Our Cousins, iv.

=Syn. Familiarity, etc. See acquaintance.

intimado†, n. [Appar. < Sp. Pg. intimado (pp.) = E. intimate (a. and n.); but no such use of Sp. Pg. appears.] An intimate friend; a confidant.

Did not I say he was the Earl's Intimado?
Roger North, Examen, p. 23.

intimæ, n. Plural of intima.

intimate (in'ti-māt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intimated, ppr. intimating. [< L. intimatus, pp. of intimare (> It. intimare = Sp. Pg. Pr. intimar = F. intimer), put or bring into, press into, announce, publish, make known, intimate, < intimus (> ult. E. intime), inmost, innermost, most intimate, superl. (cf. interior, compar.) of intus, within, < in, in: see interior.] 1. To make known, especially in a formal manner; announce.

The coniuratoures . . . imagined wyth themselfes that their enterpryse was intimate and published to the kyng.
Hall, Hen. IV., an. 1.

At last he found the most gracious Prince Sigismundus, with his Colonell at Lipswick in Misenland, who gave him his Passe, intimating the service he had done.
Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 43.

Each Highland family has a domestic spirit called banshee, who intimates approaching disaster by shrieks and wailings. Chambers's Journal, No. 746.

2. Specifically, to make known by indirect means or words; hint or suggest; indicate; point out.

This fable intimates an extraordinary and almost singular thing. Bacon, Moral Fables, vii., Expl.

We intimated our minds to them by signs, beckoning with our hand. Rob. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 421).

He did not receive us very politely, but said he wonder'd for what end the Franks went up to the Cataracts, and ask'd if I had a watch to sell: which is a way they have of intimating that they want such a present.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 83.

=Syn. 2. Suggest, Insinuate, etc. See hint[1], v. t.

intimate (in'ti-mąt), a. and n. [< L. intimatus, pp., made known, intimate: see the verb.] I. a. 1. Inner; inmost; intrinsic; pertaining to minute details or particulars: as, the intimate structure of an organism; the intimate principles of a science.

Enough beauty of climate hangs over these Roman cottages and farm-houses, . . . but their charm for seekers of the picturesque is the way in which the lustrous air seems to illuminate their intimate desolation.
H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 148.

2. Pertaining to the inmost mind; existing in one's inner thoughts or feelings; inward: as, intimate convictions or beliefs; intimate knowledge of a subject.

They knew not
That what I motion'd was of God; I knew
From intimate impulse. Milton, S. A., l. 223.

His characteristics were prudence, coolness, steadiness of purpose, and intimate knowledge of men.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 24.

3. Closely approximating or coalescing; near; familiar: as, intimate relation of parts; intimate union of particles; intimate intercourse.

When the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he [Moses] was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South, Sermons.

I crown thee [Winter] king of intimate delights,
Fire-side enjoyments, homeborn happiness.
Cowper, Task, iv. 139.

4. Close in friendship or acquaintance; on very familiar terms; not reserved or distant.

I sent for three of my friends. We are so intimate that we can be company in whatever state of mind we meet, and can entertain each other without expecting always to rejoice. Steele, Tatler, No. 181.

Barbara . . . took Winifred's waist in the turn of her arm — as is the way of young women, especially of such as are intimate enemies.
J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 282.

5. Familiarly associated; personal.

These diminutive, intimate things bring one near to the old Roman life. . . . A little glass cup that Roman lips have touched says more to us than the great vessel of an arena. H. James, Jr., Little Tour, p. 214.

II. n. A familiar friend, companion, or guest; one who has close social relations with another or others.

Poor Mr. Murphy was an intimate of my first husband's.
Mrs. Thrale-Piozzi, Aug. 29, 1810.

Thackeray was one of the intimates at Gore House.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 204.

I testify that our lord and our Prophet and our friend Mohham'mad is his servant, and his apostle, and his elect, and his intimate, the guide of the way, and the lamp of the dark.
Quoted in E. W. Lane's Modern Egyptians, I. 101.

intimated† (in'ti-mā-ted), a. Made intimate or friendly; intimate.

A goodly view of majesty it was
To see such intimated league betwixt them.
O, what a gladsome sight of joy it is When monarchs so are link'd in amity!
Ford, Honour Triumphant, Monarchs' Meeting.

intimately (in'ti-mąt-li), adv. In an intimate manner; inwardly; closely; familiarly: as, to know anything intimately; two fluids intimately mixed; two writers intimately associated.

intimation (in-ti-mā'shọn), n. [= F. intimation = Pr. intimation = Sp. intimación = Pg. intimação = It. intimazione, < L. intimatio(n-), an announcement, < intimare, announce: see intimate.] 1. The act of intimating or announcing.— 2. An announcement; a formal declaration or notification: as, an intimation from the Foreign Office.

The intimations and surveys necessary for obtaining drawbacks, debentures, or bounties, according to the Excise laws. Ure, Dict., I. 576.

3. Information indirectly or covertly imparted; a suggestion or hint; an implied meaning: as, an intimation that one's presence is not desired; intimation of danger.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals, that are very pleasant to such as are conversant in this kind of study. Addison, Ancient Medals, i.

If they [the Sadducees] had rejected the prophets, he [Josephus] would have charged them with it expressly, and not have left us to collect it from oblique hints and dark intimations. Jortin, Remarks on Eccles. Hist., App.

Let us compare with the exact details of Dante the dim intimations of Milton. Macaulay, Milton.

=Syn. 3. Suggestion, Insinuation, etc. See hint[1], v. t.

intimet†, a. [< F. intime = Sp. intimo = Pg. It. intimo, < L. intimus, inmost, intimate: see intimate, v. and a.] Intimate; inward; close.

The composition or dissolution of mixed bodies . . . is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents. Sir K. Digby, On Bodies, v. § 6.

intimidate (in-tim'i-dāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intimidated, ppr. intimidating. [< ML. intimidatus, pp. of intimidare (> Sp. Pg. intimidar = F. intimider), make afraid, < L. in, in, + timidus, afraid, timid: see timid.] To make timid or fearful; make afraid; inspire with fear; deter by threats. See intimidation, 2.

When a government is firm, and factions are weak, the making some public examples may intimidate a faction otherwise disheartened.
Bp. Burnet, Hist. Reformation, an. 1553.

One day a single man on horseback came and told me that there was a large cavern under the temple, where often a great number of rogues lay hid, and bid me take care, seeming to design to intimidate me.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 91.

=Syn. To abash, frighten, scare, daunt, cow.

intimidation (in-tim-i-dā'shọn), n. [= F. intimidation = Sp. intimidación = Pg. intimidação, < ML. as if intimidatio*(n-), < intimidare, intimidate: see intimidate.] 1. The act of intimidating or making fearful, or the state of being intimidated; fear excited by threats or hostile acts.

Before the accession of James the First, or, at least, during the reigns of his three immediate predecessors, the government of England was a government by force: that is, the king carried his measures in parliament by intimidation. Paley, Moral Philos., vi. 7.

One party is acted on by bribery, the other by intimidation. The Times (London), Oct. 3, 1866.

2. In law, the wrongful use of violence or a threat of violence, direct or indirect, against any person with a view to compel him to do or to abstain from doing some act which he has a legal right to do or to abstain from doing.

intimidatory (in-tim'i-dā-tō-ri), a. [< intimidate + -ory.] Producing or intended to produce intimidation.

intinction (in-tingk'shọn), n. [< LL. intinctio(n-), a dipping in, a baptizing, < L. intingere, intinguere, pp. intinctus, dip in, LL. baptize, < L. in, in, + tingere, pp. tinctus, tinge, dye: see tinge.] 1†. The act of dyeing. Blount.— 2. In the Greek and other Oriental churches, the act of steeping parts of the hosts or consecrated oblates in the chalice, in order thus to communicate the people with both species (of bread and of wine). For this purpose the cochlear or eucharistic spoon is used, except by the Armenians. In the Western Church intinction is mentioned in the seventh (as a method of communion for the sick already in the fifth) century, and was a general practice in the tenth and two succeeding centuries. It fell into disuse with the denial of the chalice to communicants. Intinction is to be distinguished from the act of commixture, which is done with a particle of the host or oblate with which the priest communicates himself.

intinctivity† (in-tingk-tiv′i-ti), n. [< L. in- priv. + tinctus, pp. of tingere, dye (see tinge, tinct), + -ive + -ity. Formally, < in-[3] + tinctivity*, < tinctive* + -ity.] Lack of coloring quality: as, the intinctivity of fullers' earth. Kirwan.

intine (in′tin), n. [< L. intus, within, + -ine[2].] In bot., the inner coat of the shell of the pollen-grains in phenogamous plants, of the spores of fungi, etc. It is a transparent, extensible membrane of extreme tenuity.

These become invested by a double envelope, a firm extine, and a thin intine. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 386.

intire, intirely, etc. Obsolete or dialectal forms of entire, entirely, etc.

intise†, v. t. An obsolete form of entice.

intitle†, v. t. An obsolete form of entitle. B. Jonson.

intitulation†, n. [< ML. intitulatio(n-)*, < intitulare, intitule: see intitule.] The act of entitling, or conferring a title. Bailey.

intitule (in-tit′ūl), v. t.; pret. and pp. intituled, ppr. intituling. [Also entitule; < F. intituler = Pr. entitolar, intitular = Sp. Pg. intitular = It. intitulare, intitolare, < ML. intitulare, entitle, < L. in, on, + titulus, a title: see title. Cf. entitle, a doublet of intitule.] To give a right or title to, or distinguish or call by, as a title or name; entitle or entitule. [Obsolete, or exceptionally used only in the latter sense, as in acts of the British Parliament.]

But beauty, in that white intituled,
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 57.

I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called Don Adriano de Armado. Shak., L. L. L., v. 1, 8.

That infamous rhapsody, intituled
"The Maid of Orleans." Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 2.

into (in′tō͞), prep. [< ME. into, < AS. in tō (two words), in to: in, in; tō, to. Cf. onto and unto.] 1. In and to; to and in: implying motion: used to express any relation, as of presence, situation, inclusion, etc., that is expressed by in, accompanied by the idea of motion or direction inward. Compare in[1]. (a) Of motion or direction inward: after such verbs as go, come, run, fly, flee, fall, bring, lead, throw, put, look, show, etc.

Thenne entreth yn to the Schyp azen, and by syde the Havene of Tyre, and come nought to Lande.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 126.

From God, the fountaine of all good, are deriued into the world all good things.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 79.

The governour and Mr. Winthrop wrote their letters into England to mediate their peace.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 163.

The Interpreter takes them apart again, and has them first into a room where was a man that could look no way but downward. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 250.

(b) Of change of condition: after such verbs as pass, fall, grow, change, convert, transmute, etc. Into, as thus indicating change, may when used with an intransitive verb give it a transitive force: as, to talk a man into submission; to reason one's self into error.

For many han into mischiefe fall,
And bene of ravenous Wolves yrent.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Rom. vi. 3.

Samos is hilly, and, like all the other islands, is very rocky; it runs naturally into wood, of which there are all sorts that grow in Asia.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 24.

Those two blush-roses [on a girl's cheeks] . . . turned into a couple of damasks. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, p. 239.

2. In: not implying motion: as, he fought into the Revolution. [Prov. Eng., Scotch, and U. S.]

Lord Ingram wooed the Lady Maiserey, Into her father's ha'.
Childe Vyet (Child's Ballads, II. 73).

They hadna stayed into that place
A month but and a day.
Sir Patrick Spens (Child's Ballads, III. 340).

3†. Unto; until. Compare intil.

Heil be thou, Marie, gloriouse moder hende!
Meeknes & honeste, with abstynence, me sende,
With chastite & charite into my lyues eende.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 7.

Lete it stonde in a glas vpon a litil fier into the tyme that the vynegre be colourid reed.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 10.

4. Within, implying deficiency: as, the pole was long enough into a foot. [Local, New Eng.]

intolerability (in-tol″e-ra-bil′i-ti), n. [= F. intolerabilité = Sp. intolerabilidad; as intolerable + -ity: see -bility.] The state or character of being intolerable.

The goodness of your true pun is in the direct ratio of its intolerability. Poe, Marginalia, Int.

intolerable (in-tol′e-ra-bl), a. [Formerly also intollerable; < ME. intollerable, < OF. intolerable, F. intolérable = Sp. intolerable = Pg. intoleravel = It. intollerabile, < L. intolerabilis, that cannot bear, or cannot be borne, < in- priv. + tolerabilis, that can be borne: see tolerable.] Not tolerable; not to be borne or endured; insupportable; insufferable; insufferably objectionable or offensive: as, intolerable pain, heat, or cold; an intolerable burden.

For lenger to endure it is intollerable.
Lamentation of M. Magdalene, l. 372.

That huge amphitheatre wherein those constant servants of Iesus Christ willingly suffered many intollerable and bitter tortures for his sake. Coryat, Crudities, I. 63.

O monstrous! but one halfpennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack! Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 4, 592.

And in matters of Religion there is not any thing more intollerable then a learned foole, or a learned Hypocrite.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

The hatred and contempt of the public are generally felt to be intolerable. Macaulay, Mill on Government.

=Syn. Unbearable, unendurable, insupportable.

intolerableness (in-tol′e-ra-bl-nes), n. The character of being intolerable or insufferable.

intolerably (in-tol′e-ra-bli), adv. To an intolerable degree; beyond endurance: as, intolerably noisy.

He was intollerably angrie; and then most when he should have bashed to be angrie.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 353.

intolerance (in-tol′e-rans), n. [= F. intolérance = Sp. Pg. intolerancia = It. intolleranza, < L. intolerantia, intolerance, < intoleran(t-)s, intolerant: see intolerant.] 1. The quality of being intolerant; incapacity or indisposition to bear or endure; non-endurance: as, intolerance of heat or cold.—2. Lack of toleration; indisposition to tolerate contrary opinions or beliefs; bigoted opposition or resistance to dissent.

Intolerance has its firmest root in the passion for the exercise of power. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 124.

A boundless intolerance of all divergence of opinion was united with an equally boundless toleration of all falsehood and deliberate fraud that could favour received opinions. Lecky, Europ. Morals, II. 16.

intolerancy (in-tol′e-ran-si), n. Same as intolerance. [Rare.]

intolerant (in-tol′e-rant), a. and n. [= F. intolérant = Sp. Pg. intolerante = It. intollerante, < L. intoleran(t-)s, intolerant, < in- priv. + toleran(t-)s, ppr. of tolerare, bear, tolerate: see tolerant.] I. a. 1. Unable or indisposed to tolerate, endure, or bear: followed by of.

The powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbuthnot.

2. Not tolerant; indisposed to tolerate contrary opinions or beliefs; impatient of dissent or opposition; denying or refusing the right of private opinion or choice in others; inclined to persecute or suppress dissent.

Intolerant, as is the way of youth
Unless itself be pleased.
Wordsworth, Prelude, vii.

Religion harsh, intolerant, austere,
Parent of manners like herself severe.
Cowper, Table-Talk, l. 612.

The gloomiest and most intolerant of a stern brotherhood. Hawthorne, Snow Image.

II. n. One who does not favor toleration.

You might as well have concluded that I was a Jew, or a Mahometan, as an intolerant and a persecutor.
Bp. Lowth, Letters to Warburton, p. 62.

intolerantly (in-tol′e-rant-li), adv. In an intolerant manner; without toleration.

intolerate (in-tol′e-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. intolerated, ppr. intolerating. [< in-[3] + tolerate.] Not to tolerate or endure.

They who observed and had once experienced this intolerating spirit could no longer tolerate on their part.
Shaftesbury, Reflections, ii. 2.

I would have all intoleration intolerated in its turn.
Chesterfield.

intoleration (in-tol-e-rā′shon), n. [< in-[3] + toleration.] Want of toleration; intolerance.

That narrow mob-spirit of intoleration. Chesterfield.

intomb†, v. t. An obsolete form of entomb.

intonaco, intonico (in-tō′nä-kō, -nē-kō), n. [It., rough-cast, plaster, < intonacare, intonicare, plaster, cover, < in, on, + tonica, tunic: see tunic.] The last coat of plaster laid on a wall as a ground for fresco-painting.

The intonaco being spread, the artist painted his subject in a slight manner with terra rossa, laying in the chiaroscuro and details, after which the plaster was allowed to dry. Encyc. Brit., IX. 770.

intonate[1]†, v. i. [< L. intonatus, pp. of intonare, thunder, resound, cry out vehemently, < in, in, on, + tonare, thunder: see thunder. Cf. detonate.] To thunder; make a rumbling noise. Bailey.

intonate[2] (in′tō-nāt), v.; pret. and pp. intonated, ppr. intonating. [< ML. intonatus, pp. of intonare (> It. intonare = Pg. entoar = Sp. Pr. entonar = F. entonner), sing according to tone, intonate, < L. in, in, on, + tonus, tone: see tone.] I. intrans. 1. To intone.—2. To sound the tones of the musical scale; practise solmization.

II. trans. To pronounce with a tone; intone; utter with a sonant vibration of the vocal cords.

The great τετέλεσται [it is finished] shall be intonated by the general voice of the whole host of heaven.
S. Harris, On Isa. iii. (1739), p. 262.

The l sets the tip of the tongue against the roof of the mouth, but leaves the sides open for the free escape of the intonated breath. Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 66.

intonation[1]† (in-tō-nā′shon), n. [< intonate[1] + -ion.] A thundering; thunder.

intonation[2] (in-tō-nā′shon), n. [= F. intonation = It. intonazione; as intonate[2] + -ion. Cf. detonation.] 1. Utterance of tones; mode of enunciation; modulation of the voice in speaking; also, expression of sentiment or emotion by variations of tone: as, his intonation was resonant or harsh.

Erskine studied her [Mrs. Siddons's] cadences and intonations, and avowed that he owed his best displays to the harmony of her periods and pronunciation.
Doran, Annals of the Stage, II. 262.

To us, whose intonations belong not to the individual word, but to the whole period, it is difficult to conceive of the tone with which a word is uttered as a constant, essential, characteristic and expressive ingredient of the word itself. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xiii.

2. The act of intoning or speaking with the singing voice; specifically, the use of musical tones in ecclesiastical delivery: as, the intonation of the litany.—3. In music: (a) The process or act of producing tones in general or a particular series of tones, like a scale, especially with the voice. The term is often also used specifically to denote the relation in pitch of tones, however produced, to the key or the harmony to which they properly belong; and it is then applied both to vocal and to instrumental tones, and is characterized as pure, just, true, or as impure, false intonation. (b) In plain-song, the two or more notes leading up to the dominant or reciting-tone of a chant or melody, and usually sung by but one or a few voices. The proper intonation varies with the mode used, and also with the text to be sung.—Fixed intonation, fixed pitch: applied to the organ, pianoforte, and other instruments in which the pitch of each note is fixed, and not, as in the violin, horn, etc., subject to the will of the performer.

intonator (in′tō-nā-tor), n. [< intonate[2] + -or.] A monochord mathematically subdivided for the precise study of musical intervals.

intone (in-tōn′), v.; pret. and pp. intoned, ppr. intoning. [< ML. intonare, intone, intonate: see intonate[2]. Cf. entune.] I. trans. 1. To give tone or variety of tone to; vocalize.

It is a trite observation that so simple a thing as a clear, appropriate, and properly intoned and emphasized pronunciation in reading aloud is one of the rarest as well as most desirable of social accomplishments.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xiii.

2. To bring into tone or tune; figuratively, to imbue with a particular tone of feeling. [Rare.]

Everyone is penetrated and intoned, so to speak, by the social atmosphere of the particular medium in which he lives. Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 156.

3. To speak or recite with the singing voice: as, to intone the litany.

II. intrans. 1. To utter a tone; utter a protracted sound.

So swells each wind-pipe; ass intones to ass, . . .
Such [twang] as from lab'ring lungs the enthusiast blows,
High sound, attemper'd to the vocal nose.
Pope, Dunciad, ii. 253.

Specifically—2. To use a monotone in pronouncing or repeating; speak or recite with the singing voice; chant.

I heard no longer
The snowy-banded, dilettante,
Delicate-handed priest intone.
Tennyson, Maud, viii.

People of this province [Toledo] intone rather than talk; their sentences are set to distinct drawling tunes.
Lathrop, Spanish Vistas, p. 51.

3. In music: (a) To produce a tone, or a particular series of tones, like a scale, especially with the voice; sing or chant. (b) In plain-song, to sing the intonation of a chant or melody.

intorsion, n. See intortion.

intort† (in-tôrt′), v. t. [< L. intortus, pp. of intorquere, curl, twist, < in, in, + torquere, twist: see torsion. Cf. distortion.] To twist; wreathe; wind.

With reverend hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd.
Pope, Odyssey, iii. 555.

intortion (in-tôr'shọn), n. [Also intorsion (< F. intorsion = Pg. intorsão); < L. intortio(n-), a curling, twisting, < intortus, pp. of intorquere, curl, twist: see intort.] A winding, bending, or twisting; specifically, in bot., the bending or turning of any part of a plant toward one side or the other, or in any direction from the vertical.

in totidem verbis (in tō-tī'dem vėr'bis). [L.: in, in; totidem, just so many (< tot, so many, + demonst. syllable -dem); verbis, abl. pl. of verbum, a word: see verb.] In just so many words; in these very words.

in toto (in tō'tō). [L.: in = E. in; toto, abl. of totum, neut. of totus, all: see total.] In all; in the whole; wholly; without qualification.

intoxicable (in-tok'si-ka-bl), a. [< ML. as if intoxicabilis*, < intoxicare, intoxicate: see intoxicate.] Capable of being intoxicated or made drunk; hence, liable to be unduly excited or controlled by the passions.

If . . . the people [were] not so intoxicable as to fall in with their brutal assistance, no good could come of any false plot. Roger North, Examen, p. 314.

intoxicant (in-tok'si-kant), n. [< ML. intoxican(t-)s, ppr. of intoxicare, intoxicate: see intoxicate.] That which intoxicates; an intoxicating substance, as brandy, bhang, etc.

intoxicate (in-tok'si-kāt), v.; pret. and pp. intoxicated, ppr. intoxicating. [< L. intoxicatus, pp. of intoxicare (> It. intossicare = Sp. entosigar, entosicar, atosigar, atosicar, intoxicar = Pg. entoxicar, atoxicar = Pr. entoyssegar, entuysegar, entoxiguar = F. intoxiquer), poison, < L. in, in, + toxicum, poison: see toxic.] I. trans. 1. To poison. [Rare.]

Meat, I say, and not poison. For the one doth intoxicate and slay the eater, the other feedeth and nourisheth him. Latimer, Sermons and Remains, I. 35.

2. To make drunk, as with spirituous liquor; inebriate.

He intoxicate the leper-man,
With liquors very sweet.
Sir Hugh le Blond (Child's Ballads, III. 255).

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth. Milton, P. L., ix. 1008.

3. Figuratively, to excite to a very high pitch of feeling; elate to exaltation, enthusiasm, or frenzy: as, one intoxicated by success.

With grace of Princes, with their pomp and State, Ambitious Spirits he doth intoxicate.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

Into what phrenzy lately art thou hapt,
That in this sort intoxicates thy brain?
Drayton, Pastorals, v.

II. intrans. 1. To poison. [Rare.]

Because the poyson of this opinion does so easily enter, and so strangely intoxicate, I shall presume to give an antidote against it. South, Works, III. 144.

2. To cause or produce intoxication; have the property of intoxicating: as, an intoxicating liquor.

intoxicate† (in-tok'si-kāt), a. [< ML. intoxicatus, pp.: see the verb.] Intoxicated.

Deep versed in books, and shallow in himself,
Crude or intoxicate, collecting toys.
Milton, P. R., iv. 328.

★ intoxication (in-tok-si-kā'shọn), n. [= Sp. intoxicación, < ML. intoxicatio(n-), poisoning, < intoxicare, poison: see intoxicate.] 1. Poisoning.

It has been supposed that only in the case of abraded surfaces could intoxication with solutions [of corrosive sublimate] of 1 to 1000 and 1 to 2000 occur.
E. P. Davis, Medical News, I. 310.

2. The act of inebriating, or the state of being inebriated; drunkenness; the state produced by drinking too much of an alcoholic liquid, or by the use of opium, hashish, or the like. — 3. Figuratively, high excitement of mind; uncontrollable passion; frenzy.

A kind of intoxication of loyal rapture, which seemed to pervade the whole kingdom. Scott.

=Syn. 2. Inebriety. — 3. Infatuation, delirium.

intra (in'trä). [L. intra, adv. and prep., within, fem. abl. (sc. parte) of interus*, within: see inter- and interior.] A Latin preposition and adverb, meaning 'within,' used in some phrases occasionally met in English.

intra-. [L. intra-, being the prep. and adv. as prefix: see intra.] A prefix in many words from the Latin, meaning 'within.' In the following etymologies it is treated much like inter-.

intra-abdominal (in"trä-ab-dom'i-nal), a. [< L. intra, within, + abdomen, abdomen: see abdominal.] Situated within the cavity of the abdomen.

intra-arterial (in"trä-är-tē'ri-al), a. [< L. intra, within, + arteria, artery: see arterial.] Existing within an artery.

intrabranchial (in-trä-brang'ki-al), a. [< L. intra, within, + branchiæ, gills: see branchial.] Situated between branchiæ or gills; lying within gills or among parts of the branchial apparatus.

intrabuccal (in-trä-buk'al), a. [< L. intra, within, + bucca, the cheek: see buccal.] Situated within the mouth or within the cheek.

intracalicular (in"trä-ka-lik'ū-lär), a. [< L. intra, within, + caliculus, a small cup: see calicular, calycle.] Placed within or inside the calycle of a polyp.

intracapsular (in-trä-kap'sū-lär), a. [< L. intra, within, + capsula, a small chest (NL. capsule): see capsular.] Lying or occurring within a capsule, as a fracture occurring within the capsular ligament of the hip-joint; specifically, in Radiolaria, situated within the central capsule.

intracardiac (in-trä-kär'di-ak), a. [< L. intra, within, + Gr. καρδία = E. heart: see cardiac.] Lying or occurring within the heart.

intracarpellary (in-trä-kär'pe-lā-ri), a. [< L. intra, within, + NL. carpellum, carpel: see carpellary.] Produced among or interior to the carpels.

intracartilaginous (in-trä-kär-ti-laj'i-nus), a. [< L. intra, within, + cartilago, cartilage: see cartilaginous.] Lying or occurring within cartilage: as, intracartilaginous ossification.

intracavital (in-trä-kav'i-tal), a. [< intra- + cavity + -al.] In bot., within the cavities: said of the supposed path of water in traversing the stems of plants.

intracellular (in-trä-sel'ū-lär), a. [< intra- + cellula + *-ar*3.] Existing or done inside of a cell: opposed to extracellular: as, intracellular circulation or digestion; intracellular formation of spores in certain fungi. Most of the vital activities or functions of the Protozoa are intracellular.

The intracellular duct of the nephridium and the intercellular duct of the vas deferens may be explained by the different functions which the organs perform.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 683.

intracellularly (in-trä-sel'ū-lär-li), adv. Within the cells.

Endophytes which vegetate intracellularly.
De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 362.

intracephalic (in"trä-se-fal'ik or in-trä-sef'a-lik), a. [< L. intra, within, + Gr. κεφαλή, head: see cephalic.] Placed within the head, or within the brain.

intracerebral (in-trä-ser'ē-bral), a. [< L. intra, within, + cerebrum, the brain.] Situated or occurring within the cerebrum, or within the brain.

intraclitellian (in"trä-kli-tel'i-an), a. and n. [< L. intra, within, + NL. clitellum, q. v., + -ian.] I. a. Having the ducts of the testes opening in, and not before or behind, the clitellum, as certain terricolous annelids or earthworms.

II. n. An earthworm having this structure.

Perrier divided earthworms into three groups: — (1) Preclitellians (e. g. Lumbricus), where the male pores are situated in front of the clitellum; (2) Intraclitellians (e. g. Eudrilus), where the male pores are within the clitellum; and (3) Postclitellians (e. g. Perichæta), where the male pores open behind the clitellum. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 683.

intraclitelline (in"trä-kli-tel'in), a. [< L. intra, within, + NL. clitellum, q. v., + *-ine*1.] Placed within the extent of the clitellum.

intracloacal (in"trä-klō-ā'kal), a. [< L. intra, within, + cloaca, cloaca: see cloacal.] Situated inside the cloaca, as the penis of a turtle or a crocodile.

intracœlomic (in"trä-sē-lom'ik), a. [< L. intra, within, + cœloma + -ic.] Contained in a cœloma: as, intracœlomic muscular bands of a worm. Proc. Zoöl. Soc., London, 1888, p. 217.

intracontinental (in-trä-kon-ti-nen'tal), a. [< intra- + continent + -al.] Within the borders or in the interior of a continental land-mass; inland; not pertaining to the sea-coast.

intracostalis (in"trä-kos-tā'lis), n.; pl. intracostales (-lēz). [NL., < L. intra, within, + costa, rib: see costal.] An internal intercostal muscle; one of the intercostales interni.

intracranial (in-trä-krā'ni-al), a. [< L. intra, within, + cranium, the skull: see cranial.] Situated within the cranium.

intracruræus (in"trä-krö-rē'us), n.; pl. intracruræi (-ī). [< L. intra, within, + NL. crurœus.] The inner part of the crurœus muscle, commonly called the vastus internus. See crurœus.

intractability (in-trak-ta-bil'i-ti), n. [< intractable: see -bility.] Same as intractableness.

He subdued the intractability of all the four elements, and made them subservient to the use of man.
Warburton, On Pope's Essay on Man (ed. 1751), iii. 219.

intractable (in-trak'ta-bl), a. [= It. intrattabile, < L. intractabilis, that may not be handled, unmanageable, < in- priv. + tractabilis, that may be handled: see tractable.] 1. Not tractable or to be drawn or guided by persuasion; uncontrollable.

What comforte of life shall he have, when all his parishioners are soe unsociable, soe intractable, so ill-affected unto him, as they usually be to all the English?
Spenser, State of Ireland.

Hee who is intractable, he whom nothing can perswade, may boast himself invincible. Milton, Eikonoklastes, ix.

2. Not to be brought into the desired order or condition; unmanageable; resisting effort: as, an intractable disposition; an intractable subject for literary treatment.

It is amazing what money can do in the way of transforming a sterile and intractable place into beauty.
C. D. Warner, Roundabout Journey, p. 321.

=Syn. Stubborn, Refractory, etc. (see obstinate); unruly, unmanageable, ungovernable, wilful.

intractableness (in-trak'ta-bl-nes), n. The character or quality of being intractable. Also intractability.

intractably (in-trak'ta-bli), adv. In an intractable manner; uncontrollably; unmanageably.

intracted† (in-trak'ted), a. [< L. in, in, + tractus, drawn (see *tract*1), + *-ed*2.] Indrawn; sunken.

With hot intracted tongue and sonken een.
T. Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, iii. 299.

